Brown. This is not the only thing about which there is o prejudice against the Dunkards in the world; and for my part I say I don't care for the combined prejudice of the world, unless the gospel is against. If we aregoing to be governed by the Bible, let us have proof from it. Now I'm not afraid to take the broad position, that there is not one word of gospel from Matthew to Revelation requiring us to keep any day for the Sabbath; but for the sake of harmony, and according to the law, we keep the Sabbath-day; and the apostle has enjoined that no man shall judge us with regard to meats, drinks, &c. I don't believe in making laws, where God has made none. I believe in keeping the day, as far as we can, without suffering loss. I don't think it is good to go too far in this decision, but I believe that the first answer is the best.

Quinter. Do we understand you to teach that we have no authority for keeping any particulsr day.

Knisley. Does not the apostle Paul say we shall not neglect the assembling of ourselves together? We have our Sabbath for assembliog to worship. I have gone to meeting in the West when the brethren were in the sugar camps. Our answer should be they shall not do so.

Brown. If you brethren in the West cannot govern your churches by the gospel, you cannot do it by making laws where there is none.

Steel. I would not deem it a matter of conscience to attend to anything that is a necessity, on returning from meeting, because the gospel does not bind me to do so, and I would not wish this body to enjoin bondage when there is no thus saith the Lord.

Nead. I understood in other Brown to say that the Saviour furnished a precedent for taking care of property on Sunday. Where is the passage?

Brown. The Saviour was accused by the Pharisees for unlawful things according to that law the brethren mean to bind on us now, for allowing the desciples to pluck the ears of corn and eat, and he asked them the question "if any one of you have an oxe or an ass that is fallen into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not straightway pull it out?" That would not have been unlawful under the Jewish law. Sugar water would be as valuable as an ox, and as good when saved.

Moomaw. We are taught to remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. God made all things in six days and rested on the seventh from all that He had made, and it is enjoined on the children of God in all ages of the world. We are not ignorant of the fact that the Sabbath has been superseded, and instead of the seventh the first is now set apart as the one out of seven in which there shall be no work done. This is accepted by the common consent of almost the entire christian world. So far as the precedent given by the Saviour, I take the position that does not change the matter; we find it was only where animal life was suffering that this violation is admitted. The desciples were hungered when they passed through the corn, and to stay their appetite were permitted to take the ears of corn and rub them and eat. I am mortified to hear the brethren advocating the propriety of violating this holy and sacred institution which comes to us by the strongest testimony in the power of language to convey and thereby put a weapon in the hands of those opposed to us, that we disregard the Holy Scriptures and the Sabbath of the Lord. I then shall favor the answer that it is entirely wrong to do so, in every sense of the expression; and I will venture further by way of encouraging those who are so fearful. I live where tobacco—which requires the most nice attention—is raised. If we fail in planting in season we may fail altogether in getting a crop, and some persons yield to the temptation and plant on Sunday, while others will not suffer themselves to do so. I have heard it remarked that those who obey the commandments of the Lord are more successful than those who are not willing to trust Him. Before I professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, I had a quantity of hay cut down on Saturday, and on Sunday hired a help to turn the hay, notwithstanding it was spoiled, as it invariably was for years afterwards, and I have looked on it as a chastisement for the violation of this institution. Put your trust in the Lord, and if you lose your crops He is able to supply it a thousand fold, spiritually if not temporally, and the time will come when we will have no temptation to violate His holy word.

Metzger. I want no such idea to go out from this meeting that we sanction the boiling of sugar water on Sunday. I have preached against doing any servile labor on Sunday, and claim that this is such, and am not afraid to preach it at home and abroad. I have made a great deal of sugar, and never could see much to be gained by this. If we gather our water on Saturday evening and boil until towards midnight, then close up during Sunday the buckets will about run full by Monday morning. Very little would thus be lost, and if so it is only the dust of this world. We are laboring for Heaven and heavenly things, instead of Time and timely things. The Lord has given us six days to labor and will bless our labor Let us not rob him of the one day.

Adjourned.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

The same subject under consideration.

Wise. The propriety of devoting one day in seven to the service of God has been fully shown, but I must express my astonishment in regard to the advocates of the answer attached to the question, that the brethren had best not do so. Why is it best not to do it if it is not wrong? It must be either right or wrong. If right, it is well to do it; if wrong, best not do it, and we determine the right or wrong of the matter and decide in favor of the amendment, "it is not right for brethren to do so." If right permit it. If wrong prohibit it. We think it unnecessary to adduce any scriptnre quotations in regard to this, but I perhaps may give one. The Lord Jesus says, "let your light so shine before men" that they may see in us what will prompt them to glorify God. Do we consider that to gather and boil sugar water on Sunday will induce other people to glorify God? Once more. "abstain from every appearance of evil." Let me illustrate. In our country there are large sugar groves, called by our Yankee friends, "sugar bush," and one of our meeting houses is erected in one of these localities; the day for public preaching chances to be a good day for "sap," and the members gather and boil their sugar, and the preacher having no hesitation to do the same, goes into his sugar camp and spends the day there; some of our friends in the vicinity who regard it as christian like to dedicate one day in seven to the service of God, go to the place of worship and lo! the preacher and members are not there. What kind of appearance is that? But, says one, go to meeting first, and after that go home and gather the sugar water; I don't think that betters the case very much. I once heard of a minister cutting wheat after coming home from church on Sunday, and it seems to me that had the appearance of evil—that it was not letting his light shine so that God would be glorified by it. Better to devote the day entirely to the service of God, and thus honor Him and glorify His name. Hence I am in favor of the amendment that it is wrong.

Steel. I would rather let my hay spoil than do any thing of the kind. The injunction laid on the church by the apostle in Acts 5 : 5, the answer.

Brown. I am conscientious in this matter. I would like for some of the brethren to give us an explanation of the 16th verse of 2nd Corinthians. If I have not misunderstood the Apostle, he has certainly given us the right to discriminate for ourselves in regard to the Sabbath day.

Sturgis. The Christian church from the days of the Savior were divided in sentiment as to whether they should keep the seventh day or the first. This question which agitated the church for 300 years was finally settled by the council of Nice, and from that day to the present time the christian churches, with a few exceptions, keep the first instead of the seventh. The Apostle did not fully decide the question then because the church was young and in its troubles. The idea is to show that it has been almost unanimously agreed since the third century, to keep the first day as the Lord's day. The day on which the Lord arose, and on which he appeared to John in the isle of Patmos. If it is good and right to keep the Sabbath let us try not to have it evil spoken of.

Passed.

QUERY 1st.—We request District and Annual Meetings, that no report be published of the proceedings of our Annual Meetings by our brethren, further than the queries and answers?

Answer- The brethren in the Southren District of Indiana ask that Annual Meeting stop the publishing of reports farther than the queries and answers Inasmuch as the publishing of the report in the C. F. C. and PILGRIM has not been promotive of peace in the Brotherhood. will it not be best, and make the labor of the Annual Meeting more successful to have no report published except the authorized Minutes, and that this go forth to the public as the expression of the meeting on all subjects brought before it.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

We desire in this way to call your attention to the matter of reporting the proceedings of Annual Meetings, as by brethren Holsinger and Brumbaugh, as injuring and spreading disorder among us. We now refer more especially to their published reports on the subject of feet washing. In their report on this subject, of 1872, they misrepresented the general sentiment of the meeting. The PILGRIM says, "it could be seen that the sentiment of the meeting was largely in favor of the single mode." Brother Holsinger says—in alluding to a certain amendment offered leaving the mode of feet washing subject to the choice of each church,—that only one man (Sayler) objected, leaving the impression that brother Sayler, of all present, alone presented any objection, see page 326, but that it is known that these papers do not properly or truthfully represent the facts in the case as seen by the vote of the Elders on Monday of the General Meeting when 89 voted for the double against 16 for the single mode, which may be assumed as a fair representation of the General Council. You will not have failed to have noticed brother Holsinger's allusion to the counsel of Elders, under the head of Editorial Correspondence, page, 377. We now proceed to lay before you one of the recent results of these reports. In attending to the duties assigned the committee at the last Annual Meeting to visit the Spring River Valley and Cedar County churches, they found among the causes of existing trouble was that of the mode of feet washing. Those favoring the single mode produced these numbers of the C. F. C., and PILGRIM, and in opposition to the minutes of the Annual Meeting, and refused to acquiesce in the action of the meeting, alleging that according to the said reports, the practice of the single mode would in a few years become general. This conclusion is the fair influence of the said report. Instead then of these reports having a wholesome effect in promoting peace among us, they supported a spirit of insubordination to the practice of the Brotherhood. However serious this charge may be looked upon, it is nevertheless true. Taking into consideration brethren Holsinger and Brumbaugh's reasons for publishing their views, with the proceedings of the Annual Meeting, the character of said reports and results, we submit to you the necessity of having reports of Annual Meetings discontinued in the form adopted by these brethren, as detrimental to the peace and good order of the church; or, if the report must be allowed, we suggest that the Annual Meeting, in justice to itself, require said report to be read before the General Conference and by it approved.

In conclusion we yet feel like stating to you a matter of grief to us, by brother Holsinger's allusion to the Missouri Salem College appeal which he says, applies language too offensive to be worthy of an inquiry. We have no desire to revive such a rule, but he publishes that the brethren sent matter too offensive to be countenanced by the meeting, an assumption entirely his own, and he has refused any qualification of said language in his paper when asked to do so, in justice to us. By what right brother Holsinger assumes the liberty he does is unknown to us, and as is our right, we come before you with our statement, and submit to you an evidence that your love for the Brotherhood will direct your labors to promote peace and good will throughout the entire church.

Answer. Whereas, The C. F. C. and PILGRIM have published articles with reference to decisions of questions by Annual meeting, differing from the sentiment expressed by said decision, and communications from others, and even from those who are not members of the church, and even of expelled members, reflecting seriously upon the character of the Annual Meeting.

Therefore, Resolved, That they be required to make acknowledgement for this offense, and that they be further required to promise to be more guarded in the future in this respect, and advised to publish nothing of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting beyond the questions and answers asked.

H. R. Holsinger. There is, of course but one point that it would seem in place for me to discuss, as whether I shall be requested to make the acknowledgement desired in this answer or not is not for me to discuss, that remains for this meeting to decide. These documents, I presume, were all read in your hearing. I have to say in regard to them, and especially in regard to this long letter, that I have had some correspondence with one of the active persons, and I think the one that wrote it. I was requested last year to publish an article from these parties, and perhaps if I had this letter would not have been before you. The whole matter is backed up by the opposition to education. You all remember, who were present at last meeting, the vehement assertions made in regard to Salem College by those very parties, and because the Annual Meeting saw proper to place its disapprobation upon that movement by tabling the matter, and because I took the liberty to say so, now I am to be brought before this council. You remember that the A. M. of last year decided that it was out of place, and a resolution passed requestioning us not to publish it, and that a motion was made and seconded to require the brethren of that district to make an apology for an assertion proved to be entirely unfounded and untrue, when brethren from the immediate vicinity of Salem College, and the elders of adjoining congregations stood up and said they were unfounded, and so far as Salem College was concerned, untrue, and I had a resolution passed that I was not to publish it and it was inserted because of its falsity and offensiveness. This is the way the matter originated and is backed up. My position has always been that we ought not to pass any resolution or make any decision, unless we expect to live up to it. We want to know what is done at these meetings, and the reasons for doing it, and the Brotherhood wants to know the reason, and all we ask is to give them the same information you give to this body. The brethren at home want to know the reasons as well as you. Why don't this meeting simply pass a resolution without discussions? Because we by discussion get at the truth of the matter, and see the propriety of the decision. This is one of the reasons why I would prefer that a decision of this kind should not be made.

John Wise. We have not in our possession all of the copies of these papers, to which reference is made in the complaint, but I have here an article published in the C. F. C. Jan. 10th, 1873, that is referred to in the answer, "publishing an article written by expelled members that very unfavorably assailed the Christian character of the Annual Meeting."—Reads it.

"Brother Henry, I have obligated myself to do for you what I could, and I try to do so. I have six subscribers for you including our own. I can recommend the C. F. C., and do believe that it contains as much as all the others taken together; and we hope that you will not fear the gates of hell prevailing against the true church, that has the apostles and the prophets for its foundation, and Jesus Christ for its chief corner stone. Gates of hell is a metaphorical expression, representing counsels of men, that are placing yokes upon the disciples' necks that our fathers and we were not able to bear; as much as to say, we are not going to submit to having such yokes put upon the necks of the disciples; but we will hearken to the Mighty Counsellor, the Prince of Peace, saying, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden," &c. It is generally understood that unconverted sinners are the subjects, but this is an indirect application. He had reference to those that were laden and burdened with the traditions and commandments of men. "Come unto me, my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Brother Holsinger, we do believe that there are hundreds of disciples that are weary of the heavy yoke, and would much rather bear the easy yoke of Jesus; but they fear the gates of hell, that are opposing the counsel of God.

S. A LEEDY."

Shaler's Mills, O.

Moderator. The writer of that article, as I well know, was expelled from the church 15 years ago and there were eight accusations brought against him, four of which he acknowledged to, and from that time to this he has been a railer against the Church. This is a railing heresy. The wise man says "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety." This meeting is the council of the Brethren, and for an expelled member to call it the gates of hell three times in one item, and for a brother to publish it, is what wounded our feelings. Bro. Holsinger once published another article from that man, and I informed him that he was not a brother; so I did this time, and hence have nothing since by way of publication so harsh as this. Brother Brumbaugh published a letter in the proceedings of the new organization in the State of Missouri, in which he says he was pleased to know there was little difference, so little that he hoped upon examination and investigation the difficulty might be settled. This wounded these brethren, saying there was but little difference, and then giving the title congregational, which seprates them and us as far as the East is from the West is separated. We sympathize with these brethren who are young and inexperienced and have a good deal to learn, and we want to check this, so that they may be more careful hereafter, not publish heretical doctrine opposed to the doctrine of the Church. Recollect your brethren love you, and we believe you love us, and for this reason we talk to you thus face to face, and we want discussions as mild as is necessary to accomplish the object. Now you have facts called for as touching Leedy.

As touching the report of the Annual Meeting last year, I want to say a little to my brethren. When they had given the report with the remarks we made, as well as they could remember, what wounded the feelings of the brethren was that they threw in their own opinion, which was, that the brethren were in favor of the single mode. When I passed the motion I tried to be as careful as possible. I felt my responsibility, and did not want to pass an answer when I discovered that there were many heads shaken. I have never done that to my recollection, and their saying that the large majority was in favor of the single mode, and that there was but a single voice opposed it, threw something upon me that stung pretty smart, but I can bear a good deal, and I can bear that too.

I calculated that I would have about as good an opportunity to get the expression of the audience by facing them, as to sit back to back and now we come up in love, with one another to talk these things over kindly and lovingly, so that good may be accomplished in the name of the Holy Child Jesus.

H. B. Brumbaugh. No doubt this meeting will expect that I should have something to say, in regard to this matter: and I can truly say that I am sorry that I should have done anything that should have been detrimental to the cause that I have been endeavoring to advocate. I have ever endeavored to learn obedience to the church, and I think, if I know myself, this is my disposition.

In regard to inserting that report, I have just this to say: In making that head note refered to, I cannot now remember what I said, but when speaking of the small difference between that report and the manner in which we conduct our exercises, in regard to the ordinances of the house of God, I said that there seemed to be such a very small difference that I hoped that after due investigation the matter could be reconciled. In that I had no reference to the general character and principles of the church as an organization, but simply in regard to the manner in which they performed the ordinances in the meeting of which we gave the report.

As the brother has said, we are young. We confess this, and that we have not perhaps the experience that we should have, and therefore subject to err, like others.

We acknowledge, that after we had been informed of the trouble they have in regard to this organization, we were sorry that we published the report. At the time we published the l tte . we were not aware of the circ mstances by which that organization was surrounded, and the feeling that existed between them and the brethren at that place. If we had been, we would not have given the report.

In regard to our report with reference to the subject of Feet washing, we simply gave our views, and not the views of the church, just like any other brother would do, under similar circumstances. In regard to the mode of Feet-washing, we ever maintained a neutral position, and all we ever said in favor of the single mode was for the sake of union in the church, and on account of the liberal principles which we claim to have.

We desire to be liberal and to work for the general good of the church, and in order that we may be kept together, and we thought it hard that for such a small difference as was represented in the mode of Feet-washing, a portion of our body should be separated. As to the private letters, we confess we were misinformed. As to casting any reflections upon the conduct of brother Davy, we would say, we would be very sorry to do any such thing, because if we know ourself, we love and respect our aged brother and would be very sorry to do or say anything to hurt his feelings.

It is true we heard many expressions at the meeting in regard to the subject of Feet-washing, and upon those we based our opinion. Perhaps we did not have as much conversation with the brethren in favor of the double mode, as we had with those in favor of the single mode, and that may account for our impression, because the sentiment we came in contact with, was largely in favor of the single mode.

In regard to making an acknowledgement, we shall not do it until called upon, and if the Brotherhood sees fit to call upon us to make an acknowledgement we shall certainly do it. I will just add a few words in regard to giving a report of our meeting.

We believe that, as a general thing, those who are opposed to this report, are those at the meeting, those brethren who have the facilities for attending the meeting—they are present, and hear all, and are satisfied with what they hear; but the call is from those who cannot hear the decision and arguments of this meeting—they call upon us for a report of the decisions of these meetings, and when they come to subscribe to our periodicals, the question asked is, are you going to give a report of the Annual Meeting? Do we not infer from this that it is the general wish and expression of the Brotherhood that they shall have a report of the meeting? Now if these brethren and sisters say we shall not give a report, we shall not do it, but we would have you understand this, that, although we would be cut off from this, there are others here who are reporting, and if it is not published in our periodicals, it will be in some others, and be spread broadcast throughout the world; and thus, if half the world is allowed to have the advantages of the discussions of this meeting, why is it that our brethren and sisters who are so anxious to know what passes here, should be debarred from this privilege?

H. R. Holsinger. I have an explanation to make in regard to the publication of the article read to you. It does occur occasionally that we get an article for publication from persons with whom we have no personal acquaintance. Here we have a letter from a Leedy, a name that stands quite high in the Brotherhood. Now, then, we read this article, not knowing, not caring, whether the man be a Jew, Heathen or Christian; but we read it endeavoring to learn whether it sets forth sentiments of truth, and when we find by inspection that the article sets forth truth, we publish it. Now, then, it occurred in this case, that a power is censured, and some of our brethren here think it reflects upon this meeting, while I thought it was going with power for the Pope of Rome. Did not know that this man was opposed to the Brotherhood; did not know that this man was going for the Annual Council, but supposed from the manner in which he writes that he was going for the Pope of Rome.—"Persons that would institute, instead of the Gospel, traditions of their own." Now it may be possible, that, if this man had specified certain things, and I had known that he was an expelled member of our church, I might have thought that he was going to censure our Annual Meeting, and then it would have gone into the waste basket, but I could not see that he was censuring our Annual Meeting. Let us see how it is. "Gates of hell is a metaphorical expression, representing councils of men." Is this a council of men? Does it apply? I had no right to suppose that it did, unless I knew him to be a railer of the Brotherhood. You may prove that he is such, you can't prove that I knew it, no matter if you sent me forty letters. I examined this letter for the truth part of it, and my assistant editor takes it up and he examined it, and thinks it sets forth the truth, and he has no idea that it aims at our Church.

To tell the truth, brethren, I had before my mind the Roman Catholic Church, and I did not know at the time that this man was not a brother; but here are persons, well acquainted with this man, and knowing him to be a railer and the particular things that he is driving at, it seems to hurt them. As far as I am concerned, it don't hurt me, and I don't know as it had any reference to the Annual Meeting. These are the facts in the case. We want to be liberal. All the writers of the Companion are not members of our Church. Some are members of other denominations, and write very excellent articles. Some are the Brethren's children who write and are not members of the church, and write good articles. We examine, and reject or accept it. A man of very high standing in our church may write an article and we decide upon its merits, and if it is not fit for publication, we throw it in the the waste basket, just as quick as any other.

Now, if it is proven that that has reference to our Annual Meeting, and in this Annual Meeting we are going to take such a thing upon ourselves, then perhaps I had better make an acknowledgment. If these things are not true, then they have reference, as I thought they had to the Roman Catholic Church, and I am not called upon to make any acknowledgment. I would say that I know it to be a fact.

Moderator — Brethren, Metzgar, Garber, Miller, Quinter, and many others that are here, bear testimony that they know that this was one of the things why he was put out of the church; that he was always complaining. One reason was because he opposed the counsels of the Annual Meeting.

Holsinger—We don't doubt Brother Davy's assertion, but what has that to do with the question under consideration? Suppose the man was a Heathen or a Publican, what has that to do with the question. Who he is, is not essential in regard to the publication of the sentiment.

Sturgis. I am very sory that these matters are before us.

As an editor it does appear to me, that any man or woman, reading that communication should know that there was no danger of the Pope of Rome exercising the authority over our Brethren. Our papers should go forth for the education and instruction and warning of our members. I don't want to throw the insinuation that Brother Henry did not think what he says, but I think there was a want of carefulness. It showed that the brother was prying into the church. Some of my friends wrote to me censuring me for my course at the Annual meeting, because I advocated the doctrine and practice of the Brethren; they told me they were going to set up a new order. Some of my dear friends and relatives have gone into that new order, claiming that most of the members of the Annual meeting had set up over the heads of the majority of the Annual Meeting. I have written letters day and night, and convinced them that without the Annual Meeting we would go into fragments. Some of them yielded; others have gone into factions.

Now, then, every editor, and every brother that reads should look closely into the words, and every thing that would throw a fire brand into the Brotherhood should be thrown away.

I believe it would be better to do so; if we cannot avoid this other extreme, better have no papers at all? I say under existing circumstances it is well enough, at least, to admonish our Editors. They have been told by the Annual Meeting in 1870, that they should publish nothing which conflicts with the direct order of the Church, and if they did so, it would be looked into. Hence we claim that there is one paper published that we have no trouble with. But what is the consequence? Something strange and new. Expressions that they gave of the Annual Meeting seem to be taken for the proceedings here. I conclude then, it is better to suppress any further publication. It has been told to me by a few young brethren and sisters that they regard that it is only a few. The majority of the members don't want the thing passed so; this is what it is going, if we don't suppress it. It has been intimated here that they want to know how we came to those conclusions, in order to be satisfied; though that only goes to prove that they wont obey, and be satisfied. And the Annual Meeting has really been assailed; there is no question about it. Whether Henry meant it or not, it has been declared by an enemy that has assailed me publicly and privately that he was driving at the Annual Meeting; when he calls it the gates of hell. Hence, while I have every confidence in the brethren who published it, I say there is a wrong done that cannot be easily healed. We think now we should suppress any publication, only that which passed the meeting.

THE WELCOME HOME.

SELECTED BY KATE BARNIZER.

How sweet will be the welcome home
When this short life is o'er,
When pain and sorrow, care and grief
Shall dwell with us no more;
Then we that bright and heavenly land,
With spirit eyes shall see,
And join the holy angel band
In praise dear Lord of thee.

CHORUS:
The welcome home, the welcome home,
The Christian's welcome home.

Lord, grant my frail and wayward bark,
May anchor sure and fast,
Beside the shining gates of pearl,
Where I may rest at last.
When once within, my soul shall know,
No hunger, thirst, or pain;
No sickness, sorrow, care or death
Shall visit me again.

CHO.
The welcome, &c.

O may I live while here below,
In view of that blest day,
When God's bright angels shall come down,
To bear my soul away.
When I shall walk the golden streets,
In garments white and pure;
And sing an endless song to him,
Who made my soul secure.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

TYPES AND PROPHECY.

A type has been defined to be an action or occurrence in which one event, person or circumstance is intended to represent another similar to it in certain respects, but of more importance and generally future. The Scriptures describe a type as "a shadow of good things to come."—Heb. 10: 1. Shadows are not exact resemblances, but give only a dark outline; yet with sufficient distinctness to convey some general idea of the body, especially when afterward we have the body with which to compare them. One distinction between a prophecy and a type is that a prophecy is a prediction by something said—a type is usually furnished by something done and presented to our sight.

The first revelation to fallen man contained a prophetic declaration of mercy which was an outline of the whole plan; or it may be compared to a seed which contains within itself the elements of the future plant. The first recorded act of acceptable worship, after the fall, was connected with a type, expressed by an action that the first prophecy had declared by words, —The first prophecy, that "The seed of the woman should bruise the serpents head," intimated that the Messiah should triumph though not without suffering to Himself. Abel's sacrifice of a lamb seems to have shadowed forth that which was the great purpose of the Messiah's coming,—the putting away sin by the sacrifice of Himself—the substitution of an innocent for a guilty being. We can scarcely suppose that the act of approaching God by slaying an innocent animal could have been suggested to any pious mind as in itself an acceptable mode of worship, but it is immediately seen how, as a divine appointment in reference to the Messiah, it was suited to impress on sinful man that the ways of sin is death—that more than repentance is necessary to forgiveness, that "without shedding of blood is no remission;" Heb. 9: 22, while from the impossibility of the blood of a lamb taking away sin, such a mode of sacrifice was calculated to direct the offerer to look forward to the sacrifice of that lamb whose merits alone could give value to such an offering, and we know from Heb. 17: that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of His gifts," indeed, "sacrifice appears to have been ordained as a standing memorial of the death introduced by sin and of that death which was to be suffered by the Redeemer." For illustration, we have an example of the insufficiency of repentance alone, however sincere and deep, 2 Samuel, 10: 17, and God's acceptance of sacrifice as the divinely appointed means of removing his anger, is remarkably seen in 2 Samuel 54: 25, as compared with Chron. 21: 26-27. The Lord answered David's prayer from Heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering, and commanded the angel to put up his sword again into the sheath. Thus is the anger of God turned away from penitent sinners by the sacrifice of Christ. The Levitical law is throughout, a shadow of good things to come, Col. 2: 17, but particularly observe the services on the great day of atonement, Heb. 10: 1, Lev. 16 chapter as explained Heb. 9th chapter—God came to dwell among them, and he dwelt upon a mercy seat, "and there I will meet with thee and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat." Ex. 25: 22, and all their worship was directed thither, but they were not to approach even the mercy-seat but thro' the mediation of an High Priest; nor might the high priest himself come into the holy place, where God was supposed to have his special residence without the blood of sacrifices; which blood is expressly declared to have been for an atonement because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions and their sins: Lev. 16: 16, and 17: 11. "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." Heb. 9: 22.

THE WAY.

I have thought of writing a few lines for the readers of the PILGRIM, of which I have been a reader for about one year, and I have received a great deal of good instruction from it, and as I desire to uphold the good cause I will endeavor to present a few thoughts, and as it is necessary to have a foundation before we build I will direct your attention to the 6th verse of the 14th chapter of St John. "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

This is a plain passage delivered by Christ himself to Thomas and for a noble purpose, I have no doubt, and as we believe that all Scripture was given by inspiration of God and is good for doctrine, we will, in the first place, try to show you what a way means. In a temporal sense we understand it to be a road or a way leading from place to place, but the way spoken of in our text, is the way that leads from earth to heaven. Then in order that we find this end it becomes necessary that we first get in the way and then be careful and follow him in all things whatsoever he commands us, for he says: "I am the way." He also says. "I am the door, by me if any man enter in he shall be saved," John 10: 9. We will endeavor to give you our understanding of entering in at the door. In the first place, you must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Then in the next place, you must go to work, and how? says one. Well, I will say according to his word. I will give you Peter's way, when they said to him and the rest of the apostles, "What shall we do? Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, Acts, 2: 41. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand. It seems that these came in at the door and they did not tarry but went to work, and that according to the directions of Peter. And we have the account of them traveling in this way; "and they continued steadfastly in the apostles doctrine in breaking bread and prayers," &c. I think if the people would receive the words of the apostles in this our day as they did in that day and age of the world, there would not be so much difference in professors, and we believe that the Scripture is the same to us in this day and generation as it was then. I will give you another evidence of entering in, which you will find in Romans, 6th chapter, 3rd verse. Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death." 5th verse. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Let us endeavor to take Christ for our way and follow his examples and commands and let us show to the world that we possess what we profess. Let them see the fruit of righteousness. Let us feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and visit the sick and show mercy. Visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions and keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Let us make him the way in all things, in the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Feet Washing, the Holy Kiss in prayer and in love.

GODFREY H. SHAFER.

THE RICH YOUNG MAN.

I suppose that all have read about the rich young man who came to Christ to know what he must do to inherit eternal life. Jesus spoke to him of the commandments and asked him if he knew them. He said all these have I kept from my youth up. But what did he then tell him he should do? He told him to go and sell all that he had and give to the poor, but oh, how sorrowful he looked when he thought that he must part with all his possessions, for he was very rich. It seems that he would rather keep his riches and be lost, at last, than to give them up and have eternal life, for we have no account of him ever doing as the Lord told him to do, and how many in this our day look sorrowful when they are called upon (out of their abundance), to give something for the support of others, they are ready to make many excuses and say, "my crops did not do so well last year, I don't think I will have anything to spare." Who gave you what you have got? Who gave health and strength to prepare your soil and sow your grain? Who sent you the early and latter rain to make the earth bring forth? The giver of all good has given them to you, and are you now unwilling to restore to him part of what he has so bountifully bestowed upon you? You have enough to support your families, enough to sell to pay your taxes and some still left to put in the bank. Do you not know the Lord will provide for you? He has promised to provide for all those who put their trust in him. Do not do as the rich man who had no room to bestow his goods, do not go pulling down your barns and building greater ones that you may have room, methinks you can find plenty of places to store them away where they will do much good. Perhaps across the way, lives a poor widow who has two or three little children to look to her for support, take some of your goods there and store them away in her house. And perhaps, a little farther on, there lives an aged couple who have battled long with the cares of this life, who are now disabled for any further service by age and affliction, take some of your goods there. You would cause the widows heart to sing for joy, the fatherless children to praise you, the aged ones would bless you and, best of all, the Lord would reward you. If you do make some sacrifice what of it. If you give without making any sacrifice I fear it may do but little good. You know the Lord loves a cheerful giver, for the good book says: the poor you have always with you. You can do them good if you will. Let us all be intent upon doing something for our fellow creatures—let us forget the sacrifices we are trying to make to help others, and we shall have a two-fold reward, we shall have the sweet consciousness of having done a benevolent act, and also be strengthened by it. Let us not say, in reply to every appeal that is addressed to our feelings, depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, but let us hasten to their relief and do all we can for them and then we can only say we have done that which was our duty to do. PARTING.

This world is not our home. Soon will come our time of parting, that we part from our native home and country for the far West. Yes, we part from our parents, sisters and brothers and many, very many that have been dear unto us from our childhood up. Near and dear has been many of the associates I have had from quite young to this period, yet I am willing to forsake all these for the satisfaction and interest of those that are dearer to me than all earth, and willing to dwell and be contented in any distant land that would be to the pleasure and interest of my beloved companion and the future welfare of the dear ones that the Lord has given us.

The separation, I hope, will cause us to strive the more earnestly to gain that better country where all may meet to part no more. Oh that glorious abode, that blissful time when this world of parting, sin and troubles of all kinds, will have an end. How earnestly may be our desire to get rid of sin and trouble, and to do more good for our Creator and fellow man; yet how, oh how little is done! Oh, let us often examine ourselves, and strive, with all power and might to overcome our sinful nature and the tempter, and be better prepared for the indwelling of the Spirit of the Lord. Often do I wonder; shall I escape the doom of the foolish virgins? If so, Oh Lord hasten the glorious meeting when we all may dwell together in love and unity. Oh, that blessed, that happy day, when sin is known no more. Oh, Perfect love, when shall we possess it, where no unkind word is spoken, where no hard thought is known. Oh, the unspeakable joys of that place! May we be more heavenly minded, and set our affections more on things above. This world is all confusion and vexation of spirit. What murmering, unthankfulness and dissatisfaction is among the human family at this time. Let us be more prayerful, more zealous in the cause of Christ and as we part here, may our souls prayer be; Lord help us to meet above where all is joy and holy love. As I leave our church here, my earnest desire is, may we all meet in those glorious regions of love. May each one of us know the great duty that rests upon us is the prayer of your weak sister in Christ.

SWEET BABY, SLEEP.

SELECTED BY C. C.

Sweet baby, sleep, what ails my dear,
What ails my darling thus to cry;
Be still my child, and lend thine ear,
To hear me sing thy lullaby.
My pretty babe forbear to weep,
Be still, my dear, sweet baby sleep:

Whilst thus thy lullaby I sing,
For the great blessings ripened be.
Thine eldest brother is a king,
And hast a kingdom bought for thee;
Sweet baby, then forbear to weep,
Be still my babe, sweet baby sleep.

A little infant once was he,
And strength in weakness then was laid;
Upon His Virgin mother's knee,
That power to thee might be conveyed.
Sweet baby, then forbear to weep,
Be still my babe, sweet baby, sleep;

Within a manger laid the Lord,
Where oxen lay and asses fed,
Warm rooms, we do to thee afford,
An easy cradle or a bed.
Sweet baby, then forbear to weep,
Be still my babe, sweet baby sleep.

Thou hast yet more to perfect this,
A promise and an earnest got,
Of gaining everlasting bliss,
Though thou, my babe, perceiv'st it not.
Sweet baby, then forbear to weep,
Be still my babe, sweet baby, sleep.

DO BOYS EVER THINK?

This may seem a strange question, to ask whether boys ever think, and some of our little girls may wonder why they were not included in so important a question. I sometimes write from force of circumstances and every day, little boys may be seen doing things so thoughtlessly that it becomes a question whether they ever think. Of course all little boys think somehow, but the question is, do they think right.

Boys, and girls too, should always remember that their parents are their best friends and that all they do for them is intended for their special good. Have you ever thought of this? A mother's love, by our Savior, was considered the strongest and the only love that would bear comparison with His own. But notwithstanding this strong love that your parents bear towards you, how often do you think you know best, and do the very things that they wish you not to do? Now boys, how is it, do you think? If you do, you think wrong, because you think against your best interests, because to disobey your parents is the first step on the broad way that leads to dishonor and death.

Again, when we see boys, on Sunday, out hunting, robbing birds nest and stealing apples, can we help but ask, "do boys ever think?" Will such a course ever end well? No, my dear young friends, it will lead you in the wrong direction, away from your father's house, away from all that is right and good and worst of all, away from Jesus, your best friend, who has said, "first of all seek the Kingdom," with the promise, if you do so "all things shall be added." If you are inclined to think, there is nothing that you can think about that will give you so much enjoyment, as obedience to parents and love to Jesus. But how is it with boys who allow themselves to indulge in bad habits, such as drinking strong drinks and smoking and chewing tobacco? Do they think? Let us see. By spending 6¼ cents per day in this filthy habit you spend in one year $22,81 cents, and in 25 years, at a reasonable interest, over $2.000. In doing this, do you ever think? Have you ever tried to think how much benefit you are a going to derive from this habit? If you have, the following, I suppose would be the result of your calculations: First, an expenditure of a fortune for which I receive dyspepsia, headache, pains in the back, pains in the side, pains in the legs and pains all over. In addition to all this, I am made a slave to be only liberated in death which is promised at the expiration of half my days. Is it possible that boys do think and still continue to indulge in those habits which produce such unfortunate results? If you have not, will you not do it now, because it may save you from many snares that satan has set for you and lead you to that liberty which Jesus offers and which will make you free indeed.

UNCLE HENRY.

A CHILD'S SACRIFICE.

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and truth."

A child had a beautiful canary, which sung to him from early morning. The mother of the child was ill—so ill that the song of the little bird, which to the boy was delicious, disturbed and distressed her so that she could scarcely bare to hear it.

He put it in a room far away, but the bird's notes reached the sick bed, and caused pain to her long feverish days.

One morning, as the child stood holding his mother's hand, he saw that when his pet sung, an expression of pain passed over her dear face.—She had never yet told him that she could not bear the noise, but she did so now:

"It is no music to me," she said, as he asked her if the notes were not pretty. He looked at her in wonder.

"And do you really dislike the sound?"

"Indeed I do," she said.

The child full of love to his mother, left the room. The golden feathers of the pretty canary were glistening in the sunshine, and he was telling forth his loveliest notes; but they had ceased to please the boy. They were no longer pretty or soothing to him, and taking the cage in his hand he left the house. When he returned he told his mother that the bird would disturb her rest no more, for he had given it to his little cousin.

"But you loved it so," she said, "how could you part with the canary?"

"I loved the canary, mother," he replied, "but I loved you more. I could not really love any living thing that gave you pain. It would not be true love if I did."—The Quiver.

FREELY FORGIVE.

It is very easy for us to say we will forgive those who injure us, but it is quite another thing to put it in practice. Many people forgive very much as the little school-girl did to whom her teacher said, "Mary, if a naughty girl should hurt you, you would forgive her like a good little girl, wouldn't you?"

"Yes, ma'am," she said, "if I could not catch her?"

Another little Sunday-school scholar had a notion of forgiveness very much like hers. His lesson had been upon this subject, and his teacher asked him if, in view of what he had been studying he could forgive those who wronged him.

"Could you," said the teacher, "forgive a boy for instance, who had struck you?"

"Y-e-s, sir," said the lad slowly, after thinking a little, "I could—I guess I could;" and then added, in a husky tone, "I know I could if he were bigger than I am!"

These little folks put us in mind of an old gentleman who had a quarrel with a neighbor, and thinking he was about to die, sent for the neighbor, that difficulty might be settled before he died. "I can't bear," said he, "to leave this world while there is any bad feeling between us. But, mind you," he said with all the energy his feeble voice could assume, "if I get well, the old grudge stands!"

Ah, that is not like the teaching of Jesus. The enemy is not only to be forgiven, but treated like a friend.—True forgiveness empties the heart of all remembrance of old grudges and hate, and fills it with kindness and love.

He who has struck his colors to the power of an evil habit, has surrendered himself to an enemy, bound by no articles of faith, and from whom he can expect only the vilest treatment.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

JAMES CREEK, PA., June 24, 1873.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1873, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

LET THE WORK GO ON.

In every enterprise, to have success, there must be some one to lead, and especially is this the case in getting up subscriptions. At the very liberal terms on which we now offer to send the Pilgrim from A. M., to end of the year, there is but little difficulty to get subscribers if there is some one to present the matter to the people.—Some of our agents and friends have been doing this with success. In the several last mails we received lists ranging from 12 to 15, with the promise of sending still more in a few days. This shows what can be done when an effort is made. Will not others go and do likewise? Please make the effort. We need it for our own encouragement, and feel assured that so small an amount of money cannot be spent for a better purpose. While we offer the report of our Annual Conference as an inducement, we wish it understood that independent of it we expect to make the Pilgrim fully worth the price asked for it. We have issued some 400 extra copies beginning with the report, so that all can be supplied with back Nos. from A. M. Do not forget our very liberal terms: Single copies, 80; 10 copies $7 25; 15 copies, $10 50; 20 copies, $14 25. Let every one that is interested in having the truth freely disseminated, go to work and see how easily 400 new subscribers can be raised from A. M., to end of the year. Nearly 100 is already received and the work is only commenced.

AN EXPLANATION.

An explanation has been asked of us on the following scripture: (See Matt. 8: 11, 12:

This is part of the consultation that took place between Jesus and the Centurian, and the object evidently was to give encouragement to the stranger and a warning to the unbelieving Jews. Those coming from the East and West are the Gentile nation, including the Centurian spoken to, and was the fulfillment of the prophesies concerning the salvation which was to be for all nations.

The "children of the kingdom" has reference to the Jews as a nation and people. They shall be rejected for their unbelief and hardness of heart, and shall finally be cast out of the Kingdom of Christ, or the true church of God, and in their place; believers of the Gentile nations, from the East and from the West shall come in and take their seats with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. This may be our happy lot if we are willing to undergo the grafting in process and be as fruitful branches of the true vine stock, Jesus Christ.

Catharine Shidler.—The Helping hand was sent. If not received by this time, let us know, and we will send it again.

J. M. P.—M. J. G's Pilgrim was paid to No. 23, 1873, and is now paid to No. 24, '74. You did not give us Jno. Shellberger's address, please send it and we will furnish him all back Nos. Your name is in type and we cannot see how your paper can fail to come.

Geo. W. C.—The $125 was received. The Pilgrim is paid to July 23, '73; due us 65 cts.

Crowded Out.—Notes of travel by Eld. J. S. Flory, also, some other correspondence, and just as we are ready to go to press, we have received the "Missouri Committee Report." All will be attended to next week.

Good News.—Some of the last mails are bringing us quite encouraging news in regard to the welfare and prosperity of the Church. In places their has been quite a number of additions to the church, and the good work appears to be on the increase.

DIED.

KOOK.—In Noble Co., Ind., June 4, 1873, sister Caroline, wife of brother I Kook, aged 38 years, 8 mos. and 18 days. Funeral services by Elder Truly and others.

Our dear sister died in a full hope of a home in that bright world beyond this life of trouble and care. She leaves a kind husband, children and friends to mourn their loss.

BETHKA.—In the Springfield Church, Noble Co., Ind., May 26, 1873, aged 60 years and 9 months.

Sister Bethka was born August 27, 1812, in the town of Broad Oak, Germany, and was married August 27, 1837, and emigrated to America in 1854. She leaves a husband to mourn his loss, but we hope, her gain. Funeral by C. Weaver and the writer.

REPORT OF OUR MISSION TO CRAWFORD CO., PA.

As it is known by the Middle District of Pa., that by the approval of that district, John W. Brumbaugh and myself were sent, after repeated calls, to Crawford Co., Pa., on a mission of preaching. Having now returned from that mission, according to request, I will try to give a brief report of the same, partly by notes and partly from memory.

After attending a Communion at Snake Spring Valley, Pa., I started, May 31, from Bedford to Dale City, the place of A. M., where my colleage met me. After enjoying the pleasures and sweets of our A. M., with the delights of associating with brethren and sisters from a distance whom we had known before, with the addition of forming pleasurable acquaintances with many that we did not know before, we felt revived; though with somewhat impaired health, yet encouraged, we set out June 5th, in the evening train on the Connellsville Railroad to Pittsburg, arrived safely at 1 30 a. m., had some sleep, and refreshment in the morning. June 6, started on the Pittsburg and Erie Railroad at 7 15 a. m., came to Linesville 12 30 p. m., were met there by our dear friend A. J. Williams, (now brother), who, after kindly caring for a dinner, took us to his house, 7 miles distant, where his kind family were ready to receive us. As Railroad travelling is subject to uncertainty of time, he saw proper to make no appointment till next evening, June 7, Saturday. He however had made arrangement to have the United Presbyterian Church as long as we would stay for meeting, being the nearest to his residence, 1½ mile off. Met with a respectable congregation in the evening, preached from 2 Cor. 1: 2-3, to a very attentive audience. As Mr. Williams had fully made up his mind to be received into the Church by the ordinance of Christian baptism the next day, it was publicly announced that a sermon would be preached on the mode, formula and position in the performance of Christian baptism as we understand it from the Gospel. June 8, Sabbath, met at 10 a. m., with a large congregation, said to be the largest ever met there with the exception of the Dedication of that church. Preached from the Commission as recorded in Matt. 28 latter part. Bro. J. W. B. spoke on the prerequisites to baptism, I followed on the mode, form and position as understood by us from the word of God, with an earnest appeal to search for themselves. At the close of the meeting we went to the water near by, where brother Williams made the solemn vow of allegiance to King Emanuel, the Prince of Peace, the Author of eternal salvation, in the presence of God and before many witnesses. Inasmuch as baptism had never been performed in the manner we performed it, it was undoubtedly a novelty to the large concourse witnessing the solemn scene. However great solemnity was manifested by the spectators as far as I observed, and we have reason to believe that it made solemn and we hope lasting impressions on many. Meeting again in the afternoon, but the meetings being too close together, many came a considerable distance, the meeting was not as large as in the forenoon. Preached from Heb. 2, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." Respectable audience and good attention. The evenings being short, the people busy and we debilitated, we concluded to have no appointment 'till Tuesday evening, as some thought that as much good could be done by preaching privately from house to house. We had numbers of invitations, many more than we could attend to in the time we stayed with them. We omit the names of those we visited as it would swell this report beyond the limit we wish to give it. We fondly hope that none will consider themselves slighted when we do not particularize, suffice it to say that kindness, love, benevolence and Christian courtesy was shown to us wherever we were, much beyond what we merited, and we are thoroughly convinced that God is there, and that He may, thro' the ministers' faithful charge and strenuous efforts, by the guidance of the Holy Spirit in His own time, gather a numerous church there. I can see nothing to the contrary, many are aroused, awakened and in search of the one thing needful. Brethren, pray for that part of God's moral Vineyard, have ministers sent there to preach the word, expound the truth as it is in Jesus that the hungering, starving souls in that community may be richly fed with the Bread of Life. A heavy rain on Tuesday evening prevented our meeting. Wednesday evening, by earnest request, we met again, the last time for public worship, in a school-house, near brother W's,—only half a days notice, yet the house was well filled and we had a blessed meeting, with earnest requests for more preaching and a longer stay, or at least a promise to visit them again, which we did conditionally.

Mrs. Williams showed us especial kindness, sociability and Christian courtesy, and accompanied us in our visits as much as the state of her health would permit. May the Lord reward her and bless her labors of love as she seems in trouble and in an unreconciled condition. May the Church, in her united prayers, remember her, implore God's divine aid in convincing and enlightening her to become reconciled to God by the word of reconciliation. And may the Church in her prayers, remember also our beloved brother Andrew J. Williams, the first fruit of Crawford Co., in his isolated condition, that he may be a light to the world, a bright star in the constellation, his house a house of prayer, his family a family of peace, and that his kind wife may yet become a mother in Israel, and that blessings may flow from his residence to influence that community to partake largely of the waters from the wells of salvation.

Thursday June 12, Bro. W., his wife and his brother Joseph accompanied us to Meadville, 7 miles distant, where at 4 p. m., took the train to Franklin, took the Alleghany Valley Railroad to A. Junction, thence to Butler,—came to friend J. H. Graham's, who formerly lived a close neighbor, his wife being a sister in the Church. This being a place where the Brethren never preached before, Saturday evening, June 14, an appointment previously being made in the Presbyterian Church, where we met entire strangers except the Graham family, a Methodist Communion meeting not far off at the time, and not being known generally, consequently the congregation not very large, chiefly members of that church. I tried to preach from the words, "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine, continue in them," &c., had very good attention,—hope solemn impressions were made. As our order of holding meetings was strange to them we briefly defined our order, as kneeling posture in prayer, the audience cherished and conformed to it. Next day Lord's day, their Sabbath school being at 9 30 a. m., we made the appointment at 11, being requested by the Supt. to address the scholars we made an effort to do so briefly. We opened the meeting at the appointed time, brother Brumbaugh read the 14th chapter of John, spoke chiefly on the beginning of the chapter. The exercises seemed to be appreciated by the audience as strict attention was paid to the word spoken. Requests were made for more meetings, but a meeting near by in the U. P. Church in the afternoon, we thought best to make no appointment, and the evenings being so short, neither of us well, the church 2½ miles from our home, and had to start very early on our journey homeward we preferred to have no meeting. However we regretted it afterwards when we heard that the Methodists had no meeting, and only being known to a great many that day of our meetings, which many desired to attend, had we made the appointment it was thought that the house would have been filled, as the Brethren never preached there. But may all be for the better if only the Brethren will attend that place again, for solemn appeals were made to come again and preach for us. June 16 we took the train at Butler and came home safely that evening found all well, God's name be praised, for his mercy endureth forever. Amen.

LEONARD FURRY.

New Enterprise, Pa.

TO N. V. K.

Dear and much respected sister in the Lord, your kind and interesting letter of the — came duly to hand. I was much pleased to hear from you, yet I felt sorry that you are so much afflicted. But it being the will of the Lord, suffer it to be so. We shall glorify God in our bodies and spirits which are his, and if in the arrangement of God it is so decreed that you shall glorify him in your body by suffering in the flesh, let it be so. He will always give you grace sufficient to bear, and to endure faithful to the end. And when you will come with those who have come up out of great tribulation, and have with them washed your robe in the blood of the Lamb, and with them have a crown on your head, and a palm of victory in your hand; it may be needful for us, as it was for St. John to ask WHO IS THIS? Then dear sister you will forget that you ever suffered in the flesh. To this end the Lord bless you, and sustain you, and give you grace sufficient for all your trials, and never suffer you to be tried above that you are able to bear, but with every trial make way for your escape. I pray for you in Jesus name. Amen.

Now in reference to your question, I will say it is easier to ask than to answer them. So in this I may differ in my views from yours, and from brethren much wiser than I am, but if so, I ask forbearance. Your question is "A new commandment I give unto you," and "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another." "What was this new commandment? Was it that of Feet washing?"

This scripture is recorded by St. John, 13: 34, 35.

In answer I will say, that some hold that the "new commandment" is, that we love one another, and this is the view that I formerly held; others hold that feet washing is the new commandment; and I have heard some affirm that it is the supper. But neither of these will stand the test of Scripture, for to love our neighbor as ourselves was a commandment long ago, and the Scripture testimony that our neighbor means our brother, is abundant and conclusive. So to love our brethren was not a new commandment at the time the Savior uttered the words in question. Neither was feetwashing as a religious observance, altogether new at that time. For God himself had commanded the observance of feet washing, as a religious institution in the earliest days of organizing services among men on earth. See Exo. 3: 17–21, and 40: 30–33. So neither loving one another, nor washing feet could not be called a new commandment. Nor could the supper be called altogether new, for there was some similarity between it and the Passover supper, or the feast of the Passover. It is true that the similarity in this is but a trace, masticating is the only feature altogether similar. Yet it is evident that neither of these observed in their isolation could be termed a new commandment.

We observe that when Jesus began to wash his disciples feet, and coming to Peter he objected to having his washed; but Jesus said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter?" Here Peter is notified that something new would be instituted. No doubt he had known the law that commanded the priest to wash his feet before he serves at the altar, and no doubt had often seen it observed in that way, but for the priest or Master to wash the disciples feet, religiously he knew nothing of. St. Paul, speaking of the priesthood, says: If perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." See Heb. 7th chapter. So Jesus is made a priest, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life; has power, and of necessity must change the law, and so has changed the feast of the Passover to that of the Lord's supper, and the slaying, and offering the Paschal lamb, to the breaking bread, and giving the cup or wine the fruit of the vine as representatives of the sacrifice of himself in his broken body, and shed blood once for all; and changing the law of the priest, washing his own hands and feet before serving at the alter, into washing one anothers feet before eating the Lord's supper, and partaking of the bread and wine as emblematical of his body and blood, broken and shed for the sins of the world. Now they are combined as they are given and connected in the Scriptures with the declaration, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," evidently, is a "new commandment" never before so combined, so commanded, nor so observed. And now only so observed by the Brethren who are the Lord's chosen few and faithful followers.

Love, the binding bond must be in it all, and if this principle is manifest in us, all men will know that we are his disciples, when we do love one another; and to know this there must be a token given, and he says: "By this shall all men know," &c. The expression "By this," implies more than is expressed, and I believe "By this" the kiss of love is implied. The kiss is a token of love, and its observance as such, is enjoined by the apostles in their writings to the churches five times. We may give signs and tokens by which we may know that we love each other; but these are private and all men cannot know it; but when the member of the body, the church, are seated at the table of the Lord in the observance of the "new commandment," and salute one another, all men can see it and know that we are His disciples because we gave them the token by which they can know it.

God's people always had bands and cords by which they were bound together, and which their enemies always strove to break asunder. The Psalmist said, "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take council together, against the Lord, and against his annointed, saying, Let us break these cords asunder, and let us cast away these ends from us." Of these bands and cords none are so largely and conspicuously set forth in the word of God as that of His people saluting one another. Jacob said come near and kiss me my son. and he came near and kissed him, Jacob kissed Rachel, Laban embraced and kissed Jacob, Laban kissed his sons and daughters, Esau embraced and kissed Jacob, Joseph kissed all his brethren, Moses kissed his father-in-law. Aaron kissed Moses, Naomi kissed her daughter-in-law, Orpha kissed her mother-in-law, Samuel kissed Saul when he annointed him, David and Jonathan kissed one another, David kissed Absalom, Absolem kissed those to whom he gave his hand. Elisha said, let me ki a my father and mother. I could continue my reference to a great length, but let this suffice to sustain our faith that "By this" the kiss is meant.

My answer to your question, "what was this new commandment?" is this, the ordinance of washing one anothers feet, the eating of the Lord's supper; and the partaking of the broken body, and shed blood of Christ, connected and combined in one service, is the "new commandment," and is what is meant when he says, "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." And, "By this," the kiss is meant as the token by which all men may know that we are his disciples. In christian love I remain your brother, D. P. SAYLER.

Dear Pilgrim: Let me give you a little church news. I left home June 9th, to attend brother John Knisley's Communion meeting. June 10th, we met at their church to hold the above named meeting. An unusual large congregation met. The number of ministers was not very large, yet enough. We had a feast of fat things indeed, and refreshing to the soul.—Six were added to the fold by baptism, and many more felt the strivings of the Spirit. The church held a choice for a minister. The lot fell upon brother William G. Cook, son-in-law of brother John Hoover, who was called from this church recently by death. Brother Cook is a worthy young brother, and we hope the blessing of God will rest upon him.

From here I went to Huntington congregation, to their Communion meeting. This church is in its infancy yet. We commenced meeting at 3 P. M., with good attendance and good order, we had a very pleasant one indeed, and a soul-refreshing feast, and the most rejoicing I ever saw.—Here ten were added to the fold by baptism, and seven more applicants which were baptized the next day.

Sabbath morning, June 15, we went to Antioch. Here again the attendance was large, and much interest manifested, and ten more were added to the fold by baptism, and the church was richly refreshed, and I think all felt much better than they have for some time before, and as the Lord came near, we hope we will all come closer to Him. New French Religious Sect.

The existence of a religious sect called "Derbiste," whose adherents are mostly recruited in the two departments of the Drome and the Ardeche, was scarcely known to the great majority of the Frenchmen until a soldier belonging to this body was tried by court martial a few days ago, for insubordination. The tenets of this sect are principally embodied in the doctrine that human life is absolutely sacred, and that the professinn of arms is in itself a crime. In obedience to this teaching a young man who had been sent to join his regiment, refused to carry arms, declaring that he was ready to submit to any punishment, even that of death, rather than repudiate his principles. The colonel had no alternative but to send him before a court martial for breach of discipline; and in the course of the trial the schoolmaster, who had been called as witness, stated that although he had done all in his power to eradicate these ideas, the prisoner held fast to his original purpose. When he told him that, in the event of a battle, he would always be able to fire in the air, the young man declared that he would not do that because it would be an act of treachery towards the government, and that he preferred stating the case to his superiors when called upon to join the army. On similar grounds he refused to purchase a substitute; and in reply to the warning of his schoolmaster that he would render himself liable to be shot for insubordination, he avowed his readiness "to add another to the three millions of martyrs who have already died for their faith." His behavior at the trial was most exemplary, and when questioned by the President of the Court, he confessed thet he had disobeyed the military laws, but had acted in conformity with those of the Gospel.

REMARKBLE FRESHET.—The Omaha Republican publishes the report of Captain Moore, of the regular army, who recently returned from a scout in the Republican Valley, whither he had gone with a command of sixty men, by order of General Ord, for the purpose of patrolling the valley and learning the disposition of the Indians. The Cap. mentions an extraordinary flood which overtook his command. While at Blackwood Creek, at about 9 P. M., on the 31st of May, being in the valley of Blackwood, a sudden and devestating freshet came rushing down the valley, carrying away, like corks, men, tents, horses, and army wagons. This valley is between forty and fifty miles in length, and from a mile to a mile and a half wide. Its whole space during the freshet was one raging torrent, six or seven feet deep. Six men and twenty-six horses were drowned by the calamity, and most of the men whose lives were preserved saved themselves from death by catching the limbs of the trees as they swept away, and thus reached the tops of the trees, where, when the dawn of the next day broke, they were still perched. Eleven men were saved by clinging to the top of an army wagon which had stuck to a log on the ground. Five of the bodies of the drowned men were recovered. What is curious about this freshet is, as Captain Moore reports, that there was no apparent cause for this occurrence, as for five days previous there had been no rain, and he is unable to say whence the water came.

VOL. 4. JAMES CREEK, PENNSYLVANIA, JULY 1, 1873. NO. 26.

Whereas the C. F. C., and PILGRIM have published articles with reference to decisions of questions at A. M., differing from the sentiment expressed by said decisions, and communications from others, even from those who are not members of the church, and even of an expelled member, reflecting seriously upon the question of the character of the A. M., therefore,

Resolved, that they be required to make acknowledgment for this offence, and that they further be required to promise to be more guarded in the future in this respect, and to publish nothing of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting beyond the questions and answers as passed.

Sharp. I think that it embodies too much. While there may be a general consent to the first part, I think that the last part would hardly be acceptable to the Brotherhood. I don't know what the sentiment of the Brotherhood is, as regards the first part, but as for the last part, I think it is asking too much, and for the reason, if these Brethren do not publish these proceedings, there are others who are not Brethren, and from the remarks of the Brethren, I have heard that there is such a demand for these proceedings, that, if they cannot be obtained from the periodicals of the Brethren, they will be obtained from other periodicals, not from the Brethren. We cannot stem that tide, we think it would be unwise to prohibit them. Would it not be wise that they first be read at the Annual Meeting before publication, that would certainly be satisfactory to the Brethren and would also give satisfaction to the Brotherhood. If such a plan could be adopted, I think it is worthy of our effort. I should like to see that divided into two halves; first in reference to the acknowledgment, and second, in reference to the publishing of the proceedings While the paper may be lost by one query, it may be sustained for the other. Therefore I think it would be unwise to take them together. And still another difficulty, I fear we are getting into. Inasmuch as there is such a great demand for the proceedings, the Brotherhood want them, would it not be better to have a church organ, and if the world publishes these proceedings, would it not be better to have a church organ, to which we can refer, as an authority. You may say "we have the minutes as authority," but it seems from the demands for these proceedings, that they do not supply the want that is generally felt.

Do not let us assume so much authority as to suppress it altogether. I am sure the remedy would be tenfold worse than the disease.

Slifer. Those are my views exactly. Two years ago at our Annual Meeting in Berks county, there was a reporter from Philadelphia. He gave the general history of our church, and the report pleased many of our members. Many of our members contributed to have that article republished, I subscribed to it myself. We should not be ashamed of our doctrine when it is truthfully reported, whether by papers from ourselves or anywhere else. Let us send out our views broadcast, that the world may see their truthfulness. We should of course call our editors to account if they publish anything untruthful, but I hope they will not be called to give an account when they give the public a truthful account of our proceedings.

Moderator. As brother Sharp has suggested, something of the kind may be necessary—perhaps so. I have travelled much among the brethren, though, and while I hear a few say they are in favor of the idea, I hear many say they are not in favor of it, as it is now conducted; but for the good of our editors, suppose I suggest a thought. Bring up a query from your church, to your District Meeting, and then to the Yearly Meeting, and then see whether the Yearly Meeting will grant the report to be read at the close of the meeting, and have have the sanction of the meeting before its publication Something of this kind I think might help you, but as it is now, to my knowledge, I know it is not wholesome to the church, therefore we would advise to stop it at present, until we can see a better way to accomplish the object under consideration.

Holsinger. There have been remarks made that perhaps require a little explanation and correction. The proposition to have the report of the proceedings of this meeting read before this meeting, and inspected by this meeting, before publication is simply preposterous. It is an impossibility. Here we are getting the proceedings of this meeting, its queries and answers, and its speeches, all written out, and to read it all to this meeting would take as long as to hear it in the first place. We have three days work of consideration, and then three days considering that consideration, and then publish it! Why it is altogether out of the question, and cannot be done.

Evidently the object of this proposition is to cut off the publication entirely, for it is proposing an impossibility. So far as the decisions of this meeting are concerned, they are considered and finally passed, and are ready for publication by authority of the meeting; but as to the proceedings, the query is raised and the appeal is made to suppress their publication altogether—that is what brother Sturgis wants.

(Sturgis—I said, "better have none unless we can suppress these extremes.")

Bro. Sturgis has one paper with which he has no trouble, but a few aspirants have come in, and they have created this trouble Now this very paper to which he refers, had its fiery ordeal to go through twenty years ago, and Bro. Sturgis has forgotten it. Now, when we seem to have gotten under headway—sailing along for a time without any trouble, and a spirit of enterprise and learning has seized the Brotherhood, our day of trial comes, and we have to pass through the ordeal. Twenty-three years ago, as you know, the Visitor had to undergo the same persecution, and the same power that wanted to crush the Visitor, is now trying to crush us. It is the liberty of the press that is assailed—the question does not simply aim at the report of the proceedings, but is an attempt to strike at the freedom of the Press. My Bro. Davy says he did not learn that the Brotherhood wanted the proceedings published. Unfortunately, I suppose, he did not travel among those persons who read the Companion, for we know the sentiment of a large majority of our readers, and that they want the report. Brother Davy may travel among those who do not read our paper, and they are, to a man, opposed to publishing the proceedings, and some of them would perhaps oppose the printing of the Bible. The very same element of opposition that opposes our publishing the proceedings of this meeting, this is the element that opposed the printing of the Bible, and the general dissemination of knowledge. I know that not all do this, but it originates from the same feeling.

What harm can there be in publishing the proceedings? How many strangers are there in this congregation, from all parts of the country, who hear all the discussions that take place? Our paper circulates principally among the Brethren, and our readers ask the privilege of knowing what was done here, what speeches were made, and what resolutions were passed. But my brother would say, "No, suppress it, keep them in the dark." If ignorance is Christianity, then my brother Sturgis right, but if we want our absent brethren to act intelligently, I say, give them the facts, and let them be convinced from the heart, of the truth and propriety of the decisions. Then we will go right along and have no trouble. But if you make the decisions, and fail to give any reasons for them, they seem to be without support,

This very day we have had questions under consideration upon which we largely differed. Perhaps if we had gone from man to man, and asked the views of the members privately, the decision would be greatly different to what it now is. That is the way to get the true sentiment of the church, give them our reasons for deciding thus and so, and not say, "Here the Annual Meeting has made this decision, and you have got to submit to it." I believe that every one of us, who loves to be convinced, who loves to go to the Annual Meeting, has, as his primary object, to learn the reasons for the decisions. We spend some fifty thousand dollars for holding this Annual Meeting, and all we get for it is the satisfaction we have of hearing the discussions. Now for the simple sum of from two to three hundred dollars, we propose to give the same satisfaction to thousands who don't come to this meeting. We have a great many subscribers who are not even able to pay the subscription price of the paper, and to every one of these we bring forth the news that was imparted to us at this Annual Meeting. How much does it cost you to come from Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, to this meeting? Some of you it has cost $75 or a $100.

Now for the paltry sum of $1.50, we give you the same satisfaction, and as some of the brethren suggest a great deal more satisfaction. We could perhaps give you a great deal more satisfaction than you enjoy here, for nothing at all. Now, then, the question naturally arises, "why not allow this publication?" Let us sift it down and see what is the reason for this opposition. What are the brethren afraid of? Is not the same sentiment thrown out here before this mixed multitude, that will be thrown out to the readers of our periodicals? Will we publish anything that was not decided here, or that was not spoken here? If this congregation has the privilege of listening to it here, why shall not our members who cannot afford to come here, have the privilege of reading it? What is the reason? Because it makes confusion! These brethren in Missouri are opposed to the periodicals, opposed to schools, opposed to general knowledge. Why? Because it causes a disturbance and confusion! So did Salem College cause a confusion—Oh, a wonderful disturbance. If it creates confusion to read it, will it not create confusion to hear it, especially to hear these members make these contradictory speeches face to face? Certainly, for here you can gather additional impression from the expression of our features. If it is an evil to allow brethren to know the reasons for the decisions of the body, let the meeting convene in a room with closed doors, and then come to us and say, "We, the elders, we, the bishops, we, the men of God have made this decision, and you have got to submit to it, whether you understand it or not; the law has been passed." If that is not right, then let us go to work and give all the information we can to our fellow members, and endeavor to convince them that what we have done is right, and that it is in accordance with God's word and sound logic.

Stuagis—I want the brother to be disabused of the idea that I have proposed the thought of suppressing the publication. It is only if the editors cannot be subject as other brethren are—subject, to the church, and the general brotherhood, then, I say, it is better to suppress it. That idea is all I intended to convey. I am not an advocate of ignorance at all; I want education and knowledge everywhere, just as much as brother Henry does.

——. It is altogether out of the question to prohibit the publication. Should they misrepresent, let them be required to make acknowledgment, but do not take away the liberty that belongs to them.

Moderator. Inasmuch as my name was mentioned, I would say, that I have been among many brethren, that read the Companion, and I think that I have a pretty fair chance to know what the sentiments of those brethren are. While brother Henry thinks I do not travel much among people who read the Companion, I would say that I am no respecter of the brotherhood, and travel just as much among the young brethren as I do among the old, and perhaps more. I think we will now stop this discussion and put this question to its passage.

Buechly. I cannot give my consent to this answer. In my travels in Minesota, Iowa and Illinois, I think four-fifths of the members are for having the proceedings of Annual Meeting published in our periodicals. My brother from the Northern District of Indiana is here with only $16 in his pocket. They could not collect anything for him because the brethren will not let us know what is done at the Annual Meeting.

C. Forney. In the outskirts of Kansas and Nebraska, we find some of the Brethren that esteem these reports very highly, and many of the young people are ready to be received into the church just from the information recived there. It is very natural for people to want to know the reason, and on what grounds a transaction has taken place in Annual Counsel.

——. In my travels in the far west I find that there is a great request for the proceedings of these meetings. and Brethren have told me with tears in their eyes how they desired this, and I have not found a single individual in all my travels who did not want them published. I will oppose the passage of that resolution.

Sayler. I am one that wishes that answer somewhat modified. There are some things in it I would wish to stand, but there are also some little things which I wish to see changed. I simply rise in answer to the last Brethren who have been testifying to the vast demand, particularly among the western people, to know all about the proceedings of the meeting. I am glad to hear it. But I was sent on a journey last fall, and if there ever was anything denounced in unmeasured terms it was the minutes. I am glad to hear so favorable a change reported in the West, to hear that they have begun to think favorably of the meeting. I say again there are some things I would wish to see modified, and there are also some things I would like to see stand, and I propose we adjourn.

A Bro. Let us take the counsel of Bro. Davy, pass the decision as now given and give directions to all the churches to take counsel at home next Spring, and then at the District Meeting, and come to the Annual Meeting prepared to say what they wish in the matter.

Holsinger. If this council take it upon them to say that Leedy had reference to this council, then I am willing to acknowledge that it was wrong to publish it. Why not do so with the proceedings of the Annual Meeting? If wrong why not make us account for it; but I don't want you to prescribe me before, and cut off the liberty of the members. Must we be dumb to unrighteousness in the church, and close our eyes against wrong? No, never, if I publish what is not true bring me to account, but do not prescribe me beforehand. When we must do that I am going to quit preaching, and will never publish a paper where I must be prescribed. If I err I want to be corrected.

Metzgar. Some of our old brethren have very good ideas, but are not educated and I am afraid the order of the church would suffer if what every one is said is published. They can all get the minutes and the Scriptures are open, and it seems to me as if it was more a feeling of curiosity than anything else.

A Bro. I believe we are all too strenuous, we should be very careful that we don't censure. So long as our periodicals comes up to their true colors we have no trouble with them. I say, by the experiment of publishing the truth. Two men can hardly tell the same story here, and it is pretty hard to carry it a thousand miles and then tell it.

Wise. There have been intimations that those who oppose this general report are opposed to education. I am a friend of education, but improper education is injurious, and only that education which promotes God's glory and peace and harmony on earth, should be supported by us. We have heard different brethren say that there is an almost universal demand for the general report, in their country, and my brothor Sayler says, he is glad to know that the decisions of A. M., are beginning to be respected, but some of the bitter opponents of these meeting are the advocates of the general report, and it is not unusual to hear them say when they get them, "Ah! I guess that old fogy gets his own!" "That's right, let them have it, right and left." That is the result of these general reports where they are so much in demand. Instead of promoting harmony, union, and respect for the church they conduce to the contrary. The general report of the speeches of the Annual Meeting is like that of our speeches in legislative halls, and is according to the political opinions of those who read them, applauded or condemned. I am opposed to anything that would create sectional feeling in our beloved Brotherhood. If we can embrace one another and feel that we are all brethren, and respect one another with that due christian respect, our meeting would be productive of better consequences.

——. I can corroborate the statement of Bro. Wise, as to the slang thrown out in the reading of the reported speeches.

Holsinger. The reason why the report is required more than the minutes of the meeting is because it gives the whys and the wherefores. The minutes are but a law and duty. They were asked to day to point to the word of the Lord, and did not do it. But the argument presented may help the Brotherhood to come to a conclusion. If I could be made believe it is an injury to our beloved Brotherhood, I would not publish them. It costs me more than if I would not publish it. I must labor and go to expense in order to give satisfaction. I do it because the brethren want to know what is done. It is the only way we can keep our brethren together, and if we cannot give the "thus saith the Lord," let us give the next best thing, which is sound reason.

Wise. It has been asserted that I used sophistry. Sophistry is unfair reason, and an allusion to the light minded portion of this congregation has been made, to support that declaration. I spoke of members of the church. I spoke of those who profess to be brethren, and if the publication of a report will make them so light minded that they will speak disrespectfully of their own brethren, I say, put it down. I am here to declare, and I think I am ready to substantiate the declaration, that is those who read the Christian Family Companion, and those who read the report furnished. I speak that which I do know and declare that which I have seen and heard. There are about as many cases as there were instances that fell under my observation of persons who opposed the general order of the church, as of those among whom these sentiments prevailed. As I said before, I would like to see something done to restrain that influence if possible, that might produce some happy result to the cause of the general order of our brotherhood; nay, I will say more, the teachings of our New Testament. Humiliation will be respected more. I would like to see something brought about to benefit those persons and not encourage them in their wickedness, and if this is sophistry or unfair reasoning, brother Henry is entitled to his position.

WEDNESDAY MORNING SESSION.

After devotional exercises, the unfinished matter of last evening was taken up.

Moderator. Sometimes in a moment of excitement we utter language that we do not design shall convey the idea received by the audience. I was informed that my reference to Northern Indiana yesterday evening conveyed the idea to some that all Northern Indiana was alluded to, and I wish to disabuse the minds of my brethren in regard to the matter. We have some worthy brethren and sisters in Northern Indiana that stand as firm as I for the doctrine of Jesus Christ as inculcated in the Gospel, and taught by the Brethren. I hope the explanation will be sufficient.—Some also called in question the truthfulness of the remarks in regard to calling old brethren by the name of "old fogies." It is a fact, and I am not the only one that heard the remark, and would refer to brother Jacob Troxel.

The assertion was corroborated by the brother referred to and several others.

Answer to previous question, as read by the Clerk. There may be a synopsis of the reasons given as a basis for decisions, but no names of speakers to be used; and those who publish shall be responsible to Annual Meeting for their report.

Passed.

WHEREAS, The C. F. C., and PILGRIM have published articles, with reference to the decisions of queries at Annual Meetings diverting from the sentiment as expressed by said decision, and communications published from others, even from those who are not members of the church, and even from expelled members, reflecting seriously on the christian character of the Annual Meeting, therefore,

Resolved, That they be requested to make acknowledgements for this offense, and they be further requested to promise to be guarded in the future in this respect.

Passed.

Brumbaugh. As far as I am concerned, it has always been my desire and wish to labor for the church and for the glory of God, and therefore, if we have come short of this duty, as this counsel said we have, or that we have made a mistake, we make the acknowledgement for that mistake, and accept the advice which has been given us. We would have our dear brethren and sisters understand that we are yet young in experience, and that our position is a very critical and responsible one. We are often brought into close quarters, and it is a hard matter for us to decide, and on account of these things we sometimes make the mistakes we have made; therefore, when we are willing to subject ourselves to the decision of our brethren, we hope they will feel themselves under responsibility to stand by us and give us all the advice we need. It is certainly understood that we ask the pardon of the Church for the wrong we have done.

Holsinger. You have me linked with another party, while I think the aim and object is exclusive as at me. When I say a thing because I believe it, I am conscientious in taking it back, unless convinced it was an error. I am not conscious at the present time of ever having published anything in regard to the proceedings of the Annual Meeting that differed from the decisions made. If that can be pointed out to me. I will make the acknowledgement. In regard to the other matter, I will take it all back, provided this Annual Meeting will say that that letter referred to them. I did not publish it myself. Brother Beer gave it to the printer and had it published, and I am not sure that I would have done it. After this explanation I would do so no more. If it has created confusion and dissatisfaction and wounded the feelings of the brethren, I am sorry that it was published. I intend to avoid publishing anything that is injurious, or that I regard as slanderous on our Brotherhood, for I think I love the church of God.

Moderator. If Bro. Henry has been linked with another party the standing committee has not done it. We have taken the papers as they came to our hands, and so acted upon them, and are not accountable. We concluded that the churches and Districts from which they came had examined the number of the paper they referred to, giving the day and date. We might have called for it on our part.

Brumbaugh. If not out of order I would like to have a fair understanding in regard to this report. We have a full report of this meeting and wish to know whether we are at liberty to publish it, without giving the names of the speakers.

——. There is no objections to a true report if the names and their own comments are left out.

Holsinger. When we look upon the actions of our lives as having been offensive or causing any one pain we always feel regret and sorrow for having unnecessarily wounded the feelings of any of our fellow-men, much more our fellow-members in Christ, and on the present occasion, to any of my brethren whom I have wounded and injured I ask their pardon. If I did publish as the proceedings of the meeting, or even gave as my own views at the time, in regard to those proceedings, on the subject of double or single footwashing, my acknowledgment will cover that. If I did it I say that it was wrong. There are no other brethren here willing to say that it was so.

Moderator. The report will show for itself as will show this afternoon.

Whereas, Bro. Henry Holsinger has committed great offense to the Brethren in their present Annual Meeting, by pursuing the course pursued, when complaints had been presented from various places and Districts, and when an humble and meek explanation was expected, Bro. H., before the whole congregation, made remarks which gave offense to the brethren, and were to the dishonor of the Brotherhood, such a spirit manifested by a minister of the Gospel, we consider also contrary to the Gospel and the profession and character of our Brotherhood.

2nd. He declared that a brother—and the occasion on which he made the remark, shows that he was a brother of some eminence.—would suppress the printing of the Bible, with no testimony before him warranting him to make such a declaration, we consider the charge a dishonor to the Brotherhood.

3rd. In speaking against the brethren in warm and strong language, and alluding to the business done on the morning which pertained to a point which had given the brethren much trouble, but which was settled quite as satisfactorily as expected and we felt pleasantly over it, he said, alluding to the elders, they were asked to give the word of the Lord and refused to do it. We consider this remark injurious to the feelings of the elders.

4th. In saying that one of the brethren used sophistry in his speech we consider a great violation of Christian courtesy and brotherly love.

5th. In declaring he would never submit to the restraint under consideration, plainly shows a spirit of disobedience to the Church.

The offenses were not confined to the Elders, but extending to the congregation, the impropriety grieved a large number of the members, as their strong feelings expressed after the meeting closed, plainly indicated.—Now, in view of the foregoing consideration, we require a very humble acknowledgement, and an assurance that his course in the future be more respectful to the ministers and Elders, and more in accordance with the meekness and brotherly love inculcated in the gospel.

Moderator. I would only say myself that as the business was transacted yesterday afternoon, pretty sharp words were used; the feeling seemed to be manifest to us, we were driven to do something to satisfy this assembly, to satisfy the Brotherhood present, and to vindicate the honor of the Brotherhood, hence we felt our duty as a representative of the Brotherhood of the different states, to do our duty in the matter, and to satisfy the brethren and sisters, is give reason we have got this matter before you.

Sharp. I would like to say one word. Perhaps these restrictions are very good, and may tend to make us more cautious and inculcate that christian spirit, but I would say, show no partiality. I suppose I shall not be compelled to refer to any one individual, as others have heard the remarks as well as I have, and I should be far better pleased if the criticisms that are made would include others besides brother Holsinger, and that it would be more just.

——The remarks reflected very unfavorably on the Standing Committee, and the meeting in general. He said he was ashamed of what brother Wise said. We want brother H. to feel that there are a great number of brethren here, come from a distance, and while he is ashamed, many more were ashamed of what he said. It very unfavorably reflected on brother Wise, and those old gray headed brethren that are contending earnestly for the faith. We want a hearty acknowledgement, as many of us are about his age in the ministry and as lay members.

Workman. I have been badly wounded by seeing our Elders stigmatized, and advise every brother and sister to be careful. Brother ——— drew tears to my eyes by the spirit he manifested, but my mind was carried back to the days of Core, Dathan and Abiram when they opposed Moses with his hoary head, or to Jeroboam, who took counsel of the younger in preference to the aged, with such serious consequences. We want this meeting to understand that we appreciate the counsel of these old brethren, and intend to support them as long as their counsel is in harmony with the word of the Lord. The people of God have been deceived before, and may be he after. Let us wait a little. Our time will come by and by, and we will realize what our elder brethren feel now. Let me make this strong appeal, brethren, be careful.

——. Let the spirit of love be amongst us, and let us treat others as we would be treated ourselves. Love is the lever power that moves the world. To ask the pardon of those we have wronged will gain their approbation and we will be exalted instead of humbled.

Holsinger. A brother that has taken his seat, has given me a good lesson and it is possible that he needs one. I have from a child loved the society of the aged brethren; but in reading the Bible, I learn that great men are not always wise, and that the aged do not always understand judgment. Men whom I have regarded as wise, whose gray hairs should have been an honor before men, and a glory upon their old heads, have gone down, and so far denied Jesus Christ as to be lost to Christianity. Three or four men who occupied positions in this standing committee have fallen as low as men could fall in the world. I looked up to them as saints, and now they deny the Christ that died to save. I look now only to the men's conduct, in order to revere him. I take issue with an old man when I cannot agree with his opinions. I take God's word and make that the man of my counsel, and agree with the old brethren when they stand up for the word of God. It seems to me you are taking a course you are not justified in taking. Why not bring me before my own congregation? Why must I be brought before this meeting from year to year? If the spirit I manifest is not of the spirit of Christ I ask your forgiveness. I hope to get into the spirit of Christ, and would like to do his will. I think the man who would try to suppress the publication of the Bible has been a member of the standing committee. This spirit of ignorance and superstition is going to drag every one like it out of the church. If that is a mistake I make I ask acknowledgement. I have a little advantage over you in knowing these things, who wrote it, and who printed it, and it seems to me it come from that source.

In speaking of the apostolic manner of installation I alluded to a matter before us, and a brother standing beside me, an elder in the church, said they evidently did shirk that matter. I have to bear it because I alluded to it. I believe I should not have used the word sophistry, nor do I think Bro. Wise should have taken it up so hard. I did not mean false doctrine. If you had reason from my remarks, to think I had reference to this standing committee I take it all back. I had reference to those parties that did say it, and not to the standing Committee. If the decisions are according to Scripture, they ought to point to the Scripture, they ought to direct these questions to it. Did you do it brethren? If not you cannot expect an acknowledgment from me. The District Meeting that brot it here answered the question and gave the Scripture, and this meeting refused to let that stand. If the District Meeting had not given an answer then I would have used the word fail.

—— If we leave it go with that broad assertion, it will show that we refused to give Scripture answer. If we could have agreed on the officers we would not have differed.

Moderator. Brother Holsinger said he wondered why he must be arraigned before the Annual Meeting so often. In answer I would say that his words and actions yesterday were offensive to many of our older brethren, and this is why we have to try the matter here.

Slifer. Yesterday when I discovered a disposition to lay the question of the Deacons on the table, I used the word shirk, without any intention. Brother Holsinger used the word evade. I acknowledged that is answer, but did not insist on any change whatever.

Passed.

Holsinger. The brethren say they could not agree that these offences were the same, and if that is the way then my assertions were out of order. I acknowledge that was wrong and am sorry it occurred and I hope the brethren will forgive me for it.

Slifer. I accept brother Holsinger's apology.

ANSWER OF STANDING COMMITTEE.

Now, in view of the foregoing consideration, we require a very humble acknowledgement of brother Holsinger for his offense, and an assurance that his course in the future shall be more respectful to the church and elders, and more in accordance with the meekness and brotherly love inculcated in the Gospel. (A number of voices called for its passage and it was passed.)

Holsinger. Brethren, all the assurance I can give you is my word. By the grace of God I will try to serve my Master to the best of my ability, and have all the respect toward my brethren that my faith and confidence in their soundness and ability will warrant, regarding God, at all times, as the Sovereign and Judge, before whom you and I must appear.

POETRY.

A FAREWELL.

The time is swiftly rolling on,
When I must faint and die,
My body to the dust return,
And there forgotten lie.

Let persecution rage around,
And anti-christs appear
My silent dust beneath the ground,
Shall no disturbance hear.

Through heat and cold I often went,
Through sorrow and distress,
To call on sinners to repent,
And seek the Savior's face.

My brother preachers, boldly speak,
Who stand on Zion's walls,
Confirm the strong, revive the weak,
And often sinners call.

May Zion's sons in peace be found,
And put their foes to flight,
While I am sleeping under ground,
May you in love unite.

My brethren all, I bid adieu,
Your fellowship I love
In time I'll never more see you,
But soon we'll meet above.

My little babes are near my heart,
For nature seems to bind
So strong it grieves me to depart,
And leave them all behind.

Dear Lord a Father to them be,
And shield them from all harm,
That they may know and worship thee
And dwell upon thy arm.

My loving wife, my bosom friend,
The object of my love,
The time's been sweet on earth with thee,
My sweet and harmless dove.

My dearest love don't weep for me;
Neither lament nor mourn,
I trust I shall with Jesus be,
While you are left alone.

I never shall return to thee,
Don't let this grieve thy heart,
But you can quickly come to me;
When we shall part no more.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

ON PRIDE.

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble."—James 4 : 60.

That pride is an abomination in the sight of God, cannot be gainsayed by any who believe in the scripture of Divine truth. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord; though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished," Prov. 16 : 5. "A high look and a proud heart, and the plowing of the wicked is sin." Prov. 21 : 4. "Be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." Pet 5 ; 5. Seeing, then, that God looks upon the proud with abhorrence, and he cannot possibly expect any aid from him, yet it is so necessary for their future welfare.—That the Atheist, the Deist and Infidel indulge in pride and walk in gaudy show, delight in the vain and giddy fashions of this wicked world, seems not so strange to me, for they do not profess Christianity, neither do they believe in God's revealed will, much less in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which teaches humility almost on every page. But why it is that the mass of believers who profess Christianity, do even exceed Infidels in following the giddy and abominable fashions prevalent in our day, is a matter of surprise to me; for I cannot see how such indulgence can be reconciled with a life of Christianity. Hence we must come to the conclusion that the so called Christianity is at a very low ebb; for nine-tenth of the Christian professors belong to these popular churches, who feel no restraint upon their pride whatever. Can the Prince of Peace delight in the worship at the shrine of fashion? Is it possible to conceive the idea of His presence where devotees to the god of this world meet in their devotions? Will God dwell with them in their worship when meeting in His house, decorated and adorned with superfluity in order to make a show and attract the gay, up-lifted in heart who indulge in pride and think themselves gods in human form; but alas, alas, so disguised by the horrible fashions of the day, head dress and hunchbacked, that from a distance you hardly know them to be human beings? Impossible, when God's own Son saith, "that whatsoever is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God." God only dwelleth with the humble, and delights in the worship of the lowly. The meek shall inherit the earth; but "he searcheth the proud in imagination in their hearts." Pride is reigning in the high and fashionable churches without controversy, and God cannot be there is clear to every intelligent mind that has experienced true and undefiled religion; and that the heart can be humble when external grandeur and display is manifested, is devoid of truth and down right sophistry. An humble heart abhors what God abhors; resists what He resists; loves what God loves, and consequently His external appearance is plain, modest and his whole deportment in life is "clothed with humility," he has learned that of Jesus, and tries to follow His example. But the solemn question comes up here, is pride confined only to those fashionable and popular churches? Here let us pause for a moment; let us seriously reflect and take the matter home to our own fire-sides, to our own church, who professes to be separated from the world, and be a peculiar people. To our sorrow, we see the rapidity of pride, the dreadful monster entering the Church stealthily, cunningly and in the beautiful garb of forbearance and christian courtesy. Would pride approach in the form of a wolf, it would be more clearly seen, and more easily guarded against. But here he comes in the form of a more refined worship, mingled up with a little wisdom of this world, theoretical and educational discourses are admired listened to with pleasure, and if prolonged, with patience; while on the other hand, plain Scriptural discourses are received with reluctance, if prolonged, with impatience, and not unfrequently causes the half of the congregation to sleep. Brethren, Sisters, is it not so? Seeing then that we are drifting rapidly into the stream of popular Christianity, who is to blame? I say, the laity, the members who desire to have it so; dissatisfied with the plain and simple discourses of primitive Christians, they wanted something more refined, discoveries of mens' own making—void of Scriptural quotation—hence thereby stimulating our young ministers to acquire a polished education in order to deliver their discourses in rhetorical, flowry phrases, pleasing to the outward sense, but very seldom touch the heart. Do not think me too severe. I appeal to you, brethren and sisters. Is it not the truth? Have I not observed it when it was known that brother so was to preach? Did I not see many flock to the church that otherwise would have staid at home, members not excepted? Have I not heard expressed that a wonderful sermon was delivered, the best ever delivered there, when perhaps not a half dozen passages of Scripture were quoted in the sermon?

Brethren and sisters, can you not see the drift. Soon, soon we must have an educated ministry, and of consequence also a salaried one. If by God's help we cannot check pride in the Church by raising our voice against it publicly and privately, her glory will depart, the candle stick be removed and God's presence be withdrawn, and we are undone forever. As the ministry degenerates, so nonconformity to the Word degenerates. Can we distingnish brethren and sisters from the world? I am sorry to say that in many localities we cannot by their outward appearance, though we are happy to know that there are still many to stand by the old landmark. Be it known that where ministerial labor is flowing into popularity, there you can see the evidence of pride, the fruits of such a ministry; to see brethren and even ministers, and also dear sisters dressing like the world, though they may not come fully up with the mode and changing of the world, yet come half ways, causes my heart to bleed, and prompts my soul to pity them, because I see that pride occupies a seat in their hearts and prevents the Holy Spirit to possess it, which is so indespensible for our christian journey. I appeal again to you, my dear members, be clothed with humility. Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. For He that shall come will come and will not tarry; the just shall live by faith. May God enable us to become more humble every day, is the prayer of your unworthy servant. Farewell.

LEONARD FURRY.

TYPES AND PROPHECY.

Of typical persons who were not declared to be such till the persons of whom they were types appeared, Adam deserves to be first mentioned, for in respect of his being the author of sin and death to all his posterity, he is said by the apostle, Rom. 5; 14, to be by contrast, "the type or figure of him (Christ) who was to come," for the purpose of being the author of righteousness and life to mankind. hence Christ it called, 1 Cor. 15 : 55, the last Adam. Adam was likewise a type of Christ in this respect, that Eve, who was an image of the church, was formed of a rib taken from Adam's side while he was in deep sleep, for this transaction prefigured the formation of the church, the Lambs wife, by the breaking of Christ's side on the cross while he slept the sleep of death as the apostle insinuateth. Eph. 5 : 32. Joseph was a types of Christ in many respects, and was a bright example in every relation and period of life. At the age of 17 years he appears uncorrupted by the wickedness of his brethren or the partiality of his father's discountenancy, the sin of the former, and prompt in his obedience to the latter : Gen. 37 ; 2 3. Though unjustly sold as a slave, he is represented as strictly faithful to his master, abhorring youthful lust, though exposed to the strongest temptation. Afflicted and persecuted, yet finding, even when confined as a criminal, opportunity for doing good, Gen. 38 ; 22, 40 ; 7, &c., and though flattered by a king, disowning his own power to interpret Pharaoh's dream, and boldly avowing before this heathen and despotic monarch, the power of God, Ch. 41 ; 16. At the age of 30 years he is suddenly raised to the right hand of Pharaoh, yet is unseduced by the splendor of his situation, being guided by the spirit, he becomes a pattern to rulers, of industry, prudence and justice, Ch. 38 : 46-48. As a courtier, he shows the strictest regard to truth, with true nobleness of mind avowing the disreputable employment of his connections. As a brother, he exhibits unabated affection, not only to Benjamin, but to those who had hated him even unto death; for his apparent harshness arose from his anxiety to bring them to repentance, and when he had accomplished this, his whole conduct to them was marked by peculiar tenderness, and the most studied attention to their feelings and welfare. As a son, though lord of Egypt, he manifests the most affectionate respect for his aged parent, who was now dependant upon him. As a father, his piety appears in the names he gave his children, and his earnest desire for God's blessing upon them in bringing them to Jacob's dying bed. For 80 years he lived in the midst of the greatest worldly grandeur, surrounded with every temptation to worldliness and idolatry; but his dying breath testified how entirely his heart and treasure was in God's promises.

Next is Joshua, who was of Joseph's posterity, and was a type of Christ. Joshua and Jesus are the same name, the one Hebrew, the other Greek; and therefore in the New Testament, originally written in Greek, Joshua is called Jesus, Acts 7; 45, "which also our fathers brought in with Jesus," that is Joshua, Heb. 4; 8. "If Jesus, (that is Joshua) had given them rest, he would not have spoken of another day." (Edwards on Redemption.) The triumphs through faith of the Israelites under Joshua, may be considered as typical of the final triumph of the Church and of every Christian, thro' Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, "the author and finisher of our faith." God wonderfully gave his people possession of the land of Canaan, conquering its former inhabitants and the mighty giants, as Christ conquered the devil. He first conquered the great kings on the Eastern side of Jordan, and then divided the river Jordan, as before he had done the Red sea; causing the walls of Jericho to fall down at the sound of the trumpets of the priests. That sound signified the sound of the Gospel. By the preaching of Gospel ministers, the walls of the accursed city, Jericho will fall, signifying the walls of Satan's kingdom. After this, he wonderfully destroyed the mighty host of the Amorites, under the five kings, causing the sun and moon to stand still, to help the people against their enemies, at the prayer of the typical Jesus; plainly intimating that God would make the whole course of nature to be subservient to the work of redemption, and that everything should give place to the welfare of God's people. Thus did the Lord show His great love to his people, that he would make the course of nature to give place to their happiness and prosperity. At the same time the Lord fought as the captain of their host, Josh. 5; 14-15, and cast down great hail stones upon their enemies, by which more were slain than by the sword of Israel; and after this God gave the people a mighty victory over a yet greater army in the northern part of the land, gathered together as at the waters of Merom, as the sand of the sea-shore. Josh. 11; 4, &c.

THE BURIAL.

One thing alone is wanting, that the manner of the Jews in burying may be observed—a bier to lay the body on to bear it to the sepulcher. There has been no time to get one, or it is felt that the distance is so short that it is not needed. But that body has the best bier of all, the hands of true affection, to lift it up and carry it across to the new tomb which waits to receive it. The feet let us assign to Joseph, the body to Nicodemus, and that regal head with those closed eyes, over which the shadows of the resurrection are already flitting, let us lay on the breast of the beloved disciple. The brief path from the cross to the sepulcher is soon traversed. In silence and in deep sorrow they bear their sacred burden, and lay it gently down upon its clean, cold, rocky bed. The last look of the dead is taken. The buriers reverently withdraw, the stone is rolled to the mouth of the sepulcher; separated from the living. Jesus rests with the dead. The burial is over now, and we might depart; but let us linger a little longer, and bestow a parting look upon the burying ground. "In the place where He was crucified there was a garden, and in that garden a sepulcher." Put yourself before that sepulcher, and look around. This is no place for graves; here rise around you no memorials of the dead. You see but a single sepulcher, and that sepulcher in a garden. Strange mingling this of opposites, the garden of life and growth and beauty, circling the sepulcher of death, corruption and decay. Minature of the strange world we live in. What garden of it has not its own grave? Your path may, for a time, be through flowers and fragrance; follow it far enough, it leads ever to a grave. But this sepulcher in this garden suggests other and happier thoughts. It was in a garden once of old—in Eden—that death had his first summons given, to find there his first prey; it is in a garden here at Calvary that the last enemy of mankind has the death blow given to him—that the great conqueror is in his turn overcome. Upon that stone which they rolled to the mouth of the sepulcher let us engrave the words, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." What a change it has made in the character and aspect of the grave, that our Savior himself once lay in it! He has stripped it of its terrors, and to many a weary one given it an attractive rather than a repulsive look. "I heard a voice from Heaven saying"—it needed a voice from Heaven to assure of the truth—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." To such the grave is indeed, a bed of blessed rest. Buried with Jesus, they repose till the hour of the great awakening cometh, when with Him they shall rise to that newness of life over which no shadow of death shall ever pass.—Hanna.

OUR OBJECT.

In my last, the question was, "do boys ever think?" and the conclusion was that they should not only think, but think aright. Everything that God made was pronounced good and therefore of some practical use. Every tree and every herb that grows is intended for some purpose, and even every animal and the smallest insects have their allotted work to perform and places to fill.

If this is so, can it be expected that little boys and girls, who are made so much better than the trees of the forest or the little insects that fill the world, have nothing to do but eat and drink, sleep and play? No, my dear young reader, we all have a work to do, a design to fullfil, and unless we do this, we disappoint the design of God, who made us, and make the world worse for our being in it. This life is only a preparatory state, and all we do should be directly or indirectly for our future good. This disposition is born within us, and we are always willing to labor ever so hard a few hours or days, if we have the assurance that in the future we may receive some enjoyment from that labor. It is no strange thing for us some times to labor for weeks in order that we may enjoy ourselves for a day or even a few hours. Is not this strange, especially when it is known that of this expected enjoyment we may be sadly disappointed, as thousands are every day? In thinking over things, I have often been made to wonder why it is that our young people are willing to make such sacrifices for these uncertain and short pleasures, and yet are unwilling to make a very small sacrifice for joys which are sure, complete and lasting. Then, have an object in view, and let that be for your best interest, both for this time and the time to come. This you can do by ever striving to do good. This is the object for which you were made and for which you are spared every day. There is no way that you can be so happy as by being and doing good. It will not only make yourself happy, but it will help to make all those about you happy. Then, as one who loves you, I would say, think of the object for which you were made and then try and not disappoint God by not fulfilling it. Jesus has come into the world, suffered and died that you might be made happy and live forever; but to have all this he asks of you a small sacrifice or labor. If your father or mother would promise you, by laboring one hour, a whole week of continued enjoyment, would you not gladly accept the offer? I know you would; every one of you would be glad for just such an offer. Now Jesus offers us a thousand times better than this. He offers, if we are willing to labor in His vinyard a few years, ten fold blessings in this time, and in the world to come, eternal life. In the life to come, we are to live in a city that its streets are paved with gold. The glory of God is so great in it there is no need of a sun; there is no night there, and people never die. Now, to enjoy all this, and have a mansion in that city should be the great object of all your labor, and may I not hope it will? If not, you will sustain a great loss, and make yourself forever miserable. This you do not wish to do, neither do you expect it, but do not be deceived. God is not mocked, if you serve the flesh, you must reap corruption, and this will, in the end, produce death.

MAKING CHARACTER.

So many people seem to forget that character grows. That it is not something to be put on, ready made, with manhood or womanhood; but day by day, here a little and there a little, grows with the growth and strengthens with the strength, until, good or bad, it becomes almost a coat of mail. Look at the model man of business—prompt, reliable, conscientious, cool and cautious, yet clear headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all these admirable qualities? When he was a boy. Let me see the way in which a boy often gets up in the morning, works, plays, studies, and I will tell you just about what kind of a man he will make. The boy that is late at the breakfast table, late at school, who never quite does anything at the right time, stands a poor chance to be a prompt man. The boy who half washes his face, half does his chores, half learns his lessons, will never make a thorough man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small, and then excuses himself by saying, "O, I forgot! I didn't think!" will never be a reliable man. And the boy who finds pleasure in the pain and suffering of weaker things, will never be a noble, generous, kindly man; a gentle man.

And what about the girls? A girl who is peevish and pettish and careless of the comfort of others, who is untidy in her ways, and thinks it does not matter what she says or does at home, or how rude and unmannerly she may be to the dear ones there, is sure to grow into such a womanhood as, I am sorry to say, we have already too much of; the womanhood that scorns the old-fashioned virtues of industry and thrift and skilful handiwork, of love, and gentleness, and brave self-sacrifice, of the charity that thinketh no evil, that seeketh not her own, and that never faileth. She will never be a lady in the old Saxon meaning of the word, "loaf giver."—Little Corporal.

WHY NOT GIVE THE NAMES?

Some of our readers are asking, why not give the names in the report of A. M? We answer; because we have promised to be subject to Annual Meeting and it has said, we shall not give the names of the speakers, as will be seen in the report. When the decisions of that body become so insignificant that we cannot conscientiously assent to them we will denounce the whole affair. There is no propriety in the Church spending its thousands, to hold these meetings and then go home and disregard its proceedings and do as we please. The Report, as far as we have heard, is giving very general satisfaction, and goes far to confute the position that a few of our prominent brethren took, that it was only the refractory or disloyal part of the Brotherhood that desired a report of the meeting. This is a great mistake, as we know of some as good and loyal churches as there are in the Brotherhood that would vote almost unanimously for the report, and on the strength of it we have received almost 100 new subscribers, and those largely from churches that we know have a good standing.

As to the names, we cannot see but what the Report is quite as good without the names as it would be with them, but if we had our preference we would make every man responsible for the expression of his sentiments. It might intimidate some but others, it might make more careful. But in this we have submitted our judgment hoping that it may all be for the better in the end.

WHO WAS DAVID'S MOTHER?

The answer of this question was given by Wm. Neffsinger in No. 12, page 95 of current volume, but as it is of late, becoming quite a question in the Sabbath School and by the young generally, we will give it again. By referring to 1 Chron. 15 19 you will find that Zeruiah and Abigail were David's sisters. Then turn to 2 Samuel 17,25 and we there find that the mother of Zeruiah and Abigail, David's sisters, was Nahash.

DIED.

MOHR.—In the Logan Church, Logan Co. Ohio, Monday May 5th '73, our old sister Mohr, aged 75 years, 5 months and—days. She suffered much but bore it with christian fortitude. Funeral preached by the brethren, elder Jos. N. Hauffman, Michael Stronger and the writer.

BRINZER.—Also on Sunday June 15th, '73, Michael Brinzer, aged 23 years, 5 months and eleven days,

He wrs a son of Joseph and Catharine Brinzer and was married to Susan, daughter of brother John and sister Maria Forry. They lived together 5 months and 6 days. The young man met with a serious accident. He was kicked in the face and head by a horse, from wh-ch he suffered seven weeks to the hour. Funeral preached by elder Joseph Hauffman and the writer.

J. L. Frantz.

HENDRICKS.—Near Altoona, Polk Co., Iowa, June 12, '73, Susannah W. Hendricks, aged 74 years, and 11 months. Funeral service by brother Geo. R. Baker of Altoona, from John 1; 2.

Thirty years ago my father departed this life, and went home to the mansions above. Now mother too has gone to meet and embrace him, and soon, soon more of the family may be called and the question that concerns us, should be, who will be next? The subject of this notice was baptized 45 years ago and was ever faithful to the cause she espoused. D. W. Hendricks.

STUTZMAN.—In Muscatine Co., Iowa, June 19 '73, Bro. John Stutzman, aged 33 years. Funeral preached by brother S. Musselman from Tipton, Iowa.

MYERS.—In the Spring Run Congregation, near Mc. Veytown, Mifflin Co., Pa., June 23, '73, sister Elizabeth, wife of brother Reuben T. Myers, aged 31 years, 4 months and 3 days.

Thus an affectionate wife and mother has been separated from a kind husband and dear children, but we trust that those who are left behind will continue looking unto Jesus in their bereavement. She was a dear child, and has always been regarded as one that was respected and beloved by all who knew her. Often we have mingled together, sometimes in prayer and song, but now when we meet, this one we'll greet never again in our throng.

She called for the Elders of the church, a few days before she died, and was annointed which gave her great peace of mind. She was a faithful sister in Christ and finally fell asleep in Jesus. Funeral occasion improved by Elders S. Z. Sharp and J. R. Hanawalt, from John 11; 25-26, to a large audience. Serena Myers.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Our Communion meeting came off the 17th and 18th of May. Next morning, the 19th, in company with brother W. H. Baily, of Raleigh co., we set out, horse back, on a mission of love to the churches in the northern part of this State. The first night, we put up at friend Edward Duncan's, in Nicholas county; 20th, arrived at Sutton, Braxton county, meeting at night in the Court House; 21st at 11 a. m., meeting at S. H., near brother Bosley's, Bulltown, also at 4 p. m., at same place; 22nd set out for Upsher county, was met on the way by brother L. Fitgerald, who piloted us to his house. After partaking of some refreshments, went to brother John Fitzgerald's, had meeting at 5 p. m., also at night. Early next morning three were baptized.—At 12 p. m., arrived at brother D. Miller's,—owing to a misunderstanding there were no appointments for us at that point—went on and arrived at brother John Kisers, Barbour county, at night. Next day, 24th, at 10 a. m., meeting at the Brethren's new meeting house near Bealington, dined at friend and sister Betty Lathim's; at 4 p. m., meeting again at meeting house; went home with brother W. P. Wilson; 25th meeting at meeting house again at 11 a. m., home, with friend W. Corley; at 4 p. m., meeting at brother J. K. Scott's, Randolph county. Brother Baily had meeting at 4 p. m., near brother J. Kiser's, and from there took another route into Randolph county; 26th had another meeting at brother Scott's at 10 a. m., and at 4 p. m., at the Brethren's meeting house, home, with brother Solomon Gainor; 27th at 10 a. m., meeting again at B. meeting house, home, with brother J. Kiser; at 4 p. m., meeting at friend Gant's, next morning meeting at same place, home, with brother Solomon Wilson. My horse having got slightly foundered, brother S. Gainer kindly let me have one of his for the time being; 29th at 10 a. m., meeting near brother S. Wilson's, after dinner hurried on to Corinth, meeting at 4 p. m., at brother Israel Gainer's, where I again met with brother Baily. He had attended four meetings on Leading Creek, in Randolph county, home with Eld. I. Auvil, of Shilo congregation, next morning in company with brother Auvil and brother Wm. Shafer, we set out for Eld. Solomon Bucklew's, Preston county, W. Va., where we arrived about 4 p. m., meeting at night in school house, home with friend and sister Cassady. Next morning, 31st, walked to Rollsburg, 4 miles, on the B. & O. R. R., about noon left on the Fast Line for Cumberland, there to Dale City, where we arrived about 6 p. m., preached at night in the Brethren's meeting house. June 1st, had the pleasure of hearing brother D. P. Sayler preach in the forenoon and brother Enoch Eby in the afternoon, at the Brethren's meeting house. In company with brother Auvil, was taken to Berkley's Mills, preaching at night in Brethren's meeting house, all night with brother Berkley, who next morning took us back to place of A. M. At 11 a. m., preached in the barn, where the council was held; p. m., went in company with Eld Jno. Knisely and other brethren to assist in baptising a son of brother Berkley, who was dangerously ill. He was taken from his sick bed and hauled to the water, where he was baptized, also another at the same time. After having returned to the house we were informed there was another applicant for baptism arrived, we went to the water in company with a few of the brethren and sisters and baptized him. June the 3rd, the Annual Council commenced. Thursday at noon, just after the meeting closed, we took the parting hand of many dear ones, and soon was on our way to Cumberland, where we expected to meet the rest of our company, who had gone down on the morning train. We were behind time, missed connections, so our company was gone. At midnight we took the Fast Line, and next morning at 8 o'clock we arrived at brother Solomon Bucklew's. Our company was gone to attend a meeting at Red Oak school house, at which point we arrived before service was over—Meeting at 4 p. m., at Petroleum school house; home, with brother Kiser. June the 7th at 10 a. m., meeting at Shilo meeting house; home with brother W. Shafer; at 4 p. m., meeting at brother Yager's, near Corinth; home, with brother Israel Gainer's; 8th, Sunday, at 9 a. m., meeting at Sugar Creek meeting house; home, with brother Sol. Wilson; at 3 p. m., meeting at Brethren's meeting house near Bealington. Seven precious souls came forward for baptism, four of whom went "straightway" down into the water; home with brother Yager. Early next morning we went with a number of dear brothers and sisters on the bank of the river and led three young souls into the baptismal waters and then said farewell.

In the bounds of this congregation were spent a good portion of our labors of love. There was evidently a strong attachment one to another by the ties of christian love; with them we had often met to sing and pray together and now here by the waterside we knelt to pray the last time, and when the parting moment came, we could not help but think of Paul's parting from his brethren at Miletus, just before he went aboard the ship. We immediately set out on our way, took dinner with brother D. Miller, Upshur county, who accompanied us to our appointment at the Widow Tenney's at 4 p. m. Meeting next morning at the same place, two baptized. Brother Baily went on in the morning and filled the appointment at Indian Camp at 10 a. m.; 4 p. m., we met him there, had another meeting; home with brother Laurence Fitzgerald; 11th set out early, heavy rain all day, meeting at 3 p. m., at brother J. D. Armstrong's, Baxton county, home with brother Bosely; 12th set out early, stopped at noon for refreshments and repose at Mr. Benj. Skidmores, at Sutton, whose kindness to us is worthy of notice.—Notwithstanding we were entire strangers, he administered to our wants free of charge. May the Lord abundantly bless him. At night, put up at house of public entertainment. Next day travelled all day, and arrived at brother H. Comers, Fayette county. Meeting next morning at the school house, after which brother Baily left us for home. At 4 p. m., had meeting at friend Wood's next day, Sunday, the 15th meeting at the S. House, one baptized. Then set out, in company with brother A. Evans, for home, where we arrived before night, and found all in good health, thanks to God our Heavenly Father for his good mercies. Was absent just 4 weeks, attended 23 meetings in this State, and baptized 14, from the age of 80 down to the teens, mostly were young persons.—and now, dear brothers, sisters and friends, it is impossible for me to express the gratitude I feel toward you all who so kindly and willingly done what you could for me—always more than I deserved. The Lord will surely bless you; to Him be all the glory.

THE MISSOURI COMMITTEE.

Many of the brethren and sisters will remember that the Standing Committee of our A. M. of 1872, appointed the following brethren: Wm. Gish, Isaac Hershey, Christian Holler of Kansas, Enoch Eby of Ill., and John Harshey of Mo., to act as a committee to settle difficulties, and to put into proper order the Spring River Church, Jasper Co., Mo., also for the Cedar Creek Church, Jasper Co., Mo., and for other churches in Mo The first and the last mentioned brother' failing to meet at the time and place appointed, brother Addison Harper of Mo., and brother Michael Forney of Ill., being present, were by agreement taken to fill the places of the two absent brethren Soon after the committee had done the work for which they were appointed, a report of the same was written out and sent to the PILGRIM office for publication, and not appearing for several months, it was inquired after by one of the committee by private letter. Again some four or five weeks elapsed until an answer by private letter, came from the Editor informing us that he perceived by the letter of inquiry, that we failed to receive a letter from him to us, written in due time after his reception of our report, in which he had stated, and now stated it again, that the publishing of our report was objected to on account of it being too personal, not only objected to by the Editor and publisher of the PILGRIM, but by a number of old brethren to whom it was shown at a Communion, stating though that if the committee insisted upon its publication they would publish it, but would rather not. The committee living in three different States, and would require some length of time, and considerable writing to exchange views as to giving it another form less objectionable on account of personalities, and the Editor failing to point out what persons were named who should not have been named in his judgment, and some of the committee having been written to by members of different churches in other States for a copy of the proceedings of said committee, and their requests complied with, it was thought by the writer(John Harshey), that it would circulate itself without any further trouble to any one, in its true character. But it being made to appear to those assembled at our District Meeting, (Southern District of Mo.,) that incorrect reports have gone forth even into other States as to the character of the work done, Reports circulated by letter written by the parties dealt with, as well as by incautious brethren from other States passing through the localities of those brethren dealt with, or upon meeting with them, in their travels elswhere, and believing what those pleased to tell them, the report has gone abroad, and may be still going, that they were disfellowshipped for no other cause than for their refusing to wash feet otherwise than what is called the single mode. Hence the District Meeting requested that a correct report be published in all of our periodicals as touching the reasons of their excommunication.

It being ascertained by the committee as testified to by a number of members, that a majority of the members of the Spring River Valley Branch of the Church, were favorable to practicing the general order of the Brotherhood in carrying out and practicing the ordinances of the house of God, the following charges were found:

1st Against the ministry for not allowing the church the liberty to vote herself into the unity of faith and practice.

2d. Interfering with the unity of faith and practice of the church in endeavoring to set aside the salutation of the kiss between the Supper and Communion.

3d. In disturbing the peace and unity of the church by teaching that a bonnet or handkerchief upon the head of the sister would fill the measure of the Gospel as taught by Paul, and consequently sisters often appearing in meeting without the proper covering.

4th. Sisters telling the Elders that hoops were profitable and advantageous to them in certain conditions in life, and the Elder saying he believed it, and that the church ought to bear with such, and by so saying kept trouble in the church while hoops were fashionable.

5th. Preaching publicly the restoration, and one minister saying before a congregation, while preaching a funeral where the deceased belonged only to the Odd-fellows, that the deceased would, till the winding up of God's dispensation of grace, shout praises to God, subjecting the brethren to ridicule and contempt by some of their neighbors needlessly.

6th That the churches influence, as being opposed to secret societies, was damaged in those parts by some of the ministers being so very intimate with Masons as to go into a joint note with them to borrow money to enable the Masons to build a lodge on top of a business room in which the brethren seemed to take great interest, near their own dwellings and upon ground owned by them, and sold to others, knowing at the time of sale, that a lodge was to be erected thereon, and by a ministering brother being permitted to be in the Lodge as a spectator when the Lodge was in session, also by having connected themselves with a Building Association, strictly known as the Freemason's and Oddfellows Building Association.

7th. Speaking disrespectfully of the decisions of Annual Meeting.

The above charges having been admitted and proven, the committee decided that in all the above charges there was either ignorant or wilful guilt resting upon the ministry, and that they should confess it and promise to do so no more, or they could no longer be continued as elders and teachers in the Brotherhood. To this they answered, very decidedly, they had no acknowledgment or promise to make. They were then asked whether they did not intend to submit to the general order of the Church, or the decisions of A. M., to which they emphatically declared they would not. Whereupon the committee's decision was, that as they would not acknowledge to their above guilt and be counseled by the general body or church, they could no longer be continued as members in fellowship in the church with all that sided or went with them.

The committee's decision was endorsed by 17 against 10. Now, in short, we also testify that the same spirit of disobedience to general council existed in all that were elsewhere disfellowshipped.

Isaac Hersbey,
Christian Holler,
John Harshey.
Michael Forney.
Committee.

N. B. Brother Harper only acted with the committee in Cedar Co., and in Jasper, before the decision was read out and accepted by the church, he asked the committee to erase his name, with which request they complied.

A LETTER TO MY BROTHER AND FAMILY.

Dear brother John and family: In answer to your letter dated Feb. 26, I will try and explain to you why I felt dissatisfied with the church that you and I had joined. In the first place, I had no desire to join any church, nor to become a Christian. This may sound very strange, but I did not feel at that time that I was a sinner or that I had any need of a Savior, and I think, if I had felt my lost condition and my great mountains of sin as I did since, and knew what I since learned, I should not have joined that church at all. But you, no doubt, remember as well as myself, that we were persuaded to go to catechism and that altogether against my will. I finally went for the sake of keeping peice in the family, but never experienced the least change of heart, and consequently, was not able to renounce the world, the devil and all his works, and hold out faithful unto the end as we were obliged to promise before God and the Church at the time we were initiated. I never realized what a great sin I had committed then. As I had not yet been born of the spirit, it was impossible to live up to my promise and, for my part, I cannot see but what the majority of the church members go with the world, hand in hand, as far as worldly pleasures and fashions are concerned. and I could tell you of a great many things in which I think they do not go according to the Scripture. After I searched the Scripture for myself, I found that I could not stand at the day of judgment as I was, and felt it my duty to become a new being and follow my Savior in all things as far as God gave me power to do. I knew that I had not been born of water nor of the spirit, and that old things had not become new. I also knew that our Savior had been baptized in the river Jordan and that he done so to fulfill all righteousness and for an example for us to do as He had done and I read that He wrs humble and meek and washed his disciples feet and taught them to do unto one another as He done unto them. We read that they eat the Lord's Supper in the evening and took the Sacraments also in the evening and not in the morning, and further, James, a disciple of Christ, told his brethren to annoint the sick with oil in the name of the Lord, see 5th chapter 14th verse, also the 12th verse about swearing and yet look at some of those preachers, they think it is all right to swear when it is necessary according to law, and of course do not forbid the members to swear. Read the 5th chapter and 19th verse of Matthew, and also the 2d chapter 10th verse in James, and a great many more places I could point out if I had space but we are told to search the Scriptures for in them we think we have eternal life.

Again, our pastor often read to us these words, "Go ye into all the world and teach all nations, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." &c., but I don't remember that he read that passage of Scripture to us that reads something like this; "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world." This, most positively forbade them to teach and enjoin upon the nation the observance of anything Christ had not taught or commanded. If reason, revelation or the principle of civil law can determine anything, this point is determined, and yet our pastor taught us that infant baptism was right but could not point it out to me in the Bible. Do you remember the time that I asked him to show me in the Bible that infants were to be baptized, and do you remember what kind of an answer he gave us? He acknowledged that it did not just say so but it meant that they should be baptized. It is a pity that Jesus came into the world to tell us what to do to be saved .and then forgot part of it. It just seems to me as though some think that Jesus did not give the right instructions and that they are going to make it right, at least to suit their own notions. Now let me tell you, the secret of all this is, they are too proud and headstrong to obey Christ's whole law. Did you ever read what St. John tells us in the last chapter of Rev., the 18th and 19th? Please read it. That tells us what the consequences are of adding to, or taking from the words of God. I often wonder that people are not afraid to add to it, when we have such plain words to tell us what the results will be. I think the Scriptures are an all sufficient guide for our salvation, but to say that this and that is not necessary to do when we know that Christ commanded it Himself, is dangerous in the extreme. I think that as soon as we once feel our sins and the great value of our souls, and see on what condition we can be saved and become an heir of heaven, then nothing can be too great a sacrifice, even if we were to lose all, even our lives, it would be a small loss to be compared to the loss of our never dying souls Oh, can it be possible that people are so ignorant in this enlightened country where we all have our Bibles, and besides, hear so much preaching and a great many more ways of hearing the truth, and yet for all this, think that we can go with the world as long as we are in it, and at last reach that Heavenly shore. I cannot believe that we can serve two masters, because we are plainly taught that we cannot do so and yet so many are in reality serving the devil all the time, and I am afraid it is the one that will pay them for their faithful laboring, unless they renounce him altogether before the eleventh hour, and serve a better master the rest of their days. I suppose by this time you will think that I am a Dunkard, and so I am. I am not ashamed to own it. I would be very foolish to be ashamed to tell that I belong to a church that is not afraid nor ashamed to keep the whole law.

From your sister.

LUCINA MARSH.

ORIGIN OF NEWSPAPERS.—Mankind are indebted to Queen Elizabeth and Lord Burleigh for the first newspaper, which was entitled the English Mercuric. The earliest number is still in the British Museum library, and bears the date of July 23, 1588. During the Civil Wars, periodical papers, the champions of the two parties, were very extensively circulated, and were edited by such writers as Needham, Birkenhead, and L'Estrange, all men of considerable ability.

In the reign of Anne there was but one daily paper, the Daily Courant. The first provincial journal in England was the Orange Postman, started in 1700, at the price of a penny, but a half-penny was not refused.—The earliest Scottish newspaper appeared under the auspices of Cromwell, in 1652.

THE RIGHT KIND OF RELIGION.—We want a religion that not only bears on the sinfulness of sin, but on the rascality of lying—a religion that banishes all small measures from the counter, small baskets from the stalls, pebbles from cotton bags and from sugar, chicory from coffee, alum from bread, lard from butter, strychnine from wine, and water from milk cans; that will not put all the big strawberries and peaches on top, and all the bad ones at the bottom, and sell more bottles of wine than there are baskets grown.

IN the Presbyterian Assembly at Baltimore, a proposition was introduced and debated to omit all titles such as D. D., LL. D., etc., in the official rolls of the church, and though no action was taken at the time, except to refer it to a committee, it is believed the proposition will be finally adopted. This a step in the right direction, and it is to be hoped that other bodies religious and secular, will lose no time in following the example.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

THE first Methodist Conference in America was held in Philadelphia, on the 14th, 15th and 16th of July, 1773. The place where it met is still standing, old St. George's Church. It is proposed to have a Centennial Celebration on the same dates of this year, 1873, and in the same old Church.

BOOK NOTICES.

The Centennial is a neat and interesting monthly, published by H. W. Crotzer, Philadelphia, in the interest and to prepare the minds of the American people for the great Centennial Exhibition, to be held at Philadelphia, in the year 1876, or the one hundredth year of American independence.—Mailed to subscribers free of postage at $1,00 per year.

Mischief Brewing and the Strawberry Girl are among the prettiest Chromos now offered to the people, and can be had free by subscribing for two first class journals, the Hearth and Home and the American Agriculturist, that should grace the homes of every family.

VOL. 4. JAMES CREEK, PENNSYLVANIA, JULY 8, 1873. NO. 27.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNA.

QUERY.—Is it according to the Gospel or is it conforming to the world when brethren subscribe for railroad stock?

Considered that there is no Scripture forbidding it, but inasmuch as it brings us into associations in which we are liable to violate our christian principles, we would advise brethren not to engage in it.

Proposed to amend by saying "no direct Scripture."

Passed with the amendment.

——. If that implies more than one, then it would be necessary to have more than one in every church.

Wise. The question did not say ordained elders, it says house-keepers.

Moderator. The explanation is called for, I will explain. Two brethren living in the same church, in the second degree, in the ministry, have the oversight of the church, hence these two brethren will look upon themselves as being housekeepers. If they work together, they will work harmoniously, but if they don't there will be trouble. In that case the church would have to decide the matter.

——. Proposed an amendment that where there is a division, or where it does not work well, the church should call for help to regulate that. Passed.

SOUTH WESTERN OHIO.

QUERY.—Is it agreeable with the Gospel or the old order of the Brethren, for members to have musical instruments in their houses, such as an organ, or a fiddle, to amuse themselves playing on them, or for the amusement of the youngsters, to play the organ, and that on the Lord's day and after their return from the house of worship? If considered agreeable, we want the "thus saith the Lord" for it.

Referred to the standing committee for an answer.

THE BRETHREN IN COUNCIL ASSEMBLED.

Would it not be advisable to pass a resolution, that when any one of the members, or of the members' children die, that at the same time they should not neglect to inform all the speakers in their own district if possible, and at the same time have the privilege to send for any other brethren in their districts?

ANSWER. We think it is advisable to inform all the ministers in the church or congregation in which a death occurs, and whoever may be called by the deceased before his death, or the family of which he was a member, to officiate on the occasion.

Sayler. If there is a death the family have the right to send for who they please, and the A. M., should not take any note of it.

Wise. To avoid jealousy was the design, and therefore it would be best, where convenient, to inform all, but let the family have the choice.

——. We would like to have it passed, to avoid the jealousy it has occasioned under certain circumstances, where it can be avoided.

Moderator. In some churches when a death occurs, they will send off twenty-five miles for a preacher, and the brethren living in the congregation are not called on.

——. It is a local matter, and they should settle it among themselves, without bothering the other brethren. Let their own district correct their members.

——. It concerns the whole Brotherhood. Sometimes the ministers do not hear of a death. By this proviso they are at liberty to attend.

Quinter. I always approved of respecting our brethren at home, but I don't want it to pass from this meeting in that shape. Table it and let every district attend to their local concerns at home.

——. I think the brethren ought to be above having their jealousy aroused so easily. As long as we feed this thing it will be kept up.—Table it.

Sharp. I move to send it back to the district and let them dispose of it at home.

Agreed to.

As the Annual Meeting has given the liberty to hold Sabbath Schools, if held according to the gospel, this District Meeting asks the Annual Meeting to give the order called for.

ANSWER. This query is designed to be answered by the answer given to query 14, Minutes of 1868; and, in addition to said answer, we would say that our Sabbath Schools should be held as all our meetings should be held, to the glory of God: 1st Cors. 10, 31. And as the object of the Sabbath School is to teach our children Christianity, Sabbath school teachers should observe the admonition given by Paul, to parents, in which he admonishes them to bring up the children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Eph. 6:4.

Moderator. When this query came before our District Meeting and the request was to give the Gospel order for holding Sabbath Schools, I said that inasmuch as the Yearly Meeting had given the authority for holding Sabbath Schools, to send it up to them and let them give the Gospel order for it, as that was called for in the query, and then it was transcribed and put in the present form.

Minutes of 1868, Query 14 read.

McGarvey. There is or might be a great deal said concerning the Sabbath Schools. Properly conducted it is a good institution. When our meetings are conducted in Gospel order our brethren and all that go there as teachers are in order. If so it would be a good thing; but we tolerate teachers to take our classes who don't look like our members, and don't believe the doctrine, and we train up our children after their examples, or get some man to deliver an oration in favor of the Sabbath School who has on his fine cravat, cuffs and gold buttons, and claim the Sabbath School as a good institution, and the means of converting the children. This is not Gospel order. When we have a teacher he should be governed by the Gospel order or it is worse than no school.

Passed.

QUERY.—This District Meeting requests the Annual Meeting of 1873, to reconsider article 15, 1868, touching the propriety of brethren going on stands to preach.

ANS. We can give no better answer than that given in Minutes of 1866, Art. 32.

——. We want nothing but Gospel authority on the question, and a union among the Brotherhood.

——. It is a matter of conscience, as I understand it. I am not conscientious, but my brother here is conscientious. We go to meeting, how are we to preach?

——. You stay down with the brethren that are too conscientious to go up.

——. I would certainly go up or stay down to avoid a showing difference. If I understand the teachings of the scripture it is more safe to keep down. We want unity of practice, and we beg you to consider this sensibly.

Sayler. So far as I read the Testament it is silent on that subject. We learn that the apostle spoke from the stairs, showing that he had his head above the multitude. Solomon dedicated the temple kneeling on a pulpit made for that purpose and God answered that prayer and accepted it. When Jerusalem was rebuilt and the law read by Ezra the priest in the streets, there was a pulpit built large enough to hold thirteen men besides Ezra, and God was pleased with that again; then I don't see where the brethren get their objection to seeing a brother raised up to a position where it can be heard. If I thought the position I occupied had anything to do with my humility I would have the brethren cut a hole in the floor several feet lower than the congregation; but it is not necessary to get down on the floor to be at the feet of Jesus. The mind is the index of humility and not the body. Half of the meetinghouses in the Brotherhood have an elevation for the speaker, then why be restricted.

Neal. "In the audience of all the people, he said, beware of the scribes," &c.

Sharp. We are aware that Paul did not hesitate to elevate himself a few inches above his audience. If it be necessary, like Paul, to get up on the stairs, or on the top of a high mountain as Jesus Christ did, when the audience was so large, we should do it. I hope no brother will condemn the practice laid down by the Savior himself.

Sturgis. Peter went up on the house top to pray and God heard his prayer. He does not regard it as an exalted position if the heart is right before God. "The time has come when men shall not worship God at Jerusalem or on his mountain, but in spirit and in truth. The spirit of the Lord is liberty, let us exercise it and not restrain our brethren.

——. If we love those high places and have no other idea than just to have a prominent place, it is wrong for us as it was for the Pharisees; but if not our love for the place then it is not wrong.

——. Josiah put down the high places of worship, and was approved of God for doing so. Ezra learned the idea of erecting a stand from Babylon, while in captivity. I am not conscientious. I have been up. When my brother goes up I feel like going up with him, but would like union. If it is not right our proceedings will make it right. I never feel as good up as when I stay down.

Wise. Brethren that don't like to go up had better remain down when we can with any degree of propriety whatever, and that difficulty will be obviated. I don't like a division unless under peculiar circumstances.

Passed.

NORTHERN DICTRICT OF INDIANA.

QUERY.—Since the word of God commands us to preach the Gospel to every creature, will this District Meeting ask the Annual Meeting to appoint a committee of five, to draft and present a plan to the Annual Meeting of 1874, for the successful carrying out of the Gospel into all portions of our country, where there are any brethren

Sturgis. Such a question came up in 1859, and the Annual Meeting did appoint a committee which drafted a plan that was accepted in some of the Southern States, but on account of the war it never was presented till 1868, when it passed the meeting and is on the minutes, which we believed sufficient, but the brethren having concluded it best to come here and wake up your minds on the subject, it is before us. It appears that it has not been extensively carried out. It appears that they had not the minutes where it came from, and I told them I would have it in all the papers so that those who do not get the minutes can see it.

——. The decision was that every church held counsel with their own members and see what they would do and report at the District Meeting. It came up at our District Meeting, but was neglected and not brought to the Annual Meeting.

Sturgis. I would advise brethren that no decision of the Annual Meeting will ever execute itself. It is expected that the churches will put it in force.

Quinter. Moved that it be sent back to the church from whence it came and that they be cited to the Minutes as they stand.

Passed.

What is the duty of the committee sent by Annual Meeting to adjust existing difficulties in the Church? Is it not to hear the case in question, with the evidence, and then to form their decision according to the evidence and the Gospel, irrespective of former transactions of the Church or any other committee whatever, and submit it to the Church for its acceptance or rejection.

Ans. Yes.—Referred back.

Adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

An address was delivered by Dan'l Hill of Ohio, a member of the Society of Friends, on the subject of "Peace," which was interesting, and received with approbation by the audience.

MIDDLE DISTRICT OF INDIANA.

Query.—This District requests the Annual Meeting to reconsider Art. 19th minutes of 1808, concerning the advancing brethren in the ministry from the first to the second degree; what is the consent and established order in so doing? Are they received with hand and kiss?

Considered that the proper way to receive them is with hand and kiss.

Re-adopted.

When churches, or individuals, call for committees, shall the party calling for the committee pay the expenses of said committee, or shall the committee say which party shall pay the expenses?

Answer. We think the committee should say who shall pay the expenses.

Passed.

Is it agreeable to the Gospel or the old order of the Brethren for members to have musical instruments in their houses, such as organs, or a fiddle to amuse themselves playing on them or for the amusement of the youngsters, to play the organ, and that on the Lord's Day, and after return from the house of worship?

Answer. It is unauthorized by the Gospel and charity opposed to the order of the old Brethren and the doctrine of self denial, and not calculated to promote vital christianity.

Longanecker. There are two things in that query: one is whether we shall play on them on the Sabbath, and the other is whether it is wrong to have them at all under any circumstances.

Holsinger. To have a fiddle or other musical instrument for the purpose of amusement, I would be opposed to it, but to cut off musical instruments entirely, I could not consent that it would be agreeable to the Gospel.

Steel. We are to sing with the Spirit and with the understanding also, and I believe it would be a blessing to our church, if the brethren would dispense entirely with the use of musical instruments. If we have them in our houses, it will not be long before we have them in our meeting houses. I would like to know what is meant by sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

Passed.

Query.—Will this District Meeting, petition the Annual Meeting to grant the right to the districts at their meetings to appoint if necessary, committees to investigate, and settle matters of difficulty, that may exist within the bounds of the district, such selection to be made of brethren residing in the limits of the district when such difficulties may exist, except in cases in which a majority of the churches composing the district are involved?

Ans. We think it best to make no change from our present practice of selecting committees. Passed without objection.

Query.—Since the District Meeting of Middle Indiana, last year had under consideration the orphan's home, or a home for orphan children, the meeting expressing itself favorable, but laid it over for further consideration, will not this meeting take into consideration the propriety of erecting a home for orphan children, and members who are a church charge?

Ans. This meeting approves of erecting an asylum for the benefit of the orphan children of the brethren, and all that may be considered subjects for such an institution, but it deserves the decision of the Annual Meeting, and therefore we send the query with its answer for prayerful consideration.

Answer (from the standing committee)—This meeting does not see the propriety of adopting such measures at present; but if the Middle District of Indiana desires to do so, we will not oppose them.

——. I don't believe in such a plan at all. If it starts at one place it may follow along like many other things, which we are now sorry to see. Let each church take charge of its own members, which are a charge to the church.

——. And may be that may be agreeable to many of the citizens of Indiana.

——. I think it would be better to refer it back to the District Meeting.

Wise—The answer says this Annual Meeting does not see the propriety of passing it, but will not oppose it. The next Annual Meeting may view it differently.

Holsinger. I would suggest, that instead of passing this answer, we bid the project God speed. I am favorable to any measure that looks toward the elevation, improvement, and benefit of our fellow-beings; and I am opposed to anything, and shall always give my voice and vote in opposition to everything, that has a downward tendency; and therefore to act consistently with my principles, I would favor this measure. Certainly the motive that originated this plan must have been good; and if this Annual Meeting does not approve of the plan, and does not see the propriety, or necessity of the plan, let them not object to it. And if it is not objectionable, I think they should bid the brethren God-speed, when they undertake such a noble work as this. Where is there a more laudible enterprise in all our land, than to build up an institution of this kind? It is our duty to provide for the wants of the poor.

——. I think our brethren have always provided for the poor and have an order adopted for that purpose.

The passage of the resolution was called for and it was declared passed.

Query.—Is it right, and according to the Gospel, to have different styles of hymn-books and to annex the names of those who composed them to the index?

Ans. This meeting desires a good substantial hymn-book, and not a different style as at present; and as to the names of those who composed the hymns being printed, we think it is not necessary.

Sharp. I am led to believe that we often attach the words "Is it in accordance with the Gospel?" to carry a query through. Now I do not believe that the Gospel says anything about hymn books; but the term is often attached merely to give strength to the measure. I hope we will be a little more considerate, and things that are so trifling will not be brought before the body, when questions of greater importance ought to be considered. I hope that the meeting will table that measure. It was moved and seconded to table that question, and it was tabled.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.

Southern Indiana asks the Annual Meeting to adopt a plan to have the different papers the brethren are publishing to be consolidated in one, and if they cannot be consolidated, let the Annual Meeting establish a paper under its own control.

Ans. We recommend the editors to arrange this matter before next Annual Meeting, and if they do not do so, then let the Annual Meeting act in the matter.

Holsinger. Perhaps a few words may be in place and to advantage upon this subject. I am altogether in favor of a consolidation, and am also in favor of the Annual Meeting taking charge of a paper. I would however not like very well for the Annual Meeting to monopolize the publishing business altogether,—but I should be satisfied to pass that answer, if it would not be for the threatening part of it—giving us only one year's time to make the arrangements. I do not know that those arrangements can be made, by the present proprietors of our publications, and I think the best plan would be for the Annual Meeting simply to buy out all the present publishers, and then continue to publish the papers, and I now say that I am ready to sell out at a fair price. If my price does not suit you, I will appoint a man and you appoint a man, and let those two appoint a third, and whatever they say I will take.

I am tired of the business. The time was when I was exceedingly zealous and exceedingly fond of my business, but the crosses I have had to bear, and the labors and difficulties I have had to endure, have completely satisfied me, and I am ready at any time to turn it over into the hands of the Annual Meeting. But, as I say, I do not believe it would be good for the meeting to monopolize the business. None of the churches that pursued such a course prospered in the business; but for a time it might do very well, to have but one publishing house. I think that in this way a great many publications may be brought forth with great advantage to the church. At present, the publishing being divided, it has a tendency to seperate us somewhat:—We have our friends, and the other papers have their friends, and the tendency is towards division; especially when either of the papers would take a radical stand on opposite sides of a question. Another reason for having one house is, that some of our present publishing houses are poor—I know that is the case with our establishment. We need books, tracts, Sunday school papers—we need to publish a number of small books for Sunday school purposes; for you heard to day that the brethren do not want to have just any book thrown into our Sunday schools. We have several books now ready for publication, but we have not the type to print them with. But we think that the Annual Meeting could command the means to secure the publication. Brother Beer's book on the Passover has been ready for over a year, but we have not the means to publish it. We have a work that has been published in the Pious Youth, and which would make an excellent Sunday school book, if we had the means to publish it. Let the Annual Meeting take the matter in hands, and appoint Editors of the different departments, and have a regular publishing house, and I believe the plan would work remarkably well. The only fear that I have is, that after a while this meeting would run the thing too exclusively. I would not like to see any enterprising brother cut off from the privilege of commencing a publication for himself. But I think there would be no contingency of this nature for many years to come. I will do precisely what I said; but I would not vote in favor of the present question because of that one clause, that if we do not consolidate within one year, then the Annual Meeting will commence a publication of its own. Rather than that, I will sell to this meeting. If you pass the resolution, I want you to take my paper off my hands. I do not want another paper started in addition to those we have at present.

——. Certainly, if the A. M., sees cause for starting a publication, no individual power can stop the Annual Meeting from doing so.

Forney. In regard to the brethren of this Annual Meeting publishing a paper, I am fearful that it will lead to the very same trouble we have now to contend with. In order to carry on this house properly, Editors must be appointed, and if our Editors do not keep within bounds they must be considered as all the disobedient members, and if the church has it in hands, it will be more difficult to reach the matter than it is now. I do not know that we can do better than to table the matter, and bring our present Editors to account whenever they become out of order.

Brumbaugh. It certainly places us in a very unpleasant position. We of course expect to publish a paper. If this Annual Meeting will say to us that if they stop our papers, they will not see us lose by it. I am satisfied, the nature of this decision is such, that it would seem to discourage us from meeting our expenses; and I would say, with brother Holsinger, that if such a decision is made, I am ready to sell out.

Kurtz. If this resolution is to pass I am also ready to sell.

Quinter. There must be a pretty extensive feeling that there is something wanting in our periodicals. I feel satisfied of that myself. If the wealth and intelligence of our Brotherhood was more properly directed, we could produce something that would do more good, both in and out of the Church. On that account considerable has been said about consolidation and other courses to be pursued.

But few of you have a full appreciation of the amount of labor and care and of the duties which will be thrown upon the Annual Meeting if they publish a paper. However this matter has been brought forward for suggestion on the part of us all. That being the case, I think it is well enough to have been brought forward. Brethren Holsinger, Kurtz and Brumbaugh need not take alarm that this will go into immediate operation and injure their business We would like the talents of our church more concentrated.

Many voices here called for the tobling of the question, and it was tabled

Query is it right to put a brother into office to serve as deacon or minister, who does not conform to the order of the church or allow them to serve in any church business at District meetings or Yearly meetings? And would it not be best for brethren that officiate when an election is going on to instruct the church not to give their voice for any that do not conform to the order?

Answer. We advise the brethren to be very careful in giving power, or office, to brethren who do not conform to the order.

Sayler spoke of the manner of installment of officers, and stated that no difficulty would arise where the elders of the church are careful to ask the proper questions at installation as laid down in the order passed in 1835.

Holsinger. The question arises here, what is the order? Shall a member be received as a deacon, if he had been found drunk or guilty of any other crime?

——I think it refers to non-conformity with the world.

Holsinger. If his character be not a good one, if he has not the qualifications required according to the apostle Paul, and it is to this that the query refers, then I say pass it; but if it has reference to the cut of his clothes, &c., I think it is objectionable.

——, The order of the church is to observe plainness and humility.

Sayler. That is certainly the general order, and when he presents himself for installment, I think he should conform to that order.

Passed without objection.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

Query. What is to be done in case one one of the members of the church pleads guilty of the act of fornication? Is it the duty of the housekeeper of said church to take the voice of every member present, whether such a one is only to be excommunicated or put in avoidance; or is it the duty of such housekeeper to put the avoidance upon such a member at once, according to 1 Cor. chap. 5.?

Answer. An elder has no right to either expel from the church, or put a member in avoidance, without the counsel of the church.

Passed without objection.

Query. Do the brethren not think it proper to exert their influence against the admission into the church, of the new hymn book with notes?

Answer. We advise all districts to keep them out of the church in public worship.

——, I want to know why we cannot use them.

——, I think it is necessary for some one to have the notes to start the tune properly.

Sharp. I want to know what is meant by "the new hymn book."

——, It means the Tune and Hymn book—the Brethren's hymn book with notes.

Sharp. We understand that that hymn book was authorized by this body—all the hymns in it. I am speaking of the hymns alone. They were published by brother Kurtz—were subjected to a committee of inspection, and afterwards adopted. Then, some of the brethren, thought that if they had notes in connection with the hymns, it would be an advantage. If these are the books referred to, I understand the question.

——, The Brethren's Tune and Hymn book is the one refered to.

Sharp. Then, if any brother does not wish to use that book, should he not have the libery of using a book that has no notes in it? We would not suppose that a brother here would rob him of that privilege. But on the other hand, where some member can lead in the singing, provided he has some thing to guide him, it is questionable whether we should cut him off from the privilege of using the tunes we all sing. It simply comes to this point: you may sing the tune, but you must not look upon certain characters which tell you how to sing it—you must sing from memory The query narrows down to this. The book does not present any new tunes, tunes that we do not sing, nor does the query say that we shall not sing new tunes. The only objection seems to be that the Tune and Hymn book contains a certain musical alphabet by which we can spell out the tune, and afterwards read or sing it. Now shall we rob the members of the church from singing a tune which we have been in the habit of singing, just because we have the aid of certain characters which we understand? I don't use that book myself, but I want to have charity for those who need it.

Sayler. I do not know that the objection is against singing from the book because of the notes being in it, but I have heard other objections. When the Tune and Hymn book was introduced among us, we made no objection against individual members buying the book; but, as we did not sing in our church by lining, the church has bought hymn books, and scattered them around through the Meeting-houses. I objected to introduce the Tune Book in that way, and perhaps the same objection I had against it may be the cause of this matter being brought up here.

I considered that the publication of that book was an infringement upon the right of brother Quinter to his Hymn Book, hence I made no objection against members buying them, for their own private use. It is the general use of the book in the church that I object to. It is very well known that if the publishers had published the tunes, without the hymns, there would not have been any sale for them; but they took the hymns of brother Quinters' book, and put tunes to them, thus infringing upon his right. I like the book, but I think it should have been gotten up with a different kind of understanding. That is my objection.

Enoch Eby. Since this comes from our District, I will say that the sentiment of the body I represent, for I am not here to express my own sentiment, is, that the matter of using Tune books will result in choir singing. I have no experience of them, as we do not use them, but this is a prevailing opinion. On this ground, that by such a practice we will lose our simplicity in worship, this matter has been presented. It is not intended to prohibit members from having the books in their houses, but to keep them out of the house of public worship.

Metzgar. I agree with what the brother has said.

Brown. I wonder whether you would object to our using them at Sabbath school?

Sayler. My objection was that it interfered with the sale of brother Quinter's books.

Brown. I have a little personal interest in this matter. I was authorized to get some books for the Sabbath-school, and if you are going to stop me, I want to know before I purchase them.

Moderator Since these books have got among the brethren, I have seen it come to just as brother Eby has related—the young people sit in the middle of the church in a choir, and the old brethren sit around the outside and don't sing; therefore I think we had better be on our guard in regard to this matter.

Holsinger. I feel almost like apologizing to this congregation for appearing before you so often; but you will observe that all the questions I speak upon are, directly or indirectly, aimed at me or some of my measures; therefore I hope I am excusable for appearing before you so often. It happens that I am the publisher of this Tune and Hymn book, and it was my impression that I had liberty and authority from this body to publish that book. I got it and had it passed, and it is entered on the minutes, and you will find it so when you examine it. That is my impression.

Now, in regard to the infringement, I think certainly it is a little strange that brother Quinter should hold still so long and allow the Annual Meeting to give me the permission to publish it without objection. I do not like insinuations of infringement thrown out upon me at all. I never felt the least compunction for infringing upon brother Quinter's publication; and I suppose I have sold as many of brother Quinter's hymn books—perhaps more than he has sold himself—except those he has sold to me at wholesale prices; and I have been extensively engaged in selling his hymn books at starvation prices. I am willing that brother Quinter should make a statement of his profits and losses.

Again, in regard to the danger of getting to choirs, I would say, that I am opposed to choir singing; but I saw no more choir singing when the Tune and Hymn Books did not exist than I ever saw when they did exist. As to stopping old brethren from singing, it was for the very purpose of keeping the old tunes in existence, and not allowing them to be supplanted, that we have introduced this Tune Book. I am not aware that a single one of our old popular tunes has been omitted, as I was very particular in getting all the old tunes. I believe in congregational singing, and I have been annoyed considerably in going to church when tunes were sung that were new, and in the singing of which we could not join; and I know just how one feels under those circumstances. The object in view in getting up this book, was to prevent this and choir singing. You can never learn to sing a new tune unless you practice it, and as the brethren are not generally in favor of singing schools, we come together and have exercises before the regular exercises begin. If we go there and take up a book and begin to sing, and find the tune strange, we find the sentiment new; and how are we going to bring our hearts into harmony with this sentiment, and to lay our offering of devotion before God, when we have to think of the tune at the same time? But when you have learned the hymn, you can sing with the spirit and with the understanding also. Every tune you sing here is in our Tune and Hymn Book. It is for the purpose of aiding us in devotional exercises that the book was introduced, and not for the purpose of introducing new tunes.

Quinter. Brother Holsinger asks why I did not make any objection to the book in earlier days. I never objected to the book. At the Yearly Meeting in Iowa, when brother Holsinger asked the Annual Meeting to give him some liberty, I believe the meeting made no objection, if brother Holsinger printed the book. He had a part of the book on the stand at the time. I examined it and said, "Brother Henry will you print all the hymns?" He said, "I think not." Therefore, I expected, of course, it would be a book with some of the hymns in it, and tunes it. When it came out it had all the hymns in, except eight or ten. I wrote immediately to Cincinnati, to business men—for I know there is an honorable way to do business—who knew the nature of business of this kind, and they said if the parties had used the book I got up, to add notes to it, they ought to have consulted me. So I passed the matter and never mentioned it to, I think, as many as three persons. Brother Henry knows that I have said nothing, and have nothing to do with bringing this here.—As he said he was surprised that I have said nothing, it was because I did not want to have trouble. Brethren wrote to me from Maryland intimating it to be an infringement, but I never thought it exactly an infringement, except an infringement upon Christian courtesy.

Moderator. I want to say in regard to brother Henry saying that he had got consent of the Annual Meeting, for the publication of this book, that it is a mistake. It is not on the minutes. You that were there recollect. He had a plan laid, pretty deeply, too, and as I was watching the congregation, as I frequently do, when they were talking; the brethren asked me how I discovered that when I was attending to something else. When it was nearly ready to pass, I said "No! I discover something in it that you have not seen." Then I brought that out and showed it to the brethren. Then No! it could'nt pass. It did not pass. It was not by consent of the meeting. It was the object, no doubt, to get the consent of the meeting; but it is not on the minutes.

——. I recollect it. He asked the Yearly Meeting to grant him the privilege to get up this book; but, if I'm not mistaken, it was answered him that if he got one up, he did it on his own responsibility.

Several brethren corroborated this statement.

The query and answer were re-read.

Holsinger. I would ask that you defer this until to-morrow morning, and then we will bring the documents to show in support of our statement.

Cries of "Pass it, pass it!"

Miller arose, and spoke of his regret; that the matter should have come to this point—that they had no trouble about the books in his district—always left the Tune Books at home.

THE LAST GATHERING.

Ocean and earth restore
All that your arms entomb!
From every distant shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

Sages of days gone by,
Long mouldering in the tomb,
Haste to the realms in light,
Come to the gathering—come!

Warrior with laurelled brow,
Who fixed a nation's doom,
Come to the judgment now,
Come to the gathering—come!

Maiden with lips of rose,
And brow of parian stone,
Haste from thy long repose,
Come to the gathering—come!

Bright was thy dark eye's gleam,
Fair was thy cheek of bloom,
Again these charms shall beam!
Come to the gathering—come!

Mourner with tearful eye,
Haste to thy long sought home,
A peaceful rest is nigh!
Come to the gathering—come!

Loved ones of days gone by,
Haste from the grave's cold gloom;
Again we meet on high!
Come to the gathering—come!

Ocean and earth restore
All that your arms entomb!
Myriads from every shore,
Come to the gathering—come!

"LET LOVE BE WITHOUT DISSIMULATION."—ROM. 12: 9.

Dear readers of the PILGRIM. The Holy Spirit, in the Apostle's days, saw the necessity of this important exhortation, even among the believers in Christ; hence the inspired Apostle's warning to the church of Rome. He being well acquainted with human nature and a man of much experience undoubtedly saw the fatal consequences of dissimulation. The signification of this term is closely allied to hypocrisy; it is a feigned love, or counterfeit love; a flattering social appearance with a heart full of deceit; or in a more refined sense is often thoughtfully exercised for the sake of giving popularity and esteem among our fellow-men; hence, impure, not real, nor for the sole good of man, neither for the sake of Christ. "Let us not be desirous of vain glory," but whatsoever we do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men. We may deceive men, but we cannot dissemble before the Lord, for he knoweth the thoughts of our hearts. Paul, in this connection, after exhorting the members of Christ's body to exercise faithfully in their different gifts given them in their ministration, brings the matter right home to themselves, as a consequence to promote and maintain an unfeigned love amongst them, saith "he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness." Let love be without dissimulation. The minister of God may be guilty of this deceitful crime—,if I am allowed to use that term—and certainly will be if any other motive prompts him to preach than the love to God and the salvation of men. If worldly honor, if the unrighteous mamon, if self-examination, or to gain the applause of men causes you to forsake your homes and preach a gospel; I say a gospel, for you must in a measure preach your own gospel, if you want to please men or succeed in any of the aforementioned motives. But to preach the Gospel and to be a servant of Christ and to have pure love to God and the love of souls at heart, is quite a different thing, for men will not be pleased to hear their sins denounced and held before their face, yet this is love without dissimulation. It is presumptuous, and the very height of folly to believe that this is pure love, to be so liberal as to assent to every form of worship and to admit it to be right, however far it may differ from the true worship of God established by Jesus Christ the great head of the Church, as revealed in the Gospel. Hence, let us stand firm, and bold upon the platform of the Gospel, and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints, if we have to endure the frowns and derisions of a deceitful world, under the garb of Christianity. Remember the Apostle Paul, after being shamefully treated at Phillippi, he says: "We were bold in our God to speak unto you the Gospel of God without much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit nor, of uncleanness, nor in guile; but say we were allowed of God to be put in trust of the Gospel, even so we spake; not as pleasing men but of God, which trieth our hearts. For neither at any time used we flattering words, nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness, nor of men sought we glory." Is not this commendable? May it not with propriety be called "the end of the commandment, charity out of a pure heart and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned?" Let us copy after it, and have love without dissimulation. But brethren and sisters, this important injunction is not only for the ministers or his only reference to ministerial labors, but also embraces many other things, and even effects our every day actions in life, and hence is indispensable to be guarded against, and ever to be kept in memory, that whatever we say, do or design to do, that it be done in uprightness and out of pure love, and not by flattery or through vain deceit. Dissimulation is a sin which often times causes wonderful mischief when brought to light, which certainly it will be one time or other. Excessive flattery never promises much good, but often does much harm; therefore, let us avoid extremes on either side, be moderate. "Let your moderation be known among all men," for the Lord is at hand. Men sometimes appear very sociable; pretend to be very friendly, flattering and enticing, but beware of such, for there may be poison on their lips. Though we hope better things from members of the church, yet to our sorrow we see things sometimes that shows cunning craftiness, in order to deceive or to take advantage of his fellow-men, if not brother or sister. How necessary the admonition of our text. Beware of formal invitation. I am fearful too much of this kind is in vogue. If your love is not sincere, and your heart wishes not to have the association of your neighbor, for God's sake do not invite him, lest you dissimulate. Mean whatever you say, and say whatever you mean, and no man will be deceived by you. If you give to the poor, do it with a cheerful heart, not grudgingly or boastingly, but in simplicity and out of love to God. Visit the sick, clothe the naked, feed the hungry, entertain the strangers, give alms to the poor, encourage the depressed, lift up those that are stricken down, and comfort the feeble-minded and the God of peace will be with you, and will cause His blessing, like a mighty river to flow from your habitation. Yea, love will reign there and abide with you forever. Enrobed with the righteousness of Christ, your soul shall be joyful in your God; for He hath clothed you with the garment of Salvation. Violence you need not fear, wasting or destruction will be removed from thy borders. The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. And the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Finally, brethren and sisters, show yourselves in your true colors and do not deceive the community with useless display or glittering colors, nor with popular demonstrations, neither with flattering tongues or deceitful lips; but pray God to keep you pure in the love of God, strong in faith and above all things have love without dissimulation.

Now, I beseach you, brethren and sisters, suffer the word of exhortation, for I have raised my voice against feigned love and hypocrisy in milder terms. And I hope for our every benefit. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do His will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory, forever and ever. Amen.

Yours in weakness,

LEONARD FURY.

FOLLOW JESUS.

BY MARY E. GOOD.

How many of us are following in the foot steps of Jesus? And are we trying to do all God has required of us? Christ says if we neglect one of His commands we are guilty of all. What a great meaning these few words contain; how often I think of it. If God's word is to judge us at the last day, as He has said it will, should it not cause us to fear lest we come short. His sayings are sure. How awful would be the thought that one of us who have set out on that narrow way should come short of our duty, and be cast off forever where nothing but remorse and sorrow would be our portion! Let us follow Jesus in the way, and though we meet with troubles and trials on the way, it will make our crown the brighter. Only those who faithfully bear the cross may ever hope to win the crown.

Just think what Christ did for us. He gave His precious blood so freely shed for you and I. Oh! that blood-stained cross. Was there ever love like His? Think what He had to endure for our sakes. We owe every day of our lives to His service. We can do nothing of ourselves, but must look to Jesus for every day of our lives. Some are prostrated upon beds of affliction, others are called from time to eternity without a moment's warning, unprepared.

We who are spared with health, and surrounded with every thing calculated to make life comfortable and happy should not be forgetful of the one thing most needful, not set our affections on the things of this earth for soon they will fade away; they are all transitory, of short duration. Soon we, like they will have to perish.—Then let us be up and doing our duty; following Jesus, that lovely example. May we be like Him, and strive to be a light to the world.

Many of us are youthful, our journey just begun, and we will have many troubles and trials to meet, the finger of scorn may sometimes be pointed at us, but let us endure it all for Jesus' sake, and not forget to pray. Let us adorn ourselves with that adornment that becometh the true follower of Christ, not trying to decorate our bodies with the foolish things of this world, to grieve our old brethren and sisters and one above who sees all our actions, as is the custom of some of our members to do. We cannot serve God and mammon, will love one and hate the other. We are all soldiers under one captain.—Thus let us be known by Him by our uniform and wherever we go, take Jesus with us. We need no better companion. Not one day, when we assemble ourselves together in public worship, be plain and modest in our dress, and again when we go out into the world, have our bodies so decorated as though God was not seeing us. Is this a Christian spirit? No, it is far from it. He sees us everywhere. The eye that never sleeps. He knows our every thought before they are found within. Jesus has prepared a home for us and we all desire to go there, but we have a work to perform. How anxious we are here on earth to secure a home, and yet we have such a short time to stay. Let us secure a home in Heaven where we can dwell forevermore with the pure and holy, where there will be nothing to mar our enjoyment.

Many of us communed a short time ago, and perhaps for the last time. I know we will never all meet as we there did, until we surround the table of the Lord in nobler scenes above. I hope the last Communion will long be remembered by us all. O, could we have more such delightful seasons! I know we would be greatly benefitted. Let us resolve to live nearer to God as this may have been our last. Let us try to live every day of our lives as if it were our last,—if we stood close on the brink of eternity, that when we are called away it will be a pleasure for us to go, where nothing will disturb our peace and joy, where we can meet those who have gone before and washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb.

Waynesboro, Pa.

WE ARE PASSING AWAY.

Nothing strikes the mind more forcibly than the thought. 'we are passing away.' Whence our origin, and whence our destiny? This mighty earth has echoed to the tread of teeming millions, that one day dwelt upon her expansive bosom, but their very graves have been forgotten for ages. Countless generations have sprung into existence and labored, thought, studied and died. Huge piles of sculptered marble and chiseled granite remains yet in the Eastern world as relics of modern antiquity. Their manners, customs, religions and laws, to a limited extent, have been preserved on tablets of marble or bronze, but the inhabitants of that era, who flourished for a brief season in the power and strength of manhood, long since yielded to the stern mandate of death, and crumb'ed again to dust. They have passed away. We have their history through the lapse of near six thousand years to substantiate our position. The irreversable decree of death has reigned coextensive with the human family. It is the great leveler of mankind. It knocks audibly at the door of innocence, at the barriers of vigorous manhood, at the palace of old age. All are summoned at his potent will. Respect for rank ceases. The haughty monarch on his glittering throne endowed with regal power, the orator who holds entranced senates spellbound with the thunderings of his eloquence, the aristocratic and wealthy of all lands, and even the poor beggar are all brought to a common level—the grave. There all present the same stern, rigid, cheerless aspect. Whether high or low, rich or poor, saint or sinner, wise or unwise, all present the same appearance and are alike food for worms. W.

BY-AND-BY.

"By-and by" is the chant of life, swelling out like an anthem from every form of beauty or of might, and the human heart by night and day, beats time to its responsive measure.

It is the key note of the Christian's anticipations of his future heaven. It gives wings to his faith, on which it flies and mounts upward to that house "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens"—surveys the jasper walls; charmed and overpowered by its beauty, its majesty and the transcendant glory of its beautified angelic inhabitants, his whole nature breathes out the precious tho't —"by-and-by" this glorious palace is to be my eternal home.

Patient Hope, in the hour of affliction and distress, when the world seems dreary and happiness merely a mental delusion, rests its hope for the future upon the blessed assurance that "by and by" the weary soul shall rest in that land, where falls no blight.

The faithful mother gazes upon her smiling infant, regarding it as a jewel dropped from the skies, more precious than the sparkling gems of Golconda, and who can tell her oft-repeated "by-and-bys," as, with an anxious heart and bounding pulse, she watches the sleeping beauty?

In her bright and loving anticipations, she sees the time when it will become a brilliant youth, then a leading, influential man in the cause of right, scattering blessings on every hand and rendering her happy in her declining years, and, in a ripe old age, when his earthly mission is fully accomplished, with his honors thick upon him, pass from earth an angel, to dwell with her and the elder angels of the heavenly world. "By-and-by" are words of life and power to the dilligent in every good cause which he may espouse, enabling him to anticipate the full fruition of his ardent hopes, as a just reward of his active labor, but they are words ending in the bitterness of death to him who neglects a duty which should be performed to-day in response to his favorite motto of "by-and-by," having accomplished no good, and descending to an unhonored grave, unwept save for his guilty folly.—Christian Advocate.

GET UP EARLY.

Get up early! time is precious—
Waste it not in bed;
Get up early! while the dewdrops
O'er the fields are spread;
Get up early! when the red sun
First begins to rise;
Get up early! when the darkness
Fades from earth and skies:

Get up early! it is sinful
To be wasting time;
Get up early! while the dear birds
Sing their morning chime:
Get up early! while the flowers
Blush upon the sod;
Get up early! while all nature
Blesses nature's God.

TO OUR YOUNG READERS.

We were just trying to think what we would get for our young readers this week. We have many things that might amuse you but perhaps you have enough of that at home. Our object is to give you something better, something that will interest you and at the same time enable you to learn of God and fall in love with Jesus, your best friend. Those of you who have learned to read the Bible no doubt have been made to wonder why Jesus was willing to forsake His Father in Heaven and come down into the world to suffer and die. But if you read carefully, you will soon learn that it was all because He loved us. This is what we wish to impress upon your minds, hoping that when you once learn that Jesus loved you enough to suffer and die for you, that you might be saved and made happy, we can persuade you to love Him enough to try to please Him by becoming good and obeying Him. There are many ways of becoming and doing good which we will talk about at some other time. We give for your entertainment this week, first, "Follow your Guide." We hope you will read this carefully as in it is taught a very wholesome lesson, one that it will be well for you not to forget. Jesus should be your guide and has opened up a "way" for you and now asks you to walk in it. This way is called the "Good old way" and none but the good are allowed to walk in it. Therefore you must first become good by learning to become humble and obedient, and then follow your guide and we can promise you a happy life, a pleasant journey and glorious end.

FOLLOW YOUR GUIDE.

The people of Iceland live in regions we would scarcely think could be traversed by man or beast. The mountains on the island are mostly volcanoes, which for ages have poured out over the country vast floods of boiling lava, which has cooled in every variety of form, making great masses of rock tumbled together in the wildest confusion. Here will be a chasm seemingly without bottom. Here the dark crust of cooled lava will be too thin to bear the traveller. There a mass of ice and snow on a mountain side will rumble over the path, ready at a breath to fall upon, and crush and bury the traveller forever. The loose stones, which are started by his foot steps, often roll down the sides of awful precipices, plunging from depth to depth till the sound dies away. Oh how fearful the fate of one who makes a misstep in traversing these paths!

But the guides pass over them as firmly and unconcernedly as we walk our good roads at home. And there is but one course for travellers, and that is to follow their guide, follow him blindly and implicitly.

It would not answer for one to say, "This path is not so blocked up with lava as that. It is pleasanter to walk in. I wish to examine these little creeping plants and flowers that grow on the edge of the cliff. I will go this way."

What do you think would be the result? It would not be long before you would hear a fearful fall, and a despairing cry of "lost, lost."

Just so, dear children, it will be with those who will not follow the heavenly guide. We are all passing over a way in life more dangerous than Iceland roads. We are all the time in danger of falling into sin that will ruin our souls. They look pleasanter than the right path, but the end is death. Our guide has given us a book to teach us the way. So plain is it that nobody need make a false step. Jesus has gone the way before us, and we have but lovingly to follow his footsteps and we shall all reach the blessed home in safety and exceeding joy.—Child's World.

DECEPTION.

Never deceive for the sake of foolish jest, or to excite laughter of a few companions at the expense of a friend. Be anxious, when you relate anything, to tell it just as it occurred. Never variate in the least degree. The reason why our ears are so often saluted by false reports is because people, in telling real things, add a little to them, and as they pass through a dozen mouths, the original stories are turned into something entirely different. So, when you attempt to tell anything that you have seen with your own eyes relate it correctly in every particular, and as you grow older, you will reap the advantage of this course.

Youth and old age have too little sympathy for each other. If the young would remember that they may be old and the old would remember that they have been young they would be happier.

BAPTISM.

Not long since, we had sent us a sermon, delivered by some nameless person, on the subject of baptism, or, rather on the mode of baptism. We are not informed of the design of the sender, but we suppose it is considered, by him, a masterly production. We shall not burden our columns in publishing it, but wish to notice a few of the arguments used, and, perhaps, make a few extracts.

His first point is to determine the meaning of the word baptism. After stigmatizing Baptists in general for going back to the ages of ignorance and heathen darkness to determine the meaning of the word baptidzo, he says: "Both sides have ransacked all Lexicons and writers of Grecian literature with about equal success; the one claiming that baptidzo always means to immerse, while the others have found that it sometimes means wash, cleanse and sprinkle, as well as immerse." But, as he can make no point here, for the sake of argument he will admit that it did mean immerse before the time of Christ, as used by Greek writers. Now follows the sound logic:

"There was no such a thing as Christian baptism before the time of Christ, consequently there could have been no word in use to express it. Words are but signs of our ideas. And surely the name of the thing cannot exist before the thing itself. The child must be born before it is named. Now you might just as well hunt in your old Greek Lexicon for a word to express your idea of a railroad, a telegraph, a daguerreotype, as to expect to find a word to express Christian baptism. Now the ancients knew nothing about railroads, telegraphs, photographs, &c., and consequently they had no need of any word to express them. But when any new thing is discovered and brought before you, you give it a name just as Adam gave names to the animals as they were brought before him.

Thus it has always been when anything new comes up, you either coin a new word to express it, or give some new meaning to a word already in use. How many words we use every day that have taken on new meanings! Who does not know that pastor once meant a keeper of sheep and nothing else? Now it means one who has the oversight of the church. So the word minister originally meant one who served another a slave; now it means a preacher of the Gospel. So whatever the word baptidzo meant as used by the Greek writers, it does not necessarily follow that when it is picked up by Christ and his apostles and introduced into the Christian family of words that it was not itself christened and received a new meaning, when made to do a new service. And here we dismiss the whole discussion as it pertains to Lexicons and heathen writers, and come to Christ and his apostles and learn from them the Christian use of the word.

Is not this a strong theory? Most certainly words are signs of ideas, but it should be remembered that words cannot convey ideas unless they have a fixed or established meaning. Would it not have been a ridiculous blunder, if when the press was invented, because there was no such thing before, they had named it a horse or stone! If there had been no word to convey the idea of the actions of a press, the next best thing would have been to coin a new word, but as the same action was performed by a number of other machines differently constructed, there was no necessity of coining a new word, because there was a word in use that conveyed the idea of the action, hence it was called a "press," and to distinguish it from other presses used for different purposes, the word "printing" was affixed to it, thus designating its specific use. Just so in Christian baptism. We will admit that it was a new ordinance introduced by God as an initiatory rite to be used in inducting subjects into the Kingdom of Peace. This rite was to signify a death, burial, resurrection and also purification.—Water was an element used for purifying or cleansing, plunging a subject into it was a figure of death and burial, and taking from it again very beautifully represented a resurrection. It also harmonized with being "born again," and "regeneration," hence, immersion in water was adopted by God as the initatory rite of His kingdom. The next thing is to give it a name. This must be a word, and as words convey ideas, there must be a word used to convey the idea of this action. Now, if there is no word to convey the idea of this action, there must be one coined. But as the action of plunging or immersing things in the water for their cleansing was almost as old as the creation itself, it had an established word to convey the idea of that action, and that word was baptidzo, or bapto, hence this word is adopted as the name of this rite without the least necessity for a change of meaning. The word conveys the idea of the action alone, without any reference to the intention or result of the action. It has been asked, time and again, if immersion was not intended, why use a word that conveys that idea? Why not have coined a new word, or else used one that would fairly convey the idea that was intended? Either would have been more logical and convenient than to make use of a word that conveyed a different idea, and then change its meaning, especially when the very words were in use that conveyed the idea clearly, that our friend is laboring to attach to this solemn and important rite. In accepting this word as the name of this new rite or sacrament, there is no change of meaning about it. The action is the same, and all the sophistry in the world cannot change it. It is the intention of the action that is changed. A man may be immersed, or baptized, to take his life, to cleanse his body, or as the initiatory rite of the Church of Christ. The same word conveys the idea of these actions fairly, but the intentions are quite different, and must be determined by the attending circumstances. Our friend says: "Minister originally meant one who served another; now it means a preacher of the Gospel!" Is he not still a minister? What is a preacher of the Gospel? Is he not still a minister? If not, he is no preacher of the Gospel. There is no change of meaning here. The word minister conveys the idea of the action of a preacher of the Gospel as fairly and correctly as it does that of a slave or servant. Both are servants; one ministers to our bodily and the other to our spiritual wants. The only possible change of meaning is in the intention of the action. So, whatever the word baptidzo meant as used by the Greek writers, it necessarily means yet. It is truly astonishing that a man pretending to be a preacher of the Gospel, would make use of such shallow reasoning before an intelligent congregation. We shall now leave this subject and notice some others that are equally illogical.

Next is introduced John's baptism, and labors to show that in Jordan means at Jordan, or in between the first and second banks, something that no travelers seem to know anything about, except a few preachers, who are so prejudiced against water baptism that they can make an ideal Jordan just to suit their taste. We will give another extract:

"But as we wish to be very charitable we will allow that en here means in, and then we ask how far were they in? Up to their ankles, or knees, or loins? And, suppose en puts them in up to their loins, that does not put them under—en only fixes the place and has nothing to do with the mode of baptism. Did they kneel in the water along the shore, or wade out into the water and John take his hand and dip up the water and sprinkle or pour it upon them, or did he dip them backwards once or thrice? Who knows, and who is wise above what is written, and who will add to the word of the Lord and say they were immersed?

Why not just as well say, who will add to the word of the Lord and say they were sprinkled? This would truly be adding to the word of the Lord, from the fact that it must be admitted that baptidzo does not convey the idea of sprinkling but that of immersion, overwhelming or plunging. We are justifiable in saying they were immersed, because we have them in the water, and Jesus "went up straightway out of the water." If the Saviour was in the water, so were the others that were baptized. Then they were all in the water, and there were baptized or immersed as is clearly signified by the word used to express the idea of the action.

Again in speaking of Christ's baptism we have the following:

Did he stand or kneel, and did John sprinkle, or pour the water on him, or did he dip him forwards or backwards? Who knows? Who is so bold as to say he was immersed? And it is a matter of very little importance which way it was done, for Christ's baptism was not Christian baptism, and hence the folly of Christians talking about following Christ in baptism. * * * He was formally iniated into the Jewish church when he was eight days old, and he lived and died a member of the Jewish church.

Christ was inducted into the Jewish priesthood when he was thirty years old by a ceremonial washing, as all the Jewish priests before him were.

If Christ's baptism was not Christian baptism, then there is no such a thing and we might as well discard the whole plan of salvation. John was a man sent from God and not from the Jewish Church. His preaching and baptism was from God, having for its design a preparing of a material or people for the new kingdom of peace which was being ushered into the world, of which Christ was to be King. In Christ submitting to this God-ordained rite, He fulfilled part of the "all righteousness" and became our examplifier in entering "the way" and thus could, with propriety, say, "follow me."

If Jesus lived and died a member of the Jewish Church, so did His apostles and we have no Christian Church.

In setting up a kingdom there must of necessity, first be subjects before there can be a king. These subjects were prepared by the Baptist and Christ, when He came, assumed by right, the Kingship, hence the Kingdom or Church of Christ. But that Christ, in receiving John's baptism, was inducted into the Jewish priesthood is a freak of modern theology. The Jewish Church at that time, must have been burdened with an exceedingly great number of priests, as we have every reason to believe that Christ's baptism was in all respects, similar to that of all others that were received during the Baptist's administration, and if John's baptism, as administered to Christ, made Him a Jewish priest, it also made priests of all others that were baptized.

Next week we will notice some of the household baptisms.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

We are frequently asked for papers to distribute in Sunday schools, and as we have on hand a large number of odd copies of the Pilgrim, we will send them for Sunday school distribution at the following rates: 50 copies post paid, 35 cents, 100 copies, 70 cents, 200 copies, $1.25. Nos. of different issues will be sent. This offer is less than the postage and cost of paper, but we do it, hoping it may be for the good of the schools and may be used as a means of spreading our doctrine and introducing the Pilgrim. Superintendents and friends of Sunday schools will please notice this offer:

QUERY.

Will some brother or sister please give an explanation on the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, recorded in the twentieth chapter of Matt.

S. C. Miller.

EXPLANATION OF LUKE 9 27.

Dear Editor: If you find the following correct, please publish it, if not, give us some light on the subject.

"But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Kingdom of God."

Those who should not taste of death till they saw the Kingdom, were his apostles, eleven of the twelve, for Judas by transgression fell.

"Kingdom of God" here means the Holy Spirit which the apostles received on the day of Pentecost. Acts 2; 4.

A PILGRIM.

MARRIED.

MCKINLY—FLOWERS.—At the residence of the brides' father, on the 25th of June '73, Mr Henry McKinley to sister Rebecca Flowers.

JOHN WISE.

HALL—DARRAH.—In Winamac, Pulaski Co., Ind., at the house of the brides' parents, May 22, '73, Mr. David Hall and sister Margaret M Darrah.

D. R. FREEMAN.

DIED.

COFFMAN.—In the South English River Church, Keokuk Co., Iowa, June 15, '73, Joseph D., youngest son of Benjamin F. and Anna Coffman, aged 3 months and 8 days. Funeral services by the Brethren. Scripture selected, 1st chapter of the 1st Epistle of Peter, 24th verse.

(Visitor, please copy.)

STUCKMYERS.—In the same district near North English, Iowa Co., Iowa, June 21, '73, sister Rhoda, wife of Benj. Stuckmyers, aged 28 years, 4 months and 7 days. Disease Consumption.

She had been ailing for some time, but on the evening of her death went to bed as usual. Sometime in the night her husband awoke and found his companion a corpse. Her spirit had taken up its abode, as we believe, in the Paradise of God. How forcibly are we again reminded to be at all times prepared to die, or prepared to meet our God in peace. She leaves a sorrowing husband, five children and a number of relations to mourn their loss. The funeral services were attended to by Eld. Jacob Brower in the Christian Church, in the town of North English, to a large and sympathizing concourse of people.

B F. FLORY.

Visitor, please copy.

MOYER.—In the Lower Miami Church, Montgomery Co., Ohio, June 22, sister Christiana Moyer, aged 79 years, 6 mos. and 1 day. Funeral improved by Peter Nead and David Bowman.

Sister Moyer was born December 22 1793 in West Virginia. Her maiden name was Reaster. When about 12 years old her parents moved to Preble Co., Ohio, where she was united in marriage to Michael Moyer, who proceeded her to the Heavenly home about 12 years. They lived and toiled about 40 years to make home comfortable. Though they had no children of their own, they gave homes and raised six homeless children, to whom they filled the place of kind and affectionate parents, all of whom are still living, and can rise up and call them blessed. They were kind and benevolent in the true sense of the word, never turning the unfortunate or hungry away empty, but always administered to their wants. She joined the church over fifty years ago, and lived a consistent Christian. Her afflictions were protracted and severe but through it all she kept her heart stayed on Jesus and her eyes on Heaven. When death came she was ready and now rests from her labors, and her works do follow her. DANIEL BOCK.

BOYER.—In the Union District, Marshall Co., Ind., June 26, '73, John, son of brother George Boyer, aged about twelve years.

This boy left home to go fishing—as they live near a small lake—and waded in to fish, and went in a little too far. He sank down into the mud nearly to his knees and could not get out, his head got under water and there he was found drowned, standing upright in the water. Truly this was a solemn occasion and should be a warning to boys, and to us all. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Adam Appleman and Wm. G. Cook, from Matthew 24: 44.

A. APPLEMAN.

KINSEY.—On the 15th of June, sister Emma Kinsey, only daughter and only child of brother Gabriel G., and sister Amanda Mumbard, fell asleep in Jesus, in the 23d year of her age. Disease, inflamation of the stomach. Funeral services by the Brethren, to an unusually large congregation, indicating the very high esteem in which she was held by her acquaintances, all seeming to marvel at this mysterious providence, and doubtless if they could have had their choice would have willed it otherwise, and are only reconciled by the knowledge that it is God, and hence we are still.

She left besides a large circle of friends, the lonely father and mother, and a youthful husband, to whom she had only been married seventeen days, to mourn their loss, to whom our tenderest sympathies are awarded with the earnest exhortation to be always ready to meet her in that land where they are not married nor given in marriage, and where there is no more death and where sorrow and sighing flee away. B. F. MOOMAW.

By the request of her parents.

Correspondence.

EPISTOLARY.

Dear Pilgrim:—I seat myself this pleasant day to write a few lines for your excellent volume. It has been a long time since I wrote for the "papers." When at our late Annual Meeting at Dale City, Pa., I met many acquaintances I love so much. My heart was made glad when I could again meet and talk with those I love. I think it may be the last A. M. I shall ever attend. My health is poor. I have been sick all Spring and am not much better yet. I came home from the A. M. very much fatigued, but I can say "the will of the Lord be done." O, how many I saw there whom I shall never see any more in this world! A great many said to me "Why don't you write more for the papers?" Some said they were so glad to hear from me. One sister said she always looked for my name first when she got the papers, but she had not seen it for a long time. Now dear sisters, you may see my name once more, if the Editor of the PILGRIM thinks my article worth printing.

I have very poor health and am quite feeble, which makes me think I shall not live long. I think, when I look back over my life, I have lived a long time,—a little more than forty seven years. Oh! how have I spent my days? I think if I had my blooming days to live over again, and know what I now do, I would spend my time very differently. Yes' so it is young friends; it may be so with you when you get old and think you must soon die and go to God, there to see all you have ever done pass in open review before you. Oh! think before you get old. It will save you from "a thousand snares to mind religion young." Yes it fits us for "declining years, and for the awful tomb." I think I will soon go home to dwell with God forever. Oh! how good God has been to me, to spare me so long, so that I may be ready to meet him at his coming. My dear sisters, when we have been from home for a while, how glad we are to return again: O, will we be so glad and feel ready when our time comes to go home to our Father's house where there are many mansions. There we shall see all God's children. We shall see our dear friends, some of my children are there, father, mother, and many more dear ones. Who has not some friends there that they would like to see? I think we should forsake our sins for Christ's sake. O, how much he has done for us to save our poor souls! Yes, he gave himself for us; cannot we do his will and good pleasure that we may all be saved? God gave his only son to save us from hell. Oh, sisters let us love God more and serve him better, let us follow Christ that we poor weak creatures, may be saved in Heaven to praise God forever. I know if we will love God with our whole heart we will serve him better. If we are not saved, it will be our own fault, and not Christ's, He has done all things well. When we read the Scriptures, we can find many good lessons to teach us how to live right, and by living right, we may die right. "If God so clothe the grass, which today is in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, will he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" O, yes, when we feel how little our faith is, no wonder we are so cold in love to God. If we had the faith in God we should have, our love would burn as a fire within us. Then we would believe in him and trust in him. God wants us to believe in him, trust him, love his word, feel that we are his. I often wonder at myself that I have so little fath in God. Without him we can do nothing. Dear sisters, let us see what kind of faith we have. Is it a living or a dead faith? We should have a faith that works by love,—love to God and to mankind; then we will have power to overcome evil with good. This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith. I fear when death comes, we will feel that we have not lived as we should have done, and as we will wish we had done.

Christ says "I am the true vine and my Father is the husbandman." Now if we do not bear fruit, we will wither and be cast into the fire and be burned. "Every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit." Now, sisters, if we were purged from all our sins we could do more to glorify God's holy name. "I am the vine ye are the branches, he that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing." If we are the branches let us bear much fruit, that we may abide in him, and he in us. O, sisters, let us bring forth much fruit to the honor and glory of God. Christ is the vine and we are the branches. When we see our grape vines and see the tender branches, I wonder if we are so closely connected to Christ as those tender branches are to the vine. If not, may God graft us in, so we may bear fruit, and enjoy in the end everlasting life. Sisters, pray for me that I may be one of the branches. Farewell.

NANCY WISE.

Scenery Hill, Pa.

H. R. Brumbaugh. Dear brother: Our health this Spring has been only middling good but we are still trying to do something in the Lord's Vineyard, or trying to follow the "old landmarks." Our dear old bishop, Samuel Lidy, has gone to rest and left a vacancy in the church.

We had a Lovefeast on the 13th of June and held a choice for a speaker. The lot fell upon Caleb Secrist, a very worthy young brother that has been a member of the church for only two years. Truly the Lord's ways are not man's ways. Yours in love,

S. S. CRESSWELL.

Dear Editors: Will you please answer the following question? Who was the young man referred to in Mark 14; 51, "and there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young man laid hold on him, and he left the linen cloth and fled from them naked." Wm. J. DEACON.

Oakland, Va.

ANSWER. We are not prepared to say who he was, neither do we know of any way of ascertaining It is supposed that he resided near the garden and that he was acquainted with Jesus. On hearing the tumult and being concerned about the welfare of Jesus, he hastily arose from his bed without taking time to dress himself, threw over him the linen, and went forth to offer his assistance, but when the men that had taken Jesus saw him, supposing him to be one of the disciples, laid hold on him, or his garment, which being loose, enabled him to escape, but left him naked. If anybody knows more about the young man, we shall be glad to hear from them.

Dear Editors: We wish to learn through the PILGRIM whether there are any brethren residing in Pulaski Co., Ind. If there are any in the above or adjoining counties, please give us your name and address soon through the PILGRIM or address Addison Biker, Carthage, Jasper Co.' Mo.

NOTE. We are sending PILGRIMS to Pulaskiville and Winamac of the above county. At the first office, address, Andrew Browsher, and the last, D. R. Freeman.

TO THE CHURCHES OF MID. DIST. OF PA.—As is known by the churches of Mid Pa, by resolution of the District Conference, each Church was to report to me, before the 1st of July, how much they would be willing to give towards building a Church in Altoona Pa. Therefore, thirteen have reported, and as I was not to report to the investigating Committee until all Churches were heard from, I hope that those who have not yet reported, will do so immediately. Adress George Brumbaugh, Grafton, Huntingdon Co, Pa.

BOOK NOTICES.

In this department we will notice such NEW BOOKS, as may be sent us by publishers, that are in harmony with the character of our work. A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D., Huntingdon Pa., literary editor, to whom all books must be sent.

How to Acquire and Preserve Health.

H. N. McKinney & Co., No. 16 N. 7th St., Philadelphia, Pa., are the publishers of this important book, written by Dr. C. W. Gleason well known throughout the country, having acquired a distinguished reputation as a popular Lecturer. His sanitary teachings are valuable and safe. Grievious errors are committed daily by all, consequent upon our ignorance in regard to proper food and the function of digestion. The writer says: Human beings are not strong and healthy in proportion to the amount of food they eat. Over-eating is one of the greatest evils of civilized life. * * * All gluttons are torpid, feeble and indolent." No minister can interest and edify a congregation "with their stomachs full of all manner of unclean things, pork, cabbage and baked beans and strong coffee for breakfast, and cold ham, turkey, gristle, &c. for dinner, when brains and nervous energies are fully taxed to digest what they have eaten and where mental and moral natures are overwhelmed with stupidity and lethargy." No man can eat unwholesome food and spend much of his time in profound mental labor without causing serious derangement, and disease of the organs of digestion.

On clothing he says. "All the clothing worn by human beings should be suspended upon the shoulders, and never upon the waist. It is simply impossible for any one to wear the clothing loose (as it should always be worn) when fastened around the waist, for the reason that its own weight will cause it to drag down until it becomes so tight that it can drag down no further." He suggests a well adjusted underwaist for women, and we hear testimony that such a course would relieve much of the wretchedness among women, and relieve much pain and distress.

Received through Messrs. Lippincott & Co., Publishers, Philada., and Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa. It is sold by subscription. Address as above. A. B. B.

In West Tennesee there is a sect of professing Christians known as Thomasites, whose distinguishing belief is the annihilation of the wicked after Christ shall make his second personal advent to reign over the earth a thousand years. This second coming they suppose will take place in about seven years from this date. This sect is an offshoot from the Campbellites or Christian Disciples.

St. Louis has a Church of Christian Fellowship. It is Congregational, but exceedingly free, as will be seen by the following statement of faith: "We believe in the sovereignty of God, the sinfulness of man, the divine nature and mission of Jesus, the dependence of the soul upon the Divine Spirit, the inheritance of immortality, and our duty to openly teach the truth as it was taught by our Lord. We accept the Scriptures as containing the revelations of God, and we look for the constant illumination of every prayerful soul. We accept baptism and the Lord's Supper as ordinances adapted to assist our spiritual growth."

Query. Inasmuch as that part of the instruction for holding the Annual Meeting, recommended for trial to the Annual Meeting of 1866, which recommends that no boarding tent shall be put up for the purpose of feeding and entertaining a mixed multitude, and also that part which recommends that there be no meeting in the building where the Annual Meeting convenes, do not seem satisfactory, would it not be well for the A. M. to reconsider, and so amend that part of the instructions as to give the committee of arrangements leave to feed and entertain the multitude as seems most convenient for them, and also to select the places for holding meetings for public worship?

Answer. Yes.

Sayler. I suppose, if you pass this and burden yourselves in this way, we have no objections—we will travel to you.

Brown. If they want to do that in the West, and God has given the means with which to do it, I say, God bless them.

Eby. Ever since this resolution was adopted, the place of A. M. has violated the rule; the rule has been violated here. A large tent has been put up, and preaching has been conducted here; and when the Annual Meeting violates its own rules, it is no wonder that the members at home fall back on us and try to hold us responsible.

Metzger. We want to have the privilege of welcoming our brethren; and we have hungry souls out in Illinois, and we want the privilege of hearing you preach to us. This query came from the Southern district of Illinois, but I think Illinois is a unit on that matter.

Moderator. The question is, to reconsider a portion of our previous minutes. I would only say that, when the meeting was held at Price's, in Franklin county, a good many of the old brethren went four or five miles away before they got anything to eat. It cost a little more than $4,000. The next year, in the state of Maryland, it cost about $2,000, and all satisfactory. Every one was fed that came, and I heard no complaint at all. Preaching went on through the neighborhood, and some fifty odd meetings, brother Sayler says, were held in that neighborhood. Now if you see fit to hold them in this way, and pay the expenses, I am inclined to think you will drive a good many old people from the tables. That has been done here. The young people rush in before us, and take the seats that were designed for us.

Metzger. You see it is in the minutes not to erect a tent to feed a mixed multitude, and you have seen the rule violated from year to year, and the brethren think it cannot be avoided. Now if it cannot be avoided, let us not have it on the minutes and transgress it. When we get the brethren out west, we want them to preach. The people will come to our neighborhood probably on Friday or Saturday, expecting to hear preaching at the place of meeting; and they will be disappointed. We would like to have arrangements made for the brethren that visit us, to preach where it will do the most good.

Holsinger. The difficulty arises, as I understand it, principally on account of the restrictions relating to preaching, &c.

Sturgis. I am in favor of passing the query.

Metzger. It is possible that some may think that the passage of this resolution might warrant the conclusion that we would spread the news broad-cast over the land, that we will feed a mixed multitude; but nothing is farther from the intention. Do not deprive us of our privileges though; and trust us to make the proper use of them.

Moderator. Let the minutes be allowed to stand as they are, but give brother John the privilege to have it as he pleases.

——. That will satisfy us if you place it on the minutes, so that our brethren from a distance can see that we are not transgressing the minutes.

——. I would not like it to go out that we will feed all who come, but simply to leave it to the committee to do as best they can. We have never had a meeting there; and Springfield is only 25 miles from that place, and people may come from there and also from St. Louis, and press us so that we cannot work at all.

Sayler. I have been at many yearly meetings, and I have lain on hard boards; but I won't do it again; and I think that a multitude has no business to crowd in on our business. I have attended yearly meetings where, when an individual came in who did not belong to the church, he was told to go out. That is the way we held our first meetings; and we want to get back to the old way, and hold them as we have a right to hold them, if I understand the gospel.

Preaching at the place of meeting, has been the cause of breaking up that custom. We used to meet on Friday and Saturday, and on Sunday we gave the people preaching; and the word only went out on Saturday afternoon, that there would be preaching on Sunday. It is the spirit of insubordination on the part of some of the members that has caused us to hold them as we now do. It has occurred that the crowd has forced us to leave the place and go into a private house, to hold the meeting and do the business. It got so bad that we had to entreat churches to take the meeting, and it will get back to that again. I will preach to you a week, at any other time, but when it comes to conference meeting, I want that to be a church meeting.

——. We did not understand that our minutes prohibited the erection of a tent, except for a mixed multitude; and we gave it in the papers in that way, and we were not troubled with the outsiders.

Query. A brother brings a claim against a sister's husband, and requests the sister to pay it, which she refused to do. Then the brother or brethren got up a query to cover said case and sent it to the Annual Meeting; and through the influence of the query a committee was sent; and through the influence of the committee and some other brethren, the sister was prevailed to settle it by giving her notes, and the other brother for security, and the security brother was compelled to pay said claim; and the sister's husband says he will pay the claim if the brother or brethren that got up said query will prove what is contained therein. Should not the brother or brethren be required to prove said query?

Answer. Inasmuch as this case had been virtually settled by a committee chosen by the Annual Meeting to settle it, we consider it inexpedient to open the subject again, and we think they should not again consider it, but that it should be returned to the place in which it originated.

Moderator. I presume there are very few here that know the nature of the case well enough to understand the matter as it is here presented. I would just say, that brethren John Wise, John Metzger and myself were the committee referred to in the investigation of that matter. Some other parties went to the parties to settle; and accomplished a settlement. As to our influencing the settlement, I do not think we did that, but it was settled, and the parties were satisfied; and now it comes up here for a rehearing. If it must be brought to life, I suppose we can do it.

Several of the brethren called for the return of the query, and the answer was passed without objection.

Query. Inasmuch as oftentimes the innocent party must call for a committee, and bear all the expenses, would it not be more just for the committee to decide who shall pay the expenses?

Answer. We think the committee should decide.

Moderator. Was there a question like this passed to-day, brethren?

Several voices. Yes, yes.

One brother suggested, that the present query differed from the former one, by the insertion of the words, "Innocent party," and that it would be better on that account to have this query passed separately. The suggestion was adopted and the answer passed.

Query. Would it not be well for this meeting to give an expression for a brother to attach to his publications such titles as "The Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book," and "The Brethren's Almanac;" conveying and leaving the impression thereby that the brethren have sanctioned them officially?

Answer. We think it is wrong to use the name. "Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book," or "Almanac."

Many voices. "Table it," and some voices, "Pass it." The demand for the tabling of the resolution was repeated.

Holsinger. I have just a few words to say in regard to it. I want just to point you to this one thing: what objection has the meeting to calling a book the "Brethren's Tune Book," or "The Brethren's Almanac?" or to call a printing establishment "The Brethren's Publishing House," or what objection have you to the name "Brethren's Hymn Book?"

I am asking what objection this meeting can have to it? What is the name of this body? This body has never yet recognized to be called the 'brethren;' they call themselves German Baptists, and I would like to know where we infringe upon the name of German Baptists, when we use the term 'brethren?' We are not infringing upon the German Baptist church.

——. I would just say, that the word 'brethren's' is a plural noun, in the possessive case. Now, if you will prove that this property belongs to the church, then I have nothing more to say.

Holsinger. Well, the Brethren patronized it—it is published in the interests of the Brethren and for the good of the Brethren.

Tabled.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS.

Query. Would it not be good for the Brotherhood to buy a good, durable tent and have it transported from place to place, wherever needed, for the accommodation of the Annual Meeting?

Ans.—This District Meeting thinks it would be good for the brotherhood to have such a tent, and hereby requests the Annual Meeting of 1873 to pass it, if they approve of it, to solicit donations from all the churches of the brotherhood as each feels willing to give; and that said donations be sent to some brother appointed by the Annual Meeting to receive them, before the 1st of September, 1873, and to provide that, if such donations exceed the cost of the tent, then such surplus to be used in spreading the gospel or otherwise forwarding the cause of the Master; and also, that two brethren be appointed to procure such a tent, and have it in readiness for the Annual Meeting of 1874, and keep it thereafter constantly under their control for the accommodation of the Annual Meeting.

——. I would think it would be incon-istent to have such a tent, and yet say in the minutes that we shall have no tent.

——. The minutes read, "A tent for the feeding of a mixed multitude."

Moore. We considered the question carefully. We can procure a tent at a very reasonable rate, of very durable material, and that can be transported from place to place with perfect safety; and perhaps the amount that you now have to pay for the erection of a tent for one year will purchase a tent that can be used for ten years. We have investigated the matter very carefully, and corresponded with parties who are engaged in the manufacture of tents.

A description of the tent was given by Jacob Berky also the manner of putting it up. Another brother stated that a tent 30x60 at St. Louis, would cost about $300, and brother Wolf of Ill., spoke at some length, urging the proposition and showing the advantages to be derived from a tent of this kind.

Sayler. I am quite sure that, if we are going to have meetings in the future, as we have them now, we should certainly have such a tent; and I was about to make this proposition: that as the brethren in the West have asked for the privilege of getting the world together, and as they have to prepare for it, that they buy the tent; and I feel quite certain in my mind that when the brethren come there, and see it, they will not let you get into any difficulty. The meeting will probably convene before the obligation becomes due.

——. I love to see the brethren so careful. We have only made the request of the Annual Meeting, that if others will not take the tent, the brethren will take it. We don't want to urge you to do it. All you have to do is just to allow us the liberty. Here is a brother who says Ohio will help. We think Iowa, Missouri and Kansas will help.

——. I know Nebraska will be willing to help.

The passage of the answer being called for the question was put as follows:

"Shall we grant them the answer or shall we let them go on?

Metzgar. I want to make a proposition. I hear the brethren in Indiana like the idea. Some say the brethren in Ohio will assist; and I have heard some remarks about Pennsylvania and other parts. My proposal is, that every church, or district, that feels like donating can report how much their church will throw in; and do this before the 1st of August. Do not send money, but just how much each church will donate to get the tent. Then, in case we see that we can raise enough, by the 15th of Sept. we want it sent in. We can report it through our periodicals.

Brown. That is just what I was about to suggest. I think we ought not to do anything until we have the money or the promise of it.

Moderator. Let this meeting grant them the privilege to go on, and make their arrangements, and let it go on the minutes, and let it so be understood.

Metzgar. I would suggest that you send your letters to brother Daniel Vaniman; he is our clerk.

Brown. I would suggest also that you have it published in the periodicals.

Moderator. Does this meeting say, "Grant them the privilege"?

The brethren—Yes.

Moderator. And not let it go on the minutes?

A Brother—Why not?

Moderator. There is no necessity for it.

Adjourned.

THURSDAY.

MORNING SESSION, JUNE 5th, 1873.

QUERY.—A man who was living in adultery after making full confession to the brethren, of his standing, was received into the church, and afterwards obtained a letter of full membership from said church and moved into another church, which church then rejected him by the decision of the Annual Meeting of 1850, article 12. Would it be according to the gospel and the decision of A. M., if the brethren, that received him made acknowledgment to the man and also to the Church?

Ans. Considered that the brethren that received him make acknowledgment to the church, and to the man, and give him the reason for receiving him.

Amendment proposed as follows:

That the church be requested to make acknowledgment to the man in case he asks it.

Passed with the amendment.

QUERY.—Whereas the signs of the times and the public sentiment at large indicate a favorable reception of the doctrine of peace, should not the brethren advocate that doctrine, by preaching and tracts, more than before?

Ans. We believe they should.

Laid on the table.

APPLICATION FOR ANNUAL MEETING.

Southern District of Ill.

Resolved that the district renew its request for the Annual Meeting in 1874.

Adopted.

QUERY.—Will the Annual Meeting of 1873 reconsider article 10th of the minutes of 1872, and define "Put them away," according to scripture? (This refers to likenesses).

Ans. This Annual Meeting understands the phrase 'Put them away' to mean put them out of sight.

On the question of reconsidering there were cries of "yes" and "no."

Sturgis. These Annual Meetings do not execute themselves. If you see the pictures not put away, why not do it yourselves. Let good enough alone, and if they do not put them away deal with them. I have never believed that any brother or sister worshipped these pictures. If they have the picture of an old father or mother that they want to see once in a while I am not the man to say keep it away. Some will not consent to such stringent means because they have something in their house you don't want them to use.

——. Confine your argument to the question, and if there is any scripture to tell how far to put them away, give the brethren the scriptures and they will obey.

——. The gospel teaches me to abstain from all appearance of evil, and if this is an evil then destroy it. It is a hard matter to go half way in this thing. A friend gave one to my daughter, and when I discovered that she had it, I asked liberty to burn it. If it is no evil then bring them out and show them to whom you please.

Forney. I think it is not necessary to debate the question. Let every brother and sister examine the scriptures, and if the brethren harmonize the matter it will be for the better.

Tabled.

QUERY.—Inasmuch as query 11 of 1872 is not headed, will not the Annual Meeting devise some plan to have it enforced thro'out the whole brotherhood? We, the brethren of Kansas and Nebraska, ask the standing committee to answer.

Ans. In case the church permits its members to take illegal interest in opposition to the decision of Annual Meeting of 1872, article 11, the aggrieved members may apply to the Annual Meeting for a committee to set in order the things that are wanting.

Question deferred from yesterday taken up. Do brethren not think it proper to exert their influence against the admission into the church, of the new hymn book, with notes.

Answer. We advise all Districts and churches to keep them out of the church in public worship.

Holsinger. In 1869, this Annual Meeting was held in Virginia, and at that meeting there was a request made which reads as follows: "What does this District think of the propriety of requiring brethren who shall hereafter write and publish books to submit them to a committee appointed by the yearly meeting for examination and approval before they offer them to the public?" Answer. We do think it advisable for brethren to do so."

I appealed to the Annual Meeting of 1870 for a committee to investigate the book—"The Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book." At the same time a similar request was made by one of the Districts of Indiana, asking the A. M., to appoint a committee to publish a tune and hymn book for the same purpose, and the request was tabled, so I read in my report of the proceedings of the A. M. But then when my appeal came up for the appointment of a similar committee, instead of granting me the committee, this A. M., passed the following:—"Resolved, That the Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book, supposed to be published by brother Holsinger, be ruled out under the instructions of Art. 47, minutes of last A. M." A brother presented a book to be examined and asked for a committee, who examined the book. This restricted our Publishing business. I could not get a Committee and the thing was held in check. Then I said to the A. M., if you will not give me a committee, relieve me of the restrictions. They did it, and gave me liberty to publish the Tune book. They took hold of the publishing business, and granted me license in this single case. Since that time, notwithstanding this act, a number have gone on and published books without asking for a committee. That matter you don't find on the minutes of the A. M. Precisely as the case yesterday evening.

Brown. For the very reason that choir singing and instrumental music by machinery instead of the human heart, were making encroachments upon us, and the round note system was coming in, and to do away with these things we looked upon it as necessary to have the Tune book published, with the character notes, so that we could all use them. It seems to me this thing is brought up as a kind of target to shoot at brother Holsinger, and if we carry it too far it will naturally array the younger class against the older. Let us try to get along in peace and harmony. I move that the matter be entirely dismissed.

——. Let them learn the tunes at home, but not bring the note book into the church.

Brown. It seems to me this is driving at anything that looks like a little advancement.

——. Let us not be too hard on the tune and hymn book.

Sayler. I opposed the introduction into the church for the reason that I considered it an infringment on the copy-right of brother Quinter. Another reason is that it is a new thing, which some of us cannot use.

Holsinger. The first hymn book ever printed by the Brethren had the notes in it, of which I will raise you up fifty witnesses here in this congregation. Where is your new thing?

Sturgis. I intended to buy these books for my children and grandchildren, but on going to church I want them to take the hymn book and leave the note book at home, and then both books will be patronized.

Passed.

Query. Inasmuch as there are constant additions to the church and the ministry of young brethren, who are desirous to learn the proceedings of the A. M., would it not be advisable to publish in pamphlet form, all the Minutes of Annual Meeting, since last date, which is inclosed in the Encyclopedia, including those not published previous to said date, and have said pamphlet arranged so as to admit subsequent Minutes?

Answer. Approved of and recommended.

Proposed to postpone and go on the minutes for further consideration.

Passed.

Query. Is it right for brethren to solemnize marriage in cases where parents have been divorced, and the second parties living?

Answer. No.

Passed.

Query. Inasmuch as there are differences of opinion among the brethren as to the nature of offenses that should be settled between the parties immediately concerned, or that may be brought direct to the church, it is desired that this meeting define so as to bring about more unanimity of action.

Answer. All offenses that are directly against a brother or sister, should be settled according to Matt, 18; but such as are of a general nature, affecting the whole body, said body must be concerned in the settlement of its own account. In case a brother neglects or refuses to go according to the 18th of Matt., then the church should send brethren to investigate and report to the church according to Matt., 18.

Passed.

Query. Pursuant to a call for a special meeting of the District Counsel of the Southern district of Iowa, to be held in Monroe congregation, Feb. 20th, 1873, for the purpose of devising ways and means to send two brethren to preach the Gospel in districts where there are no members, and the people desire to have the brethren preach. A small number of members having assembled from Jefferson and Monroe, after some deliberation, a vote was taken, and the following resolution that two brethren be chosen for said purpose, to be furnished with whatever means may be contributed, and sent to such places as may seem to them and to this meeting the most for the advancement of the cause of the Lord.

Lost.

2nd. Resolved, That this meeting request the delegates at next A. M., to present the following query to said meeting for its consideration: "Is it according to the gospel for Counsel Districts to select brethren from amongst their ministry and send them to preach the gospel in places where there are no ministering brethren, and where people desire the brethren to preach, and to pay the traveling expenses of such brethren?"

Answer. It is according to the Gospel, we believe, and the decisions of A. M. See Minutes, 1868, Art. 21st.

Passed.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

1st. Inasmuch as the letter of the Spring Creek Church, Lebanon Co., Pa., calls for assistance to settle difficulties in said Church, we appoint them the following committee: D. Garlock, C. Bomberger, Samuel Harley.

2nd. A request from the Upper Deer Creek Church, Cass Co., Ind., the following brethren selected: Joseph McCarthy, John E. Shively and Gottlieb Keller.

3rd. A request for a committee to go to Indian Creek Church, Montgomery Co., Pa., Moses Miller, D. P. Sayler, Dan'l Keller, J. G. Glock, Jacob Price.

4th. Committee to visit Saymoon and Antioch Churches, Huntington Co., Ind., H. D. Davy, Daul. Brower and J. Wise.

5th. Astoria Church, Fulton Co., Ill., H. D. Davy, R. H. Miller, John Metzgar, Enoch Eby.

6th. Yellow Creek Church, Bedford Co., Pa., Isaac Meyers, Jacob Price and J. G. Glock.

8th. Black River Congregation, Van Buren Co., Mich., Jacob Berky, H. D. Davy and D. B. Sturgis.

8th. Waterloo Church, Iowa, H. Strickler, Peter Forney, Abram Stehmy and Thos. Snyder.

Passed.

Bro. Sayler proposed a resolution of thanks to the railroad companies, for the facilities afforded in getting to the meeting; to be entered on the minutes and noticed by the editors.

Passed.

Bro. D. P. Sayler was appointed a committee to make arrangements for next A. M., with the Baltimore and Ohio R. R., and all its branches.

Bro. H. D. Davy, was appointed a committee to make arrangements with the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago R. R. and Panhandle R. R.

Bro. J. S. Flory to make arrangements with the Chespeake & Ohio R. R.

Bro. J. B. Beechly, with the O. & M. R. R., from Columbus to Cincinnati & St. Louis.

Bro. H. R. Holsinger, Penn'a Cen. and Pittsburgh & Connellsville R. R.

Recommended that the housekeepers of all the churches lay the question of procuring a tent for next Annual Meeting before the churches, whether they will do anything toward it or not, and report to Bro. J. Metzgar, Cerro Gorda, Illinois.

Concluding remarks by Bro. Jas. Quinter:

Beloved Brethren, The time for seperation has come. Many of us from different parts of the Brotherhood have been permitted to assemble together, and no doubt you have enjoyed yourselves together. Perhaps my Brother Holsinger exaggerated the thought when he said that more good was done outside of the congregation than in, nevertheless our meeting together on occasions of this kind, I do regard as a benefit to the Church. To see our young brethren and sisters, and the older ones meet and mingle among us and with us; and if there is a difference in the attainments of grace, among us, if the elder have improved their seasons, and if we have grown in grace as we ought to have grown, and have got a little more grace, in coming in contact with others. I think there is a disposition in the grace of God, to go into others that come in contact with good. When a good and bad person come together there my be a tendency in the evil to go out into the good, as well as the good into the evil, and as good is stronger than evil, if we as Christians enjoy the grace of God as we should, the power of grace is stronger than the courage of sin, and if there is any change it ought to be in favor of the bad. Hence, I say the mingling thus together, if there is any better or worse among us, I think the worse are made better, in being throwo in this way. If we feel as we ought to feel, we who are older, and those who claim to be a little wiser and better, if we have made this attainment, then in coming in contact with others it may be presumed that they are nothing the worse.

Mingling then together, from all parts of the Brotherhood, I believe is promotive of the spirit of love that characterizes our Brotherhood; hence I am glad to have another oportunity, and although it is true that the cloud s sometimes great, over us, I like to see my brethren and sisters coming together on occasions like this. It shows an attachment to the Church and Brotherhood. I hope we all will go home profited by this intercourse with one anothe. I hope our our young brethren and sisters may have less prejudice against the elder than they have ever had, and that the elder may go away with less prejudice against the younger than some may have had; and upon the whole, that this meeting has been a blessing to us.

In conclusion, let me entreat you to remember our principles and our profession, the grand characteristics of our brotherhood, and the characteristics of the Gospel; and do not forget that among these characteristics are love, meekness, humility and that brotherly love, and particularly above all, holiness which is characteristic of the Brotherhood.

It is perhaps out of season to talk now, but I wish to give expression to the bent of my mind. I am sorry as we all are to leave; and this indicates that it has been good to be together.

We have gone through a great many kinds of labor, and there is no kind of labor that seems to us more arduous, than the labors of this meeting. We would rather go and preach than feel the labors of these meetings, knowing how much some brethren require of us, and the dissatisfaction and difficulties in securing an answer when there is none to give, which make the labors of these meetings exceedingly arduous. But the time will come, when all our labors will be over, and a season of uninterrupted rest, peace and joy will be our portion forever.

Adjourned.

The Conference was then closed by the offering of a fervant prayer to God in behalf of the deliberations of the meeting and for the present and future welfare of Zion. It closed on Thursday at 12 M. when the Congregrtion began to make preparations for starting homeward.

As a list of the delegates from different districts, was omitted in the beginning of the report, we now give it, thinking it may be of general interest.

THE MYSTERY OF GODLINESS.

Without controversy, great is the mystery of Godliness. God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Tim. 3; 16.

From the reading of this part of Paul's writings, it appears that true godliness was a great mystery at that time, and is yet to some. Many perhaps came to the conclusion, had they lived when Christ and the apostles were upon the earth, with the infallible proofs the Savior showed that He was the Son of God, and the apostles, how they were "endued with power from on high," yet there was but few, that is, comparatively speaking, that believed on Him. This may seem strange to some, in this nineteenth century, but I do think if they would reflect rightly upon the subject and become willing to be led by the plain word of God, the mystery in a great many points, would soon reveal itself.

I, for my part, believe that the world is growing darker and darker every day in true godliness, and I sometimes fear it is getting too much in the Church, but Oh, my brethren and sisters, let us use all the power that is within us, by the help of God, to strive lawfully, for short of that, we will not receive the crown. If we believe that we are in the latter time,—I do, for we see so much of the spirit which Paul speaks of in the 4th chapter of 1st Timothy. And we are taught "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be at the coming of the Son of Man." By this, I must believe that the world is getting worse, if not, there would be no danger of the world coming to an end. If the world is getting wiser, as there are many contend, there is no danger. No doubt the world is getting wiser in worldly affairs, but not spiritually. Then, if we believe this, it is no mystery to us that true godliness is a mystery to so many. But I do think, ever since God gave the promise to our first parents that He would put enmity between the serpent and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed, it was a mystery, but that mystery was solved. God was in Christ Jesus—reconciled the world unto Himself, sending His Son into the world, bringing life and immortality to light through the Gospel. We will admit that there are mysteries to our mind, for the Holy Ghost overshadowed her, and that is about all we know. Still He was made known in the flesh by being born of the Virgin Mary, justified by the spirit upon that memorable day when our beloved Savior came to John to be baptized, when the spirit bore testimony that He was the son in whom He was well pleased. John 10; 32 33. Rom. 1; 4, and declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead. 1st Peter 3; 18. For Christ also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the spirit, seen of angels when they rolled back the stone in the morning of the resurrection. And also 1 Peter 1; 12. speaking what the angel desired to look into and preached unto Gentiles. Paul was called to preach to the Gentiles, for in the 2d chapter of Timothy 2d verse, we read where he was ordained a preacher and a teacher of the Gentiles, also in Eph. 3; 8, where he speaks to the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. Many other passages we might cite you to where he was to preach to the Gentiles. He came to His own and his own recived Him not, but as many as received Him to them He gave power to become the sons of God. It appears there were still some few that accepted Him, therefore He was believed on, and at last when He had accomplished the everlasting plan of salvation, He was received up into glory. He has now gone into Heaven and is on the right hand of God, angels, authorities and powers being made subject unto Him.

POETRY.

COME UNTO ME.

With tearful eyes I look around,
Life seems a dark and stormy sea:
Yet 'midst the gloom I hear a sound,
A heavenly whisper, "Come to Me."

It tells me of a place of rest;
It tells me where my soul may flee;
Oh! to the weary, faint opprest,
How sweet the bidding, "Come to Me."

When the poor heart with anguish learns
That earthly props resigned must be,
And from each broken cistern turns,
It hears the accents, "Come to Me."

When against sin I strive in vain,
And cannot from its yoke set free,
Sinking beneath the heavy chain,
The words arrest me, "Come to Me."

When nature shudders, loath to part
From all I love, enjoy and, see;
When a faint chill steals o'er my heart,
A sweet voice utters, "Come to Me."

Come, for all else must fade and die;
Earth is no resting-place for thee;
Heavenward direct thy weeping eye!
I am thy portion, "Come to Me."

Oh, voice of mercy! voice of love!
In death's last fearful agony;
Support me, cheer me from above,
And gently whisper, "Come to Me."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HARVEST.

Say ye not there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already for the harvest.—John 4 : 35.

Christ previous to the utterance of this expressive language, had been exhibiting a remarkable zeal to God's glory. The disciples had not conceived of the importance of His mission, and when He told them He had meat to eat that they knew not of, they failed to comprehend the import, and concluded that some one had given Him to eat while they were gone to the city to procure meat. Jesus perceiving their limited knowledge of the nature of His mission, teaches them in the following clear, concise language: "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work."

This language, no doubt, gave them an idea of the importance of His mission, but still they wondered why He should refuse to take food after having taken none for so long, and being so weary with the journey. They thought He should not neglect to take food although His mission was an important one; but Christ's whole purpose was to glorify God, and as a special opportunity was presented for the accomplishment of His purpose, He improved it to the exclusion of every other consideration. This was the nature of Christ's work; it was always of first importance,—His highest purpose. But the disciples did not appear to have this high ideal of the Christian work; therefore says Jesus to them in the language of the text, "Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest."

In this Jesus teaches the immediate results of our efforts to glorify God. The time from the sowing the seed to the harvest in Judea was four months, and the husbandman could not expect to reap the fruits of his labor until that time had expired. But not so with the Christian when he sows the Gospel seed, it may bring forth fruit immediately, and this is the idea that Christ conveys to His disciples, He had just been preaching to a Samaritan woman and now already many of the Samaritans were coming to hear Him. This thought certainly adds importance to the Christian labor. We do not, like the farmer, have to wait a time before we can expect to reap the fruits of our labors. The results may be immediate, and what joy and comfort this realization affords us? Christian reader, does not the fruits of righteousness strengthen and invigorate the soul? Ah, yes, they are truly joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. If then we are laboring for God, we may at any time lift up our eyes and look on the fields to see if they are not already white to harvest.

From these considerations we may learn lessons that afford much comfort and consolation to the Christian heart. We may learn first, in view of the fact, that the results of our labors may be immediate, that there is much encouragement to labor for God. Reader, have you ever thought seriously of the Christian's work and the results of his labors? Are you interested in the work? Is it your meat to do your Master's will? It is to be feared that in view of the great encouragement we have to labor for Christ, many are too much concerned about the things of this life, and many of the seasons for unplanting the precious seeds of truth are left pass by unimproved. We, perhaps, like the disciples, are more concerned about the meat that sustains the body than that which enlivens and strengthens the soul. And why a feeling of this kind? Is not the soul more important? How much we become interested in the things that tend to enhance our pecuniary interest. We can then make the greatest sacrifices of ease and comfort,—the inclemency of the weather is then no obstacle; we can leave our homes to attend to these things on days that are entirely too bad to go to church. A feeling of this kind is prevalent, and what is there to encourrge it? It may be a long time before we can realize the benefits of our labor and then they are only transient and will perish with the using thereof. But if we labor for Christ and the salvation of souls, we may immediately realize that which the world knows not of,—that inward consciousness of right,—that strength of soul that enables us to see and feel that the fields are already white for the harvest; and then we will not feel so much concerned about the things of this life. The salvation of our soul and that of others will be our highest purpose.

There is another thought that is worthy of our consideration that we will notice briefly. When there are indications that the Gospel is effectual, and that the harvest is ready to be gathered, even then we may overlook opportunities for doing good. A conversation with a single person on a religious subject may create a deep interest throughout an entire community. Christ's conversation with the Samaritan woman at the well, created the deep interest that was felt through that city. So we should improve every opportunity to labor for the salvation of souls. We may sometimes conclude that it is of no use to talk to certain individuals on the subject of religion—they may not apparently have a definite purpose in view, or their standing in life may not be such as to exert an influence. But these things should not be considered when we are laboring for the salvation of souls. Christ's conversation with a single woman ripened a whole field, and so may we, christian reader, by conversing with a single individual mature and ripen a whole community, ready to be gathered into the garner of the Lord.

The result of neglecting to do our duty, is another important consideration. What will be the final result if we become so much engrossed with the things of this life and neglect to reap when the fields are ripe to harvest. What could the farmer expect after having sown the seed, and then when the harvest comes he should neglect to reap it. Certainly starvation would be the result. So it will be with you, dear reader, if you neglect your Christian duties. Every one will have to give an account of their doing in this life, and how empty, how destitute will be the condition of those who have failed to glorify God by laboring for the advancement of His Kingdom. There will be no reward for those; only those who reap will receive wages unto eternal life. Reader, think of this. Thousands of Christian professors, it is to be feared, are to-day neglecting to reap unto eternal life, and are only laying up treasures on earth. How bitter indeed will be their disappointment when they, too late, learn that a man cannot lay up treasures on earth and in Heaven too. John tells us "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Let us be careful then, dear reader, to employ all our time and talent in the service of the Lord, and then when the great day of final accounts comes, we will be rich through Him that hath loved us. O, the riches of God's glory! May we all look forward with joyful anticipation to the time when we shall share with all God's chosen ones the unsearchable riches of our Heavenly home. J. B. B.

Perfection is the point for which all should steadily aim.

WISE WORDS FOR MOTHERS.

My heart is often grieved to see the little children of some of the families of my friends growing up to be very troublesome, not only to themselves, but to all with whom they associate. Now what should be done? Many mothers are, to all appearance losing control over their little ones, though they are not aware of it. Their desire is to govern them well; but they fail, because they yield to their whining and fretfulness. They wear a yoke that they will not be able to break, till death shall sever it.

Mother, when you once refuse your little ones something that they cry for, do not yield to them, because they kick, or attempt to strike you to obtain it. Rather make them feel the weight of the rod, so strenuously urged by Solomon. Many mothers are afraid to use the rod. God wisely intends that all parents should govern the children that He has given them, as they are accountable to Him for their well being. The temper of your little ones is soured, for all future life, by whining and fretting at every little thing. Why do you allow it? Break that stubborn will. Never threaten, unless you finish, sacrifice your own feelings for their eternal good. A few days of firm training will soon subdue them. Let your discipline be strict. Give a command, and see it obeyed promptly, without their first saying "I don't want to," or, "I won't."

Let them feel that you will be obeyed, and that it will be at their peril to disobey. The loving hearts of many mothers will shrink from such measures, which they will regard as harsh; but your child will soon be trained to obedience, and you will have no farther trouble. When they arrive at maturity they will rise up and bless you, because they have been well governed. And then they will know how to govern their own children. Remember to pray often with and for your children. A mother's sincere prayers will shield them from temptation, and promote their eternal salvation. M. A. H.—Christian Observer.

A CHEERFUL HOME.

A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day. One surly glance casts a gloom over the household; while a smile like a gleam of sunshine may light up the darkest and weariest hours. Like unexpected flowers which spring up along our path, full of freshness, fragrance, and beauty, so do kind words and gentle acts, sweet dispositions make glad the home where peace and blessing dwell. No matter how humble the abode, if it be thus garnished with grace and sweetened with kind ness and smiles, the heart will turn lovingly toward it from all tumults of the world; and home, if it be ever so homely, will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the sun. And the influence of home perpetuate themselves. The gentle grace of the mother lives in the daughter long afer her head is pillowed in the dust of death; and fatherly kindness finds its way echo in the nobility and courtesy of sons who come to wear his mantle and to fill his place; while, on the other hand, from unhappy, misgoverened, and disordered homes go forth persons who shall make other homes miserable, and perpetuate the sourness and sadness, the contentions and strifes, and railings which have made their own early lives so wretched and distorted.

Toward the cheerful home children gather "as clouds and as doves to their windows," while from the home which is the abode of discontent, and strife and trouble, they fly forth as vultures to rend their prey.

The class of men that disturb and distress the world are not those born and nurtured amid the hallowed influence of Christian homes; but rather those whose early life has been a trouble and vexation—who have started wrong in the pilgrimage, and whose course is one of disaster to themselves and trouble to to those around them,—Friends' Intelligencer.

THE INDOLENT CHRISTIAN.—There are some Christians that get unwell very often on Sunday, and consequently cannot get to church or accomplish any work for Christ. But this sickness, in many instances, seems to be confined alone to the Sabbath. On Monday morning his health is good again, and the general routine of labor, that tends to enhance his pecuniary interests, is entered into with zeal and energy. In the store, office, on the farm, or whatever his calling may be, he is found at his post, ready to do any work that pleases him. But when he should be at his post as a Christian, he is careless and unconcerned, and never conceros himself about pleasing the Lord. Such persons act as if Heaven is not worth attaining; at least they certainly have not realized the fact that "eye hath not seen, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for those that love Him."—J. B. B.

There is no form or pharse of moral being in which there is not enwrapped a seed of wisdom: suffering is but a plowshare; which reveals the hidden wealth of the nature which it furrows, and calamity is but a blast, which exposes the pearly treasure of a deep which else seemed void or wortbless.

THE EDUCATED, as a rule, live longer and to better purpose than the unlearned; the wealthy longer than the poor; the good longer than the bad and vicious; then get wisdom, get knowledge, get understanding, be educated; get riches, but get it honestly, and give liberally to God's poor, the exteusion of His Kingdom and building up of His Zion, but above all, seek the riches of God's grace, the wealth of His love, the incomprehensible abundance of the "Things he has prepared for those that love Him"—be good and you shall be eternally happy.—A. B. Brumbaugh. M. D.

THE WAY TO LIVE.

Ten minutes of weak ripening will plunge a brave heart into the depths of unhappiness as suddenly as a thunderstorm will overcast a clear summer sky. Tho only way to live is to cast away troubles and contentions, which cannot be cured by fretting. A thing that is done belongs to the past. In justice to the requirements of the present, and possibilites of the future, you cannot look back and make yourself wretched over things which cannot be undone.

THE LORD'S DAY.—A gentleman who had been using the boat of Thomas Mann, a pious waterman on the Thames, asked him if he did not make seven days in a week. "No, sir," replied Thomas, "that would be taking what does not belong to me. The Lord's day is not mine; and therefore I never work on that day."

Nothing teaches patience like a garden. You may go round and watch the opening bud from day to day, but it takes its own time, and you cannot urge it on faster than it will. If forced, it is only torn to pieces. All the best results of a garden, like those of life, are slow but regularly progressive.

It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them, and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth, that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Bishop Hall.

When Joseph's brethren were leaving him to return home, he kindly and wisely said to them: "See that ye fall not out by the way." How comfortably and pleasantly would brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, live together if they were to remember and follow this excellent advice.

LAY your finger on your pulse, and know that at every stroke some mortal passes to his Maker; some fellow-being crosses the river of death; and if we think of it we may well wonder that it should be so long before our time comes.

DON'T LET MOTHER DO IT.

Daughter, don't let mother do it!
Do not let her slave and toil
While you sit, a useless idler,
Fearing your soft hands to soil.
Don't you see the heavy burdens,
Daily she is wont to bear,
Bring the lines upan her forehead—
Sprinkle silver in the hair?

Daughter, don't let mother do it!
Do not let her bake and broil
Through the long, bright summer hours,
Share with her the hardy toil.
See, her eye has lost its brightness,
Faded from the cheek the glow,
And the step that once was buoyant
Now is feeble, weak and slow.

Daughter, don't let mother do it!
She has cared for you so long,
Is it right the weak and feeble
Should be toiling for the stroog?
Waken from your listless langor,
Seek her side to cheer and bless,
And your griet will be less bitter
When the sods above her press.

Daughter, don't let mother do it;
You will never, never know
What were home without a mother
Till that mother lieth low—
Low beneath the budding daisies,
Free from earthly care and pain—
To the home so sad without her,
Never to return again.

THE YOUNG.

I would speak affectionately to you who are in the bloom of your days, and conjure you, "if there be any virtue and it there be any praise," to "remember your Creator in the days of your youth." Whilst you are yet strangers to the seductions of an ensnaring world, I would warn you against the evils which will gird you round when you go forth from the peaceful asylums of your childhood and mix, as you unavoidably must, with those who lie in wait to destoy the unwary. I would tell you that there is no happiness only in the fear of the Almighty; that if you would so pass through life as not to tremble and quail at the approach of death, make it your morning evening prayer that the Holy Spirt may take hold of your souls, and lead you so to love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, that you may not be allured from the holiness of religion by any of the devices of a wicked generation. You read of a monarch who wept as his countless army passed before him, staggered by the thought, that yet a few years and those stirring hosts would lie motionless in the silent grave. Might not a christian minister weep over you as he gazes on the freshness of your days, and considers that it is but too impossible, that you may hereafter give ear to the scorner and seducer. Thus might the buds of early promise be nipped; and it might come to pass that you, the children, it may be, of pious parents, over whose infancy a godly father may have watched, and whose opening hours may have been guarded by the tender solicitudes of a righteous mother, would entail on yourselves a heritage of shame, and go down at the judgment into the pit of the unbeliever and the profligate. Let this warning be remembered by you all; it is simple enough for the youngest, it is important enough for the eldest. You cannot begin too soon to serve the Lord, but you may easily put it off too long; and the thing which will be least regretted when you come to die is, that you gave the first days of existenea to the preparation for heaven.—Melville

THE BOY TO BE TRUSTED.

"What book is that?" inquired a merchant one day of a youth from the country, who, while searching his bag for a letter of recommendation, had let a book fall on the floor.

"My Bible, sir."

"Your Bible! What are you going to do with it here in the city?"

"Read it, sir. I promised my mother I would read it every day; and I shall do it sir!"

The firm tone and flashing eye told the merchant that he had a boy of principle and grit before him. He felt that a boy who loved his Bible after this fashion could be trusted. He hired him, found him true and trusty, kept him many years as a clerk, and finally made him his partner.

In this fact you see a merchant taking it for granted that a boy who loved his Bible after this fashion could be trusted. He was right. Mark the point, and tell me if you find a Bible-hating boy who can be trusted. Isn't it a fact that boys who hate the Bible are not trustworthy? If, therefore, you wish to be true, trusty, and trusted, you must love your Bible. With the Bible as the rule and guide of your life, every duty will be performed in a manner well pleasing to God, and of necessity well pleasing to men.—S. S. Messenger.

HOLD ON, BOYS.—Hold on to your tongue when you are just ready to swear, lie, or speak harshly, or say any improper words.

Hold on to your name at all times, for it is more valuable to you than gold, high places, or fashionable attire.

Hold on to the truth, for it will serve you well and do you good thro'-out eternity.

Hold on to virtue; it is above all price to you in all times and all places.

Hold on to your good character, for it is, and always will be, your best wealth.

Hold on to your temper when you are angry, excited, or imposed upon.

IN the awful mystery of human life, it is a consolation sometimes to believe that our misfortunes, perhaps even our sins, are permitted to be instruments of our education for immortality.

OUR DEFENSE.

No matter how slow and reluctant we may feel in meeting charges brought against us, it sometimes becomes necessary, in order to vindicate our position. But in doing it, we shall maintain the spirit and forbearance of true Christianity, and come out manly and openly. We are disgusted with this unbrotherly way of throwing daggers under a mask. If we are guilty of any misdemeanor, say so, if not, let us know who are, that we need not feel ourselves implicated.

The Vindicator of July, under the head, "Our Mind on Reporting" implicates us or "our weeklies" (and as we have only two, we must be included) with transcending our authority or violating the descisions of A. M. Of this, we plead, "not guilty." In regard to the Report, the decision was, There may be a synopsis of the discussions given without giving the names of the speakers. We understand the synopsis business very well, and knew it gave us more liberties than we cared about using, as it might be the ground work of bringing against our report, the same charge of last year, that of unfairness or partiality. Giving a synopsis of a man's argument is equivalent to abridging or cutting it down, which may be done indefinitely, or to suit our taste or judgment of the force and bearing of the argument. In using this liberty we might have sifted some of the arguments until there would have been nothing left and thus, have been charged of partiality. For this reason we informed A. M. that we were prepared to give a full report of the meeting, and wished to know whether we would be allowed to publish it providing we omitted the names. The answer by several of the old brethren on the stand was: "There will be no objection to the report if the names are left out." This answer was not countermanded and we expressed ourselves satisfied and there was nothing more said.

In our report, as given by our reporter, we tried to do justice to all the speakers by giving their sentiments on the subject discussed as clearly as possible, omitting only such parts or points as had no bearing on the subject, thus after all, only giving a synopsis of the discussions, as it should be remembered that in giving a synopsis of an argument, we are not allowed to omit anything that will destroy its force. Therefore we claim that our report is in harmony with the liberties given by A. M., and that henceforth brother Kinsey will be more definite in his criticisms.

As to the propriety of having a report, we had but little to say, as it costs us more than what it brings us in. We felt quite willing to submit it to the Church or A. M., and the result was, the report was called for. It is the voice of the Church that wants a report, but our brother says, "That is no reason we should have them." How is this, dear brother, are we to hear the voice of the Church or your opinion? It is true, some very good brethren fear the result of these things, but they should remember that others, equally good, see the propriety of them. There is no possible wrong about the report; if there be a wrong about it, it is in the speakers. Therefore it would seem the part of wisdom in us to labor to remove the cause of the evil by getting them right, instead of encouraging them by hiding their inconsistencies. It should be remembered that truth will not lose by investigation, and where the spirit of Christ is there is liberty. Those who are on the side of right have nothing to fear, but reporting will certrtainly have a tendency of putting there on their guard who are in the habit of talking for the mere sake of argument. The only true road to reformation is to make men responsible for their conduct.—This is done by reporting what they say, and we hope that henceforth our brethren will come up to our A. M., with their tongues bridled and their souls filled with the Spirit of Truth. Then our reports can go forth as a vindication of truth and an honor to God. As to reports being a new or strange thing, it is a mistake. In the councils of the Jewish Church, they had their scribes to report the proceedings, and what do our brethren mean when they pray that our ministers' tongues may be as the pen of a ready writer? In conclusion, be careful not to stigmatize others with causing divisions, when you may be equally guilty of the same crime.—Charity thinketh no ill to his neighbor.

In Companion No. 27, under "Companion please copy" we get another bluff that is so much like the petty jealousies of children, that we discard it altogether. Such things are a disgrace to our common cause and would much better become men of less pretentions Truly great men have condescended to small things; very small.

Correspondence.

Dear Pilgrim: I am always anxious, and much pleased to hear from the Church through our Pilgrim and we believe all our brethren and sisters are interested in the cause of Zion. Then it becomes the duty of those who can, to write the Church news of every Church district in the Brotherhood. By this, brethren and sisters, we can hear many encouraging words, which may make us more strong to go forth in the good work. In this arm of the church things pertaining to the church are progressing, and our prayer to Almighty God is, that they may so continue to the honor of our Father in Heaven. Yesterday the brethren and sisters were called upon to initiate one more precious soul into the fold by baptism. The subject was Bro. Henry Whitesell. He has been quite feeble in health for some time. We pray God to give him strength physically and, mentally, that he may abide in the truth and prove himself a worthy workman.

A sad accident occurred June 26, John, son of Bro. George Boyer, aged twelve years, went to a lake near home to fish, and as was a custom he waded into the water, there being no boat at command, and by chance, came upon a soft bottom and being in water as is supposed, above his shoulders, sank immediately down into it over his head and was found standing in the mire with his head only about four inches beneath the surface, in mire almost to his knees. Oh! what must have been the thot's of that sorrow stricken father when he found his loving son buried in this watery grave. We hope God will give him fortitude to withstand all.

Our Sabbath school is doing a noble work. Though much more good might be done, if the brethren and sisters were more firmly united upon this subject of so much importance. It, indeed and in truth, would be a good help to the cause of Zion if carried out to the glory and honor of God. I do sincerely hope the day is not far distant when there will not be a dissenting voice to the cause. Oh brethren, the responsibility of raising our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I ask, is not a well conducted Sabbath school a good school to bring us to Christ? How much good might be done if we would only go at the work with firmness and earnestness. Can we do too much for the cause of true Christianity? I answer, no.

Then let us employ more time and work more in the cause. There should not be one particle of labor diminished in the other duties of the Church. Some may say we will have too much to do. Fear not brethren and sisters, of doing too much labor for the Lord. But rather fear of doing too little. Some cannot see the good in a Sabbath school. Perhaps they have never attended one conducted by the Brethren as was our experience in this arm of the Church. No Sabbath schools, are very encouraging when first commenced. Our first attempt met with some opposition, but since they have seen the good work doing its duty, they believe the cause a good one. There is no good work but has its abuses. Look at the good work of religion and see how much it is abused by some classes of individuals. Brethren organize more Sabbath schools and work for the advancement of God's Kingdom, and pray earnestly to him for aid, and you will succeed in doing much good. I will give you a condensed report of our school, by request of our Secretary, for the past fourteen sessions.

Brethren and sisters, I hope my weak effort has not offended one soul, but that it may be for the good of the cause of my Master. I ask the prayers of my brethren and sisters in the great work and field of labor, assigned me by the Church, for I feel without their prayers, and the aid and assistance of God, I can do but little. Brethren pray more, and may God's choicest blessings rest on the Church, that we may keep united in the strong union of love is the prayers of your unworthy Bro.

Dear Bro., D. C. Moomaw:—This beautiful Sabbath evening, when nature hath clothed herself in such beautiful colors, when all the sweet influences conveyed by the glorious sunshine, the balmy air, the music of Nature's sweetest songsters, and more than all, the peaceful quiet of the Lord's day, touch our spirits with that power that makes us, for awhile, forget our cares and troubles, and lifts us above the world and its selfishness; in this frame of mind, how natural is it for us to think of the past, and its mercies; of the future, and its hopes, of the loved ones who have gone before, and loved ones who are seperated from us only by hills and vales. Thus we have been thinking of you, and wondering how you prosper in the battles of life.

Yesterday evening we partook of those sacred emblems which the Lord instituted "to show forth His death till he comes," and the services were conducted with such holy reverences, and sincerity, on the part of the brethren and sisters, that I wondered how the unprejudiced looker on could help saying and feeling in his heart, "surely these are the people of God." It was entirely new to me, but it was something which I had often longed for, and which I sincerely and heartily enjoyed.

Father returned from the A. M., last night, which he reports to have been very interesting and harmonious, except a little difficulty, as usual, with our brethren of the type. Let us hear from you soon. How is your health, and your courage? As for ourselves, we are are all well; I am still—thanks to the Lord—progressing slowly towards health, and I can tell you with the authority of experience, that though our troubles and sufferings are multiplied above the average that falls to human lot, yet the comforts we receive, and the supernatural strength, and help which is bestowed upon us to bear our burdens, is sufficient evidence that we are not forsaken of the Lord. I have come to the determination not to be discouraged at any physical manifestation of evil; for what is this body of ours that we should care for it with such solicitude, Is it not dust and ashes? And though it decay, and become diseased, and make us writhe, and groan with its tortures, yet if we are faithful to the end, all will end well; "All's well that ends well," is a proverb that ought to be stereotyped on every heart, and it would minister new strength to the fainting, new hope to the down-hearted, and new life to the sick and suffering.

I must close. Write soon. Love to all. Your brother,

B. C. MOOMAW.

Bonsacks, Va.

B. C. Moomaw, Bonsacks, Va.—Dear Bro:—Your very interesting letter was received by last mail, and we take earliest opportunity to reply.

You will not want this assurance that the tidings of your continued improvement rejoiced our hearts, and the kindly solicitude for our welfare ardently reciprocated, and the devout gratitude to the author of good reverently and heartily endorsed.

What other blessing is productive of purer enjoyment than communion with those we love, save that spiritual communion with the dwellers of the spirit world, that is the common heritage of all the faithful. Then it is that we withdraw from the scene of conflict from the world, the flesh and the devil; and resting a while on our armor, we recount the deeds of valor, the joys of triumph, the mortification of reverse, and thus renewing our strength and nerving and revitalizing our pinions, we go forth courageously to the great battle of life, and soar higher above the filth and scum and dross of this vile world, into the purer and sweeter atmosphere of the Father's and childrens' home.

You write of your first communion, through the emblems that commemorate the death of Christ, with the Fountain of life.

Your experience is that of all who are gone before, and all who will follow after. Therein we secure a spiritual elevation, from whence we see new beauties, and taste sweet pleasures that are unseen and unenjoyed by the wayward and disobedient.

When the "Nectar" first touched my lips, I felt like that enthusiastic Apostle who wished to stay on the mount and abide forever with his glorified Lord, and I wept to think that I had to return to the battle-field of life to endure the conflict with the triumviry of evil.

Yet, dear brother, this sweet experience is but the foretaste of the things that are prepared for those who love the Lord. You have just begun the ascent to the Christian's goal. At each advance you enter upon new scenes, and taste of new pleasures, see brighter glories, hear rarer music, and feel happier emotions, and tread easier and more velvety paths, until the summit of God's everlasting love is reached; when all the treasures of bliss, and all the grandeur of the Christian's God breaks upon our enraptured sight as it did in the visions of the Apocalypse.

Then follows the gold-paved streets, the sea of glass mingled with fire, the harpers, harping with their harps, the extatic song of triumph sung by the countless myriads of the ransomed of the Lamb, the crowning of the victors with the fadeless crown, and the final presentation to our Father, by the victorious Lord, of those who continued with Him in His tribulation, and who washed their robes and made them white in His own precious blood.

I am still enjoying the approving smiles of an affectionate Master. My health is steadily improving, and I have resumed the important work of "preaching the unsearchable riches of the Gospel." May the Lord of the vineyard grant that I shall not lay it down again till He comes to reckon with His servants, or until, as a sheaf fully ripe, I shall be gathered unto my fathers in Israel. May He fully restore you to perfect soundness, physically and spiritually, and enable you to consecrate a requisite portion of such priceless gifts to the conversion of your deluded fellow-creatures, and of the physical and spiritual gospel.

Give us the pleasure of a visit soon, and write often. Our usual greetings to all the household.

Your brother,

D. C. MOOMAW.

Notes of Travel.

BY J. S. FLORY.

OMAHA, Neb. June 28, 1873.

Having had a very kind invitation and liberal offer to accompany a party of men to take a look at the Great Platt Valley, and the much talked of Territory of Colorado, and believing a few weeks of recreation being necessary for my health, I left home June the 23rd and arrived at Huntington at night, and owing to the fact our train was behind time we failed to make connection with the steamboat for Cincinnati. Had to remain over until morning when we went by boat to Siotaville, thence by rail to Hamlin, Ohio, and thence to Cincinnati, where we arrived at 6:20 a. m. Was kindly entertained at friend McIlvains until 5:32 p. m., when we left on the O. & M. R. R., for St. Louis. Next morning at daylight we passed through some fine country in Ill., harvesting was going on, wheat crops looked fine indeed. At 7:10 a. m., arrived at St. Louis, left at 8:30 on the N. M. R. R., arrived at Kansas city, 8.30 p. m., left at 9:30 for Council Bluffs, next morning in passing up the Missouri River bottoms we noticed quite a variation in the corn crop some looked as though it was just planted, some just up, some two feet high and some fields high as an ordinary man's head. Arrived at Council Bluffs, at 9 o'clock a. m. Three other trains arrived soon after which owing to the travelling crowds made the place a place of business indeed. All passengers and baggage had to be changed here to the transfer company's cars which took all across their magnificent iron bridge to the other side of the Missouri river and delivered us into the city of Omaha, were we remained until to-day. We took a stroll early in this morning about the back part of the city which stands upon the bluff. We visited the public school-house which cost one hundred thousand dollars. A collegiate education can here be obtained under the free school system without any extra cost. From the front veranda of the building, we had a grand view. The city of Omaha in the main lay below our feet, the waters of the Mo., which were very high, and numerous islands were spread out before us for miles in width. Just opposite, we could have a full view of Council Bluffs, which is an important place. The great R. R. bridge, like a web, spans the river to our right, to our left, far away we can see the winding sheet of waters coming down, upon which the sun is shining in splendor. The city is beautifully interspersed with green trees, the bluffs have fine natural groves with resident houses scattered through them. Council Bluffs is on the west border of Iowa, and Omaha on the east border of Nebraska, and is noted for the joint, over-land trains to California, and the west used to lay in their supplies, and do yet, even many who go by rail lay in a good lot of commissary stores to avoid those big bills along the line. At Omaha we had our first sight of the Chinese. Will be off for the Platt Valley this p. m. More anon.

Dear Pilgrim: Let me give you a little church news. I left home June 18,—went to Chicago, and on the 19, left Chicago for Pontiac, Livingston Co., Ill; thence north to Cornell, where I met our dear brother Keelin Heckman and went home with him, found all well. Here I thought, what joy there will be when we will meet in Heaven! As I had not seen the sister for some time, and knowing her from a child, our meeting was a joyful one. I enjoyed myself very much with the Br's. and family. The brother is a speaker in the first degree and one of the children a member, though young, being the oldest daughter. On the 20th, I went to their Communion with brother Heckman and family. The Lovefeast was at brother Adam Youngs'. This church is called the Vermilion District, is yet in its infancy and is growing. May God help it to prosper. Lovefeast commenced at 10 a. m Here I met Elder Rufus Gish and brother Jacob J. Kindig, and other beloved members from Woodford Co., Ill. Had a feast of fat things A choice for deacon was held and Bro. Jonathan Swihart ordained. Had very good order. Meeting at the same place the 21st, and in the evening at a school-house Next day at the same place at 10 a. m. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock in Cornell, and in the evening at the same place. Here there was three applicants for baptism, two of brother David Heckman's daughters, and one of brother Paul Dale's, all young. May God help them to live faithful till death is our prayer. Baptized them on Monday morning, and then took my leave from them and went to Woodford Co., stopped off at Benson, where I met our brother J. J. Kindig, a minister in the second degree,—went home with him found all well. From here I visited brother Henry Kindig, thence, friend Wm. Irons, stayed till evening and then taken to meeting by friend Iron's family. Had a very good meeting. Next morning, the 25th, I went back to friend Wm. Irons, and was taken by him to friend John Coleys, and by friend Coley to brother Andrew Ruddell, where I remained over night, enjoyed myself very much with the Bro. and sister and their kind daughter, their only child I hope she will soon become a member of the Church. On the 26th, I, with brother Ruddell and sister and daughter visited some of our old acquaintances, and among whom was old father Coley, the father-in-law to bro, Ruddell, he being in his 75th year and out of the church, but promised us he would not wait much longer. May the good Lord help him to carry out his promise, for he cannot stay much longer. The old mother is a very kind sister, and said it would give her much happiness if her husband would come in before they would have to separate. The same evening I went back to brother Andrew Ruddell's, stayed until next day, thence was brought by friend Briand Coley to his house, remained until evening and then to meeting by friend Coley. Had very good order and attention, went home with brother Rufus Gish. Next day brother Gish to me to brother George Gish, where I stayed until evening and then went to the church again, where we had another meeting. Home with brother John Woods, a very kind family. Next day being Sabbath, I went with brother Woods and family to Sabbath School. Had a very good school, two hundred and fifteen being present, and the members told me they have had five hundred. All appear to take an interest in the school, and I think it is well conducted. At 11 o'clock we had meeting at the same place, being in the Brethren's church, and in the afternoon meeting at five o'clock Here four made application for baptism. On Monday morning the 30th, met at 8 o'clock on the banks of Panther Creek, "where prayer was wont to be made." Quite a number of members and others met with us. Baptism was administered, and here we took the parting hand. Went home with brother J. J. Kindig and from there to Benson with Bro. Kindig. Here our young lambs met us to bid me farewell. Took the 1 o'clock train and got to Plymouth on the 1st day of July. At 3 o'clock I arrived at home when a call was made to visit a sick man some four miles distant. I baptized him.

So the good Lord is still adding such as shall be saved. O, brethren let us not be idle, but do all we can, by the help of God, to get poor sinners to turn to God, and hide multitudes of sins.

May God bless all is my prayer.

JOHN KNISLEY.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE New York Daily Graphic has agreed to provide the two skillful æronauts, John Wise and W. H. Donaldson, with all the æronautic appliances for crossing the Atlantic Ocean, at an expense of 10,000, reserving the right to name certain persons who shall accompany them, and the exclusive right to publish the particulars of the voyage as soon as they shall land in Europe.

This will certainly be a daring exploit, and cannot be contemplated with any other than very serious apprehensions. The aeronauts, however, have made some very long and daring flights across land, and if across land, why not across water? Prof. Wise made the trip from St. Louis to New York, a distance of 1000 miles in nineteen hours, and on other occasions has made trips of greater or less distance, by appointment from east to west. The result of such an exploit cannot be of any practical utility, but may aid largely in scientific investigation

A VERY destructive tornado occured in the lake regions, Wis., recently. Reports from that region say that vessles were wrecked and many persons drowned. The course of the tornado from northwest to southeast was about five miles in width, and in this track everything—crops buildings and fences were leveled. Its course extended through Missouri, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee, and the reports all agree in describing it as the most destructive tornado that ever visited the West and Southwest in many years. The pecuniary loss is supposed to reach millions of dollars, aside from the loss of life and incalculable personal suffering entailed.

Two fatal cases of cholera in Jersey City are reported. The disease continues its course at Cincinnati, Memphis, and Nashville, but with a decreased rate of mortality.

Sick Headache.

Dear Brethren and sisters, having witnessed much suffering from SICK HEADACHE, we now offer a Speedy and Sure Cure for the same. It is pleasant to take and can be sent by mail.

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES."
Mark 11; 13.

BY MARY E. B. TOURTILOTTE.

When across Judea's mountain,
Broke the moon in silver sheen,
Where a fig-tree by the wayside
Stood with shining leaves so green;
Came our Savior faint and thirsty,
Seeking fruit and finding none,
For his earnest search discovered—
Nothing there but leaves alone.

After fruitless quest he turned
From the barren tree away;
Saying, let no fruit be gathered
Off thy branches here this day.
And another morn beheld it
Drooping, all its verdure fled,
Blighted, neath that fearful sentence
Dry and withered, crisp and dead,

Thus when Jesus comes in judgment,
With the trumpet's awful sound,
Will his dread displeasure wither
Those with whom no fruit is found:
And are we for whom he suffered—
Pain and anguish, grief and shame,
In our life and conduct bearing—
Fruit to glorify his name,

Oft my wayward steps have wandered
From the strait and narrow way,
Yet I love thee, dear Redeemer,
Guide me that no more I stray;
Lay thy welcome burden on me,
Cheerfully thy yoke I take,
And thy cross I'll bear it gladly,
Joyfully for thy dear sake.

Here I bring my heart my Savior,
Lay it humbly on thy shrine,
And with love and trust unshrinking,
Place, by faith my hand in thine;
Crying guide me now and ever,
Be my future what it may,
If thy blessed hand but lead me,
It will end in perfect day.

Clouds of woe may gather round me,
Dark and drear my path may be,
Grief may crush, and sorrow wound me.
Only keep me close to thee.
And forbid that when thou comest—
Claiming fruit from all thine own.
I should wither 'neath the sentence,
"NOTHING HERE BUT LEAVES ALONE."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

PREACH THE WORD.

Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine- For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears.—2 Tim. 4; 2-3.

It is not my purpose, in placing the above Scripture at the head of this article, to attempt to make it any plainer, but to call the attention of the reader to the prediction therein contained, and then to ask himself or herself, if the prediction is not being fulfilled in our time, if indeed it has not been often fulfilled heretofore.

"Sound doctrine" appears to become stale to many persons who attend preaching, and many more do now absent themselves from preaching, because, as they say, the preacher runs in the same old channel that he first started in, forgetting on their part, that it is his, the preachers duty, to "preach the word." Others think the preacher is too severe and sarcastic, forgetting again that it is his duty to "reprove and rebuke." Hence many will not attend preaching unless some one can entertain them by their eloquence, or in some peculiar way present, shall I say the truth, or only a part of it? Perhaps the latter manner of expressing the idea, is the more correct one; and then if I apprehend the matter aright, the prediction is fully verified that their lust is gratified, and they have then the "itching" of their "ears" abated for the time at least, ready to have the process repeated again when opportunity affords. But is such preaching and such hearing acceptable with God? All will say, that is another question. This is the question that should most concern us. I have been led into this train of thought in consequence of what I have been recently reading, and of some preaching I have recently heard. Both writers and preachers were making efforts to combat erroneous preaching, which is one of the requirements of these degenerate times, demanding something new, that some men's and some women's ears might be tickled, or in other words have the itching of their ears abated.

Such preaching might be comparatively harmless, were they to confine themselves to vain philosophy, but when they lay their hands upon the word of God, and say that such and such portions is not binding upon us, or that it is not correctly translated, especially when it conflicts with their peculiar dogmas, or even go so far as to say that it conflicts with other Scripture, and hence it should not be regarded, then indeed we should be on our guard, and learn to appreciate such portions of Scripture as is found at the head of this article, and others of a similar import, which abound in God's word.

But to come to the point specifically, has been recently deemed proper by some in their disposition, as I must think, to gratify this "itching ear" class of hearers,—to lay violent hands upon the Lord's prayer itself. That prayer that we all have been taught in our infancy to lisp, by religious, and even irreligious mothers,—that prayer that the Son of God Himself taught His disciples, when asked to be taught how to pray. It is this undermining of "sound doctrine," to which I more particularly alluded to above that those writers and preachers were combatting. What do they say about the Lord's prayer, do you ask? Why they say it does not bind us to use it, it was only enjoined upon the disciples. The Savior only washed his disciples feet, and none other, hence that only binds them also, and we are exempt. So it would appear at first thought, but how does it look when the light of God's word is reflected upon the subject?

In His commission to His disciples His last words were, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Behold the value of God's word, and the great necessity of preaching it. But say they, it is inconsistent with the teaching of James. The Savior says "Lead us not into temptation," and James says, "God tempts no one, nor can He be tempted." There is no contradiction here, but suppose there was, who should we hear, James in preference to Christ? Every Christian will say, No, for we are not followers of James but of Christ. But I said there was no contradiction The Lord's prayer says, "Lead us not into temptation," James says "God does not tempt any man," nor does Christ say he does, but he does say by implecation, that the Father tempted him. Matt. 4, 1. "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." So says Matthew. Knowing his sore trial, he could with propriety teach his disciples to ask their Heavenly Father to exempt them from such fiery trials. The next objection to the Lord's prayer is, that we are required to say "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven." They say His Kingdom has come in earth, hence we should not pray for that we already enjoy. But is it as fully established here as in Heaven? That is the point we are to aim at, then we see the necessity of the petition. Now turn to the Scripture at the head of this article and repeat it, and I imagine you will perceive the value of the Word and the necessity of having it preached.

EMANUEL SLIFER.

PROFANITY.

We are emphatically in the age of profanity, and it seems to us that we are on the topmost current. One can not go through the streets anywhere without having his ears offended by the vilest of words, and his reverence shocked by the most profane use of sacred names. Nor does it come from the old or middle-aged alone, for it is a fact as alarming as it is true, that the younger portion of the community are the most proficient in the degrading habit. Boys have an idea that it is smart to swear, that it makes them manly; there never was a greater mistake in the world. Men, even those who swear themselves, are disgusted with profanity in a young man because they know how, of all bad habits, this clings the most closely and increases with years. It is the most insidious of habits, growing on one so insensibly that almost before he is aware he become an accomplished curser.

THE WAY TO LIVE.—Ten minutes of weak ripening will plunge a brave heart into the depths of unhappiness as suddenly as a thunderstorm will overcast a clear summer sky.—The only way to live is to cast away troubles and contentions, which cannot be cured by fretting. A thing that is done belongs to the past. In justice to the requirements of the present, and the possibilities of the future, you cannot look back and make yourself wretched over things which cannot be undone.

HE that has no resources of mind is more to be pitied than he who is in want of necessaries for the body; and to be obliged to beg our daily happiness from others bespeaks a more lamentable poverty than that of him who begs his daily bread.

—There is a strong tendency in us all to believe what we desire to be true, and to draw those conclusions to which our inclinations lean.

AN APPEAL.

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE FIRST DISTRICT OF VA.

Beloved Brethren: I have thought for some time past of addressing an appeal to you relative to the "Resolutions" we adopted at our District meeting, and as buried thoughts are not of much practical value, we now will send them out through the columns of the Pilgrim.

In those Resolutions we recognized the importance of combining our efforts to more effectually spread the doctrine of the Brethren. We also resolved to appoint a committee of one Deacon to act as our agent in carrying forward this work.

It will be readily admitted that we, as a body, are doing comparatively little in propagating the Gospel. The work rests exclusively on the ministry, maided by the church. As we are justly opposed to a hireling ministry it becomes a subject of interest how to utilize the power of our lay brethren, and in these "Resolutions" we secured in part the adoption of measures to make that power available. We hope brethren our "Resolves" were adopted with the determined purpose to execute them. Remember good intentions alone will accomplish nothing.

Now much depends on the wisdom of the appointment of the committee whether it will be a success or a failure. In my opinion he should be possessed of the following qualifications:

1st. He should be steadfast in the faith.

2nd. He should be a brother of energetic character and zeal. Brethren have different talents. Some are most excellent in one department of their official duties, while they are utterly disqualified for other services. An active worker, who will not be afraid to stir up the pure minds of the brethren frequently to the importance of casting in their monthly contributions, will accomplish more than a dozen brethren who are indifferent whether anything is done or not. Let such a one be appointed in every congregation, and let him remember that the amount of work he performs will be reported at our next D. M., and that it will be a just measure of the interest he feels in the cause of the conversion of sinners.

At every church meeting throughout the year the subject should be presented to the members, and our ministers should advocate the virtue of liberality and press its claims on the church. If that is neglected and the committeeman is incompetant for his task, then that congregation will report "nothing done" next year to the shame and mortification of every lover of Jesus. The brethren also should think it a golden opportunity to help their hard worked preachers, and should cast in abundantly of the loan that their Lord has committed to their trust. It is simply ridiculous for a truly converted soul to be content with the contribution of a few odd dimes or quarters to a work fraught with such momentous results. The amount of wealth in the hands of the brethren composing this District would justify the expectation of the contributions of hundreds of dollars and the distribution of thousands of books and pamphlets, preaching the doctrine of the Gospel, and if such a report is made next year, how gladly will it be hailed and welcomed by every lover of the holy cause. We look forward to that report with the most intense solicitude even at this early day, trembling between hope and fear; hope that the work will be a grand success and will reflect credit on the spiritual character of our churches; and fear, that, through negligence, we suffer the stigma and odium of indifference to fall with their blighting effects upon us.

The Elders should make the selection of books with the greatest prudence and foresight. In my opinion books of controversy should be rejected, or if selected, they should be distributed with much caution. I do not wish to be understood as not appreciating the labors of the champions of our cause, who meet the Goliaths of the sects in the fields of debate, but the records of these contests are more efficient in other fields of our mission. Neither should books or pamphlets which are waging aggressive warfare, that is those that are merely attacks on the errors of others, be selected. These are very useful in their sphere but we do not consider this their sphere or field of labor.

Our literature that presents the pure doctrines of the Gospel, that treats of the ordinances and practices of the church, of the apostolical, primitive church as it is represented by the Brethren is that that is particularly suited to the demands of this movement. Without disparaging the labors of others I will suggest that "Noah's Theology" will meet our demands as fully as any work within our reach. While it is not considered a work of great demonstrative power and erudition, yet it will meet the requirements of the unsheated most effectually. "Moore's Primitive Baptism" should be disseminated by the hundreds of thousands. It presents the great subject of baptism with such force and ability that much good will result from a general distribution of them. "Trine Immersion" by B. F. Moomaw should also be liberally distributed. It has one objectional feature, however, that will render it inapplicable, measurably, to our wants, and that is, the first part is of a controversial character. Notwithstanding the treatises on the New Birth, on Non resistance, and on the Lord's Supper are of such value that they should not be lost on account of our objection to his discussion on Immersion. There are other writings of value that should be selected. Winchester's Dialogues should be reproduced and a compilation of testimonies, in favor of our practice and in accordance with the Gospel, from the writings of the Fathers would be a work of value. For the present, we might safely risk a few dollars with our Editors for the free distribution of old numbers of our periodicals. They can be had for postage, doubtless, and they would be glad, probably, to rid their offices of all such accumulations in that way.

Again we should offer a premium of a small compensation for the best defense of the various ordinances of the church, such for instance as a defence of Feetwashing, of the Holy Kiss, of Non-conformity to the world, of Non-resistance, of Anointing the sick, of wearing the Covering for the Head, of the Lord's Supper, of the Apostolical doctrine of the relation of the Church to the State, &c. A work on this latter subject is of special importance at this time, to define our position on that subject, it should treat:

1st. On the design of governments.

2nd. How far the church is permitted to claim their protection.

3d. The limits of the jurisdiction of both bodies.

These are to be received as simple suggestions. Each of the foregoing should be written so as to be published in pamphlet form, and sent to the secretary of the D. M., B. F. Moomaw, in case the proposed premium is offered. We will not suggest the amount of the premium. Any congregation can advertise the offer and it will be placed to their credit in the annual report.

The publication of these treatise should be deferred until they are examined by competent brethren at our next D. M., and those that are received then, will be considered as the property of the District, and published and distributed at its expense.

The writings of the brethren that I have recommended should be purchased at cost, as the authors have doubtless sold enough to liquidate expenses. No brother should desire to make a speculation out of our association. Vigilant eyes will be watching its interests, and swift retribution will be visited on any brother that will be tempted to try it.

In conclusion, brethren, let us get about the work in earnest. Can we not have an exhibition next year that will show the Brotherhood that we mean business! Let us not embarrass the movement by groundless fears that it is something new, and consequently should be opposed. It may be new to us, but it was not new to the Apostle Paul. He wrote to his brother "by all means to bring the parchments." Parchments were "the skins of certain animals prepared and rendered fit for writing on," and no doubt exists in my mind that those he alludes to contained the writings of the Evangelists and of other brethren, much of which has doubtless been lost. Hence we should make haste to redeem the time already lost, and revive a practice based on such high and unequivocal authority.

If our brethren editors or others feel interested in the business, and can help us with their counsels, this will be their assurance that such help will be acceptable.

Your brother,
D. C. Moomaw.

Blacksburg, Va.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

Yes, my dear friends, what are you doing just now, when almost everybody and every insect is so full of business and of life? Are you who are blessed with means and privileges, doing anything that will improve your minds and affections, anything that will make you feel you are living to be useful in time, and glorious in eternity; anything that will cause the world to feel sad when you are numbered no more with the living? We came not into the world to idle our time away and not be profitable in some way. We are all born to fill some station in life. Let us consider what Christ did for us and what we are doing for Him, and we shall no doubt find ourselves wanting in the discharge of our duty. Look around you, there are your dearest relatives; your friends and neighbors, over whom you have much influence. Are there none of them vulgar and profane? None living lives of idleness, vice and crime? If there are, what are you doing to reclaim and restore them to usefulness and good society, that they may be blessed and God bless you? What answer does your conscience give to these inquiries? If you are not engaged in the service of the Lord, it is time for you to shake off the deadening spell and do something worthy the ambition of immortal spirits that you may be blessed in time and glorious in eternity. The world extends her joys and pleasures to all who desire them, but the joys and pleasures which the world can afford us are of short duration. But the happiness which the Christian experiences, and the joy which animates his heart, are of a durable nature and will reach beyond the gloomy grave. Then, why not be a Christian? why tarry so long? Do you expect to come with less difficulty by waiting awhile? You may be deceived, your destruction may be sudden, it may overtake you by surprise. You now, put far off, the evil day. Thus you will continue to do, 'till death shall come upon you in all its terrors. Wholly unprepared, you will hear the dreadful summons. As it was with the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, so it will be with you, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage and knew not, till the Lord rained upon them brimstone and fire out of Heaven and destroyed them all. Then the best time to make the start is NOW, for it is appointed unto man once to die. Knowing this to be a fact, how necessary that we prepare for the solemn change, so that our spirits may go to Him who called us hence. Who among us would not be willing to part with all the vanities of this world for a home in Heaven? Sinner, we ask you to make the start, and you will have Jesus, your best friend, to strengthen and cheer you as you are making your way to Heaven and immortal glory. O, what an animating thought that we can have the privilege of all once meeting again beyond this vale of tears, if we love and obey the Lord.

"O blessed day! O glorious hope!
My soul rejoices at the thought,
When in that holy, happy land,
We'll take no more the parting hand."

HARVEST.

"Six days thou shalt work, but on the Seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing time and harvest thou shalt rest." Exo. 34: 21.

Harvest is now at hand and we are in the midst of it, but probably before this will appear in print, it will be past. God has blessed us with a plentiful harvest. He has always blessed us with more than we deserve. This alone should cause us to present unto him a living sacrifice which is our reasonable service.

But in thinking of the present harvest, the mind is carried to the future, when the angel will cry to him that sat on the cloud, "Thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the time is come for thee to reap: for the harvest of the earth is ripe." That will be an important harvest to all of us. We will constitute the fruit of that harvest, we will not then be the reapers as is the case in the present one. The Savior, in the parable, calls the harvest the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. But we have much to do with sowing the seed, and the growth of it, as well as the preparing of the ground. So then we have an important part to perform. If the farmer neglects any one of these, he will not reap a good harvest.

The seed must be pure. We must be born of that incorruptible seed the word of God. Then will we be good seed or the children of the Kingdom. So then it belongs to us to know what seed we are born of. If the farmer sows seed that does not suit the soil or climate, or is not pure, the loss is not so great but that he can endure it, but he will change his seed the next time. Not so in the harvest of the end of the world. Then let us see well to what seed we are born. Now is the time to judge the seed. We have the detector, the word of God. We must be born of the spirit, which is the word. The Savior said "the words that I have spoken they are spirit and they are life." If the spirit that we are born of don't lead in a strict obedience to that word, we have not the spirit of Christ, and are not the good seed or the children of the kingdom. There is no seed but good seed and tares. The devil sows the tares. Whatever that incorruptible seed, the word of God does not teach, will produce tares if it is sown.

Let us be careful that we don't accept of tares, for they come from the evil one. So then, dear brethren, and sisters, let us watch and pray for the harvest is near at hand, at least with some of us. It would be a lamentable thing if we would have soon to say, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended and we are not saved." But if we are the children of the kingdom (not of the world,) our lot will be a happy one. As God commanded the children of Israel to rest in earing time and in harvest, so we will rest. What a glorious rest! "There remaineth a rest for the people of God." Let us labor for that rest.

TYPES AND SHADOWS.

SENNACHERIB.

The object of the Mosaic dispensation was to show man's need of a Savior. This is remarkably shown in the miracles of Moses, so frequently inflicting death as the punishment of sin, the typical nature of which may be further noticed in the all wise and often mysterious dispensations of Providence. In a time when king Hesekiah reigned over Judah, Sennacherib, that great king, of Asyria and head of the greatest monarchy then in the world, came up against all the fenced cities of Judah. After he had conquered most of the neighboring countries, he sent Rabshaker, the captain of his host, against Jerusalem, who, in a very proud and scornful manner, insulted Hesekiah and his people, as being sure of victory; and the people were trembling for fear, like lambs before a lion, having sent a blasphemous letter to Hesekiah, which he opened and spreading before the Lord, in the temple, with prayer and tears, entreating him for assistance against the Asyrians, whereupon the prophet Isaiah assured him that God will deliver him and defend that city, as a token of which he gave them this sign: "That the earth for two years successively, should bring forth food of itself from the roots of the old stocks, without their plowing or sowing; and then the third year they should sow and reap and plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them."—2 Kings 19: 29. This is mentioned as a type of what is promised in verses 30 and 31st. "And the remnants that is escaped of the house of Judah, shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward, for out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of Mount Zion. The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.

The corn springing again after it had been cut off with the sickle, and bringing forth another crop from the roots, represents the church reviving again and flowing like a plant after it had seemingly been cut down past recovery, when the enemies of the church have done their utmost and seem to have gained their point, and have overthrown the Church, so that its being is scarcely visible, but is like a living root hid under ground. There is in it a secret life that will cause it to flourish again, and to take root downward and bear fruit upward. This was now fulfilled, the king of Asyria had already carried captive the ten tribes; and Sennacherib had also taken all the fenced cities of Judah and ravaged the country round about: Jerusalem only remained and Rabshakeh had in his own imagination, already swallowed that up. but God wrought a wonderful deliverance. He sent an angel that, in one night, smote 185,000 in the enemies camp. This great deliverance of Judah from Sennacherib is, like the redemption of the Israelites from the bondage of Egypt, and the deliverance of the Jews the Babylonish captivity,—typical of salvation by Christ; prefiguring the greater and more important deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin, and their introduction into the heavenly Canaan.

REMINISCENCE.

Bro. Brumbaughs:—Seeing an article published in No. 23, present volume, written by bro. B. F. Moomaw that should not have appeared without some modification as therein are sentiments expressed transcending the restrictions laid on you editors, again and again at our Annual Meeting Why the dear bro., who assists in making these decisions sends articles conflicting with said decisions, is a mystery to me. I allude to Sunday Schools. Had he only reference to the abuses of said schools we would not have objected. Will the abuse of a thing make void the good of it? Then we must quit preaching—But I understand him, in the first place, to class Sunday Schools indiscriminately with Freemasonry.

The minutes of A. M. in 1868, Art. 14, reads as follows: "We advise that where the nature of the case will admit for brethren to hold Sabbath School &c., to which I say Amen, and think it is according to Scripture.—See also Art. 1st. minutes of 1857 and 1862.

We need not hunt in a corrupted church for the origin of Sabbath Schools, but go back to the days of the Savior. The Jews had their Synagogues—Sabbath Schools—to which they resorted on the Sabbath in order to read the Scriptures, and to have them expounded to the people, and Christ went there, read the Scriptures and taught them on the Sabbath again and again. If the origin is not from Heaven. Christ taught an institution that was of man, and we have a right to follow his example; for no other Sabbath School we would sanction but where the Scripture is read and expounded in its true meaning, and from such a school no evil results can be the consequence. And in such a manner the brethren in Annual Council advised it to be conducted. Bear with me for consistency is a jewel.

Yours in love.

ADDITION TO A NOTICE.

By request, I write in addition to that which has been properly written and published, in regard to Mary Noffsinger, who died April 12th, 1873.—

Her maiden name was Ridder. She was born in Ashe county near New River, North Carolina, emigrated with her parents to this county in her young days; was married to Daniel Noffsinger, who died six years ago at the age of seventy-five years; and as no notice has been given of his death we will give it here. He was born in Westmoreland county, near Greensburg, Pa. He also came to this county in his young days, became a member of the church the same day his wife did, and was for years a minister in the church, and in his last years a Bishop. His disease was Apoplexy. From the time of the attack, he lived about three hours. Funeral services by brethren, A. Arbaugh and D. Bowman.

I will now state what the friends particularly desire to know in regard to the old sisters disease. It was a peculiar one. Many people are living who never heard of the like. It was Contraction or Stricture of the Œsophagus, the organ through which the food passes to the stomach. For four months it gradually enlarged, impairing, and finally altogether destroying the power to swallow anything, producing death ultimately by starvation.

These parents raised ten children, five sons and five daughters, who are all living yet, the oldest 59 years old, Six are members of the church, one a minister, and one a deacon. We hope the Lord will help, that through the instrumentality of the Gospel, the others may be drawn to Christ before it is too late.

A LETTER TO A SISTER.

Dear Sister:—Being alone to-day and looking over the columns of the PILGRIM, I saw your name signed to such a hearty admonition to repentance, and to the pressing onward of the Christian, I felt aroused to drop a few lines to you, as we are admonished to exhort one another. Now, as speaking to you on the subject, how are we to press onward? We read where brethren were admonished to leave off the first works, such as laying on of hands &c., and to go on to perfection. We are told to be perfect in good works. I open the Bible and see what good works are. Read St. Luke's Gospel, the 6th chapter, from the 27 to the end of the 40 verse. Heeding these words of love from our dear Redeemer, (as you have described Him to us), will prepare us for the separation which the chapter above named speaks of. Men separate us from their company as evil doers, and speak evil of us for Christ's sake, and we may rejoice, for great is our reward, remembering that this life is but a journey to that land where we shall enjoy all things with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Dear sister, as I intend to go to Canada if it is the Lord's will, to my brother, we may, in all probability, never see each other again in this world. Oh, may we be found faithful, loving the Lord above all, who is the creator and preserver of all things, that He may, through mercy, be for us when all men are against us, and gather us home where parting shall not be known, is my prayer.

Men blush less for their crimes than for their weakness and vanity.

A memory well stored with Scripture, and sanctified by grace, is the best library.

Grace thrives by frequent meditation on portions of God's word. "Let the word of God dwell in you richly."

All politeness is owing to liberty.—We polish one another and rub off the corners and rough corners and rough sides by a sort of amicable collision.

CLOSET PRAYER.

This article inserted in the Presbyterian and from the pen of Henrick Johnson, D. D., is richly worth perusal, and we insert it hoping that it may be beneficial to our readers. The writer we think sets forth the subject in the proper light. There is certainly a growing tendency to be too formal in our worship, while individual prayer, that which brings us into direct communion with God is too much neglected. We are commanded to pray in secret, and this direct communion with our God is the great antagonistic power against the evils of this life; it should therefore be habitual and frequent:

Every soul needs a closet. True prayer will find one. It is the instinct of the heart thirsting for God. It is the command of the Master—Enter thy chamber. It is the way trodden by Jesus. "When he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray." "He withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed." "He continued all night in prayer to God." "Sit ye here while I go and pray yonder."

"Cold mountains and the midnight air Witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

Men are professing to follow Jesus who never think of following him into these solitudes. Men are professing to follow Jesus who, alas! have never found, or at least kept, a closet. The tendency of the age is to outwardness in Christian life—to activities, works, push, stir, doing. God forbid that we should depreciate any true Christian activity. But there is a morbid externalism, which may cut off the very springs and sources of our piety, and leave us smitten with dry rot. The good works may not be done with the spirit of ostentation and with noise of trumpets to be seen of men;" but they may be done in such forgetfulness and neglect of inner life, personal holiness, communion with God, as to rob them, however arduous, and however self-denying, of all their efficacy and spiritual power.

There is no blast of trumpets in this duty; it attracts no notice, makes no noise. The closet is a still, hidden place, not seen of men; and its duties are secrets with God. But he who thinks he can accomplish very much for God without this source of supply, has yet to learn the very alphabet of Christian efficiency. The closet is where a believer replenishes his stock. It is the secret place where the culture of personal holiness goes on. He enters in, and opens the recesses of his heart, and asks God to flood them with his spirit. He shuts the door and communes in spirit with Jesus. He leans upon that bosom, weeps his tears there, sobs out his sorrow for sin, gets his "Go in peace" from his forgiving Lord, washes in his blood again, strengthens his faith, catches something more of his Lord's spirit, fortifies his soul, deepens and widens his spiritual experience of grace power; and when he opens that door and comes forth, he is something better, stronger, purer, humbler for that talk with God in the secrecy of an inner chamber.

Hence the unspeakable, indispensible value of frequent solitude for communion with God; not simply for hurried, ejaculatory, or silent petition, but for thoughtful and even protracted prayer, with posture of devotion and audible expression. Mount, desert, closet, still hour, to what uses have these been ordained! How grand spirits have been erected for heroic work by them! What solemn and precious baptisms they have furnished! What preparations for labor and sacrifice and victory! Jacob at the ford Jabbok, Elijah on the mount, Elisha in the chamber with the dead child, "the door shut on them twain," Daniel in the den of beasts, Jeremiah in the court of the prison, Jonah in the belly of hell, Jesus in Gethsemane; it was the closet, the still hour, the talk face to face with God alone, that gave all these their lofty moods, their might with men, their spiritual victories. It is there the soul touches the unfailing fountain of spiritual supply. There the mountain tops are reached that pierce the clouds and bring down fatness.

We have activities enough; the church never so bristled with good works. The busy hum of our ecclesiastical machinery is heard all over the land. Alas! what meagre and inadequate results. The activities have been with too great self-sufficiency, and without the sufficiency that is of God. Our works need to be vitalized and surcharged with power from on high. The channels of that power are broken hearts. Hearts get broken in the closet; and there and then they pull down the power. Surely it is the voice of the Master to every disciple this day, "Enter into thy closet and shut thy door."

CHRIST.

An aged Christian was very near the end of his journey. Like Jacob of old, he leaned as it were on the top of his staff, and conversed with children and friends. Length of days, wealth, position, and a loving family had made his life what the world would call a success. A merchant for half a century, failure had never been written against his name. His word was as good as another's bond.

After the active business hours of life's day were over, he spent the eventide in his pleasant home, with his favorite books and papers about him, and cared for by loving hearts and tender hands. Respected of men, and blessed in his household, who shall say, as men count profit and loss, that life to him was not a success.

And yet listen to the testimony of his last hours. "This life is a blank without Christ." were the words spoken to a Christian friend, who stood by his bedside. Resting for a moment on the hilltop, and looking back over the pleasant path that had led him thither, he ascribed all the blessings of the way to Jesus his Lord.—For nearly fifty years an earnest disciple of the Master, he could say as his eyes grew dim and strength failed, "What have I in heaven but Thee, and what is there to be desired beside Thee." What now to him are the houses and lands and stocks? Is not his Redeemer everlasting riches? Did He not tell of the many mansions in his Father's Kingdom, prepared for the faithful? What to him in this solemn hour, is the respect and trust of men if the Lord shall only say to his waiting soul, "Well done good and faithful servant."

What indeed, in comparison, are children beloved, and friends however dear, if Jesus the conqueror of death, makes the valley light with his presence?

O, to pass from life into the shadows of the grave without Him, the Christ, would be utter emptiness and void. The soul reaching there for help, finds that the deeds and titles, notes and bonds, which certify earthly possessions are worth no more than so many blanks.

But to this dying believer the world was not a blank, for Christ, the brightness of the Father's glory, filled it with his all sufficient presence.

So, as all earthly scenes vanished and faded away in the mists of death, a look of glad surprise, as if the spirit had caught a glimpse of the glories beyond the river, was impressed on the countenance of the departing saint. "Let me die the death of the righteous."

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE prospects for the Altona Church is pretty fair. All that is needed is a little more liberality on the part of those who think they can do nothing.

GEORGE WINANT of York Springs, Adams Co., Pa., has lately been elected to the ministry in the Upper Canawago Church.

THE PRESBYTERIANS of Huntingdon, Pa., have voted free pews in their new Church, soon to be completed at that place. This is a move in the right direction and, no doubt, will insure larger congregations than would otherwise be had.

ELD. J. S. FLORY is now on a trip through the West. Colorado seems to be the place where they are locating a colony. He seems to be enjoying the trip hugely and, no doubt, is keeping his eyes open. The last account we had of him, he was at the Teller House in Central City, Col.

J. B. of Springfield District, Ind., says: "Our Spring Lovefeast came off on the 28th of June, and as I saw Christ's children drawing near and the multitude of spectators my heart was made glad. It was a rich feast, thus to meet together with brethren and sisters in the Lord and to partake of the broken body of our divine Master. We feel especially thankful to the ministering brethren who came and labored for us."

FROM an exchange we are informed of a very destructive storm occurring lately in the neighborhood of Covington and Dayton Ohio. It is reported as the most terrible that ever occurred in the country, destroying thousands of dollars worth of grain, which was yet ungathered and millions worth of property. Will be glad if some of our readers will send us a true account of it.

ELD. JOHN KNISLEY of Union Church, Ind., after sending his greetings to the household of faith, says: "Our harvest is good. Wheat is very well filled but not all cut yet. (July 11.) The last of June and the first few days of July were very wet and the wheat badly blown down which makes it hard to cut, and much will be left on the field. Everything seems to be in a prosperous condition and the health of the neighborhood is good."

CONTEMPLATED PERSECUTIONS OF THE CHINESE.—San Francisco has done a very contemptible thing in legalizing the persecution of the Chinese. The object is to drive them out of the city. To this end it is ordered that when a Chinese offender, or one charged with an offense, is incarcerated in jail, his que be shaved off; that a special tax of $60 per annum be levied upon Chinese laundries; and finally that the Chinese dead shall not be removed for interment in their native land. The tax they could and would bear, but as the other two measures involve, to the Chinese mind, perpetual dishonor in this world and perdition in the next, they are effective in driving out these harmless and valuable laborers. This is a cowardly persecution of laborers.

A terrible earthquake occurred June 29th in the neighborhood of Verona producing the most disastrous results, and causing great loss of life and property. Upwards of one hundred persons perished.

The shocks were of the most violent character, and producing the greatest alarm at Verona and the surrounding country for miles. On the first warning of the disaster the people left their houses with the greatest haste and ran into the streets. Others forsook the city and fled to the country for safety. Buildings were shaken to their foundations and many fell into ruins, burying their occupants in the pile or crushing and killing those who happened to be in the streets beneath. Many fine buildings have thus been destroyed, the loss of which it is at present impossible to estimate.

THE progress of Romanism in England is becoming so rapid as should excite alarm among Anglo American Protestants. The following list of distinguished converts from the Protestant faith would indicate the classes of society in which that faith is in most easy keeping, Dr. Maning, Archbishop of Westminster; the Marquis of Bute: the Earls of Oxford, Kingsborough, Denbigh, Dunven, Granard, Pembroke, Buchan; Miss Gladstone, sister of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone; Miss Stanly, sister of the Dean of Westminster; and the Rev. W. H. Wilberforce, brother of the present Bishop of Winchester. It is said that there are two hundred Roman Catholic priests who were at one time clergyman of the church of England.

Not only these, but the Queen has it is said recently appointed Cardinal Cullen and Archbishop Manning to the intimate political relation of members of the Privy Council. They hold office during the life of the sovereign. The Catholics of Doublin also demand a University to be conducted entirely on Catholic principle, and to receive the patronage and emoluments of the government.

PROGRESS OF METHODISM IN NEW YORK.—At a late meeting of the Methodist Preacher's Association, the most noteworthy part of the proceedings was the reading of some statistics concerning the progress of Methodism in New York city from the time it began its work here in 1766 down to 1870, contrasting its condition with that of other denominations and its ratio of increase to population. In 1768 the First Methodist Episcopal church in America was built in John street, New York, on the site of the church which now stands there. The population in that year was 18,000. In 1790 the Forsyth street church was built, and in 1800 what is now known as the Seventh street church was erected. From that time onward Methodism grew apace. But its golden period was from 1835 to 1860. Its relation to the population between 1768 and 1870 shows an increase of Methodism up to 1860 and a considerable decline from then to 1870. Statistics of other denominations showed that the Baptists had in 1870 thirty-eight churches or one to every 24,000 of the inhabitants. The Methodists and Roman Catholics have about the same proportion, while the Presbyterians have one for every 18,000, and the Episcopalians one for every 13,000.

Youth's Department.

SPEAK GENTLY.

It is not so much what you say
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use
As the tones in which you convey it.

"Come here!" I sharply said,
And the baby cowered and wept;
"Come here!" I cooed, and he looked and smiled,
And straight to my lap he crept.

The words may be mild and fair,
Or the tones may pierce like a dart;
The words may be soft as the summer air,
Or the tones may break the heart.

For words but come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But the tones leap forth from the inner self,
And reveal the state of the heart.

Whether you know it or not,
Whether you mean or care.
Gentleness, kindness, love and hate,
Envy and anger are there.

ABOUT HARVEST.

It is so extremely warm, that we did hope "Uncle Henry" would be around with something good for our young readers, but we suppose as harvest only comes once a year, he is so busy engaged in laying in store for himself and little ones, that he has not time to write. This is all right and we can easily excuse him, as he no doubt thinks that editors have as much time to write as he has. Well, this may be so, but we have so many things to attend to and think about, that it is hard for us to collect our thoughts enough to write an article unless we compose it of the many jots that are now popping into our mind as we pass along.

Twelve months ago we were in the midst of harvest, just as we now are, but it seems to us we hear many say, "but with us things are greatly changed. Last harvest, Willie Eddie, Susie and Nellie, were happy and jolly prattlers in our little groups, but long ago they have sickened and died and our homes are now all quiet and never so sad." Yes they are gone. You see, the Lord's harvest is ripening all the time. They were little sheaves, fully ripe and therefore were gathered. You are now growing and perhaps ripening for the harvest. The Lord's reapers are out because the Master says, "see, the harvest is already here, thrust in your sickles and reap."

But you ask, "Does he not reap any until they are ripe?" No, not one. They must all be ripe, but the trouble is, some are worth nothing when they are ripe. Little boys and girls are all expected to bring good fruit, but some become naughty by being disobedient to parents, tell stories and finally steal. Then it is that they are reported unfruitful, but he says, spare a little while longer and then if they bear not fruit, cut them down. After this is done and still no fruit, then they are ripe for the reaper and will be cut down because they will not bear fruit. Are there any such among our readers? If there are, look out for the reaper because you will surely be cut down and cast away. The ground cannot be cumbered with things that will not be of any use. The good die because they have lived their time of usefulness and the bad die, because they have wasted their time and will never become useful.

Just across the way there is a public house having on it the usual sign "Hotel." This formerly meant a whiskey shop or a place where boys are trained for the penitentiary or gallows, but we are glad to say, in this case, it is a place to entertain strangers—but this is not what we intended saying. The other day some little boys undertook to spell this sign, and as it is not divided into syllables they commenced spelling; h-o-t, hot, e-l, el hot-el, and strange as it may appear, one of them supplied another h, and pronounced it hot-hel. That boy had learned something from the character of that sign. It does convey ideas and some that are not very pleasant either.

Some time ago a father passed in and out of a door over which this sign was placed until he became a drunkard, when he abused and ill-treated the wife of his bosom, a son learning from his fathers conduct, became angry and shot his father. That father is now dead, the son is sent to prison for life, while a widowed mother and disgraced children are left to mourn their sad fate. Such, dear young friends are the fruits of evil doing. They were ripe for the harvest, but not fit to be gathered into the Lord's garner. Then, prepare yourselves for the harvest. It will and must come, and it will be good or bad, just as you make it.

NOW.

If we were to give you a motto to go through life with, one that would stand you for warning and counsel in any strait in which you might find yourselves, we would give it in this one word, "Now."

Dont' waste your time and your strength and your opportunities by always meaning to do something—do it! Only weakness comes of indecision. Why, some people have so accustomed themselves to dawdling along from one thing to another that it realy seems impossible for them to squarely make up their minds to anything. They never quite know what they mean to do next. Their only pleasure seems to consist in putting things off as long as possible, and then dragging slowly through them, rather than to begin anything else.

Don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study whatever it is, take hold at once, and finish up squarely and cleanly, and then to the next, without letting any moments drop out between. It is wonderful to see how many hours these people contrive to make of a day: it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost: and if you ever find yourself where you have so many things pressing that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret; Take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you find the rest all fall into file and follow like a company of well drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished when brought into line. You may have seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he accomplised so much in life. "My father taught me," was the reply, "when I had anything to do to go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word, "Now!"

THOU GOD SEEST ME.

A little girl who had been disobedient, was reproved by her mother for bad behavior, and reminded that God saw her when she was naughty, and that He did not love disobedient children. She was told, too, that it was said in the Bible, "Children obey your parents."

"God cant' see me because the blind is down," said the little offender, imagining that because the blind was drawn down inside the house, it being evening, therefore the eye of God could not be on her.

This was the idea of a child scarcely three years of age, but I fear there are some other boys and girls, two or three times as old, who sometimes when they are doing that which they know is wrong conceal themselves somewhere or other, thinking that no one is looking at them.

They forget it is written in the Bible, "Can any hide himself in secret places that I cannot see him? saith the Lord." Endeavor to recollect that you are continually in the presence of Almighty God, and bear in mind that short but important text which every little reader has heard. "Thou God seest me," wherever you go, it will, I doubt not, keep you from doing that which is wrong when you are placed in temptation.

Our duties are like the circles of a whirlpool, and the innermost circle is home. The road to home happiness is over the steppingsstones which lie above the brook of daily discomforts.

In youth, prepare for old age.

BAPTISM.

CONTINUED.

In our last, we promised to next notice "indoor baptism," on the passages of scripture that is claimed as being favorable to such baptisms, but shall first notice the case of the Eunuch. We wish it understood that we do not review this sermon on account of its merits, but because it contains the arguments generally used against immersion.

The first argument in this case is, that the country through which they were passing was a desert and therefore, not a sufficient amount of water to immerse. Such arguments, at once show a great want of testimony against baptism by immersion. With God there is no impossibilities and men seek after them, only when they wish to have an excuse for disobedience. If immersion was as agreeable to the carnal mind as is sprinkling, the validity of it, never would have been made a question. It is the cross they wish to avoid, He now asks; "And where did the Ethiopian get his idea of baptism? The record does not show that Philip said a word to him about baptism."claiming that he (the Eunuch) got it from the passage which he had been reading from Isaiah. Is this not strange that Philip in preaching Christ, should say nothing about baptism? Does not the word say; "then Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus?" If Philip or any other man could have preached Jesus or the plan of salvation to enquiring sinners without saying a word about baptism, then we will yield the argument in this case. If we have reasonable objections against baptism or immersion, why not produce them and avoid such miserable sophistry? To think of Philip preaching Jesus without say- a word about baptism is extremely ridiculous and shows a lack of honesty of purpose.

In speaking of "into"and "out of" we have the following:

"But as we wish to be very liberal, we will allow you your "into" and "out of," and will only remind you that into is not under; and remember, it is not said, that the Eunuch was any farther in than Philip. If eis puts the Eunuch under it must put Philip under also; for it applies equally to both. "They both went down into, eis, the water;" and there is no more proof that the Eunuch was under the water than that Philip was."

That is certainly very liberal to grant such admissons, but to inform Baptists that "into is not under" is quite a favor. Such bits of wisdom indicate extreme shrewdness. We do not suppose that immersionists ever thought of such shallow reasoning. We do not claim into, eis, puts them under the water, but it puts them both in the water and in a position ready for baptism. But he says: "There is no more proof that the Eunuch was under the water than that Philip was; but the record says: "and they went down, both Philip and the Eunuch; and he (Philip) baptized (immersed) him." Such reasoning is equivalent to saying, "there is no more proof that the Eunuch was baptized than that Philip was," But the record is too plain to admit of such reasoning, therefore we dismiss it as illogical and void of truth.

We will now notice some of his In Door Baptisms. We will first notice that of Cornelius. This is taken, because the place where they were baptized is not designated. The record says, "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Peter did not even baptize them but commanded those who were with him to baptize them, without saying anything about the place where the ceremony was to be performed. In common parlance, if I was commanded to wash something no matter where I was, at the time the command was given, I would go to a place where it could be done after the usual manner of washing. Just so, it is altogether reasonable to suppose, did they who were to baptize (immerse) those on whom the Holy Ghost had fallen. If this could have been performed in the house, we have no objections to offer. Independent of the meaning of the term baptized, this circumstance gives nothing in favor of either mode but when, in connection with it, we consider the fact that baptized means immersed, the whole weight of the argument is thrown on our side.

The baptism of the Jailor is also claimed as an indoor baptism. After the usual explanation of the inner and outer prison and the Jailor's house, all being under the same roof, he speaks of the impossibility of Paul, in the midnight hour, taking them away off to some river "among the mountains of snowy Thrace," for the sake of immersing them. This says he, would not have been the easy yoke and light burden of which our Savior speaks. On the same hypothesis it might be argued that it was real ugly and ungrateful of our Savior to allow his followers to be buffetted and persecuted as they were, and even Paul, on the present occasion, to be cast into prison and his feet placed in the stocks. Such a process is certainly attended with much more mental and physical suffering than simply to be immersed. Yet we find to them the yoke was so easy that they were made to sing praises to God. Such arguments seem very trifling, yet they are the best they have to offer.

Without noticing the argument any further, we will review the record as it stands as found in Acts 19; 9-34. From the 19 to the 25 ver. we have the account of their apprehension, beaten with stripes, given in charge of the Jailor and placed in the stocks in the inner prison, 25 verse, Paul and Silas sang praises to God.

26. The earthquake, opening of doors and loosening of the prisoners bands.

27. The keeper is awakened and seeing the doors open, thinks of destroying himself.

28. Paul seeing that it was all the providence of God, calls upon him to do himself no harm

29. The keeper calls to some members of the family, for a light and then went in and fell down before Paul and Silas.

30 Makes the important query, how "to be saved."

31. The answer given, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ."

32. They preached unto him and all that were in his house, the word of the Lord.

33. He (the jailor) took them and washed their stripes, and was baptized, and all his house. Now, from the record, we come to the following rational conclusion; At the beginning of the narrative, the jailor and family was in one part of the house and Paul and Silas in another part of the same house, or the innermost prison.

After the miraculous intervention of God, the Jailor procures a light and goes to Paul and Silas and enquires for the way of salvation (29 30 verses).

The Jailor then takes Paul and Silas out of the prison into his own part of the house and there they (Paul and Silas) spake unto him, and all that were in his house, the word of the Lord. (31, 32).

The Jailor then took them (Paul and Silas) and by them, were baptized also, and all those of his house, to whom they preached the word of the Lord. (33.)

In the above, it is not said where he took them, but the next verse (34) says; and when they brought them into his house. This is bonafide evidence that they were taken out of the house, and as the record says they were baptized, equivalent to immersed, they were undoubtedly taken to a place where it could be performed according to the established formula, as given by God and practiced by Christ and His followers.

After a careful reading of the passages referred to, it must be seen by every candid mind that men are hard put too for evidence to prop up a groundless cause. There is not a single passage in the New Testament to prove that baptism was ever performed in a house, or in doors, and if there was, it would not, by any means, prove that they were not immersed. Our space is too limited to follow the subject further at present, but will conclude in our next by noticing, who are subjects for baptism.

ANNUAL MEETING REPORT.

In last weeks issue, we concluded our report of the proceedings, and from the general expression, so far, and the demand for it, we conclude that it is giving general satisfaction. Notwithstanding our circulation has been increased a little over 200 since the A. M., we are still prepared to accommodate several hundred more with the numbers containing the report. We will now send the PILGRIM to the end of the year, from the time the subscriptions are received, with all the numbers containing the report of A. M., for 75 cents, or we can still supply some twenty subscribers with complete sets at $1.50. Keep the good work moving. Harvest is now about over and very few will refuse to give 75 cents for so much good reading matter. Agents sending to the amount of $5.00 and over, can deduct 10 per cent for the trouble, or divide it among the subscribers as they see proper.

HYMN BOOKS.

As our patrons are becoming impatient, we must make an explanation. Some three weeks before Annual Meeting we ordered a lot of Hymn Books, but none came. At A. M, we saw brother Quinter and, if we remember rightly, he promised to attend to it on his return——but just now, we are informed that the books have arrived, and all orders will be filled forthwith. Please excuse the delay, as we done the best we could, and, no doubt, Bro. Quinter did the same.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Please publish through the PILGRIM that the Church of the Cerro Gorda district, Ill., have their Communion Meeting on the 27 and 28 of September 1873, and also the District Council Meeting of Southern Ill, will be held at the same place on Monday 29. It is desired that the churches of Southern Ill be fully represented, and a hearty invitation is given, especially to the ministering brethren to be with us on the occasion.

Those coming by Rail-road will stop off at Cerro Gorda. By order of the Church. JOHN METZGAR
JOSEPH HENRICKS.

Notes of Travel.

BY J. S. FLORY.

CHEYENNE, WYOMING TERRITORY,
July 2, '73.

June 28, I wrote from Omaha; left there by the U. P. R. R. at 2 p. m., and arrived at Grand Island, a town 155 miles west of Omaha. At 9 o'clock p. m., next day, Sunday, went to the Episcopalian Church. The minister wore a large white robe that extended to the floor. The ceremonies were tedious, the lecture good, but short, the money feature prominent, the display of fashion and mock righteousness not lacking in anywise. A. M. attended Sunday School at the Baptist Church, which was lively, and would be called by many, spirited. At the close of the school a Methodist minister held forth for a while after their ordinary manner. The society in most respects, we concluded, was about the same as in the East. At 7:30 p. m., we were again aboard the train, and at 9 o'clock were at Gibbon, 29 miles further West, where, next morning, we procured a spring-wagon and buggy sufficient for the party to take a look at the country. We went about ten miles north of the R. R., found some fine lands, plenty of which is open for homestead claims, some within five and six miles of the R. R. At noon we stopped by a stream and done good service to our lunch which we had carried with us, after which we took a stroll over the prairies that looked like the illimitable ocean. With a glass we could see timber at a distance. There were signs of rain, so we turned our course for town. One of our party got a shot at an Antelope, another, killed a few Plover—came in all right except a slight wetting by a shower. Owing to a heavy rain the train was delayed 12 hours, so we did not leave Gibbon until July 1st at 8 o'clock, when we set out and passed over some fine country, and some not very attractive, where we saw numerous Antelopes, and Prairie dogs skipping about, and thousands of cattle grazing.

The Platte river is a wide sluggish stream, the bridge across the north fork is over a mile in length. Syducia, 414 miles west of Omaha, is a beautiful spot, at which point quite a number of U. S. soldiers are stationed. At 2 o'clock at night we arrived at this point, 516 miles west of Omaha. Here is the Junction of a R. R. running to Colorado, and is quite a stirring town, a number of Troops are stationed here also. From this point we can see the snow-capped mountains. The air is pure and bracing. It is very healthy here. We expect to be off in a short time for Colorado, so no more at this time.

GREEN CITY, WILD CO, COLORADO.
July 3, '78.

Having leisure, I will pen a few lines from this locality. We left Cheyenne yesterday at 2 p. m., and traveled for 50 miles due South, in this Territory, parallel with the snowy range of mountains, the tops of which are covered with perpetual snows. Our travel, to near the town of Greely, was through a rugged and almost barren region, but the moment we were ushered across the irrigating canal, near Greely, we were much surprised at the contrast. I remarked it was like jumping from a desert into a garden. Beautiful fields of wheat, oats, &c., lay upon our right and left, and we halted at the depot and found ourselves in a flourishing town situated on the waters of the south Platte. Here we were met, according to previous arrangement, by Mr. J. A. Pace, and T. M. Barnar of this place, who kindly took us to the town of Evans, three miles distant, where we remained until this morning, when we were brought in conveyances, to this town, 27 miles from Evans.

As the agricultural interests of this Territory depend, in a great measure, upon irrigation, I will give you some details touching the subject. The water has to be conveyed from the river by canals around at the base of the bluffs or high lands and from the main canal, latteral canals are made that conduct the water to the farms, and small ditches carry it over the farms and gardens as it is needed. There are rains in the Spring that generally give the crops a good start, then two to four lettings on of water generally are sufficient to insure a crop. The soil is composed of coarse sand and loam, and at first appearance looks as though it was unproductive, and nothing but actual observation could have persuaded me it was so productive as it is. This country is laid down on our "schools-day" Geography, as a great desert and at first sight it has that appearance, but now it is proven that much of it is susceptible of being made the most productive and valuable lands in the West. Irrigation is yet in its infancy but it has practically proven to be a success. As a proof we mention some instances how sections improve and towns spring up where irrigation is available. The town of Greely is only three years old and contains 1800 inhabitants and a prosperous community surrounding it. Evans, three miles distant, is a town of 600 inhabitants and seems to be flourishing. This town, Green City, is only 14 months old and contains about 25 houses, some of them spacious residences, and a population of 300. A more energetic and prosperous colony I think will be hard to find. What they have done has been accomplished under some disadvantages unknown to other colonies one of which is, they had all their lumber to haul 27 miles, being situated that distance from the Railroad, but will have one soon. They have also, in the few months mentioned, constructed a main canal 17 miles long, (have yet 6 miles to construct), at a cost of 12 to 15 thousand dollars. There is one fill on the canal 746 ft long, 25 feet high, base 100 feet wide, and 25 feet wide at the top, with a plank flume the entire length. This fill alone could not be made for less than $3,000. The canal will inclose about 10,000 acres. This colony bids fair to be very prosperous. How can it be otherwise, where there is manifest such an energetic spirit as is here, and controlled by such men as Mr. Pace and Mr. Barnar, of Va., Dr. White of Md., and others.

As to the great productiveness of the soil there is no doubt. Reliable statistics show that one hundred and fifty tons of beets have been raised to the acre. The average yield of wheat, in the Territory, is 27 bushels to the acre, 75 to 90 per acre have been raised, oats about the same, weighing 45 pounds to the measured bushel, cabbage 60 pound to the head, squashes 150 to 200 pounds haiece. Grass yields enormous crops. It is not so good for corn, but yet good corn can be raised. The elevation here is about 5,000 feet higher than at Omaha. As a stock country, it is hard to surpass; for dairy business it is excellent indeed. As one remarked here "the crowning glory of Colorado is its healthiness of climate," which must be enjoyed in order to have a proper idea of its beauty and exhilarating influence. There is but little sickness here. I have been creditably informed that in one of those colonies of 9,000 inhabitants, there were but two deaths in the last twelve months, and they were invalids when they came here. Many invalids that come here are now enjoying good health. The country is fast settling up and in every respect improving more rapidly than any other Territory in the bounds of the N. American Continent. The mineral resources of Colorado are immense, and there being so many working in the mines gives an excellent market for everything raised here. As to the society here, it is good, and well deserves the term, first class. In this respect, many who come here are surprised. The majority are persons of refinement and religiously inclined, sociable and courteous. Politics are seldom mentioned. King alchohol has a poor show here, in this town, such a thing as a saloon or dramshop is not known, a drunken man is seldom seen. In matters of education, but few sections of country have more flattering prospects than Colorado, a large majority of the public lands being reserved for educational purposes. Teachers must pass a critical examination before they can teach. With all the good reports I had heard of this Territory, I must say I was more favorably impressed than I expected.

WINAMAC, IND., }
June 27, 73. }

Dear brother of the Pilgrim: —I now drop you a few lines, agreeably to your wishes, in regard to church news. We, the brethren and sisters of the Winamac district, held our Communion meeting on the 14 of June, commencing at 10 a. m., and continued next day 'till noon. We believe that many good impressions were made by the preaching of the word and the practicing of the ordinances of the Lord's house.

The following ministering brethren were with us: John Knisley, A. Appleman, A. Eisenhour and W. G. Cook from Union District, David Rupel from Pine Creek and J. S. Snowberger of Monticello, all of Ind. The brethren labored zealously for our every good and we were much built up, for which we tender our grateful acknowledgements. We also held a choice for one speaker and one deacon which resulted as follows: Benjamin Bowsher was called to the ministry, and Jacob Bockover to the deaconship, and your unworthy servant was forwarded to the eldership.

Yours in Christ,
D. R. FREEMAN.

MEMORIUM.

In memory of Christian Miller, whose obituary notice appeared in PILGRIM, No. 17. By the request of some of her friends, I will try and give a sketch of her life. She was born in 1793, in Hampshire Co., of late, Mineral Co., W. Va. She was the daughter of Elder Daniel Arnold and was married to Abraham Miller and moved to Augusta Co, Va., and there raised a family of 11 children, 10 are yet living. She left 67 grandchildren, 53 living, and 29 great-grand-children, 27 living, numbering 107 in all. She was a widow 26 years to the day, and was a member about 57 years. Her late illness was protracted, which she bore with patience and resignation. She was not known to murmur, and would smile at the thought of the time when the change would come. She enjoyed the esteem of all, and died as she lived, without an enemy, with a bright hope of a better world.

S. N. WINE.

Dear Pilgrim: —On June 28 and 29 the brethren of the Desmoines Valley Church, celebrated the Lord's Supper. We had a good meeting, and have reason to believe that the Lord was with us. Three souls was added to the church by baptism, and we think that many more were seriously impressed with the necessity of regeneration and "holiness of life." But how apt our carnal minds are to wait "for a more convenient season." The brethren also held a choice for one minister and two deacons. The lot fell upon brother Samuel Gouchnour for minister, and brethren John Mathias and Jacob Eshleman for deacons.

Yours in love,
D. E. BRUBAKER.

DIED.

SLAGLE.—On June 22, '73, near Pemberton, Shelby Co., O., Elnora, youngest daughter of John W. and Mary C. Slagle, aged 5 mos. and 24 days. Funeral preached by the Rev. Ferguson, from St. Luke 18: 16.

NICHOLAS TRAPP.

FIKE.—In the Mexico Church, Ind., on the 29th of June, 1873, sister Barbara, wife of Bro. Jacob Fike, aged 78 years, 4 mos. and 19 days.

She leaves a husband and many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral by J. Fisher and others from 2: 20 chap., to a large concourse of people. J. B. BAIR.

SNYDER.—In Union Church, Marshall Co., Ind., July 9, '73, Catharine, wife of Adam Snyder, aged 20 years, 8 months and 1 day. She leaves a husband and many kind friends to mourn their loss. She was married about one year. Funeral by the writer. JOHN KNISLEY.

BOWMAN.—In the Cooks Creek Congregation, near Harrisonburg, May 30, '73, the well known and aged brother John Bowman. On Sunday June 1st, his remains were taken to the graveyard near the meeting-house, and committed to the tomb. The occasion was improved by brethren Isaac Long and others from 2 Cor. 5: 1st to a large and attentive congregation.

He leaves a large connection of children, grand-children and great-grand-children, and many sympathizing friends, who mourn the loss of a father, a neighbor and brother. He was an example worthy of imitation. He was in his 84th year.

BOOK NOTICES.

In this department we will notice such NEW BOOKS, as may be sent us by publishers, that are in harmony with the character of our work. A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D., Huntingdon Pa., literary editor.

GERMAN BOOKS.

As is well known, our Church the Brethren) was, and still is, largely of the German element, yet, of late years, the German language is rapidly being displaced by the English. This is much regretted by a large number of our people who think, and rightly too, that the language should be retained. The trouble consisted in not having it taught in our public schools. We are glad to learn that of late, public sentiment has been changed in favor of the German and is now being substituted for some of the other languages and even in the great seats of learning the question of substituting it for that of Greek has been gravely discussed.

Another impediment in the way of study of German was a want of proper rudimentary text books. This want is now fully supplied in Ahn's Rudimentary German Series, published by Mr. Steiger, which consists of the following books:

AHN'S First German Book. By Dr. P. Henn. (Exercises in reading, writing, spelling, translation, and conversation. Printed in bold type, and containing a very large amount of German Script. Designed for the two lowest grades.) Boards $0.25.

AHN'S Second German Book. By Dr. P. Henn. (Exercises in writing, reading, translation, and conversation. Containing much German Script. A sequel to the First German Book. With Paradigms and Vocabularies of all German and English words occurring in both these books.) Boards $0.45.

These two books together form:

AHN'S Rudiments of the German Language. By Dr. P. Henn. (With vocabularies. Edition of 1873.) Boards $0.65.

Key to AHN'S Rudiments of the German Language. By Dr. P. Henn. Boards $0.25.

We have received and given the above works a very careful examination and have no hesitancy in pronouncing them the best of their class that ever came under our notice. They lead the scholar so gradually, and the words and sentences used are so simple and familiar that it makes the study of German both easy and pleasant, even without the aid of a teacher. Mr. Steiger publishes a number of other German works which, for the accommodation of our patrons, we will notice when received. Any of the books will be sent at the annexed prices by addressing, E. STEIGER,

Nos. 22 & 24, Frankfort Street, N. Y.

TWICE CROWNED, is the title of a book published by Claxton Remson & Co. of Philadelphia, giving in detail, in the form of a story, many incidents in the reign of Queen Mary sometimes called "Bloody Mary." The story opens during the closing months of the peaceful reign of King Edward VI of England; gives details of the fate of the martyr, Lady Jane Grey—the ten days of royalty—followed by that of Queen Mary with its cruelties, persecutions and martyrdoms; the dark fiendish plottings of Gardenier and Bonner, bearing the sacred titles of Bishop yet the "master spirits" of those dark days and that reign of terror; and the commencement of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

The Twice Crowned Queen was Lettice Kenworthy, daughter of the lodge keeper of the Earl of Carrington; first crowned "May Queen," and again, four years afterward, amidst the "fires of Smithfield" her second crowning, this time with the crown of glory.

Let the young of America beware and know where they stand—for simple Gospel Truth or dark corrupting error, which? And as they read these historical facts may they cherish more devoutly the blessings they enjoy, and rejoice in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free." Price $1.50.

HOME OF GOD'S CHILDREN

Where, where is the home of God's children?
Oh say, will you please tell me where?
For we know it's a home of great beauty,
And free from all sorrow and care?

Is it on a green isle in the ocean,
Beneath blue and unclouded skies;
And far from dark scenes of trouble,
That the home of God's children lies?

Or is it in some faraway valley,
Unmarked by the foot-steps of care;
And surrounded by high purple mountains,
That will not let death enter there?

Or perhaps by the side of still waters,
Where birds sing, and sweet flowers bloom;
In a land yet unseen by a mortal,
Is it there—that beautiful home?

We would know, for our two little treasures
Have been called by our Father away,
To dwell in the home of God's children,
While we here in loneliness stay.

We oft grieve that they so soon have left us,
And our home is so lonely and drear,
Since we catch not the sound of their foot-steps,
Nor their sweet childish voices we hear.

Oh yes, now we know, it is with Jesus,
He calls them as lambs to His fold;
It is there—the bright home of God's children,
In a region of glory untold.

And we know that our dear little children
Are among the bright things in that land,
And in safety are kept by the Shepherd
And fed by His bountiful hand.

It is not on an isle in the ocean,
No, nor yet in a vale far away,
But it is by the side of still waters
And Jesus is with them to stay.

Far away in the storm-clouds of sorrow,
From sickness, temptation and care—
For each in His own home of glory,
He's prepared a bright dwelling place there.

And it is by the side of life's river,
Where pastures and bright flowers grow,
That He leads our Mamie and Charlie,
And they are quite happy we know.

They are free from the fruits of transgression,
From sorrow, vexation and pain,
And we pray Thee, Oh Jesus, to help us
To meet them in glory again.

And there a small family united,
We will gather around Thy white throne,
To praise and adore Thee our Savior,
In the home of God's children—sweet home.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE ANOINTING OF JESUS.

There is, I believe, not a point of duty in preaching the Gospel by the Brethren, more neglected than the anointing of Jesus. That He was anointed by a woman at Bethany, six days before His death, is evident from the Scriptures.—See Jno. 12. And that the Son of God commanded it to be preached, as a memorial to her, is twice recorded. Why is it not done when the Savior says it shall be done? Matthew and Mark say, "A woman came to Jesus, having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on His head, as He sat at meat."—But it appears that some took indignation, thought it to be a waste, and that it would be more profitable to have it sold, and the money appropriated to the support of the poor. But saith the Savior, "Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me. For ye have the poor always with you; but one ye have not always, For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial. Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."—Matt. 26: 13 Mark 14: 9. Turn to John Chap. 21, and you will find this woman to be Mary, the sister of Lazarus, whom Jesus had raised up from the dead. It was that Mary who sat at the feet of Jesus, so attentively listening unto His wholesome discourses while her sister Martha was concerned with many things, and requested Him to tell her to assist. But Jesus saith, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her." Behold that pious sister! How deeply her love was rooted toward her lovely Savior! She even forgot temporal service, and Jesus recommended it as a good part, and the only thing needful.

Let our sisters learn a lesson who are concered so much in serving when entertaining visitors. Do not be superfluous in furnishing your tables, thereby only throwing out temptations for intemperance. Let us all guard against unnecessary cares of worldly things, lest we might neglect the one thing needful. Mary, by being so much attached to her Master, as seen at the death of Lazarus, her brother, when she met Jesus she fell down at His feet saying, "Lord if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Jesus evinced to the world that He loved her, and regarded her as a woman of extraordinary merit. The Jews likewise, regarded this family as a notable one, because they wept with Mary when they came to comfort them; Jesus saw them weeping. O what a tender feeling our lovely Savior has! He "groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, yea, "Jesus wept." Connecting together all these circumstances of natural attachment, and Divine principles of Holy love, we come to the conclusion that Mary, through influences from Heaven, was moved, with the costly odorous Spikenard to anoint the Lord of life and glory: anticipating the enbalming of His body for His burial, which otherwise could not have been done, as we shall soon notice. Solomon in his songs alluded to this act so nobly executed by the foreknowledge of God.—Cant. 1, 2, 3. "Let him kiss me with the kisses of my mouth: thy love is better than wine, because of the savor of thy good ointments, thy name is an ointment poured forth; therefore do the Virgins love thee." We read "the house was filled with the odor of the ointment." O, the glorious act of the godly woman, worthy to be spoken of in all the land, where the Gospel is preached, as a memorial to her. "For she hath done what she could do; She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying."—Mark 14; 8

Brethren you know that Christ died on the cross according to Scripture.—Now as the type of Christ, the Paschal Lamb in Egypt, had to be slain between evening, at the going down of the sun, so Jesus the antetype, had to expire at the precise time in the day, which we presume 3 o'clock according to our reckoning. The next day being the Sabbath, time would not then admit to enbalm his body for his burial, hence Joseph and Nicodemus took him hastily from the cross and laid him into a sepulcher near by, or near at hand; and the women that followed, returned and prepared spices and ointment, but rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandment.—See Luke 23: 56.

But alas, alas! their design was prevented through the interposition of God who raised him from the dead, early the first day of the week before the holy women could enbalm him. Had it not been for the foresight of pious Mary, the body of Jesus, the anointed of God, inorder to introduce the Gospel, the glad tidings of man's salvation and the substitute for sinners, would not have had the honor of being anointed. Inasmuch then as it appears to be needful to embalm His body for His burial, as shown by His own declaration; consequently we conclude that had Christ's body remained without burial, the whole fabric of God's arrangement would be destroyed.—This may be a strange idea to some, hence I will give a reason for this expression. It is clearly prophesied by David and the Savior that He was to be buried. If this prophecy had failed, it would have proved God's inability to accomplish His design, and in consequence man's reliance on His promises would be lost, yea, lost forever! Hence we see that it is doubly important to often speak of the noble act of Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, according to the injunction of our Master, "Wheresoever we preach the Gospel as a memorial of her.

Brethren let us consider it as a part of the Gospel, as it truly is. Now non-enbalming, we may reasonably include, might have prevented the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is the crowning point of our Religion, and without it our faith would be in vain, and our hope among all men most miserable. Hence I exhort, I admonish, preach the word, and do not forget that this part also belongs to the word.

In conclusion I would say to the dear readers of the PILGRIM who have no just claim to be called the adopted children of God, be cautious, reflect upon your condition. Your day of grace may be closed any moment and if you die unreconciled to God, you cannot expect to meet His approbation; your doom will be banishment from the presence of the Lord forever. Hence come to Jesus, obey His commandments, secure the one thing needful speedily, and continue faithful unto the end, and I assure you it will be well with you, and that good part will never be taken from you. May we all live a life devoted to God and His holy service, until the Lord will take us home to meet together in the blessed climes of immortality to forever bask in the smiles of a reconciled God, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

LEONARD FURRY.

TYPES.

Having said thus much concerning persons who in their natural characters, actions and fortunes are declared to have been types of future persons and events, it remains to speak of events happening to the ancient church and people of God, which by the circumstances wherewith they were accompanied, are shown to have been typical of greater events that were to happen to the people of God under the gospel dispensation. Now concerning these, we have two observations to make. The first is that the things respecting the ancient people of God, which prefigured the greater things to happen to the people of God under the gospel dispensation, were in some instances foretold before they happened to the ancient people. Our second observation is that the prediction of these figurative events were also predictions of the event which they prefigured of this double sense of prophecy. Various instances might be given, suffice it however, to mention one instance only: namely, the deliverance of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity and their restoration to the land of Canaan. These, though natural events, prefigured the much greater and more important deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin, and their introduction into the heavenly Canaan, for in the writings of the Evangelists passages of the prophecies, which foretold the deliverance from Babylon, are applied to that greater deliverance, for example, Isaiah 40: 2,3, is said by Matt. 3: 3, and by our Lord himself, Matt. 11: 10, to have been fulfilled by John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea; yet these verses in their first and literal meaning, evidently relate to the return of the Jews from Babylon, for Isaiah in the end of chapter 39, having foretold that all the riches of his palaces, which Hezekiah had shown to the messengers of the king of Babylon, should be carried away to Babylon, and that his sons should be carried thither captives, and made Eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon. The prophet in this 40th chapter mitigates the severity of that prediction, by foretelling that while the Jews were oppressed with the miseries of their captivity, God would order his prophets who were among them to comfort his people by assuring them that their captivity would at length come to an end, because considering their sufferings as a sufficient punishment for their sins as a nation, he would pardon and restore them to their own land. 2 verse. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned, for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." The people in Babylon being thus assured that they were to be brought back to Judea, the first thought, as B. South observes, which would occur to the captives, would be the difficulty and danger of their passing through the deserts of Arabia, where the nearest way from Babylon to Jerusalem lay. Wherefore the prophets in Babylon, to remove the fears of the people, were ordered to assure them that by whatsoever road they should return, it would be made commodious for their safe passage, and this assurance the prophets would give them in language taken from the custom of the Eastern princes, who, when they were about to march with their armies through difficult roads, sent pioneers before them to widen the narrow passes, to fill up the hollows, to level the heights and to smooth the rough ways through which they were to march. Verse 34, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert an high way for our God; every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain." By these images the prophets intimated that God was to march from Babylon at the head of his people to protect them during their journey, and to bring them safely into Judea. These things are more plainly expressed, Isaiah 52: 12, "Ye shall not go out with haste nor by flight: for the Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your reward." But although this whole prophecy in its first and literal meaning, evidently relates to the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon, the application of the above cited passage to the preaching of John the Baptist by the Evangelist Matthew, and by our Lord himself, showeth plainly that the prophecies concerning the deliverance of the people of God from the Babylonish captivity, had a second and higher meaning, of which the literal sense was the sign. By foretelling the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon, these prophecies foretold the deliverance of mankind from the infinitely worse bondage of sin. Moreover the command to the prophets in Babylon to comfort God's people by announcing that their sins were pardoned, and that they were soon to be bro't back to their own land, was a command to the ministers of the gospel in every age; to comfort penitent believers by assuring them that their sins shall be pardoned, and that Christ will bring them safely into the heavenly country, (of which the restoration of the Jews to Canaan was an emblem and pledge,) because he hath successfully removed all obstacles out of their way. The preparation of the way of the Lord among the Jews by the preaching of John the Baptist, was fully expressed by the voice of one crying in the wilderness. The Jewish Church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of the Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit, without reformation, for the reception of her king. It was in this desert country, destitute at that time of all religious cultivation, in true piety and good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance. A series of prophecies delivered probably toward the close of the reign of Hesekiah, from chap. 40 to 66 of Isaiah. This portion of the prophet's prediction constitutes the most elegant part, not merely of his writings, but of the whole Old Testament. The chief subject is the restoration of the Church. These prophecies are introduced with a promise of the restoration of the kingdom, and the return from the captivity in Babylon. The redemption from Babylon is employed as a type to shadow out a redemption of infinitely higher nature: the prophet so connecting these two events as scarcely ever to treat of the former without introducing some allusion to the latter. LED BY THE SPIRIT.

For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. Rom. 8: 14.

As all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable &c., I thought to pen down a few thoughts upon the above.

1st. Led or leading.
2d. The spirit and its unity.
3d. The sons of God.

Now rationally speaking, when anything is led, there must be a leader, and it cannot be led unless it becomes subject to the leader, either by persuasion or by being overpowered. Lead means to guide or go before. Now to define this more fully, we will take a horse or a colt from the pasture; his master bridles him, but not being accustomed to leading he attempts to run the opposite direction, but as soon as he is overpowered or subdued he becomes subject, then he can be led. Now when we see our depraved selves, the awful calamity that is awaiting us, and that we are nothing of ourselves, then we feel the need of a leader, but before we are ready to be led we will require some knowledge of the leader. "But no man hath seen God at any time, the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of the Father he hath declared him." John 1: 18. Now let us hear the Son, "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4: 24. The apostle confirms the same and says, "Now the Lord is that spirit," 2 Cor. 3: 17. Then if we are led by that spirit we will be led in the service of God, led to do what that spirit dictates unto us, led to follow Christ in the way, as Paul says, "walk in the spirit and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." "But if ye be led by the spirit ye are not under the law." Now we must be in possession of the spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. Those two spirits are very closely connected. "I and my Father are one." John 10: 30. "I am in the Father, and the Father in me." John 14: 10. The apostle says, "But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit." 1 Cor. 9: 17. Then we can be joined in spirit. The Savior's reasoning concerning man and wife is similar to this, "And they twain shall be one flesh," not one in body, not one in person, but united in the bonds of love, joined in heart. Christ in his prayer, for the apostles prayed for the unity, says, "That they all may be one; as thou, Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one even as we are one." John 17: 21-22. Then we would understand that we are to be perfectly joined together, of the same mind, same judgment, and speak the same thing: become entirely submissive, subject to the Church and to the gospel, and Paul-like, "do all things without murmuring and disputing." Then we are fit subjects to commune. Then what is Communion? Paul says, "For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread." 1 Cor. 10 17. We do not understand Paul to mean that that bread should be in one lump, but composed of the same material, composed of many grains of wheat, combined together so we cannot distinguish one from the other; they all resemble each other. In the previous verse he speaks of the cup of blessing which is composed of the juice of many grapes, all resembling each other, but combined, united, in one body. Now when we are thus united, when that oneness exists, and we resemble each other in outward appearance, we then have a union, and there can be a Communion. John says, "Beloved we now are the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." 1 John 3: 2. And Paul says, "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us, for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."—Rom. 8: 18-19.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The Christian life is a warfare, and if the victory is to be won, it requires a valiantness, because our foe is a mighty one. He has had long and constant drilling. He has won many a victory, and when he failed it was of small importance to him, except in the few battles which he fought with our Captain IMMANUEL. But now our captain has given us our orders and has, Himself, gone before. Then ho! ye fellow-soldiers of the cross, wake ye up and to your arms. Carnal weapons, of the most deadly sort, are too weak for us. To trust in them would be to lean upon a broken reed which pierces the weary hand. But ah, we have the weapon of warfare which is "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Such a weapon is the sword of the Spirit. We want none of your two edged swords, but something sharper, which pierces even to the dividing asunder of joint and marrow, of soul and spirit, and which discerneth the thoughts and intents of the heart. Not Solomons' sword, which affrighted the harlot to the inevitable confession, but that sharp sword which "goeth out of his mouth, that with it he should smite the nations." Then, onward ye soldiers of the cross, and let your watch-word be the "rod of iron" which shrinketh not nor stretcheth not; it bendeth not nor wasteth not, and with it he shall rule the nations, and treadeth the vinepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. "Put ye on the whole armor of God, the girdle of truth, the breast-plate of righteousness, the preparation of the Gospel of peace, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the sword of the spirit, praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit." LOVE.

Dear brethren and sisters, I fear there is not as much love in the Church as there should be. Surely there is not one who has tasted the sweets of redeeming love who would be unwilling to give up everything for the pearl of great price, the blessing of perfect love. O, ye that are convinced of the necessity of being holy, and still feel your hearts to be cold and hard, all that you can do is to just give your whole selves to Jesus, just as you are, and He will soften and purify your hearts and fill you with His perfect love. Dear brethren and sisters, our Savior has manifested His love toward us in many ways. First he sent His only begotten Son to die on the cross, all for the love of this sinful world. I feel thankful this evening that God had so much love for me that He opened my eyes and showed me my awful condition, and pardoned my sins before it was forever too late. I feel sorry to think that there is so many that will not hear the loving words of the Savior when He says, "Come unto Me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Dear brethren, I think many more would enlist under the blessed banner of our Savior, if they could follow all the fashions and maxims of the world, but dear friends, remember you cannot take any of your enjoyments along when the rider comes on the pale horse and seizes you. Remember there is no repentance in the grave, no pardon offered to the dead. Sinner, stop before it is forever too late. AMANDA ANDERSON.

WE SEEK A CITY TO COME.

For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come."

How true this is, that we have no abiding city here. When we look around us and see the great works of art, and how soon all must be dissolved, yes, very soon shall the great splendor and vain pomp of this world be cast down. Often do our minds recur to the great Celestial City, where sin and sorrow never molest. Oh, to see the vanities of this sinful world, it causes us to wish for the glorious event when we shall see the New Jerusalem descending and the King of glory seated on His throne to dwell with His saints a thousand years when the meek shall inherit the earth, and, be no sin nor sorrow to mar their sweet fellowship and peace on earth. They shall come up to the Holy City to worship every year. Oh, that glorious Millenium! Shall we be so happy as to dwell with the King during this period? Shall we arise to meet Him in the air? Oh, what a meeting that will be! Sweet to think that we shall drop this mortality and put on immortality; to be free from sin and temptation and meet together in the Holy City. We can there see the faces of all our dear ones on earth, in that glorious meeting. May we, as a dear family of Christ, reign with Him where all is harmony and love. Brethren and sisters, let us be more engaged in prayer and meditation. It is this that sets our affections above. Let us, each day, pray for wisdom to show us the path of duty, strive to know our own misgivings, pray for more faith that we may desire the sweet hour of prayer.

"Till from Mount Pisgah's lofty height
I'll view my home and take my flight,
This robe of flesh I'll drop and rise,
To seize the everlasting prize."

A God-like man is the only godly man; a Christ-like nature brought into the soul doth only denominate a man a true Christian.

UNCONSCIOUS INFLUENCE

It is said that among the high Alps at certain seasons the traveler is told to proceed very quietly, for on the slopes overhead the snow hangs so evenly balanced that the sound of a voice, or the report of a gun, may destroy the equilibrium and bring down an immense avalanche that will overwhelm everything in ruin in its downward path. And so about our way, there may be a soul in the very crisis of its mortal history, trembling between life and death, and a mere touch or shadow may determine its destiny. A young lady who was deeply impressed with the truth, and was ready, under a conviction of sin, to ask, "what must I do to be saved?" had all her solemn impressions dissipated by the unseemly jesting of a member of the church by her side as she passed out of the sanctuary. Her irreverent and worldly spirit cast a repellant shadow on that young lady not far from the kingdom of God. How important that we should always and everywhere walk worthy of our high calling as Christians?

Let us remember that we are always casting the shadow of our real life upon some one; that somebody is following us, as John followed Peter into the sepulchre. Happy if we when all the influences of life flow back and meet us at the judgment, we can lift up clean hands and spotless robes and say, "I am pure from the blood of all men!" Happy then to hear even one soul saying to us out of the great multitude, that following the shadow of our Christian life and devotion, he found Jesus and Heaven.—Christian.

"HE SHALL SIT AS A REFINER."

Mal. iii. 3.

This beautiful allusion of the prophet finds a very striking illustration in the process of preparing our precious metals for the mint. After several preparatory steps, the bullion is taken to the refiner, where it is put into a cup, and melted under a blast of atmospheric air. The oxygen of the air uniting with its impurities, forms a litherage, or scum which is absorbed by a preparation put into the cup for that purpose, or carried over the edge of the cup by the blast, This is called cupellation, and immediately on its termination the beautiful phenomena of brightening is seen. Just as the last trace of alloy clears from the silver a peculiar bright and vivid flash seems to cover the whole bath, and for an instant every brick in the arch of the furnace above is perfectly reflected as from a mirror. So to the individual as well as to the Church, the coming of Christ is ever as a refiner of silver. He comes in his word, by the illumination of his spirit, eliminate the base metals of error and superstition.

He comes in the mysteriousness of our new spiritual life with a vitality that throws off the old man with his deeds, and clothes us with the new man. "Sitting" is indicative of the carefulness and importance of the operation. So Christ superintends this work of grace in us with matchless skill. Brother, it may seem the heat is too intense or too protracted, but the refiner knows. It is not to punish us, or to note the quantity of dross that is carried off, that we are tried in this fiery trial, but that his own image may shine forth in our hearts and lives.—Rev. D. H. Strong.

BUILDING CHARACTER.

SELECTED.

There is a structure which every body is building, young and old, each for himself. It it is called Character, and every act of life is a stone. If day by day we be careful to build our lives with pure noble upright deeds, at the end will stand a fair temple, honored by God and man. But as one leak will sink a ship, and one flaw break a chain, so one mean, dishonorable, untruthful act or word will forever leave its impress and work its influence on our character. Then let the several deeds unite to form a day and one by one the days grow into noble years, and the years, as they slowly pass, will raise at last a beautiful edifice, endearing forever to our praise.

H. BEELMAN.

PRAYER.

Nothing can destroy a real prayer: its flight to the throne is swift and certain. God will not fail you, though you fail yourself. Though you faint, he fainteth not, neither is weary.—Lift up your cry, and he will lift up his hand. Go to your knees, you are stronger there; resort to your chamber, and it shall be to you none other than the gate of heaven. Tell your God your grief; heavy to you, it will be light enough to Him. Dilemmas will all be plain to his wisdom, and difficulties will vanish before his strength.—Oh, tell it not in Gath that Israel cannot trust in God; Publish it not in the streets of Askelon that trouble can dismay those who lean upon the Eternal arm. With Jehovah in the van, O hosts of Israel, dare ye fear? The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. What man's heart shall quail, or what soul shall faint? Lift up the hands that hang down and confirm the feeble knees. Say unto the feeble in heart, "Be strong; fear not. God is with you; he will help you, and that right early."—Christian.

LIFE AND ITS OBJECT.

Our short life shou'd not give us much concern. My mind is like a piece of ground which being overrun with weeds which no diligence can render quite clean, no care keep them from appearing again, even after they have been plucked away. Surely so it fares with me and my sinful anxieties. They are ever springing up anew and troubling me and nothing will utterly and entirely destroy them, till the ground be turned up by the plow of death and left fallow till the resurrection. Yet that I be not barren and unfaithful in the work of the Lord, let the busy hand of faith be ever plucking up the base weeds of unbelief.

Again, why am I so much concerned about a world I am so soon to leave? Were my possessions to fall on tother side of Jordan, and I, to inhabit here forever, what more could I do than I have done, and am doing? Yet I am but a stranger, a sojourner and a pilgrim; here to-night but gone to-morrow to return no more, yea this night what dare I boast of to-morrow, not knowing what the silent watches of the night may bring forth. And if not of a day, far less of mercy, may I boast. It is but a look and I have lost sight of this world eternally. Why then set my heart on that which shall one time or other so terribly deceive me. A few moments, and my eternal state is begun and I am in the world of spirits, and dashed out of the roll of the sons of men, yea out of the remembrance of all my nearest relations. Should I then be over careful of what entertainment I meet with by the way. If I may make a happy journey I ought to think more on my home than on my usage by the way. Surely one should be ready to think that men carried their riches to eternity with them, yea, and more welcome on that account, or why these unwearied endeavors and perpetual bereavings of rest to obtain them? O, folly that I concern myself with moments and neglect eternity, fear that I should be distressed about a day which scarce has dawned till done, and dwell not with joy in ages to come, faithlessness that I should doubt the promise, yea the appendix to the promise for salvation from sin and eternal life, is the promise.

Now though my whole life were one scene of affliction, yet the very shortness of it, might sweeten it tho' it be a vapor, a shadow, a wind that passeth away, surely the attending calamities can be of no longer continuance than that duration upon which they attend. Nothing can pass from this world to that but my disembodied immortality. I see that my concern turns on a wrong hinge and my case terminates on a trifle. All my concern should be, not to provide for the few moments of this life, but to improve for endless eternity, and that one which I expend on the vanities of time and how to be possessed of them. I should lay out in piety on the treasures of glory and to prepare for the divine possession. Well may I commit to him the bearing of my charges, by the way, who has adopted me for His son and made me an heir of His kingdom.

A PILGRIM.

SELF DENIAL.

Self denial is an important lesson that all should learn. If we do not learn it in youth we may grow up to be very unhappy men and women. It is rather hard sometimes, to control our own selfish desires, but we will find by so doing that we accomplish a great many good things.

Have you ever noticed the difference among your playmates, between one who tries to make everything pleasant and he who does not?

On the other hand notice a child that is of a selfish disposition and does not try to cultivate a generous one; such a one will indulge in sin and folly more and more as he grows older, and will finally become miserable himself. No little children will go to such, expecting to find a place in their affection, for their very selfishness will cause every one to turn from them, feeling that in their hearts there is no warmth.

We all like good generous people. Then let us try to cultivate generosity, which we may do by first practicing self denial. May we ever remember this important theme, for a great deal of the trouble in after life is the consequence of its neglect. Would we were all wise enough to know that a good hearted, self-denying, generous person exerts an influence that will live throughout time and to all eternity.

THE SYMPATHY OF CHRIST.

No softer blows the southern breeze in spring, than breathes the sympathetic life of Christ among the cruel crags of human selfishness and hate. No name so utters from its every letter the tender tones of sympathy; as the name of Jesus. In this respect as in all his life, he towers above all competing lives, as Mount Blanc above his fellows. As he lived and moved in Palestine, Christ was in the simplest and completest sense of the term, a sympathetic man. There was nothing false or forced about his sympathy. Honest, and as if instinctively, it broke forth from his heart on every occasion. From the bridal party of Cana to the bier of Nain, it flowed through all grades of want and woe like a crystal brook through a hundred thirsty fields. No two words ever written or any other, considered among all their surroundings, reveal so much of this as those sister words forever associated with the sorrowing sister: "Jesus wept." But a man sits on the throne today. As the God man lived on earth, so the man God lives in heaven His human sympathy that beat in his heart here, in like manner throbs there. He is the same human friend of humanity now, that he was in the kitchen of Mary and Martha. With the same sympathy with which he met the widow at the gate of Nain, he meets the believing widow at the gate of grief, giving now as then, the true sympathy of a perfect man. A human heart is on the mediatorial throne. If he considers mortal pains and common griefs in Judea once, he regards them in America now. Believe it my brother, believe it, my sister, eighteen centuries have built no stone wall between the Redeemer and his redeemed. "Jesus Christ" of Nazareth " is the same yesterday, to day, and forever."

Religious News.

THE Baltimore papers state that two young men of great promise, who have been studying for the Episcopal ministry, have applied to the Rev. Dr. Fuller to study for the Baptist pulpit under his direction. They addressed the Eutaw Place Baptist church two successive Wednesday evenings, and were received for baptism.

A HEBREW Theological Seminary is the latest step in the way of education. Obviously it is a want of the country and the age. As the number of Jews is great, and increasing in wealth and influence, it is natural that they should desire a ministry of culture and learning. There are more Jews in New York than in Jerusalem.

THE Pope has publicly expressed his great regret that the clergy of his Church attended the funeral of the Italian statesman Ratazzi. He said: "The priests showed themselves greater courtiers than ministers of God." But the priests are beginning to do as they please, whether the Pope likes it or not. It is hard to keep his sheep from jumping over the fence.

THE great sensation of the day, is Prof. Wise's trip to Europe in a baloon. The preparations will soon be completed and the trip will be attempted some time during next month. The Domestic Sewing Machine Co., sends one of their machines along, with the understaoding that it is to be used as ballast if needed. This seems to be a dangerous experiment but those concerned are sanguine in their expectations. They take with them, bedding, provisions, writing tables and everything necessary to give a correct report of their trip, also a boat for their use, in case they should drop into the ocean.

IN England and Scotland they have what they call the established Church. This Church and its ministers are supported by taxation or the same as our civil government. This, to the other denominations, is becoming burthensome as they, in addition to supporting their ministry are compelled to pay their full quota towards supporting the Established or Episcopal Church. On the 6th of May a motion was presented to the House of Commons against it but was lost by a vote of 356 against 51 in favor.

THE following statement was made, under oath, by a Roman Catholic priest on Ward's Island, New York, on the 9th day of July 1873.

"I believe I have divine authority to secure Protestant children from their Protestant mothers and MAKE them Catholics. I deny the right of the Protestant minister to do the same."

This is showing the Catholic color pretty clearly. The proselyting spirit is unabated and it will be well for our parents to be on their guard. The New York Observer makes the following remarks: "Will you place your son or daughter in a Roman Catholic school, or one in which by any possibility the influence of a Roman Catholic may be brought to bear upon the youthful mind? What can you expect but that your unsuspecting child will be seduced into the Church that does not hesitate to avow such an infamous system as this priest professes? Your child may not admit to you her apostasy. She will be taught to conceal and deny it if necessary. But she will be ruined by such influences as this shameless priest employs, and you are to be held responsible before God for the destruction of your own child."

REV Edward O. Forney of the Norristown Pa. Reformed Church has toppled over into Catholicism.

Our Church Paper gives the following apt comparison: "A good old German Prince once wanted a safe coachman. Of those who were bro't before him for the place, he inquired how near to a terrible precipice they could safely drive, and keep the carriage from tumbling over. One could go within a yard. Others could do it better still—say within a foot. An expert could drive within an inch or two. One more quiet than the rest, said he never yet tried how near he could go, since his aim was always to keep as far as possible from danger. He was employed to do the driving for a Prince, who valued his own neck and safety. That is the spir-in which we are to treat this Romanizing tendency. We once thought we ought to be also of those who, with profound skill tried to drive very near the verge, so that looking down into the dangerous chasm, they could see the horrible depths of sin below. Now after seeing others of such boasted skill, topping over and tumbling in one after another, we have come to the conclusion that it is safer to keep away from the dangerous gulf."

Just so, the men are not so much to blame as the Church. Mercersburg has long, been playing the foolhardy, experiment of trying how close they could drive, to Catholicism, thinking that they might thereby get some of them to ride in their coach, but the results prove it to be a failure, as some of their best passengers stepped over into the Catholic coach. It should be remembered that when men offer to go half way towards meeting the devil they always lose, as he keeps good coaches. That new "Confession of Faith" is a close drive, very close, and no wonder there is an occasional tipping over.

Youth's Department.

EARLY PIETY.

Amongst those things that have most influence over the minds of men are profit and pleasure. While recommending early piety to you, think not that I wish to render you poor or unhappy; far from it. I rather wish you to be truly rich and truly happy, not merely for the little span in which the earthly pleasures or riches are enjoyed, but forever and ever. Where is that treasure to be found that will enrich you for eternity? Not amidst the wealth of this world. Man knows not the price thereof, neither is it found in the land of the living. The depth saith, it is not in me, it cannot be had for gold. Where are they that, but a few years back, possessed pleasure and honors, parks and palaces, and crowns and kingdoms. All vanished from the world. While entreating you to pursue more solid good, I would recount to you some of the advantages of religion of youth. Early piety is comparatively easy. The total corruption of man's heart is such, that at every period of life there are difficulties in turning to God. At any time it is needful to strive to enter the strait gate, but it is much easier to turn to God in our youth than it is in later years. The heart is not so much hardened as it is by a longer life in sin and folly. The mind is not so hard to instruct as it is when prejudices have so darkened all its faculties as almost to exclude the heavenly light when sin has long reigned triumphantly, when satan has long led the sinner captive. It is hard to escape from this tyranny, and many have experienced this. The Scriptures confirm the doctrine of the difficulty of conversion late in life. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?" "Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil." In this sense, we may apply, with propriety, the words of Nicodemus: "Can a man be born when he is old?" When is it that disease is most easily checked? Not when it has laid fast hold on the vitals, but when its first symptoms appear. When is it that the mistaken traveler may most easily forsake the wrong and return to the right path? Not when he has traveled for miles in a wrong direction, but when he enters that way. Were you rushing down a steep hill, when might you easily stop? Not when you had nearly reached the bottom, but when you began to descend, so as the poet says:

'Tis easier work if you begin,
To serve the Lord betimes;
While sinners that grow old in sin,
Grow hardened in their crimes.

In another view, early religion is comparatively easy. There is reason to believe that God will sooner hear your prayers for mercy and grant more peace and pardon if you turn to him at once, than if you refuse from time to time to heed his calls. If you delay to comply with the means of grace it may lead you through scenes of doubt and pain and fear which but for these refusals you would have never known.

Early religion has frequently to surmount many discouragements which may render it more acceptable to him, who tries, in various ways, the faith of his disciples. It is pleasing to him to see his young followers overcoming the world and pressing on to heaven in spite of all that is done to hinder them. Young persons are most apt to be pleased with the follies and vanities of a sinful world, its theatres, novels, romances and other time-wasting and sinful pleasures, having frequently more charms for them than for those of riper years, and by them, its laugh is often more dreaded. Thus, those who will be seriously religious must not always expect to escape ridicule. It is one of satan's grand weapons when his servants cannot pursuade others out of serving God, they try to laugh them out of it, so that we need not be surprised if we hear the true christian ridiculed.

Another advantage of early religion is, that its possessors avoid the evil of an entirely unprofitable life. When Paul sent one sinner who had been a dishonest fugative slave, back to his master Philemon, he spoke of him as one that had been unprofitable but was now profitable to the apostle himself and to his former employer. It is, my young friends, an awful fact that while destitute of early religion, you answer none of the ends of your creation, you are unprofitable to God for you bring him no glory. You are unprofitable to the world around you; your associates are not encouraged by your example to follow the way of peace, but by your negligence and folly, are hardened in their sin. You are unprofitable to your dearest friends, if they are the friends of God—instead of cheering them by your piety, your religion is their grief and sorrow and if they are unacquainted with the Gospel, instead of trying to lead them to seek its blessings, you go along with them to destruction. You are unprofitable to yourself, for alas, while negligent of obeying God you are adding sin upon sin and are making the heavy load of your transgressions heavier, are filling up the measures of your iniquities and thus you are heaping up wrath against the day of wrath. O wretched youth, and would you live a cumberer of the ground, useless as the thistle, barely as the deadly nightshade, and in the sight of God, more hateful than the poisonous serpent. Were it even certain that God would spare you to repent at some future time, yet thro' mere delay, how many barren and worse than useless years would you pass. The late convert loses much peace and joy, much holiness and happiness and many opportunities of serving God, and much of that grace of which even the youngest never obtain enough.

Grow in grace is a work of time. An infant does not, in an hour, obtain the strength and vigor, the comeliness and stature of manhood. Though an infant has all the parts of the future man, he has them in a weaker state. The new convert compared with the confirmed Christian, is like an infant. He is in Christ, yet but a little child. He is possessed of the same disposition as the more confirmed Christian, but in a weaker state, and by the growth of years, graces are brought nearer to perfection. So universally is this the case that even the apostle Paul, not long before his martyrdom, after being almost thirty years a Christian and an apostle, still declared that "forgetting the things that were behind he reached unto those that were before," and asserted that he was not perfect. O, how much of divine grace must they lose whose best years slide away before the work of life is begun. Those years that might be beneficial to themselves are but a dismal blank, are years marked with the stains of ingratitude and sin. Should you delay obeying the Gospel you will lose much grace here, and then may expect to lose much glory hereafter, and even a pardoned penitent at last you might have to utter such a wish as the celebrated Earl of Rochester is said to have uttered. He wished he had been a crawling leper in a ditch, a link boy or a beggar, or had lived in a dungeon rather than to dishonor God as he had done. But my young friends, reverse this scene. Imagine religion to be your early choice, Jesus chosen as your Lord and prize, as your salvation, and God adored as your helper, and O, how changed do all things appear! Then would you, in some humble measure, glorify His dear name who bought you with His precious blood, then would you recommend His Gospel and display the influence of his love; then, though you would feel yourself an unprofitable servant, an unworthy creature, yet your five talents, or two or one would be employed for the honor of your loving Lord. Early religion would cause you to glorify God, His name would be honored by you, His will done in you, His glory promoted in your life and advanced by your example. Then, too, would you be profitable to your dearest friends. Are they pious? How they would rejoice over you, and lay down their heads more calmly in the dust when leaving a beloved child to fill up the place in the Church of Christ below, when they depart to that above. O my young friends, if you have parents whose prayers have long ascended to God in your behalf, gladden their hearts by choosing their God for yours. Let them say over you, "This my son, or this my daughter was dead and is alive again, was lost and is found." But perhaps you reply, my parents and friends are altogether unacquainted with religion they live careless of the service of God, and have taught me to do the same. Alas, if this be the case it is a lamentable one, yet perhaps youthful piety might render you profitable to them. Do you love them, and can you bear the thought of soon losing them forever, or of meeting them only in that miserable world where affection never enters? Yet this must be, if you and they make light of Jesus and salvation, much as you may love each other now. All that love will be forgotten if you should together be banished to everlasting darkness and despair, and would you not save them from that dreadful ruin? O, would you remember your Creator in the days of your youth, perhaps it might lead them to think of those things which belong to their everlasting peace. Then also, would you be profitable to others, the ministers of the Gospel might be gladdened by you, the Church of Christ delighted in you and the angels of Heaven rejoice over you.

BAPTISM.

Continued.

SUBJECTS FOR BAPTISM.

About this there should be no question, as the design of it admits of none. Baptism is a sacrament for the remission of actual sins, and where there is no sin, no sacrament is needed. In the death, or fall of Adam all died, or were made subjects of sin, but in the death of Christ, all were made alive, or the original sin atoned for, hence there is now, no sin imputed to the world but that of actual transgression. Therefore all children born into the world are in a reconciled condition, have no actual sins and need no sacrament for sin, and therefore are not subjects for baptism. But the adult who has grown to years of discretion, does not, while living in sin, stand in covenant relation with God, hence the necessity of a sacrament to bring him into that relation. To become subjects for this sacrament there are two essential requisites, that of faith and repentance, or repentance and faith. The two are so inseparably connected that it is difficult to determine which comes first. In the law of reconciliation there is a provision made for actual sins but there can be no actual sin until there is an actual transgression or violation of law, and that law cannot be violated until the person is capable of understanding it. Hence, an actual sinner is one who violates a known law. It is by the law of Christ that we become cognizant of sin and learn that we are sinners. A faith in that law brings us to repentance, and genuine repentance makes us fit subjects for the sacrament of baptism. Therefore we very rationally conclude that none are fit subjects for baptism, but such as have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and repent of their sins.

The first instance of baptism on record is that of John's. In these baptisms we have faith and repentance, and that enforced by works or fruits. A simple confession was not sufficient, but it was said to them, "Bring forth, therefore fruit meet for repentance." From these baptisms were excluded all such as were not able to make a confession of faith and give visible signs that it was sincere.

In giving the great commission, we have; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The Commission was, "Go ye * * preach the gospel to every creature," and the conditions of that preaching was, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." None but believers are or can be included in this commission as subjects for baptism as they must be believers and how can infants believe; who are not capable of understanding the law? In every recorded case of baptism that we have in the New Testament, they were believers, and we are prepared to prove it. But says one, we have household baptisms and in them there must have been children. We will briefly notice those cases. First is that of the Jailor. If this record proves anything, it proves entirely too much and is only used because there is really nothing better. But we will quote from the narrative, Acts 16, 32. "And he spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in the house." Now, the all, here referred to are the same that were baptized, and they were such as could have the word of the Lord spoken to them, they must have been such as were capable of believing. Again in the 34th verse we have "believing in God with all his house." Therefore, in the record we have nothing but believers as subjects for baptism.

And the household baptism is claimed in the case of Lydia, but the circumstance does not indicate where they were baptized, or that there were any children belonged to it, but the circumstanstantial evidences are rather strong against. Lydia was of Thyatira and notable as being connected with the dyeing-works of that place. She was a Jewish proselyte and there is not a particle of evidence of her being married or having children. The baptism occurred during the time that they, Paul and Silas, and some woman were at the river-side where they had resorted to pray and baptize. The narration says; "And we sat down and spake unto the women that resorted thither." These were all women that could be spoken to, and of the number was Lydia's household as it follows directly after, "And when she was baptized and her household," so that in all the household baptisms that can be produced, in not a single case, can it be proven or infered, that there was an infant included. How strange then that men will contend for that for which there is not an iota of evidence within the lids of the Bible.

SAD NEWS.

Under this head Bro J. R. Royer says," Eld John Zug died on yesterday (July 20,) his funeral will be on the 23. He was of the Tulpahocken Church—hope some brother will give a report of his ministerial labor &c."

As Eld, Zug was extensively known in the brotherhood we will be pleased to have some one send his obituary with any other information that may be of general interest to our readers.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

We are frequently asked for papers to distribute in Sunday schools, and as we have on hand a large number of odd copies of the Pilgrim, we will send them for Sunday school distribution at the following rates: 50 copies post paid, 40 cents, 100 copies, 75 cents, 200 copies, $1.50. Nos. of different issues will be sent. This offer is less than the postage and cost of paper, but we do it, hoping it may be for the good of the schools and may be used as a means of spreading our doctrine and introducing the Pilgrim. Superintendents and friends of Sunday schools will please notice this offer.

Notes of Travel.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Dear Pilgrim: I last wrote from Green City this Territory. On the morning of July 4th, having procured teams, blankets and an outfit of commissary stores, we set out, with nine others, for a trip down the Platte Valley. Travelled all day and at night camped out on the broad plains the ground for our bed, and the starry heavens over our heads. We may sleep out in this country with impunity, as the night air is pure and healthy. Next day we travelled on, passed Fort Morgan, and about noon arrived at the Old American Ranch, where we found a few settlers. Here we camped and after dinner went across the Platte river, which we had to do by wading. It was a novel undertaking, the course we waded was near or quite a mile in width and in places 4 feet deep, but we all arrived safely to shore, viewed the site for a colony town and took up claims. We found this section the most favorable of any we visited for agricultural purposes. There being a large scope of tillable lands that can be easily irrigated, and of surpassing beauty and productiveness. A Rail road is now in course of construction that runs along the Platte No rail road lands for speculators to get hold of, but all open to those that want to homestead or pre-empt. On our return we again waded the river and next day at 2 p. m. set out on our return. July 7th arrived at Green City. Had a meeting. A colony organization was effected, to be called Beaver Colony. An irrigating Canal company was also gotten up that water might be gotten at once into those valuable lands. July 8th, we returned to Evans and at 5 p. m. took the train for Denver City, the capitol of Colorado, where we arrived about night. Denver is quite a thriving city, beautifully laid out, a place of much wealth and business, and centre to which hundreds of invalids go and thence to the various springs and pleasure resorts of the mountains. In the morning, in company with D. B. Cady, passenger agt. of the U. P. R. R., J. F. Randolph, passenger agt., of the Illinois Central R. R., Dr. G. W. Butler, of Frederick City, Md., and Mr. A. Vines of Ind., we had the pleasure, through the courtesy of H. H. Given, superintendent of the Colorado Central R. R., of taking a free ride to Golden City, and thence up Clear Creek Canon to Black Hawk and Central City. Golden City is a thriving place, situated in a beautiful valley among the foot hills of the Rocky mountains. From Golden City, we went up on the narrow guage rail road, which runs up a deep gorge among the mountains; in some places the grade is an ascent of 211 feet to the mile, and winds up the creek like the trail of a huge serpent, nowhere is the road over 200 yards in a straight line. The scenery brought to view while passing up this canon, is said to be in beauty and sublimity unsurpassed by any in the world. It is truly terrible and sublime on either side, the mountains are piled up one upon another; and some places perpendicular, so that there is barely room for the narrow road to be constructed, and the creek comes down in rushing madness over rocks and through gorges. The mountains are in many places bare, in others studded over with the cedar, fir and pine.

The magnificence of the scenery was such, that we were impressed with the thought, truly there is a God of power beyond our comprehension, and the more we see and learn of Him as manifest in nature and revelation, the more we feel to adore, revere and fear Him. Truly it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of such a living God, who hath spoken those mountains, valleys, and all other things into existence by the word of his power and might.

In passing up this canon we noticed quite a number of gold miners at work, delving into the mountain sides like quadrupeds after the shining ore, and also tearing up the bed of the stream, working in gravel, stone and water, all for that, the love of which is the root of all evil, while in a great measure the one thing needful—the riches of God's grace—is neglected. Black Hawk and Central City, are two small mining towns, in close proximity one to another, wedged in between the mountains. Numerous quartz mills and smeling furnaces are in operation. Rich silver mines are also in operation here, some of which contain three to four thousand dollars worth of silver to the ton of quartz. At the Teller Hotel we got a first-class meal. From the roof of the house we had a fine view of the surrounding mines and mountains. This town is located 8,300 feet above the ocean, several thousand feet higher than Denver City. We had, from Denver, a fine view of this range of mountains which looked grand and imposing with the background of snow clad ridges and peaks. The most prominent peaks are Pike's peak, 13,300 feet high, Long's, 14,000, Mt. Lincoln, 16,100.

Not far from Central City are the Idaho Springs, ond other places of resort for travellers and invalids. The climate here is cool, dry and bracing. We expect in a short time to return to Denver and then set out homeward bound. Our visit to the mountains and gold and silver mines, so far, has been pleasant and instructive.

Dear Pilgrim:—We ask the liberty of having a sketch of our trip and what we learned at A. M. &c., published in your columns. I have remained silent for some time but will now resume my pen again. Many brethren and sisters at A. M. wished to know the cause of our silence, but we have no particular cause.

In company with mother I left home on Friday p. m., via. Martinsburg Remained over night with bro. G. W. Brambaugh at Clover Creek. Saturday morning crossed Tuscey's mountain to Cove Station, met a number of brethren and sisters on the train. Became rather tired of our lengthy wait of four hours and a half at Bridgeport. Never having gone the route, there was much that attracted my attention. Reached Dale City about 6 p. m., Saturday, June 31st. Found a number of brethren and sisters at the depot and among others bro. Holsinger and Annie, who escorted me to their home. After taking supper at the large boarding tent, we attended divine services at the Brethren's church. Sermon by bro. J. S. Flory from Rev. 3; 18. "I counsel of thee" &c. Sabbath morning sermon by bro D. P. Sayler to a very large congregation from the text found in Ephe. 2: 20. This was the first opportunity of hearing bro, S. although I have read many of his articles in our periodicals. At 3 p. m. attended the address of the S. S. We had rather expected to see the Sunday School in session, but the brethren tho't it best to have some one address the whole congregation. We are glad to know that Sabbath Schools are becoming something of interest among us.—Trust the brethren and sisters will manifest a greater interest in the good cause. I do not have the privilege of attending a S. S. conducted by the brethren, but hope the day is not far distant when we shall have one in our midst. Sabbath at 4 p. m., had the pleasure of listening to the sermon delivered by bro. Enoch Eby from Isaiah 48—19 inclusive Also had the pleasure of forming his acquaintance during the meeting. Sabbath eve. for the first time, we had the good pleasure of hearing bro. John Wise from Rev. 4 latter clause of first verse. Exhortation by bro. Spanogle. I shall not soon forget the interesting conversation we had with bro. Wise while waiting for the train at the depot I felt myself much benefitted thereby. Many thanks to the dear brother for his instructions. Monday p. m. we were addressed by bro. Buckalew and Peter Nead. Neglected to note the text and it has passed from my memory. Monday eve. sermon by brethren Major and D. B. Sturgis from Jno 6: 27. Dear brethren and sisters, let us labor more faithfully for that meat "which endureth unto eternal life." On Tuesday eve. we were delighted to hear that bro. S. Z. Sharp would address us. Having been a student under his care, I still desired to receive instructions from him. Text John 12: 47, 48. I felt very much benefitted, although very tired from over exertion. Also had the pleasure of meeting sister S. She still has our thanks for past kindness shown us. Wednesday eve. sermon by bro. D. Longenecker and J. I. Cover.—Text 1. John 4: 1. Thursday eve. sermon by bro. Garst and Pence of Tennessee. After services heard many regrets that the brethren were so brief. but we suppose the ministering brethren as well as others felt weary. Friday eve bro. S. Z. Sharp spoke again from 1. Tim. 4: 8, followed by bro. Reidenhour. This was the last sermon we had in Dale City. Could not attend all the sermons, but attended those at the church. Other brethren spoke whom we had a great desire to hear, but it was impossible to attend all the sermons, as they were delivered at different places at the same time. Neither did I have an opportunity of hearing all the decisions. Think part of what I did hear would, perhaps, have better been omitted. On Saturday morning I in company with bro. G. and sister Myers, bro. Sharp and others, started on our homeward journey. Reached James Creek 3 p. m. where I remained with the PILGRIM family until Monday morning. Attended services there on Sabbath eve. in the Lutheran church.

After leaving James Creek, stopped at Huntingdon. Bro. A. B. B. of that place, has our thanks for kindness shown to us while there. On Monday eve, came to Tyrone and stopped with bro. Quinn. Found them well and very busy. Reached home on Tuesday.

The trip was one of delight to me. The privilege of attending the meeting was a greater pleasure; also enjoyed the society of the brethren and sisters and friends. Had the pleasure of meeting with many with whom I was acquainted, and also formed the acquaintance of many others of whom I had often heard. But we are confident that we shall not all meet again on this side of the grave. Perhaps some have already passed to the other shore.—Let us all labor faithfully to the end that we may obtain the crown of life.

LIBERTY, Bedford Co., Va.

Dear Pilgrim: I wish you to change my address to Liberty, Va. I am living here at this time and find more brethren and sisters here than I expected. There are about 30, and seven were baptized on yesterday. Preaching by J. Moomaw of Roanoak Co., Va. There are two other small societies of member started up in this county, (Bedford, Va.) One at Falling Creek and the other at Skinnerl's School house, where we had two first class sermons by brother Moomaw. All admitted that there could not be anything said against them. The doctrine of the Brethren is well received in this vicinity by all that heard it. We look for good success in this Co., and pray that the good work may go forward that has now commenced in the old county of Bedford. Slavery is no more in the way, as it once was.

I believe, one opposition after another will be removed until a great reformation will take place and God will take place and God will reign and rule in his own appointed way. This we are taught in the New Testament in which Christ lives, and if he continues to live in it, it will finally gain, and the world come under the true government of peace. The good that has been appointed, must come to pass at the appointed time, but we must not add to nor diminish from the old landmarks which our fathers have set. Do not forget it, brethren and sisters. Ever look to our Heavenly Father for all needful blessing, as he is the author and giver of all that is good. Let us pray and trust in his grace.

S. W. OVERSTREET.

Lovefeast at Jacob Malott's.

On the 8th of June, according to previous arrangements, we met with the brethren and sisters of Sidling Hill, Bedford Co., Pa., to participate with them in a Communion Meeting, and this being the first meeting of the kind ever held in this part of the country, the people flocked together from far and near, to hear and see, what these people would have to say and do. The meeting was held in the barn of friend Jacob Malotts, whose kindness and hospitality, we fondly hope heaven may bless, and the brethren not forget. In the afternoon, at the time appointed for service, a large collection of people were present, to hear the preached word. Elders Jacob Steel, Henry Clapper, David Clapper, Nicholas Martin, G. Horman, G. Bricker, A. Rowland, D. Young and D. Miller were the ministers present. The brethren also had an election for two deacons and one speaker, the lot fell upon Absalom Malott for speaker and James Take, and —— Correll for deacons, who are efficient for the charge. The meeting seemed to be much appreciated by both members, and hearers. We believe there were many honest hearted people present, who if they can be permitted to enjoy an unhindered view of the Sun of Righteousness, will soon learn the fact that there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved but the name of Jesus." The good conduct of the people, and the order of the meeting, was certainly commendable. About one hundred communed, two added to the church. Meeting closed at noon on the 9th.

A general invitation is given, especially to the ministering brethren. If any come by railroad, stop off at Garnett. The place of meeting is about 7 miles North-west of Garnett. Conveyance will be in attendance. By order of the Church. B. A. HADSELL.

Please publish through the PILGRIM that the Church of the Cerro Gorda district, Ill., have their Communion Meeting on the 27 and 28 of September 1873, and also the District Council Meeting of Southern Ill, will be held at the same place on Monday 29. It is desired that the churches of Southern Ill be fully represented, and a hearty invitation is given, especially to the ministering brethren to be with us on the occasion.

Those coming by railroad will stop off at Cerro Gorda. By order of the Church. JOHN METZGAR

JOSEPH HENRICKS.

Please announce through the PILGRIM, that the brethren of Whitesville Church, Andrew Co., Mo., intend holding their Lovefeast, the Lord willing, on the 20th, of September. We heartily invite all members that have a desire to be with us. Preaching to commence at one o'clock. Place of meeting, two miles North-east of Whitesville. B. BASHORE.

DIED.

RIGGLE.—In Stanislaus Co., Cal., June 2, 1873, Jesse, son of brother Eliphas and sister Sarah Riggle, aged 2 years, 3 mos. and 8 days. Funeral by the brethren.

RIGGLE.—In the same family, on the 12th July, 1873, Charlie Riggle, aged 8 yrs. 5 mos. and 9 days. PETER S. GARMAN.

(Visitor and C. E. C. please copy.)

ELLIS.—In the Coldwater Church, Iowa, June 19, 1873, sister Susan, wife of Bro. Benjamin Ellis, aged 57 years, less one month, had nine children, (six are now living) and eleven grand children, a husband and many friends to mourn their loss; but not as those who have no hope. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. Benj. Beeghly of Waterloo, from Rev. 14: 13., to a large collection of friends and relatives.

The above died almost without any warning, as it is said by those present, that in fifteen minutes from the time she was taken sick she passed away without a struggle. Disease supposed to be heart affection. Another solemn warning to us all, and more especially to those of her children, who have not yet confessed Christ by obeying his commands.

MOSS.—Also in the same Church, and near the same place, June 24, sister Moriah, widow of Bro. David Moss, (who died over two years ago at this place,) aged 35 years, 8 mos. and 6 days. Funeral attended by a large concourse of relatives and friends, and the occasion improved by Eld. W. J. H. Beauman from first epistle Peter, 1: 24.

Our beloved sister leaves a number of near relatives and three orphan boys to mourn their loss. She called for the Elders and was anointed in the name of the Lord shortly before her departure. She expressed a willingness to go, with a full assurance of obtaining the crown that is promised to the people of God. J. F. EIKENBERRY.

(Visitor and Companion please copy.

CLAAR.—In bound of the Yellow Creek Church, Blair Co., Pa., July 18, 1873, sister Margaret, wife of Bro. John Claar, aged 41 yrs., 3 mos. Disease, Typhoid fever.

She left a sorrowful husband and 6 children to mourn their loss. She, at her request, was anointed sometime previous to her death. Funeral by the brethren from Rev. 11: 15.

BAKER.—Also in the same Church, near Bloomfield, Blair Co., Pa., June 20, 1873, sister Leah, wife of bro. Frederick Baker, daughter of bro. Samuel Hollinger, aged 33 years, 9 months, and 15 days. Disease Consumption fever.

She leaves a sorrowful husband and 3 children to mourn their loss. She also requested to be anointed, but alas! till the brethren came it was too late. She was a consistent sister and devoted herself to the Lord in her young days. May others follow her example. Occasion improved by the brethren Matt. 24: 44, to a very large concourse of people. Thus our church in a few days lost two dear sisters, but hope the Church triumphant gained in order to swell the victorious Song in Heaven in honor to God and the Lamb. May these solemn occasions be sanctified to the conversion of members to fill their places in the Church militant, is the prayer of your humble correspondent. LEONARD FURRY.

HOW BEAUTIFUL.

BY LOVINE H. BURKET.

When God in his own wise decree,
Had formed the earth, sky and sea;
The sun to give us light by day—
To drive from us dull thoughts away.

The stars all to their places hie,
To brighten up the dark blue sky;
Oh that our deeds on earth might be,
Like stars to shine o'er land and sea.

For while we sit and wandering gaze,
We soon forget those weary days;
Enraptured with the beauties there,
We think of Heaven, bright and fair.

All, all is beautiful and grand,
And governed by a powerful hand;
While nature's works are grand and true,
I love its beauties to pursue.

The moon sends forth her misty light,
To cheer the earth at dead of night—
Has never yet forgot to shine,
On land and sea—on shrub and vine.

All these are beautiful and good,
Because they emanate from God;
And if we love him—serve him too,
We all, his glory yet shall know.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

ORIGIN OF SABBATH SCHOOL OPPOSITION.

In this article the origin of Sabbath School opposition will be considered:

1. Conscience. — Many brethren claim to be conscientious in their opposition to Sunday Schools, and we are willing to admit that some are truly so. To admit this, however, is not to justify their course, much less is it to say that they are right. Yet we would speak to this class with great kindness, believing that when the clearer light of the more excellent way shines about them, they, like Saul of Tarsus, will cease to persecute the Lord's cause, and will, instead, become chosen vessels to carry forward the very work which they now condemn and oppose. The writer has heard brethren testify to this fact in connection with their own personal experience and observation. When the Brethren's Sunday School was first started in this neighborhood, they looked upon it with distrust, feared it would result in evil, and hence opposed it. But by and by, as they became better acquainted with the design and workings of the school their fears vanished, and with "confusion of face" they had to acknowledge that, ignorantly and blindly, they had opposed what God had been pleased to bless and to make a means of grace and an agent of great good in the community. We then find that conscience itself, the soundest pillar in the platform of Sabbath School opposition, sometimes rests upon a very sandy foundation, viz:

2. Prejudice.—This word is derived from two Latin words, one of which means before and the other judgment; hence the word means, premature judgment; or, an opinion formed before the facts in the case have been properly examined and considered. Prejudice is, perhaps, the most prolific source of erroneous conclusions and wrong opinions. It gets such a deep hold upon the mind that it seems to transmit itself. People seem to inherit wrong notions, just as they inherit bad traits of disposition, and they are both about equally difficult to get rid of. "To divest one's self of some prejudices," says Greville, "is like taking off the skin." Some people believe just what their ancestors did. The father's creed becomes the son's Bible, no matter how little truth there is in it. May we not trace some of the opposition to Sabbath Schools to this source? Then, again, some seem to look with distrust upon anything that certain other people do. Because Sabbath Schools are held by certain religious sects who don't obey the gospel in all points as we understand it, therefore, Sabbath Schools are wrong! What a silly notion! As well condemn (if this be the ground of condemnation) singing, prayer, public worship and a thousand other things that we hold sacred,—for they have them all.—Others there are who look only at the abuse of things. They see the Sunday School as we see the moon—only on one side,—with this difference, however, we see the moon on the bright side, while they see the Sunday School only on the shady side. This is because they don't look at it through the clear light of truth, but somewhat as we look at the sun—through smoked glass or some other colored medium. Consequently their ideas on this subject form a very tangled web of thought, full of dust and dead flies. And no marvel; for if we abstain from the use of everything that may be abused, we must do nothing, speak nothing, think nothing—and even then fail in our laudable undertaking. An argument of this kind against Sunday Schools can certainly rest upon no better foundation than that of another source of opposition, viz:

3. Ignorance.—This may seem a harsh term to some who oppose Sabbath Schools, but, as it underlies the above topic, our essay would lack an essential head did we not speak of it here in its logical order. Does ignorance underlie prejudice? We think so. To judge before we hear the evidence and weigh the fact is, to judge ignorantly; it is to pre-judge; it is prejudice. But, it may be asked, of what truths are those that oppose Sunday Schools ignorant? We answer: they seem to be—yea we know they are—ignorant of the sweet consciousness, which many feel, that Christ meets and blesses his children in the Sabbath School, making the hour spent there very often the pleasantest, happiest, most cheerful and most edifying hour of the day. Some Sunday School lessons afford more Bible knowledge, and fully as much spiritual food, as many of the time-honored, random sermons that we hear from those who deem study and preparation of no consequence, and are, withal, opposed to such innovations as Sunday Schools, Bible classes, religious papers, backed benches, &c.

Again, the opposers of Sunday Schools seem to be ignorant of the spiritual wants of the young, and the sad neglect of parents to supply those wants. Every child has a mind and heart as well as a body, and it has no more right to claim meat and drink for the latter than it has to receive mental and spiritual food for the former. True, it is the duty of parents to give their own children religious instruction at home, but it is equally true that this is one of those duties "more honored in the breach than in the observance;" and, it is also true that some children have no parents, or, if they have parents, the latter are irreligious, and, consequently, not very efficient teachers of righteousness. It is not true that every mother is a Eunice any more than that every boy grows up a Timothy. Nearly all mothers provide for the physical wants of their little ones; but how few provide for the wants of the mental and moral natures! They guide the little feet in safe paths, but let the the thoughts run wild; they give warnings in regard to the well, the highway and other dangerous places, but little or nothing is said about the pitfalls of satan and the broad road that leads to destruction. They serve plentifully every good drink and viand, except the bread and water of life; and discuss every garment and decoration more than the spotless robe of innocence decorated with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Of these and many other things the opposers of Sabbath Schools seem to be ignorant, and to this ignorance we trace much of their opposition. But let us admit that they know all these evils to exist and yet offer no assistance in correcting them. We must then trace their conduct to the fundamental source of unworthiness, and we find that the ultimate origin of their opposition is—

4. Selfishness.—A certain writer says that—

"He who will not give
Some portion of his ease, his blood, his wealth,
For others' good, is a poor, frozen churl."

If it be true that the Sunday School is "for others' good," as we claim it is, then it is to be feared that there are a good many "poor frozen churls" even in the hot months of July and August. "No man liveth to himself alone," seems to be the motto of but few, even on the Sabbath day. Some even join the church, not for spiritual benefits, but for temporal advantages. Thousands live merely for self and selfish ends. It is true that among these thousands may be found a few who attend Sunday Schools through selfish motives, but the great majority will be indifferent to a cause that requires so much devotion and self-denial, with so little prospect of temporal reward, as does the cause of Sabbath Schools. When opposition to a good work springs from such a source as base selfishness, it is not out of place to quote, for the benefit of the individual who opposes, these lines of the poet:

The wretch concentres all in SELF,
And doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonored and unsung.

OUR GREAT EXEMPLAR.

There appears to be a natural disposition in man to copy after something, and when any work is to be performed that is new to us, or that we have but a limited knowledge of, we feel the necessity of having a model from which to copy. We may have a definite explanation as to how the work is to be performed, but an explanation in abstract terms is not so intelligible as an example of something similar. And so it is with reference to everything in this life, we learn more from example than precept. When we read the laws of our country we form a limited idea of the penalty that will result from disobedience, but our minds are still more fully impressed with the suffering and unhappiness that is occasioned from disobedience, when we have an example before us. Who has visited the solitary dens of a penitentiary that has not been more forcibly impressed with the severity of a violated law? The very sad, forlorn appearance of the inmates make impressions on the mind that are indelible. Go too, to the scaffold, and witness the execution of the murderer. You may read again, and again the death sentence, but the terribleness of that sentence is not stamped on the mind as when the example is before you. Examples then always convey ideas most intelligibly, and consequently, we are more easily led by example than precept. Hence God taught man the plan of salvation principally by example.

It was by example that God taught man the law which forbids sin. The first law was that given to our first parents when placed in that paridisiacal home. The penalty of that law was death—a death from which none could deliver us, but God's own Son. There was then no arm to save, no eye to pity, and in this condition man would ever had to remain, had not God's own Son consented to bear the penalty. There are many examples on record illustrating the penalty of sin, but there are none that so forcibly illustrates it as the coming of God's Son into the world to suffer the penalty of a violated law. What an example of suffering! What must have been the feelings of those disciples as they accompanied their Lord to the most secluded spot in that ever memorable garden, and there beheld His suffering! Oh how those deep groans must have wounded their hearts! How deeply astounded they must have been as they saw the large drops of blood ooze from His pallid forehead, and trinkle down to the ground! And as they gazed upon that lovely form being nailed to the cross, what must have been their impressions? It was one of the most striking examples of the awfulness of the penalty of sin, and one too that made impressions that can never be erased.

O, sinner will not this example of suffering reach your heart and make you feel your indebtedness to God and the awful consequences of disobedience? Jesus suffered the penalty that you might be redeemed from the curse of a broken law, and if after this great sacrifice having been made, you are disobedient, you must suffer the penalty. And how great that penalty!—death, eternal death—banishment from the presence of God and be in torment forever.

When God was about opening up the way of eternal life, He not only gave us an example of the penalty of sin, but also how His law should be obeyed, and how the powers of darkness could be overcome. Hence "the Word was made flesh and dwelt among men." Jesus now stands before the world as our great example. Saith He, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; if any man would come unto Me, let him take up his cross daily and follow Me." By this we understand that we are to imitate Him, and when we view His life we certainly have before us a perfect model. What an example of obedience! How resigned He was to the will of His Father! When He was about partaking of that bitter cup, how that touching appeal was fraught with simple resignation. "O, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done."

Dear Christian friends, we have in this an unparalleled example of simple resignation and obedience, and are we endeavoring to imitate His example? Jesus said shortly before He ascended to those anxious inquiring disciples, "In this world ye shall have tribulation." We have no doubt, brethren and sisters, all have experienced the veracity of this declaration. We have had our trials, our afflictions, and sometimes the cup has been indeed a bitter one, but it is God's design that we shall endure trials, afflictions, and even persecutions in this life; and as He has promised to be with us, and not suffer us to be tempted above that which we can bear, we should be resigned to His will, and, like Jesus, be willing to drink the bitter cup to the very dregs. The fact that we have to suffer for righteousness sake should only teach us obedience. Christ learned obedience through the things which He suffered, and when "He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Think of the things Jesus suffered that He might be an example. He was accused of being a seditious man, charged with being a deceiver, accused of performing miracles through Beelzebub the prince of devils, and finally condemned as a blasphemer against God. All these things were done in a way that would most affect the delicate and tender sensibilites of man; yet He never expressed a desire that they should be punished. These things which He endured only taught Him obedience to His Heavenly Father, and set the world an example of endurance, resignation and obedience.

Christ is also our example in baptism. We find Him when He was about entering on His public duties, at the river Jordan, demanding baptism at the hands of His forerunner John. John thinking himself unworthy, Jesus saith onto him, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to folfill all righteousness." Then John baptized Him and as they "went up straightway out of the water," the spirit of God lit upon Him in the shape of a dove, and a voice from Heaven proclaimed the fact that He was from heaven, and that He was well pleased with the act. Now why was Jesus baptized? Not that He was a sinner, but to show that He approved of the act of baptism, and also give us an example of where and how to baptize. Jesus commands us to walk in His foot-steps," and by this we understand we are to follow Him very closely,—do just as He did. Now how did He do in baptism? Where was He baptized? Was it done in the house of worship? Was it done by sprinkling a little water on His head? It is not my purpose at this time to argue the subject of baptism at length, but merely to present a few thoughts for the benefit of those who honestly and sincerely desire to take Jesus as their example and follow in His foot-steps. We ask the reader to seriously consider this matter. Jesus was baptized in the river of Jordan. In this, we have, without doubt, an example of the place for baptism. It was done in the water, and those who are baptized anywhere else but in the water, are certainly not following the foot-steps of Jesus. After the baptism of Jesus, His forerunner John still continued to perform this sacred rite, and the next account we have of him, was in Enon, near Salem. There he was baptizing, and why did he resort to that place? "Because there was much water there." It is evident from the language, that much water was required to perform baptism. Now Jesus did not Himself baptize, but His disciples. They were commissioned to perform this work, and were taught by example where and how to do it. Philip, who baptized the Eunuch, was taught where to perform baptism, and we have conclusive evidence of his idea of the place. In the 8th chapter of Acts, we have an account of this circumstance. Philip preached onto the Eunuch Jesus, and as he did this, the subject of baptism must have been presented, for "as they went on their way, they came to a certain water, and the Eunuch said, see here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" After he was interrogated in reference to his faith, "the chariot was commanded to stand still; and they went both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him." In this we have a very striking illustration of Philip's idea of the place for baptism. It was in the water, corresponding precisely with the example of Jesus. By following up the record in reference to the subject of baptism we do not find a single instance in which it was ever performed in a house. John baptized in Jordan, and near Salem because there was much water there. Jesus was baptized in Jordan, and Philip went down into the water to baptize the Eunuch, and thus we have the place, wherever it is at all designated. I am aware that Pedobaptists try hard to prove that the baptism of the Jailor, Lydia and her household, &c., was performed in the house, but as the contrary has been conclusively proven elsewhere in our columns, I do not refer to these baptisms again.

For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Heb. 13: 14.

This is a truth, not only abundantly taught in the Scripture, but also seen by daily observation. Man is passing away, and in his best estate is but vanity. If he lives till his fourscore years, it is only as a moment compared to eternity. But how few, Oh! how few, live to that age! "He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and abideth not." He is compared in this present life, "to a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Were death the end of man's existence and no future life to be realized in which his eternal destiny is involved, when the deeds of this present life will be made manifest and be rewarded accordingly; it would not be so important how we live here, and we might say with the sumptuous man, "eat, drink and be merry." But the word of God saith, "Say to the righteous that it shall be well with them: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings. Wo unto the wicked it shall be ill with them: for the reward of their hands shall be given them." Hence, to the righteous the above subject is a consolation, and one of the greatest incentives to live a holy life, devoted to Jesus and his service, for therein he secures the promise of a better state of existence in that city which is to come, and the one that will abide forever. It brings him the bright, cheering, soul's reviving, yea, blessed hope of immortality; in which the faithful of all ages have lived and died; and made strong to endure wonderful afflictions, floods of sufferings and aggravated pains of death. Where is the christian, the child of God who would desire to live always here? Would he not feel to say to himself and to his godly associates, "Arise, let us depart; for this is not our rest; because it is polluted." Abraham by faith sojourned in the land of promise, in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise. They were contented though they had no princely pallaces to live in, neither everything else congenial to their carnal nature; and why? because they knew that this earth was not their permanent home; their minds were centered and fixed upon a better abode, their affections directed to God in whom they trusted, their citizenship in heaven; "For they looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." So many of his descendants died in faith, confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, they knew that they had no continuing city here; hence their actions declared plainly that they sought a country; they desired a better country, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city." Paul saith in behalf of believers, while reproving the enemies of the cross of Christ, (formal or carnal Christians), "Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is their shame, who mind earthly things. (A standing warning to inconsistent members.) "For our conversation, (or more properly, as some render it) our citizenship is in heaven. Certainly our mind and affections should be centered on that elevated, glorious and blessed region from whence John saw the Holy City, the Heavenly Jerusalem, the final abode of the righteous, the city which is to come, descending down from God out of heaven, so magnificently adorned, as the everlasting dwelling place of men, where God will dwell and wipe away all their tears. That we have no continuing city here is a most glorious truth imaginable for that man, and for that woman, who obeys the word of God and walketh blameless, and whose conduct and deportment characterizes him or her to be a Christian indeed. Truly sad were our condition to bear all the ills of life that this flesh of ours is heir to perpetually, but we brethren and sisters, "receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved; let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and Godly fear." For our God is a consuming fire. Hence, the text, no continuing city here is not so pleasing to the unconverted, as slavery to sin, and servants to satan, under the control of the carnal mind, they live in fear and terror of approaching death all the time, unless lulled into a sleep of security by the prince of darkness or their eyes blinded by the God of this world. O, sinner, ponder well the day or moment when your God, whom you daily offend, will bring a period to your existence. You build upon wood, hay and stubble, very inflamable materials, consequently fearful and terrible. "For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts. But unto you that fear my name, shall the Sun of righteousness shine with healing in his wings." Behold the great contrast!

"We've no abiding city here!
This may distress the worldly mind,
But should not cost a saint a tear!
Who hopes a better rest to find."

Ho ye careless, ye that reject the counsel of God against yourself in despising the offers of mercy and slight the invitations, rolling like a mighty stream echoing and re-echoing from one end of the earth to the other through the Apocalyptic trumpet of the Gospel. Hear the word of the Lord concerning the doom of the rebellious: "The earth mourneth and languishes, Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down; Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmal shake off their fruit. Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself, ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble; your breath as fire shall devour you. And the people shall bear the burning of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burnt in the fire. Hear, ye that are afar off, what I have done; and ye that are near acknowledge my might. The sinners in Zion are afraid; tearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. 33. Such threatenings, expressed by the strongest language almost possible, should strike terror into every heart and cause him to examine his own case without delay. Since we have here no continuing city, brethren, sisters, have we an assurance that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, that we have that building of God that house eternal in the heavens? Let us earnestly seek the city which is to come. Let us labor to bring others along.

"Take your companions by the hand,
And all your children in a band."

O, children, sons and daughters of pious parents, think, how painful, how dreadful it will be to see fathers and mothers, grand-fathers and grand-mothers and brothers and sisters in the Kingdom of God, the happy abode in the city of God with the blessed in Heaven: and ye yourselves cast out: there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Therefore turn to God that ye may live. Farewell

THE ORIGIN OF BACKWARD BAPTISM.

J. H. Moore; Dear Brother:—Please let me have a little information in regard to the Origin of Backward Baptism. By reading the PILGRIM I understand you to say that this method is not yet 400 years old, having been invented since the commencement of the Reformation. Please let me know by whose writings it can be proven. In our neighborhood we have a number of that persuasion, with whom I occasionally come in contact, and I should be able to give unmistakable answers.

Yours traternally,
ELD. WM. HERTZLER.

REMARKS.—Dear Brother, I prefer to make some remarks in regard to your query, through the PILGRIM, that the same answer may adapt itself to quite a number of other questions that are presented to me. I will not answer your question in full, I have not time at present, but will present a few remarks that will likely give satisfaction. I will refer you to the last page of my work on "Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles," which contains a few extracts taken from the writings of Robinson and Judson from which I gain a part of my information respecting the modern origin of Backward Baptism. By referring to the works from which these extracts were taken it is really surprising to see how much testimony these Baptist writers give against their own practice.

I have been thinking of writing a work on the origin of the Backward Immersion, but it seems hardly necessary at present. My work on the "Origin and History of Single Immersion" will give you about all the information on the invention of Backward Baptism that any one needs to put to flight all the cases of backward immersion in America, or anywheres else. I have repeatedly asked of the learned Baptist for just one case of backward immersion before the year 1522, and have not yet found the man who can refer me to one single instance before this time. This work will likely be published some time the coming winter, it will probably contain a few chapters on the origin of Backward Immersion. The above remarks will answer several other questions that have been presented to me by other parties.

The Historical Chart of Baptism will be published as soon as the financial arrangements can be made. My work on "Trine Immersion" is going off quite rapidly, and it is altogether likely that I will soon have to publish a third edition. Several churches are buying them by the dozens to distribute through the country.

Respectfully your brother,
J. H. MOORE.

COME TO CHRIST.

Why should I come says the sinner? Because you are a sinner and should come for pardon. Perhaps you do not feel that you are a sinner, at least, you think you are no worse than others, but better than many. You are no drunkard, thief or adulterer, but keep the Sabbath, read the Bible and attend the house of God. But have you indeed obeyed all the commandments, never broke any of them, always been true, chaste, sober, honest, forgiving, kind; never indulged in pride, malice, anger, deceit or lust? God requires purity of heart as well as of outward conduct, and he knows all our thoughts. Have you then never cherished the thought of sin in your heart, though you have feared outwardly to commit it? The first and chief command is, to love the Lord our God with all our mind and strength. Have you always done this; always been thankful for his mercies; always carefully read his word in order to obey it; always tried to please Him, loved to pray to Him, taken delight in His day, His people, His worship; always striven to be "holy as he is holy," to make known his truth, to induce others to love Him, and endeavored, in all things, to glorify Him? If you have always done this, you have still just only done your duty, and have nothing to boast of. But you have not done it. Conscience tells you so. You know you have sinned thousands of times. You know you have sought your own and have not been prompted by a desire to please God. You have lived for yourself; you have sought man's approval, but God has not been in all your thoughts. The Bible tells us, "If a man says he hath no sin, he deceiveth himself, there is none righteous, no, not one. All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." O my fellow-sinner, is it not true of thee? The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, thou hast not glorified. You are a sinner, guilt, enormous guilt hangs upon you. In God's book, all your sins are written down, you cannot get rid of them. Were you to labor for thousands of years, you could not atone for the past. all you could do would only be your duty. Praying to-day's debt, still leaves yesterday's where it was, and were you to give all you possess, or suffer torture and death, it would not take away sin. The past cannot be recalled, but there is forgiveness, free, full, eternal for the guilty. Jesus has pardon for thee, sinner, purchased with His own blood. Come for it. Come to Jesus Christ for he is both able and willing to give it.

SPEAK KINDLY.—When thou goest forth in the morning speak kindly to those around thee: it will lighten the cares and labors of the day, and make the household and all its affairs more harmoniously. When thou returnest at night speak kindly, for it may be, in God's Providence that, before another day dawn, loved ones, of those about thee, may have finished the measure of life allotted for this world, and gone where no restitution can be made and no forgiveness asked. Speak kindly ever,—wherever thou goest wherever thou tarriest; for kind words ever drop sweetly like honey from the honey-comb. A. B. B.

CHRIST'S LAMENTATION OVER JERUSALEM.

No sooner had Christ reached the height of intrepid vehemence at which we have just beheld Him, than he gave way to a burst of tenderness, and changed the language of invective for that of lamentation. At one moment he is dealing out the arrows of a stern and lacerating oratory, and the next, he is melted into tears, and can find no words but those of anguish and regret. Indeed it is a transition more exquisitely beautiful than can be found in the most admired specimen of human eloquence; and we feel that there must have passed a change over the countenance, and the whole bearing of the Savior, which imagination cannot catch, and which if it could, the painter could not fix. There must have risen before him the imagery of a wrath and a wretchedness, such as had yet never overtaken any nation of the earth. And the people that should be thus signalled out were his countryman, his kinsman after the flesh, over whom his heart yearned, and whom he had affectionately labored to convince of danger, and conduct to safety. He was too pure a being, and he loved with too abiding and disinterested a love, to harbor any feeling allied with revenge; and, therefore, though it was for rejecting himself that those whom he addressed were about to be punished, he could not contemplate the punishment but with bitterness and anguish.

And hence the rapid and thrilling change from the preacher of wrath to the mourner over suffering. Hence the sudden laying aside of all his awful vehemence, and the breaking into pathetic and heart-touching expressions. Oh, you feel that the Redeemer must have been subdued, as it were, and mastered by the view of the misery which he saw coming on Judea, and by the remembrance of all he had done to avert it from the land, ere he could have passed thus instantaneously from indignant rebuke to exquisite tenderness. And it cannot, we think, be without mingled emotions of awe and delight, that you mark the transition from the herald of vengeance to the sympathizer with the wretched. Just as you are shrinking from the fierce and withering denunciations, almost scathed by the fiery eloquence which glares and flashes with the anger of the Lord—just as you are expecting a new burst of threatening, a further and wilder malediction from the voice which seems to shake the magnificent temple—there is heard the sound as of one who is struggling with sorrow; and in a tone of rich plaintiveness, in accents musical in their sadness, and betraying the agony of a stricken spirit, there fall upon you these touching and penetrating words, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." —Melville.

FINDING FAULT WITH PROVIDENCE.

There is reason in finding fault if there is either hope of thereby amending the fault or of uttering useful warning. Applied to the actions of our fellowmen, adverse criticism is sometimes legitimate. But when the matter complained of lies out of the reach of human interference or control, the language of complaint strikes past all intermediate agents to the Most High. He who accuses, accuses God.

But among the things that are above and beyond our determination, one is obviously the weather. It is God who "causes his sun to rise" and "sendeth rain." It makes no difference, as to the present question, whether we conceive of the action of Divine providence as direct and particular, or as limited to the institution of general laws. In either case, the weather is what it is by the appointment of God. And what is more common? We read, the other day, a paragraph in a daily paper which spoke of "execrable weather"—weather, that is, worthy to be execrated, or cursed. Would not a cursing of the weather be dangerously near to cursing our Maker?

This is a matter on which many Christians, it is to be feared, do not sufficiently reflect. They fall too easily into the fashions of speech that are common, without sufficiently considering what they are saying.

We may wish the weather were different, and may express that wish in a proper manner. But when we allow ourselves to be impatient and to "charge God foolishly," it is but too plain that He "is not in all our thoughts."—Examiner.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Parts of Iowa and Wisconsin were visited by a tornado on Sunday night, 12th inst. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, it was accompanied by thunder and lightning and rain. The lightning was so continuous and vivid that a person could almost read without any other light.

In parts of Fond du Lac, Wis., all kinds of grain are so badly cut up that no attempt will be made to harvest it. The hail came in ragged chunks half as large as a man's hand. Windows on the south side of houses were all broken; many lambs and other young stock were killed, leaves stripped from trees and fences torn down.

The earthquake in Italy, on June 27, was extraordinary. The solid earth seemed for a time converted into a liquid one, and houses were tossed about like ships at sea. There were fourteen movements, seven forward and seven backward, each occupying a second, as regular as the beat of the clock. Many persons were killed at Bellimo, and many injured.

The Cholera is reported to be very bad in the northern part of Alaxander county, Ill., and about fifty-five miles from Cairo. It is said that from the 10th to the 14th inst. there had been thirty cases, twenty proving fatal. The neighborhood is said to be almost without an inhabitant, every one having gone to the hills. The crops have been left to take care of themselves.

Cholera in Indiana—Mount Vernon, in the southwest corner of Indiana, has suffered severely from the cholera. In five days, thirty deaths have occurred. More than half the population have left the town, many hundreds of them coming to Evansville. Others are preparing to leave unless a favorable change takes place immediately. No business has been transacted there for several days, and the place has a deserted and gloomy appearance.—Physicians have arrived from the surrounding towns and are rendering all the assistance in their power. Among the deaths on the 20th, were Dr. Matzedorf, a young German physician, who since the appearance of the epidemic has been most active in behalf of the sick and dying; one man with his two daughters died, the last but one of a family of ten who died of the scourge.

There is a move being made to petition the Middle District of Pa., to build a Church in some city or town, every year. This move, if successful, will be one among the best ever made by the Church. Of course, much will depend upon the action of the District in regard to the proposed Church at Altoona. At last account, out of 23 churches only 14 had reported. The majority of those reported have done very well and if the unreported part would do proportionately well, the committee could proceed at once. It is an undeniable fact that our Church has not yet learned to be liberal in the way of providing means for the success of the cause. Our possessions are too much ours and not enough the Lord's. We forget that all we have is from the Lord and that he has the power to give or withhold as seemeth good in His sight. Taking this view, why not give liberally with the assurance that the Lord can and will restore tenfold. We hope that not a Church in our district will feel that it has done its duty without doing something towards this very much called for move. Brethren and sisters, let us give liberally, and see if the Lord will not bless our store. Let us get in earnest and plant a Church in every town where there seems to be an opening.

Emigration of Mennonites.—The party of commissioners representing the Mennonites of Russia, who, early in June, went to the North west on a tour of inspection, have recently decided not to settle in a body at any given point, but propose to divide and locate in different sections, to be chosen hereafter. They believe this plan will result in advantage to themselves, enabling them to assimilate more readily with other communities, and affording better opportunities for obtaining a knowledge of the people, customs and government of the country. Each of the agents now here represents different communities of Mennonites or Lutherans of from 200 to 2,000 families. Besides the Mennonites of Russia, there are many German Lutherans represented by these comissioners, and this visit is but the preliminary step in one of the grandest emigration schemes on record—there are no less than 300,000 Protestants in Russia and Prussia who are contemplating a removal to this country, after the reception of the reports submitted by the gentlemen now here. The Mennnonites are of Protestant belief, and in some respects resemble the Quakers. They never bear arms, use profane language, or engage in lawsuits. They are exclusively a farming people, are very intelligent, and, as a class, are wealthy.—N. Y. Ob.

Suicide seems to become more prevalent every year. In looking over the morning paper we notice some twelve cases for the day before. The causes, seemingly, are different, but when fully tested prove to be the same—that of disappointment. Some for love, want of means, financial failures, crime, and not a few on account of proving untrue in positions of trust, who, rather than be detected, in their crime, and their own life. There seems to be two general causes for the growing frequency of suicide. First, the fastness and extravagance of the age. The standard of living is becoming so high that but few can fully reach it, others in the attempt become bankrupt and to end their shame, commit suicide, while still others have betrayed most sacred positions of trust and when the facts are about to be revealed, rather than meet the disgrace of themselves and families they rashly lay hold on their own lives. But another cause is, the growing infidelity of the age. This infidelity is, perhaps, more liberal than radical. God may not be altogether rejected, but He is being made so liberal in His judgments that almost anything is made an excuse for religion, and no crime is beyond His leniency, or to be more plain, God does not mean what he says. When such a faith becomes established there is no way to determine just how much He does mean. If His mercy will reach the saintly hypocrite, why not sincere suicidism.

EARLY PIETY.

Concluded.

Perhaps, if spared for future years, you may become a parent, and what a blessing it would be to your family to train them up in the way of peace.—God might reward your exertions by their conversion. They might act the same part to their children, and they again to theirs, and thus religion beginning in your early conversion, might flow on in your family for ages to come. Think not that this is an improbable case, it has often been realized. In addition to the blessings I have mentioned, it is the happiness of the real Christian, that all events in life are designed as blessings to him, all are for our good, and all will end in glory, even afflictions are blessings in disguise, for "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He loveth. All things work together for good to them that love God." Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory.

The Christian often finds the path to heaven most secure when beset with thorns, and the sea of life safest, when most storms; affiictions, to the children of God, prove the best of mercies — The smiles of the world might allure them to ruin, but its frowns urge them towards heaven. The Martyr's flames have often preceeded the flame of heavenly joy. The crown of thorns has been the forerunner of a crown of glory, and they have drank the bitterest dregs of grief's most bitter cup, who shall hereafter rejoice evermore. It has been said that on board a ship, in the midst of a violent storm, when the Mariners were in distress and alarm, a little boy remained compo-ed, and being asked the cause of his composure, answered: "My father is at the helm." So may the Christian say in every time of trouble, my heavenly Father is at the helm, and He will steer me safe through every storm, or when He pleases say to the tempest "peace be still."

One great advantage of early religion is, that it prepares the soul for every possible event. If you would make an early escape from all the dangers by which you are exposed by sin, and obtain an early title to the mansions in heaven, although God may grant you long life, an early knowledge will secure you that protection, and that which will make your life one of peace and happiness. But, perhaps, God designs only a few more months for you, and, if so, though it might be pleasant to live, it will be more pleasant to die. Possessed of an interest in the blood of Christ, you will find the shortest life the shortest path to heaven. Early death would be early blessedness. The world might lament your early, and in their view, untimely departure, while you rejoice in having gained a home in the paradise of God. They who arrive there before they have passed the short span of twenty-five years in this world, will never wish to come back and pass an other twenty-five here.

Let me relate a litte history relative to this. Some years age, in a village there lived a thoughtless girl.—Her name was Mary, and like most around her, she knew not God, and lived in the sinful pleasures of the world. Soon after she had completed her thirteenth year, a young woman, who had chosen the better part, persuaded Mary to accompany her to hear a sermon. The place of preaching was the cottage of an humble Christian, one of the Lord's poor. The subject was "The carnal mind is enmity with God." Mary listened, the Lord opened her heart; she felt the power of divine truth, and obeyed the same, and was made an heir of heaven. A few months afterwards she took sick and then the Lord was her support; she found promises sweeter, and sweeter, that there were enjoyments in His Word that none knew only those who realize them. At length she entered into rest before she had spent eighteen years on earth.

So my young friends, how much the grace of God may do for those who embrace religion in early life, even in a short time. On Mary's thirteenth birth-day, she was thoughtless and careless and on her eighteenth could arrive a saint in glory. Within the short space of something more than four years, she was enabled to forsake the world, to find a Savior, to profess His Gospel, to honor her profession, to languish calmly through months of sickness, to conquer death, and doubtless land in Heaven. In that short time, she found the Lord, finished His will, and went to rest. How blessed was early piety to her. She might have said, like many others, I am not yet fourteen, surely hereafter will be soon enough for me, and had she reasoned thus, and put off, though but a few years, her inquiry for salvation, God, it seems, by early death would have put it off forever. Delay not then to accept that blessing which is the source of every other blessing. Your life is as uncertain as hers.

THE TRUTH A WITNESS.

At a certain place in a certain town not far from here, two boys, Peter and John, who were brothers, had a feeling of malice in their hearts toward Harry, one of their associates, and about of the same age, because Harry said some hard words, as they called them, a good while ago. So Peter and John agreed to take spite out of Harry, at some convenient time, and did so by beating him with their fists until he was quite bruised. They did this, as they said, because Harry had said bad words about them.

When they left Harry go, he went home and told his father what happened who felt very sorry, but tho't perhaps Harry gave occasion for the treatment. So when Harry's father asked him, why Peter and John abused him, he told his father, they said I called them names and used bad words, and I did not. So the father of Harry took him over to see Peter and John and their father about the matter. When the father of Peter and John heard what happened, he was also sorry, but supposed that Harry must have given occasion for the treatment. He asked Harry whether he did not do or say something during the day that made the boys cross, not supposing his two good boys had cherished a spiteful feeling for a long time toward Harry. Then Peter and John were called and asked about the matter. The two boys confessed they had hit Harry, and that for using hard names and saying bad words, and the boys both testifying the same thing, would let poor Harry father an untruth. But Harry made a manly appeal to the boys by saying, "What did I say, or what did I do to-day?" Then Peter and John replied, "Oh, you did not say or do anything to us to-day out of the way, but a long time ago," and now for the first time, Harry found out what they really abused him for, quite to the astonishment of all,—a thing that should have been buried and forgotten long ago. So notwithstanding Peter and John testifying that what Harry said to his father was true, yet they were punished for keeping malice in their hearts and avenging themselves on Harry. Harry got clear, we notice, by the two boys testifying to what he said was true. When Harry and his father were returning home, he said to his father, "Father, if I had not told the truth, I could not have proved it." Boys and girls, always tell the truth, because the truth has always a witness.

DON'T LET YOUR LIFE BE A FAILURE.

Few sadder sentences fall from the lips than this: "My life has been a failure." And the saddest part is, that the failure can rarely be retrieved, because the convicton to most people, comes too late—Comes in the feebleness of old age when the brain is weak, and habit strong; comes after strength and true work and self discipline is gone. Says Rev. W. H. Murry: "Society is full of failures that need never have been made; full of men who have never succeeded; full of women who in the first half of their days did nothing but eat and sleep and simper, and in the last half have done nothing but perpetuate their follies and weakness. The world is full, I say, of such people; full of men of every trade and profession, who do not amount to anything; and I do not speak irreverently, and I trust not without due charity, without making due allowance for the inevitable in life, when I say that God and thoughtful men are weary of their presence. Every boy ought to improve on his father; every girl grow into a noble, gentler, more self denying womanhood than the mother. No reproduction of former types will give the world the perfect type. I know not where the millennium is, as measured by distance of time; but I do know and so do you, that it is a great way off as measured by human growth and expansion. We have no such men and women yet, no age has ever had any, as shall stand on the earth in that age of peace that will not come until men are worthy of it."

Young men!—young women! don't let your lives be failures. Make the best of what God has given you. Let your gratitude to him for life and its noble endowments, be expected in full devotion of will and tho't, and strength, to whatever work he brings in his wise providence to your hands. And remember that it is only good and useful work that he provides. Shun work—work that harms your neighbor in any way, as you would the deadliest thing. No true success ever comes from evil work. It may bring a harvest of golden apples, and purple grapes: but the apples will be like those of Sodom, full of bitter ashes, and the grapes sour.—Arthur's. Home Magazine.

There is no reason to fear that the religion which is developed in sunshine will shrivel and die in the darkness; that the plant which thrived in the conservatory will perish in the storm-blast.

BAPTISM.

Continued.

SUBJECTS FOR BAPTISM.

The fact is, there is not one parent out of ten who have their children baptized, can give the least reason for so doing except that their minister says it is a duty that should not be neglected. Thus parents are blindly led into a thing for which there is no foundation, and then delude their children by a false hope, the crime of which, may not be realized until after they are brought up before the judgment bar of God.

Ministers of the Gospel have no more right to baptize infants than idiots or Hottentot heathen. Salvation is a personal matter and parents or no one else has the right to choose the religion of their children by proselyting them while they are yet unconcious infants. Baptism is a sacrament instituted by God for the remission of actual sins. Therefore it is a matter for their own choosing and not that of another. If they after becoming cognizant of being sinners, repent of those sins and have faith in Jesus Christ, as the mediator for sins, they are then fit subjects for baptism and come under the power of the commission; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It is passing strange that a single one, of general intelligence, should risk their salvation on such a groundless foundation, yet thousands do it against better light and judgement. We are glad however to know that a large number are not willing to die without the assurance that they have been born again, and are baptized upon a living faith in Christ,

A case of this kind came under our notice a few years ago. He was a man that had passed his three score and ten—had been told by his parents that he was baptized when he was a child, and with an ever accusing conscience, he labored to make himself believe that all was well, and succeeded well enough while in the enjoyment of health, but when sickness came and life's cords, one after another, began to snap assunder, his anchor (hope) would not reach bottom, and while lingering upon his bed of sickness and death, his mind became troubled and the power of truth came flashing in upon him so powerfully that while alone, he was frequeotly heard to say; "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In conversing with him, he said; I now believe, but am not baptized. They tell me that I was baptized but I know nothing of it." In his dreams, he sat by the water side, a man came along of whom he requested to be baptized, the answer was; "If thou believest thou mayest." He was then taken down and buried with Christ in baptism and then went on his way rejoicing, but on getting awake it was all a dream, and still unwilling to surrender altogether to the power of converting truth. After a few months of fighting against wrong teaching, he gained the victory and we were called upon to come and baptize him. My elder brother and I went and found him in bed and very low, but the spirit was willing, and after a season of prayer, he was taken out of his bed, taken to the water and there baptized upon a living faith in Jesus.

After his return, he was so cheered and felt so invigorated, that he sat in his chair for several hours. His cup seemed now to be full and he was ready to depart. After another season of prayer, we took our leave of him to meet no more until we reach the other shore, as we in a few weeks got the intelligence that he had fallen asleep in Jesus with a blessed hope of immortality.

Oh, how we wish all that are thus deluded might have the advantage of such an experience before their dying hour.

In conclusion, we would say, do not be deceived. Cursed are they that make flesh their arm. Your salvation depends not on another, but on yourself. If you believe and are baptized, the promise is, you shall be saved Believers, and believers only are fit subjects for baptism, and he that teaches otherwise, has not a thus saith the Lord for it, because there is not a single passage in the New Testament in favor of anything but believer's baptism.

OUR LARGEST LIST.

There was a number of our agents wishing to know where our largest list goes. We would have given the information sooner but it did not seem to be fully determined, as some of our prominent lists in a short time, were considerably changed. Cerro Gorda, Ill, at present is 15 ahead of all others, numbering 60 names. This we call good for one office, and if our other periodicals have a corresponding circulation, speaks well of the community, showing that they are a reading people. We have agents that sent us larger numbers of subscribers, but not at one office. Such lists are encouraging and show that our brethren and sisters are interested in the cause of religion. All of our agents done quite well and a number are still at work and not without success. One since A. M., has added 20 names to his list, another 19, others smaller numbers, but have added materially to our list. This morning, a brother sends us 7, which he says he gathered in a few hours, and thinks if all would make a similar effort, our circulation might be doubled. We wish the effort might be made. We can still supply a considerable number with all the papers containing the report of A. M., and the remainder of the year for 75 cents. Let the work continue, all such favors are highly appreciated.

POSTAL CARDS.

Postage, in a business of some magnitude, is a matter of considerable importance and a cheaper system of postage has long been desired. This, we now have in the "Postal Cards." To us, they are a saving institution and could be used by our agents and readers, in many instances, to advantage. In gathering subscribers, if you do not wish to send the money until you can get more, give your postmaster one cent and get a card, and on this you can send the name as well as in a letter and save four cents. If Nos. are missing or you have any short business transaction, a postal card will answer just as well as a letter. They can be had now at almost any post office, and cost one cent each whether you get a single one or a thousand. A penny saved is two pennies made.

MISSING NUMBERS.

Some of our readers complain of not getting all of their papers. For this, we are sorry as we know how vexing it is to miss our weekly paper, especially if we are interested in them. We observe as much care as possible in sending them properly, but the postal department is not as perfect as it should be, and some of them are lost by the way. To remedy the disappointment as far as possible, we will send all that are missing if informed of the numbers. In calling for the lost papers, always give the number instead of the date.

Bro. J. H. Moore informs us that he intends soon to have published several works which are now in course of preparation. Bro. Moore is a good writer, and will give nothing to the Brotherhood and the public but what is strictly orthodox. His works will be announced when ready for distribution.

BOOKS.

We have, now on hands, a good assortment of Hymn Books, also the Brethren's Tune Books. Those in want of either can be supplied at once.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Protection Against Fire, by Joseph Bird, Hurd and Houghton, Cambridge, Mass. This book is by an author who is the greatest authority upon fires, and their prevention in the country—a practical man, who has been forty years collecting the material here used, experimenting upon the suggestions and advice here given. His warnings have been repeatedly given through the journals and in public talks, so that he has come to be recognized as authority upon this subject. Mr. Bird's principle seems to be that the only practical way to stop a fire is in its incipiency,—"An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure."—The book is very readable, graphic and animated in style, and discusses an important subject in a manner calculated to arrest the attention of any one. Price, $1.50.

The Ministry we Need, by Seth Sweetser, D. D Hurd and Houghton. This little book will be found interesting by all Christians, but has a special adaptation to the wants of those who are in the ministry, or liable to be called into it. "The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few."—Price 75cts.

For sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa.

Harper's Monthly for August is received and as usual, complete with interesting reading. Among the leading and most instructive papers are "The little Laborers of New York City." This embraces ten pages and is of rare interest. It is astonishing to learn what a vast amount of labor is performed by the "little hands" in our large cities "The Telegraph" is instructive and should be read by every body. Also "Madame De Sevigne and Her Contemporaries, Hawii-nei," "John Blithe's Name Sake," "Ten years among the Rowing Men," "Signers of the Declaration" and a number of others, are papers that will be read with much interest. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York, at $4.00 per year.

Scribner for August leads off with "Nantucket" giving a very lively description of this once renowned place, followed by "Normady Picturesque," The "Canopus Stone," "Modern Scepticism," "Mount Shasta," "Beyond the Portals," "Home and Society," "Culture and Progress," and a large amount of other interesting and instructive reading. Published by Scribner & Co. New York at $4.00 per year.

The Phrenological Journal, our old favorite, comes as ever filled with information none can afford to do without. There is nothing in which we should exercise so much care as supplying our families with unexceptional reading. The crimes of the late murderers, Walworth and Stoddard are both traced to low and trashy Novel reading. Clean your houses of such trash and supply your children with high toned Magazines among which there are none better than the Phrenological Journal.—Published by S. R Wells, New York, at $3.00 per year.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

We are frequently asked for papers to distribute in Sunday schools, and as we have on hand a large number of odd copies of the Pilgrim, we will send them for Sunday school distribution at the following rates: 50 copies post paid, 40 cents, 100 copies, 75 cents, 200 copies, $1.50. Nos. of different issues will be sent. This offer is less than the postage and cost of paper, but we do it, hoping it may be for the good of the schools and may be used as a means of spreading our doctrine and introducing the Pilgrim. Superintendents and friends of Sunday schools will please notice this offer:

LETTER TO E. R. S.

Dearly beloved sister:

O, what a goodly heritage is mine! Truly my lines have fallen to me in pleasant places. So were my tho'ts when I received your kind, encouraging, and sympathizing letter, and am prompted with feelings of Christian fellowship and affection to pen a few lines this beautiful morning, to let you know that I am still on praying ground and pleading terms with my heavenly Master, am still blessed with a reasonable degree of health, food and raiment. I feel that I ought to be content. Although I have passed through a sad ordeal, yet I feel that I am highly favored, for I am daily surrounded with blessings more than can be numbered, from the hand of our Heavenly Father, who heareth the cries of the needy, for not a sparrow shall fall to the ground without His notice. In His promises I have hope, faith and confidence, knowing that what He does is well done, for His purposes are all wise. Amid all these blessings, I have often to think of departed days, of years that have gone by, of the loved ones that have passed away with the days and years never more to return. I still feel the sad vacancy that has been caused by the hand of death, that never can be filled, save by the love of Christ,(but I have not fully attained to that as yet.) Sometimes I feel a desire to depart, to leave this world and be at rest, but all the days of my appointed time will I wait with patience, until my change shall come

Dear sister, I am living in the blessed anticipation of that glorious change which is awaiting us, when these mortal bodies shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption, when the soul shall burst the prison house of death and mount on golden wings to meet the Lord in glory. Dear sister, may we be the happy participants of that glorious event, that we may behold the King in His beauty, may behold those that have come up out of great tribulation, and have had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. My earnest desire and prayer to God is, that we may not be of the number that shall call to the rocks and mountains to fall on them and conceal them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the Throne, but that we may range the blessed fields, assemble on the banks of the River, and sing hallelujahs forever and ever.

When I commenced I was at a loss to know what to write, but my prayer was that I might write something that would be pleasing in the sight of God, something that would leave a lasting and pleasing impression on your mind, something that may encourage you on your way to the Holy Hill of Zion, something that may have a tendency to encourage both of us, (and all who may read these imperfect lines,) to strive to raise the Gospel-standard higher, to strive more fully to unfurl the banner, the blood-stained banner of the Prince of Peace, that we may be enabled to die more to the world and worldly pursuits, and come nearer to the wounded side of our blessed Redeemer. O, sister dear, if all professing Christians would strive more earnestly to keep the Gospel-armor bright, they would have less time to decorate their dying bodies with all the useless articles of fashion. Beware of the allurements of the goddess of fashion, for methinks, she, like alcohol, has a tendency to send many down the broad road of eternal ruin. My desire is to retain the old landmarks that together, we may strive to improve our talents that when our Master comes, we may hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Bro. Jacob Conner expects to attend the Annual Meeting, I hope if you are there you may become acquainted with him, [We did have the pleasure of meeting him. E. R. S.] My health is much better than it was a year ago. I would like to see you very much, perhaps, the Lord willing, it may happen sometime. Write soon again, for it is a great pleasure to know that you still remember me. Pray for me that I may still try to press upward and onward that when I am done with time and timely things, I may be so happy as to meet my loved ones on the shore of everlasting deliverance, and I hope to meet you there. Please accept my warmest thanks and best wishes. From your weak sister in the Lord. H. HOLLOWBUSH.

Notes of Travel.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Fairfield, Iowa, July, 19, 1873.

Dear Pilgrim:—I last wrote from Central City, Col. We returned to Denver City the 9th, and the 10th at 9 a. m., set out for Omaha, Neb, where we arrived next evening at 2:30, and left Council Bluffs at 4 p. m., and at 2:30, next morning, arrived at this place, from whence we went to Washington, and thence to Keokuk co, Iowa, where our parents and many other relatives and friends live. Had three meetings with the brethren in their meeting house near South English. Our time being limited, we had to set out homeward bound this morning and arrived here just before noon and have to tarry until 5:40 p. m. when we expect to be again on our way by rail. The crops in this State are abundant. The wheat harvest just now fairly coming, will be a great one.—Corn and other crops are also promising. I notice there is much of the old, crop of corn on hand. It is not likely there will ever be a famine in these United States while there is an Iowa to pour into the "Lap of plenty" her millions of bushels of grain. This State is improving in many respects very rapidly. One noticeable feature in her general appearance, is her groves of timber, which makes her begin to look like a timbered country, all the result of a well directed policy of her many thrifty farmers, in planting trees around and about their premises. When first I visited these wide extended prairies, they were almost an entire unbroken landscape of natural scenery; now they are in appearance, like a garden blossoming in richness and beauty, teeming with an enterprising population. The fulfillment of of that poetic prophet who, long ago, said,

"I hear the tread of the pioneer,
Where soon shall roll a human sea."

The weather is extremely warm and unpleasant. This town is the county seat of Jefferson co., and a thriving place of business, situated on the I. B. & W. R. R. and also the Chicago R. I. and Pacific R. R. railroad passes through it.

Yours truly.

Home, July 21, 1873.

I last wrote at Fairfield, Iowa, at which place I left the evening of the 16th at 5:30 a. m., one hour late, consequently missed the Cincinatti train. So I had to lay over 6 hours. Arrived at Cincinatti at 11 o'clock at night—had to lay over all day at Cincinatti, or until 4 p m., when I left, aboard the elegant steamer "Fleetwood" arrived at Huntingtou next day at 10 a. m, left in a few minutes, aboard the cars, and at 4 p. m. arrived at home and found all well. Truly the Lord blessed us abundantly, and we still are the recipients of His great mercies.

Dear Editors:—The Weekly Pilgrim continues to make its ever welcome visits to our home, and to fully realize the joy its messages give us, would be to be placed in our position. Those who live in a neighborhood where the Brethren are numerous and have the advantage of attending church every Sabbath, have no idea how hungry we, who live away out here in the prairie, isolated from kindred spirits, become for the Bread of Life. But we feel to thank God that though we as yet have no minister of the Gospel to preach for us, we have a Pilgrim who comes to see us every week, and gives us several good sermons with much good news from the general Brotherhood. Brethren and sisters, how we wish you would all write more. It does our souls good to hear of the welfare and prosperity of our beloved Zion. In our isolated condition, we sometimes are made to think that we are only "a few" but when we read of the large congregations and the many entering the Fold of Jesus, we take courage and thank the Lord. There are many things that transpire in the Eastern churches that would be of much interest to us in the far West. Then, for the sake of us and the many like circumstanced, let us have the news of the Kingdom. Yours in hope of eternal life. S. R. F——

ANSWER TO QUERY.

Jno. 10: 9.

"I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture."

I am not in the habit of unraveling mysteries, but will give my views, in short on the above Scripture.

"Shall go" in signifies, entering into the Church of Christ on earth by repentance, faith and baptism.

"Out" is leaving the Church Militant and entering the Church triumphant, which will be a change from mortality to immortality, a pasture so rich to the soul that it can not be compared to the pastures as enjoyed by the world, a pasture that will never be parched and burned by the sun, but will be fresh to the soul as a river of water.

BROWN—KEPHART.—At the house of the undersigned, Thursday July 24, '73, Mr. George S. Brown, of Brownsville, Md, to Miss. Laura O. Kephart, of the city of Altoona, Pa.

WM. H. QUINN.

DIED.

HOOVER.—In the Clover Creek Congregation, Blair Co, Pa., July 19, '73, Bro. Jacob P. Hoover, aged 66 years, 5 mos. and 14 days. Funeral services by Eld's Jacob Miller and Daniel Holsinger from Rev, 16: 15.

Brother Hoover had been a very consistent member, and up to the time of his death had served in the office of deacon for many years, with much credit to himself and benefit to the Church. He was a good and wise counseller, and was always ready to do his duty, The neighborhood has lost one of its best citizens, and the church a strong post. He was taken away very suddenly. He had been complaining for a few days but did not think it to be serious, and on Wednesday morning he told his companion that he would go to the mill that day. So he went to the stable and fed his horses and returned to the house to partake of breakfast, and soon after he had eaten, he told his wife that he felt sick, she should make him some tea and he would lie down. She stirred the fire and then went up to his room where she found him lying on the bed dying, and expired before any other person could be called in the house. On Friday the 18th, his remains were conveyed to the family graveyard, followed by a very large concourse of neighbors and friends to mourn their loss.

T. B. MAUDOKS.

SNELL.—In the Sugar Creek Congregation, Allen Co., Ohio, July 16, '73, sister Mary, widow of Joseph Snell deceased, formerly of Rockingham Co., Va., aged 79 years and 29 days. Funeral service by the Brethren from 2 Cor. 5: 1.

DANIEL BROWER.

BROWN.—In the Blue River District, near Columbia City Ind., on the 1st of July '73, after a short and severe illness, Elon, son of brother Daniel and sister Rebecca Brown, aged 15 years, 11 mos. and 21 days. Funeral services by Eld's David Baer and Joseph Zeigler, from James 10: 17.

A dutiful son, affectionate brother, and faithful friend. His loss is deeply mourned, not only by his parents and relatives, but also by a large circle of friends and neighbors who greatly sympathize with the bereaved.

A YEAR WITHOUT A SUMMER.

The following is a brief abstract of the weather during the year, known as the year without a Summer:

January was mild, so much so as to render fires almost needlest in parlors. December previous was very cold. February was not very cold, with the exception of a few days it was like its predecessor. March was cold and boisterous during the first part of it; the remainder was mild. A great freshet on the Ohio and Kentucky rivers caused great loss of property. May was more remarkable for frowns than smiles. Buds and flowers were frozen, ice formed half an inch thick; corn was killed and the fields were again and again planted until deemed to late. June was the coldest ever known in this latitude. Frost, ice and snow were common. Almost every green thing was killed. Fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, several in Maine and three in Central New York, and also in Massachusetts. Considerable damage was done at New Orleans in consequence of the rapid rise in the river, the suburbs were covered with water, and the roads were only passable in boats. July was accompanied by frost and ice; on the fifth, ice was formed of the thickness of window glass, thro'out New England, New York, and some parts of Pa. Indian corn was nearly all destroyed. August was more cheerless if possible than the Summer months already passed. Ice was formed half an inch thick. Indian corn was so frozen that the greater part was cut down and dried for fodder. Almost every green thing was destroyed both in this country and Europe. Papers received from England stated that it would be remembered by the present generation, that the year 1816 was a year in which there was no Summer. Very little corn ripened in New England and the middle States. Farmers supplied themselves from the corn produced in 1815 for the seed of the Spring of 1817. It sold for from four to five dollars per bushel. September furnished about two weeks of the mildest weather of the season. Soon after the middle it became very cold and frosty, and ice formed a quarter of an inch thick. October produced more than its share of cold weather. November was cold and blustering. Enough snow fell to make good sleighing. December was quite mild and comfortable. The above is a brief summary of the cold Summer of 1816 as it was called in order to distinguish it from the cold season.

The winter was mild. Frost and ice were common in every month of the year. Very little vegetation matured in the Eastern and Middle States.—The sun's rays seemed to be destitute of heat through the summer; all nature seemed to be clad in a sable hue, and men exhibited no little anxiety concerning the future of this life. The average wholesale price of flour during that year, in the Philadelphia market, was thirteen dollars per barrel. The average price of wheat in England was ninety-seven shilling per quarter.—Farmer's Cabinet, Amherst, N. H.

POETRY.

Let Every one Sweep Before his Own Door.

(A Paraphrase.)

Do ye heed the homely adage, handed down from days of yore,
"Ere you sweep your neighbor,s dwelling, clear the rubbish from your door."
Let no filth, no rust there gather—leave no traces of decay,
Pluck up every weed unsightly, brush the fallen leaves away.

If we faithfully have labored thus to keep without, within.
Plucked up envy, evil-speaking, malice, each besetting sin.
Weeds that by the sacred portals of the inner temple grow,
Poisonous weeds the heart defiling, bearing bitterness and woe,

Then, perchance, we may have leisure o'er our neighbor watch to keep,
All the work assigned us finished, we before his door may sweep;
Show him where the mosses clinging—tokens ever of decay—
Where the thistles, thickly springing, daily must be cleared away.

But, alas! our work neglecting, oft we mount the judgment seat,
With his failings, his omissions, we our weary brother greet;
In some hidden nook forgotten, searching with a careful eye,
We the springing weeds discover—some slight blemish there descry.

For his slothfulness, his blindness, we our brother harshly chide,
Glorying in our strength and wisdom, we condemn him in our pride;
Ask not why he has neglected thus before his door to sweep,
Why grown careless, he has slumbered, failed his garden plot to keep.

On the judgment seat still sitting, we no helping hand extend
To assist our weaker brother his short comings to amend;
For his weariness, his faltering, we no sweet compassion show.
From our store no cordial bring him, no encouragement bestow.

But, while busied with our neighbor, urging him to ceaseless care,
Calling to the thoughtless idlers, to their labor to repair,
Lo! unseen the dust has gathered, weeds are growing where of yore
Flowerets rare and sweet were blooming, when we swept before our door.

Ah! how easy o'er our brother, faithful ward and watch to keep,
But alas! before our dwelling hard indeed to daily sweep;
Harder than to share the conflict, "by the stuff" at home to stay,
Easier far to sit in judgment than to humbly watch and pray.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A DEFENSE.

Dear Pilgrim: I feel called upon to take some notice of the article that appears in your last issue under "Reminiscence," by way of defence of your prerogatives and of my own consistency and the correctness of the principle, contained in the essays written by me and published in the current volume.

That you, as editors, have violated any order of the Annual Meeting, I fail to discover; upon this point, I therefore, in your behalf, plead not guilty. In the meantime, however, in the exercise of a fair proportion of charity towards my dear brother, I award to him the most profound sincerity, and believe that he is impelled by the full belief that he is warranted by the statutes in making the allegation. I think that he is mistaken, notwithstanding, here then is the issue, the point to be settled. We will then, with becoming deference, to him as a wise exponent of questions, appeal to the "law and the testimony," "What sayest the law, how readest thou."

See minutes of A. M. of 1869, Art. I, Sec. 4. This article covers the whole ground as I opine upon this question. Note particularly in this review what is written in italics.

Section 4th, In reference to controvertial articles published in our religious papers, "we council and advise our Brethren Quinter and Kurtz and H. R. Holsinger, to publish nothing in their periodicals that disputes the practice of the precepts and ordinances of the Gospel as handed down to us from Christ and the Apostles through and by the forefathers of the Church.

Has Sunday Schools been handed down to us from Christ and the apostles through the forefathers of the Church? We negative the question, and assign our reasons, and will, presently pay our respects to the argument on the affirmative side of the question as advanced by brother F.

The first act of council on record upon Sunday Schools took place in 1838, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight years after Christ, and one hundred and thirty years after the organization of the Church in America. What was the sentiment of this council? Minutes of 1838, Art. 10.

Whether it be right for members to take part in Sunday Schools, class meeting and the like, considered most advisable to take no part in such like things.

In this decision, these old fathers of the Church must have been in beautiful harmony, as it appears to have settled the question for a period of nineteen years, until convention of Annual Council in 1857. Here it comes up again, but in a different form. See Art. 11.

"How is it considered for brethren to have Sabbath Schools conducted by the brethren?

Ans. Inasmuch as we are commanded to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, we know of no scripture which condemns Sabbath Schools." &c.

In answer to the quotation here given, we refer to our notes in the Essay as appears in the PILGRIM of June 10th, current volume. The argument in the next sentence, "we know of no scripture condemning Sabbath Schools," reminds us of Luther. When a scripture was demanded of him to justify the elevation of the host, he gravely remarked that he knew of no scripture forbidding it, a very unsafe ground upon which to establish a religious practice, I would say, and doubtless my brethren in the main, will endorse the sentiment. It will not fail to strike the notice of all who examine the acts of council upon this subject, that the prevailing opinion has been throughout that these schools, to be of utility to the cause of the Church, should be absolutely under the control of the brethren. If this was practicable in all cases we could not object so much, but as this is not the case, I am fully satisfied that the tendency for good and the promotion of vital Christianity is doubtful, to say the least of it, and with all the proof, is clear that the institution has not been handed down to us through and by the forefathers of the Church, therefore you stand exonerated from the charge preferred against you of transcending your privileges in this case, and I think you can consider yourself honorably discharged.

To the imputation of inconsistency, my answer is, that viewing the subject abstractly I acknowledge the appropriateness of the insinuation, all of us are, or appear to be, more or less inconsistent, therefore "consistency is a jewel," but as to the establishing and sustaining the great principle underlying the series of essays including Sunday Schools written by me, which is that all institutions that are from heaven are so fully and clearly authenticated in the scriptures, so unmistakably set forth that they do not admit of the possibility of being mistaken and that those that are of men are so extremely destitute of support from that source that all strict constructionists of the divine code cannot fail to see from whence they are. That I am, in this respect, not guilty I plead, and looking at this subject from this standpoint I necessarily arrive to the same conclusion that, what ever it may be, if not divinely authorized, it is of men and, in this respect, must be of the same class. If I have not maintained the truth of my position throughout these essays, then I am at fault, but such argument as this; "I think it is according to the scriptures and therefore say amen," and its connections, can not overthrow a super-structure that is so well fortified. I would say then, to my dear brother that, if I have spoken evil bear witness of the evil, but if well please do not lay your hand on my mouth. We ask again, does the questioning the propriety and utility of Sunday Schools dispute the practice of the precepts and ordinances of the Gospel as handed down by Christ and the apostles? If there is a precept for Sunday Schools in the history of our blessed Christianity, then it is an ordinance from heaven, but that it has been ordained by heaven I confess I cannot find testimony to satisfy my mind, and it appears, that it was never suggested to the mind of the Church for 1838 years and then considered of such questionable propriety that it was "considered most advisable to take no part in such like things." And nineteen years after this, in the researches of the friends of the invention, the wonderful discovery was made that if there was no Scripture to support it there was none that condemned it. So much then for the proof that Sunday Schools is an "ordinance handed down by Christ and the Apostles." But my dear brother Furry, in his zeal to defend a special favorite, puts on his spectacles, deeply colored with the tincture of partiality, and partly by the influence of the rays of respect for Scriptural truth and partly by the shade of Sunday School glasses thinks he sees divine authority for them, but presently with an effort superhuman he leaps over a period of 1830 years, and then finds the Jews and even Christ in the synagogues reading the Scriptures and expounding them to the people, and beholds a Sabbath School. What a pity that my brother was not aware that if he had just came down to Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana or wherever the brethren have churches organized, and even in Pennsylvania, and perhaps at New Enterprise, the Sabbath Schools, such as are now in question, could not be found. Such Sabbath Schools as those referred to in the synagogues, where the Scriptures are read and expounded, could have been enjoyed everywhere. But romance apart, and returning to sober reality, let us examine these Jewish and early Christian Sabbath Schools.

Math. 13: 54. "He taught them in their synagogues insomuch that they were astonished and said "whence has this man this wisdom and these mighty words?" No modern Sunday School here. Mark 6: 2. "And when the Sabbath day was come he began to teach in the synagogues and many hearing him were astonished saying from whence hath this man these things and what wisdom is this that is given unto him that even such mighty works are wrought by his hand." This looks to me like the way we hold our Sunday Schools in Virginia; preaching the word.

Matt 4: 23. "And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, &c. Mark 1: 39, "And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee and cast out devils. Luke 4: 44, "And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee." Acts 9: 20, "And straightway he, Paul, preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. 13: 5 "And when they were in Salamis they preached the Word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had John to their minister." 15: 21, "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." Paul and his company came to Antioch, they went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and after the reading of the law and the Prophets, the rulers of the synagogues sent unto them saying: "Ye men and brethren if ye have any word of Exhortation for the people say on. Then Paul stood up and beckoning with his hand said, men of Israel and ye that fear God give audience," and he preached an eloquent sermon, and when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath. Acts, 13 chap. 14: 1. "And in Iconium, the apostles spake in the synagogue, so that many believed, Jews and Greeks." And coming to Thessalonica where there was a synagogue, Paul as his manner was, went in unto them and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures preaching Christ unto them. Acts 17. 1.

How abundantly do these Scriptures exemplify the reading of the Scriptures to an intelligent audience, but surely it requires a great stretch of the imagination to see in them a shade of testimony in favor of Sun-Schools of modern type, or in other words a degree of supernatural wisdom, which was not possessed by the forefathers through whom the precepts and ordinances of the Gospel was handed down to us.

Outside of my own investigations in determining the legality of Church usages, whether in our own or others, when I come in contact with men of acknowledged ability, and large experience and deep research into the mines of Gospel truth, seeing them fail to produce a single testimony from the Scriptures to sustain such usages, I am more and more confirmed that they are of men and not from heaven, and all that I ask in the case in question is that my brethren who differ with me, will consider it in the broad daylight of divine revelation; look at the dangers of being unequally yoked with unbelievers, and thereby having our good manners corrupted and drawn more and more into the current of corrupted Christianity. I have not jumped rashly at my conclusions, it is the result of much thought and careful observation, therefore my mind is pretty well settled; but I am aware that we may look at any subject from different standpoints and honestly arrive at different conclusions and therefore should exercise the most extensive charity toward each other. To suppose that we must see alike in every particular, in matters of policy, is a weakness too palpable to be indulged where there is a reasonable degree of intelligence, and to undertake to compel others to see and act as we do, is an exhibition of the spirit of intolerance altogether contrary to the spirit of our beloved profession. All will understand from these premises that I entertain no unkind feeling toward those who differ with me; far be it from me to allow myself to indulge such a thing for a single moment, and if there is anything in this treatise that would appear personal, be assured it is not so intended. I can stand the severest test of my opinions in the way of argument, but under personalities I confess I am sensitive, and therefore I strictly guard against the use of personalities, and in conclusion, if there is anything in this communication that involves the privileges of the press, I, and I alone am responsible, and avow myself a lover of the Church and its usages as handed down to us from Christ and the apostles through the forefathers of the Church.

Fraternally yours,
B. F. Moomaw.

OUR GREAT EXEMPLAR.

The place for baptism we think should be evident from the examples before us, to every honest seeker after truth, and we shall now refer briefly to the mode.

First, we appeal to reason. O come let us reason together! If any other than immersion was the mode, would it have been necessary to resort to a place where there was much water? Would Christ have went down into the water to be baptized? Would Philip and the Eunuch both have went down into the water if immersion had not been the mode? If water was as repulsive to Philip and the Eunuch as it, apparently is to the people of this day, they surely would not have went into it, unless it was an imperative duty,—unless it was requisite to the performance of baptism. It does seem to us that our own reasoning, our own judgment, should teach us in reference to this subject.

As to the meaning of the word baptize, the most eminent linguists of ancient and modern times, define it as meaning to immerse, and we might cite to many of these as evidence, but for the present we will only refer to a couple examples in Holy Writ that conveys the meaning Christ attached to it very clearly. When Nicodemus came unto Jesus in the solitary hours of the night to enquire more fully concerning His doctrine, He taught him in reference to baptism. "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again He cannot see the Kingdom of God." In this Christ evidently referred to the change that must take place in every regenerated soul. The carnal nature, the spirit of evil must be crucified, and the heart changed by the agency of the Holy Spirit. But Nicodemus failed to comprehend the import of Christ's teaching. Then He says, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and the spirit he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." In the first instance Jesus taught him in reference to the subject of regeneration, and lastly He taught in connection with it, the external evidence of regeneration. Now by water, Christ evidently signified baptism, and we are to be born of water before we can enter the Kingdom of God. How are we to be born of water? What relation must the subject sustain to the water in order to resemble a natural birth? Certainly there must be an application of the subject to the element, and not the element to the subject; and further, anything short of an immersion can not at all resemble a birth. Jesus, in order to go through the birth literally, and give us an example, descended into Jordan's flowing stream, and this idea He taught the Jewish ruler by this very apt and impressive comparison. Again the apostle's idea of Christ's meaning of baptism is indeed very evident. From Paul's writings to the Romans, we have the following: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death," &c. Here the apostle compares it to a burial, and he certainly knew how to baptize. I have in my possession, a copy of Barne's notes, and as he is a commentator of considerable note, I will quote his comments upon this passage: "It is altogether probable that the apostle in this place had allusion to the custom of baptism by immersion; this can not be proven so as to be liable to no objections, but I presume this is the idea that would strike the minds of the great mass of unprejudiced readers." Just so, and if our desires are to follow the example of Jesus with an unprejudiced mind, this would be our conclusion with reference to all these passages, but in this instance there is really no room left for even the prejudiced mind to cavil with the truth. What would you think, dear reader, of sprinkling a little ground over a dead body and calling it buried! The idea is simply preposterous, and we must certainly conclude that immersion was Paul's idea of baptism.

By reference to 1st Peter, 3: 21, we glean very clearly Peter's idea of baptism. He alludes to the circumstance of Noah and his family being saved by water, and then uses the following simile: "The like figure whereunto baptism doth now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the ressurrection of Jesus Christ." Now Peter certainly alludes to baptism as essential to our salvation, and what is his idea in reference to the mode? The parenthetical clause shows very clearly that he had in view an immersion, because the mere sprinkling of a little water on the forehead would not have conveyed the idea of cleansing. But the action in baptism that Peter had in view did convey the idea of putting away the filth and therefore, for fear some might be mistaken as to its true design, he made a clear, concise explanation. It is not to put away the filth of the flesh, "but the answer of a good conscience toward God." Again, the Jews and Gentiles, those whom he was addressing, were in the habit of bathing frequently in water, for the cleanliness of their bodies, and Peter was fearful that they might become confused as to the true design. If any other than immersion had been the mode Peter had in view, it is certainly evident to all that this explanation would not have been needed.

From these considerations, dear reader, it does seem to us that the way of our great exemplar in baptism is clear, and that we should not err therein. And we would urge you to lay by every preconceived opinion you may have and seriously consider the subject. It is important. The declaration of Jesus is positive, "Except ye be born of water and the spirit you cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." If, then, by being born of water Jesus meant immersion, what will be your condition if you are not immersed? Will it not according to the language of Jesus, debar you from an entrance into His Kingdom? Oh, this is an important thought! It is a question upon which hangs our eternal destiny, and may God prompt you to solve it so as to meet divine acceptance before it is too late.

Jesus also gave us an example of how to meet and overcome temptations. Shortly after he had given us the example of baptism, He was led by the spirit into the wilderness to meet and combat with Satan. This conflict every child of God will have. Following the example of Jesus in baptism will not free us from the power of Satan. It is then that he often presents his most powerful temptations. How often does he prompt us to make a show of our religion; how often does he prompt us to disobey God's Word; how often does he take us upon the mountain and show us the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them; how often does he offer us these things if we would only worship him. But thanks be to God we have the power to overcome all these temptations, and Jesus as our example. And how did he overcome this great enemy of souls? Simply by making use of the Word of God. "It is written," said Jesus, and thus He gained the victory. So we may, reader, if in time of temptation, we use "the sword of the spirit which is the word of God."

In conclusion, let me intreat you to follow the example of Jesus. Ask God to give you strength to overcome the enemy of souls, and finish the work He has given you to do, in a manner that will meet His approbation. Jesus is our exemplar in this. He prayed frequently to His heavenly Father, and if it was necessary for Him to pray frequently, how much more necessary is it for us. He would spend hours, and even nights in prayer, that He might be able to withstand the enemy of souls and accomplish the work for which He came. How can we, poor, needy, dependent creatures expect to gain the victory, and accomplish our work without frequent prayer to God?

Christ also gave us an example of perseverance and devotion to the great cause of Christianity. "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me, and to finish His work," was His language, and never did He allow anything to deter Him from the great work He had to accomplish until on the cross He cried, "It is finished." He said to the people on one occasion, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." This is His language to us to-day. We should follow His example in this, that we make the service of God our highest purpose and all other things only secondary. May God help us all to be more careful to follow Jesus the great Exemplar. J. B. B.

"JESUS WEPT."

Oh, what blessed tears were those! Who could have witnessed them unmoved! But why did He weep, what was it that so deeply affected Him, and caused the bitter tear to flow? We read where He in several instances wept, but on this occasion he was at the grave of Lazarus. It appears that He had a particular regard for this little family of Bethany, Mary, Martha, and their brother Lazarus. Often, when weary from traveling from place to place, He would resort to their home, and there rest secluded from the busy scenes of life, when every attention that kind hearts could suggest, and liberal hands bestow, were freely imparted to their divine Guest. At the time Lazarus was taken sick, Jesus was not in the immediate vicinity, was, no doubt, away on His mission, doing good to the children of men, but the sisters sent unto Him, saying, "Lord, behold he whom Thou lovest is sick." They, at this time especially desired His presence and sympathy, for they well knew that Jesus loved them and would share their sorrow, and, perhaps, would heal their brother. But in the meantime, for the record says, "He remained still two days in the place where He was," Lazarus died. This was a severe affliction for the lonely sisters, and especially so in the absence of their Lord, for they thought if He had been present he would not have died. Jesus hearing of his death came to Bethany to the scene of mourning, and when the joyful intelligence was conveyed to Martha that He was coming, she arose quickly and went out to meet Him and said unto Him, "Lord, if Thou hadst been here my brother had not died." She then went and called Mary, and when the sorrow-stricken sister came into His presence, she repeated the same words, and when He saw her weeping and those who accompanied her, He also wept with them. The deep, pungent grief of those bereaved sisters could not be witnessed by the tender compassion of Jesus unmoved, and there, around the tomb of their beloved dead, He lifted up His voice and wept. Oh, how He must have loved them!

Since then, many have gone unto the grave to weep there, and many sad hearts have returned from the spot that contained the lifeless forms of those who were near and dear, but the same Jesus who mingled His tears with the bereaved ones of Bethany, is ever near to comfort the disconsolate, and His divine compassion reaches unto all conditions of life. It is hard, very hard, to have our loved ones taken from us by the cold, ruthless hand of death, yet if we, like the sisters of Lazarus, can look forward with bright anticipations to a happy reunion beyond this vale of tears, the glorious thought should calm our sorrows and dry our tears. Jesus loved this little family dearly, but in order to test their affection for Him, and that He might have an opportunity of displaying His power by raising him from the dead, He saw fit, in His wise judgment, to take from them their only brother. Thus it is often in this life, those who are near by nature's ties are called away in order to draw the affections heavenward,—away from these earthly scenes, and although the heart may seem broken, and bitter tears flow, yet it is God who has seen fit to wound, and He will heal the broken-hearted, and His name be glorified thereby. He is a God of love and great mercy, and does not afflict His children willingly no more than would a kind earthly father grieve his child, but chastens it that his commands and precepts may be obeyed.

Dear sinner, Jesus loves you too, and would have you come unto Him and live. He has long been waiting for your return, and still stands with outstretched arms to receive you. Then why grieve Him so, why resist the tender pleadings of His love? He has called you time after time, and yet you linger in the paths of sin. Oh, why do you treat your best friend with such indifference? He gently knocks at the door of your hearts for admittance, and yet you refuse to let the heavenly stranger in. Soon, very soon, He may knock for the last time. He says in His Word, "My spirit shall not always strive with man." Sinner, Jesus loves you and weeps over your ingratitude. W. A. C.

START RIGHT AGAIN.

In these days when religious teachers seek to place themselves before Christ, in the hearts of the willing and simple minded, and when converts are manufactured by electricity by scores, and when so many doubts arise about the power of the Christian religion because of tyrannical and over-reaching religionists, and because foreign bigots are in the ascendency, it is well for us to settle down on the first principles, which are to believe first, that God exists and has made all things, and see that he is merciful and has provided a remedy for all sin. Grounded in these it will not be difficult for us to find our way to the Father after self-trust and faith in others have departed. And the conditions of this remedy which is centered in love can then be realized. Abiding in this love which makes it impossible from its very nature for us to wrong Him for whom it exists, we can ride triumphantly over the scorn, suspicion and contempt even of those whom we respect, whose disapprobation is by far the most cutting. Then we are prepared to work out our own salvation, which is as I believe to become settled in the first principles, and then to work out the rest with our own brains, hanging, in the meantime, our consciences on what we thus work out. Trust not in men or princes (very good men) for they damn and send to hell many who will wear crowns of rejoicing in heaven. "See that no man takes thy crown;" if he takes your conscience and you do everything because he thinks it right, then to him by right belongs your crown of rejoicing. "See that no man takes thy crown."—Christian Cynosure.

HE RISETH FROM SUPPER

This expression of John the Apostle, signifies rising from a meal prepared, made ready to eat, but not eaten. Rising from a place where a meal was, and is eaten, as having been on a table, the proper phraseology would be, riseth from the table.—a meal or supper set down to, by any one, and eaten; it is impossible to rise up from that meal, or supper, because, in rising up and leaving, the person leaving, has eaten it, and taken it with him. Any religionists holding the idea of Jesus having eaten supper, to which he had set down because of the expression, "He riseth from supper" is a perversion of proper Bible phraseology; and misdirects the disciple of Jesus in his inquiries after Bible truths. ENCOURAGING NEWS.

Gilboa, Putnam, Co., O.

Dear Pilgrim:—Under the kind providence of God, we are happy to inform you that the little colony of humble followers of the meek Savior located in the west branch of the Rome Congregation are passing through a season of peace, happiness and prosperity. Cordial love and a oneness of effort seem to pervade, which results, as such labors always do, in constant accessions to our number. We have had 18 accessions within 15 months by baptism, and six by letter. Several have made application while the prospect is yet encouraging for continued accessions. May the Lord yet favor us with His blessing, for, in casting an eye over our field of labor, we see it ripening ready to harvest, but are sad to know that though the harvest is so great yet "the laborers are few."

SINS AGAINST THE BODY.

BY MRS. AMELIA E. BARR.

It is the duty of every one to be acquainted with the conditions on which alone he can have "a sound mind in a sound body;" and if some little trouble is involved in the pursuance of these conditions, "the game is worth the candle," since it is very certain that the mind must ask permission of the body to be healthy, happy and successful.

Marital, the ancient epigrammist, says: "to be is not called Life, but to be well;" and Cicero in his second book "De Officiis," gives us the true canon of a rational hygiene—"Preserve health by attention to the body, by temperance in living, and by refraining from sensuality."

Attention to the body is both positive and negative; we sin against it both by omission and commission. But the first of all its requirements are pure air to breathe. The merest tyro in hygienic matters, knows that air deficient in oxygen, and surcharged with carbonic acid gas from breathing lungs, cannot either properly purify the blood, evolve heat, or develop vital force; and that, under such circumstances, the unpurified blood is sent coursing through heart, arteries and veins, becoming more and more vitiated at every revolution; until, if continued, typhus, cholera, or dysentary supervene.

I do not think that the neglect in this matter is as persistent and criminal as it was a few years ago. The line upon line and precept upon precept of hygienic reformers have done good. The homes of both rich and poor are improved, and the mass of people are more sensitive to their rights in this respect. The neglect of this first law of health is chiefly remarkable in churches, theatres, halls of public amusement, etc. There, the amount of vitiated air is largely increased by the gas illumination; and before the close of any ordinary play or opera, it is very probable that at least one-eighth part of all the air in the building has already passed thro' our neighbor's lungs. Thus we constantly witness the most fastidious individuals, who would scruple to eat what their neighbor's hand had touched, inhale without objection, the breath issuing from his nostrils.

Dr. Franklin used to take what he calls an air bath every morning. He argued that the skin was a breathing organ, and should not only be kept clean, but should also be exposed to the embraces of the pure air, at least five or ten minutes every twenty four hours; combined with a cold sponging and the use of a coarse towel, there can be no doubt of its excellence. Southern hygienists advise a sun bath as equally good, provided the head be sheltered.

Cleanliness is next to godliness. If a man cannot pray, he can wash; and there is no doubt but what

> "From the body's purity, the mind > Receives a secret, sympathetic aid," and, as good George Herbert says, "the mind's sweetness will bear its operation upon the body." There is even something unnatural and unbelievable in a dirty Christian.

The want of physical exercise is another sin against the body. Tens of thousands suffer from exercising the brain too much and the muscular system too little. "Where the stimulus is, there flows the blood;" and if the blood is healthy, there is activity of nutrition, perfection of development, vigor of function. But exercise, to be really healthy, should be of such a kind as to set the whole frame in motion, rouse to action the nervous centres, and bring every part alternately into activity.

In all exercise, however, the importance of mental stimulus is very great, for it is comparatively valueless, unless the idea of taking it for health is lost in the interest of the occasion. The felon at his task has plenty of exercise, but it has not the good influence of the row on the river, the walk with a friend, the holiday in the woods.

The love of children for action, shows what Nature thinks about it, and to the aged it is no less important; for if judiciously used, it will retard, if not prevent, "that second childishness and mere oblivion," which too often clouds the last days of human life.

The hygienic laws regarding food do not need "twelve tables;" they are few and simple, and easily enforced by sensible men and women. First, it must be understood that oily, fatty elements, heat the body, glutinous or plastic elements nourish it. The first then fortify the system against cold; the second repair the waste of the tissues, and give strength to the muscles and nervous system. Climate and circumstances must, therefore, vastly alter cases in their use, and a man's own reason is the only adviser needed.

Whatever food is eaten, it should never be eaten very hot; it should be thoroughly masticated; it should be simple in character and cooking; it should only be eaten in quantities commensurate with the wants of the system. Man is an omniverous animal, and may eat almost anything, if he does not exceed; whereas rigid vegetarians, by excess in quantities, may induce serious and distressing consequences.

The sense of hunger is the natural index as to both time and quantity, but the digestive organs should certainly be allowed to dispose of one meal before they are cumbered with another. People in active life cannot be quite regular; excessive labor may demand an earlier meal one day than is necessary another—a large margin in these things is left for discretion. But little children and old persons should, in all dietary matters, make order their first law.

No laws are so obvious as those of diet, none are so flagrantly broken. And this, in spite of knowledge, and in spite of certain punishment; for, though we oppress nature with apparent impunity for years, she will, at last, present her bill to a broken constitution.

As a rule, pure water is the best of all drinks, but very little fluid ought to be taken during meals. Hot, watery soups before a solid dinner, dilute the gastric juices, and tea and coffee in large quantities have the same effect. But, when drinks are taken as stimulants, they come under the severest condemnation. If taken to increase the vital force, the extra exertion made under their influence, is made at the expense of the constitution: and the oftener it is repeated, the more permanent the debility, which is its certain re-action. In no case can stimulants be a substitute for solid nourishing food.

But the organs and functions of animal life need something beside air, exercise and food. They must have periods of complete rest. By protracted effort, the eye, the ear, the brain, etc., all lose their sensibility. Then sleep is to organic life what food is to animal life. All that food is to the blood, sleep is to the sensation, thought and muscular activity.

When the system is perfectly healthy, sleep suspends all the powers of animal life; not the slightest consciousness exists. Such sleep is the surest guarantee of longevity. The continued action of the mind on any subject, will make the sleep dreamy and unrefreshing. Sluggish drowsiness relaxes the solids, and induces languor and debility, while excessive wakefulness weakens the brain and the whole system. Nothing is so excellent for soul and body, as a good solid bar of sleep between day and day, provided it be taken in a room thoroughly ventilated, and on a sensibly hard bed; for when a person feels such an enormity as a feather bed a necessity, he is in a very bad physiological condition, and the sooner he gets out of it the better.

Something must be said on the influence of the mind and the Will upon hygienic conditions. The Will, is indeed the guardian of the body's interests. Thus, though the food, when once within the stomach, is beyond control, the Will has the power of selecting the quality and quantity of it. Again, though respiration is an involuntary act, the Will can promote its efficiency by selecting pure air, or accelerating it by exercise. The will, then, is a kind of sentinel over the organic functions.

I have already mentioned the good influence of mental stimulus in physical exercise, and every one knows how vehemently mental excitement disturb organic functions. Grief, anger, fear, disappointment, throw the body into sudden tumultuous mutiny. But though for an hour or two there may be confusion and panic, a Will under thorough discipline will speedily recover its sudden surprise, and regain its equanimity.

The self-command of soldiers and statesmen, shows the power that can be acquired by the Will over the body, and the advantage of such a discipline in a hygienic point of view, can hardly be over estimated. Under control like this, the ills of life are only like the transient sorrows of childhood—

> "Burs on youth's glittering raiment hem."

When the sympathy between the nervous system of organic life and the mind maintains this delightful character—which is the natural result of observing the laws of health, —then and only then, a man may be said to have "a sound mind in a sound body."—Science of Health.

FULLY DEVELOPED CHRISITANS.

Our religion is intended to make us symmetrical Christians, fully developed throughout. Too many men consult taste, aptitude, facility, or opportunity in their heart progress, and thus fail of moral rounding out. One is full of personal activity, but he cares nothing for prayer meetings or religious conferences. Another is zealous for all meetings, but has no earnestness in Christain work. A third is active and devotional, but is niggardly in the use of his money. Others have their specialties in which they excel, but their failings, which amount to a blemish of character. Of course, it is better when one is good in any department than if he failed in all. But how impresstve is the life which is full and thorough! It speaks of one who is "complete in Him," and who is going toward perfection in the Christian graces.

The story is told of a woman who freely used her tongue to the scandal of others, and made confession to the priest of what she had done. He gave her a ripe thistle top, and told her to go out in various directions and scatter the seeds, one by one. Wondering at the penance, she obeyed, and then returned and told her confessor. To her amazement, he bade her go back and gather the scattered seeds; and when she objected that it would be impossible, he replied that it would be still more difficult to gather up and destroy all the evil reports which she had circulated about others. Any thoughtless careless child can scatter a handful of thistle seeds before the wind in a moment, but the strongest and wisest men cannot gather them again.

PRAYER! What battles has it not fought! what victories has it not won! what burdens has it not carried! what wounds has it not healed! what griefs has it not assuaged! It is the wealth of poverty; the refuge of affliction; the strength of weakness; the light of darkness. It is the oratory that gives power to the pulpit; it is the hand that strikes down satan, and breaks the fetters of sin; it turns the scales of fate more than the edge of the sword, the craft of statesmen, or the weight of sceptres; it has arrested the wing of time, turned aside the very scythe of death, and discharged heaven's frowning and darkest cloud in a shower of blessings.—Guthrie.

THE promotion, or else degeneracy of man, is as perpetual the apparent course of the solar and lunar orbs.—Either upward and more and more resplenden in glory, more and more fervent in warmth, stronger and stronger in power, or else downward, the lower the faster in his course to coldness, darkness, despair and finally that night "in which no man can work." Except if happily he should at some period of his life call upon his sun to stand still upon Gibeon, and his moon in the valley of Ajalon until he avenge himself of his enemies, as it is "written in the book of Jasper."—C. C. Root.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE Cholera still prevails in different parts of the country and is generally traced to some local causes.—Cleanliness, it is said, is next to godliness, and we are sure it is an important auxiliary to health and a safeguard against Cholera. In some of the western towns it was reported as being very bad but now subsiding.

—The following is said to be an approximately correct classification of the adherents of the various churches among English-speaking people: Protestant Episcopalians, 12,500,000; Presbyterians, 11,500,000; Baptists, 10.500,000; Congregationalists, 7,500,000; Methodists, 15,000,000; Roman Catholics, 10,000,000–57.000,000 of Protestants, against 10,000,000 of Roman Catholics.

GREAT FIRE IN BALTIMORE.—The "City of Monuments" has had its turn at a severe conflagration. About ten blocks have been partly burned; between three and four of these tetotally. The section destroyed was chiefly occupied by small stores and factories, and for the most part, except on the eastern and northern limits with common class residences. The loss is estimated from $600,000 to $800,000.

GERMAN CHURCH ORGANIZED.—The Advance states that on June 20, a German church of thirty-one members was organized near Fontenelle, Nebraska, as a result of the labors of Rev. Mr. Mollenbeck, who was appointed last fall the first German Congregational missionary for Nebraska. This church includes a German evangelical colony from the little duchy of Lippe-Detmold, all of one faith, old neighbors and freinds in the fatherland, and now in their new homes anxious to lift up their influence against German infidelity and formalism. By united voice on the day of church organization they asked that Mr. Mollenbeck be installed as their pastor, pledging him the first year, for a part of his time only, out of their poverty, $250 towards his support.

CURE FOR BEE STINGS.—A correspondent of the British Gardener's Magazine writes: "on the 15th of April last a young man, employed near bees, had the misfortune of being stung. No remedy being near at hand, I remembered Mr. Gordon's note on the cure of bee stings, at page 491 of the Gardeners Magazine for 1872. I recommended him to apply the common soil to the wound as decribed by Mr. Gordon, and it immediately relieved the pain and prevented the swelling. Such a receipt is more valuable than gold to all who have anything to do with bees. I formerly used common blue for bee stings, but common soil is preferable.

—A correspondent writing about the recent earthquake in the north of Italy, says; "The effects of the earthquake at the village of St. Pi do Fellota were terrible. It was the fete of St Peter, the patron saint of the place. The church was gaily decorated and was crowded with worshipers when, without a moment's warning, an undulation swept beneath the village and down came the roof and the walls of the church, burying its living contents. Those nearest to the door were able to escape, but of the remainder thirty eight were killed on the spot—eighteen men and twenty women—and a great many were seriously hurt. The priest officiating had his arm broken. Two others, assisting, escaped. The entire village was one scene of fallen and falling houses.—Advent Times.

From a recently published statement, it appears that the average life of the Jew in London is forty-nine years, while of the Christian it is only thirty-seven years. Of a given number of Christians, only one quarter will, as a general rule, live to be sixty years, while among Jews, one quarter live to be at least seventy-one. Among children, fourteen per cent, of the Christian population die between one year and five years of age, while only ten per cent of the Jewish children. In Prussia it requires fifty-one years for the Christian population to double itself, and only forty-one years for the Jewish.

OH! LITTLE CHILD.

Oh! little child, lie still and sleep,
Jesus is near,
Thou needst not fear;
No one need fear whom God doth keep,
By day or night;
Then lie thee down in slumber deep,
Till morning light.

Oh! little child, thou need'st not wake:
Though round thy bed
Are dangers spread,
Thy Savior care for thee will take.
Jesus is strong,
And angels watch thee, for His sake,
The whole night long.

Oh! little child, lie still and rest;
He sweetly sleeps
Whom Jesus keeps,
And in the morning wake so blest
His child to be:
Love every one, but love Him best,
He first loved thee.

Oh! little child, when thou must die,
Fear nothing then,
But say Amen
To God's command, and quiet life
In His kind hand,
Till He shall say, "Dear child come fly
To heaven's bright land."

NO MOTHER.

A few days ago, a little girl, one of my Sabbath school scholars not yet seven years old whose mother died two years ago, came to my house to visit me. She is a pleasant lovely little girl. As she sat by me, I talked to her, telling her about Jesus, and the beautiful angels; about the happiness of Heaven and how we ought to love and obey God, and that he would take all those who loved him to live with him above; and as I was thus talking, the tears began to trickle from her eyes, and she began to sob aloud. When I asked her why she cried, after wiping the tears from her eyes, she said, "When you talk that way, it makes me think of my mother, then I have to cry."

Whether this little girl's mother was a good woman, a christian, I do not know; but I told her that if we loved God, and did what he commands us, we should again meet all our dear friends who are good, and obedient to God while they were in this world. She said she loved Jesus, and would try to be a good girl.

My young friends, have we not all some dear friends, a mother a father, a brother or sister, or some other dear ones who have died, and who we believe gone to live with the angels in Heaven? I can say I believe I have some very dear friends there; and often, like the little girl, when I think of them, tears will come into my eyes.

Suppose those dear friends who have loved Jesus, and lived holy lives could speak to us, and tell us how happy they are, would it not encourage us to try more than we ever have to live obedient to God, that we might also, when we die, be taken to that happy place? And suppose those who have been wicked and disobedient while they lived, could speak to us, and tell us of the terrible punishment with suffering, would it not fill us with terror and trembling? and would we not pray to God, day and night to help us to overcome all wickedness and sin, and make our hearts pure and clean from all that is hateful in his sight, that we may escape that dreadful punishment?

When those die who have been good, and obedient to God, they are glad that they can now go home, and be happy; they are only sorry that they did not do more for Jesus; but when the wicked die, and know that they are the enemies of God, their hearts are filled with terror, and O, how sorry they are that they did not obey God; and often they say "O, if I only had my life to live over again, how different it would be;" or "Oh, that God would let me live just a few days longer, that I might make peace with him and be prepared to die."

My dear little readers, I hope you will often think of God, of your dear Savior who died for you, and often think of your dear friends who have died; and if you think they are gone to that blessed place in Heaven, try to live so that you may meet them there. Live so that when you die, you may rejoice that you have loved and served the Lord, and that you are now going to meet your dear friends and be forever happy. Love and serve God all the days that he lets you live, then you need not wish that you had your time to live over again.—Herald of Truth.

AN HOUR A DAY.

There was a lad who, at fourteen, was apprenticed to a soap-dealer. One of his resolutions was to read an hour a day, or at least at that rate; and he had an old silver watch, left him by his uncle, which he timed his reading by. He stayed seven years with his master, and it was said when he was twenty-one he knew as much as the young squire did. Now, let us see how much time he had to read in, seven years, at the rate of an hour a day. It would be two thousand five hundred and fifty-five hours, which at the rate of eight hours a day, would be equal to three hundred and ten days, equal to forty-five weeks—nearly a year's reading. That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge would pile up a very large store. Try what you can do. Begin now. In after years you will look back upon the task as the most pleasant and profitable you ever performed.

Little minds are too much hurt by little things. Great minds perceive them all, and are not touched by them.

A small unkindness is a great offence.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Some of our brethren are getting a little lively on the Sunday School question, but the discussions are so well seasoned that the best of feelings will be maintained. The subject, undoubtedly will bear investigation and is not without its sides.

The first thing to be considered is whether the question is to be discussed in its widest sense, or as conducted by the Brethren. Preaching, though at first, divinely authorized, if now investigated as a whole, would not be found having divine sanction resting upon it, therefore we must confine our investigations to the original intent and not its abuses. Because the original intent of preaching is shamefully subverted, is no reason that preaching should be abandoned, but rather that much greater efforts should be made in the right to counteract the evil.—Because other churches have introduced Sunday Schools and substituted them into nurseries in which to proselyte the young into their respective churches, is no reason that we should not make use of the same day in teaching our children the Scriptures, and thus bring them up in the nurture and fear of the Lord. It does not matter what this work is called, as they can be as essentially different from the popular Sabbath School of the day, as is the preaching of the true Gospel from Mormanism or infidelity.

Bro. Furry is discussing the merits of Sunday Schools as held by the Brethren, while brother Moomaw was seemingly investigating the original Sunday Schools as an institution, which, we think, are materially different, and is so considered by brother Moomaw, as he says, "If this were practical in all cases, we could not object so much," (meaning schools under the control of the Brethren.) Again in brother Moomaw's investigations, under the caption of "Whence is it?" he has not committed himself from the fact that he has not told us that everything originally apostolic is yet resting under divine sanction, nor that everything invented by or through the wisdom of men is nece-sarily evil. There are many things now practical and assented to by good Christians, that cannot possibly be traced so far back as the apostles. Where, in the Scriptures, have we our precedent for having Hymn books and singing several hymns in connection with preaching, or from whence are our Church houses that are now being erected everywhere throughout the Brotherhood? These are of men, or fully as much so as teaching our children the Scriptures on the Sabbath day, yet we believe they have a divine sanction and are efficient means of grace. That brother Moomaw can maintain his position that Sunday Schools as now accepted is a modern institution, none can deny, but whether he will condemn it for its lack of age is for him yet to say, and we would be pleased to have his disposition of such things as are now considered good and yet are without a direct precedent in the Scriptures.

If we are to have any more on the subject of Sunday Schools, let it be, as held by the Brethren. There are a a large number of our churches that have had them introduced and can speak from experience. Let us have some of the results or conclusions.—What kind of an influence have they exerted, and how conducted? If evil, let us have it, and in what way the evil was done. If good, let us also have it, showing in what way the good was accomplished. Such reports would form a very good base upon which to found our conclusions. If on a whole, good seems to be the result, we know the Church will not oppose them, as we are willing and anxious to avail ourselves of every means of grace.

Annual meeting allows but does not enforce Sunday Schools. It stands as an institution of merit and the more of that, is found in its favor, the more fully will it be sanctioned, hence we believe that it is altogether proper fo Bro. Moomaw to investigate and file his objections and Bro. Furry and others, their advantages, but please stick to the subject and not to the persons discussing it

SABBATH MUSINGS.

God said, "Six days shalt thou labor but on the seventh, thou shalt rest from all thy labors." In harmony with this divine command, we have daily went forth from the first day of the week until the last, as the harvest was plenteous but the laborers few. The evening of the sixth came and with it a consciousness that we had endeavored to do our duty. With a calm and hopeful feeling we dismissed the labors of the past and turned our thoughts towards the approaching rest. Oh, how sweet is rest to the weary! The sun in all its loveliness, sank behind the green hills and it was night. Soon the curtain of darkness was drawn around a busy world and thousands laid them down, soon to be unconcious in the arms of sleep, there to await the coming of the blessed Sabbath morn. It came, but not to all. During the night, the sickle of death was doing its work, because it is harvest—sheaves are ripening some to be gathered into the garner of the Lord while others are to be cast into the fire. But to us it came, not because of our merit but the love of God. If ever nature in harvest time put on her beautiful garments it was this morning. Everything seemed to rejoice in the goodness of God, and if the green hills, the growing corn, and a balmy, rustling breeze had a voice, it would be, "Oh, come and let us go up to the house of the Lord." Why not? Has not Jesus promised to meet His children and there feed them on the pastures of love? If God has given us six days for to labor for the sustenance of the body, will we rob Him of the seventh, or rather rob ourselves of the blessings it affords? We know not what others done, but our seat was in the Sanctuary where we met Jesus, and like a disciple of old, we were made to feel: "And did not our hearts burn within us as He talked with us?" It causes us to rejoice, when we think of the thousands, of a like precious faith, who, to-day, were represented in the congregations of the saints, and the many ministrations of the words of life that were put forth. Talk of power, there is much of it in the world. Hosts may go forth in battle array, and with terrible instruments of war, cause the earth to tremble, but a competing army comes with greater power, and they are cut down as the stubble—the mighty become as water, their proud banners are trampled beneath the enemies feet and their glory laid in the dust. Not so with the army of the saints that have been, this day, fighting for Jesus. If the weakest saint, on his knees, causes the devil to tremble, what must have been the magnitude of that power as exhibited to-day by the camp of the righteous in falling at a throne of grace and there pleading in behalf of sinners? Brethren and sisters, we feel that we are weak—that we are only a few, but it is because our spiritual eyes are closed to the power that is around and for us. If, like Elijah's seavant, our eyes could be opened, we too could look around us and see the horseman and chariots. After all, there are more for us than there be against us. All that is lacking, is a little more faith. Do not be discouraged, we shall reap if we faint not. Only believe, and then stand still and see the salvation of God.

But how we are digressing—we intended telling you that after returning from church we took our paper and pencil and went out on a hill that overlooks the surrounding neighborhood, with the intention of noting down such thoughts as might be presented, and now you have them, mixed and confused, just as are sometimes presented when alone and without any particular subject bearing upon the mind. To us, the penning them was a sweet pastime, and hope they may present to you, dear reader, thoughts worthy of contemplation.

BOOKS &c. FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

We are having quite a number of inquiries in regard to furnishing suitable books and papers for Sabbath schools, showing that there is a growing demand for something of this kind. To answer inquiries, we will just say that there are as yet, no books published by the brethren suitable for a Sabbath school Library, We could select and supply you with books very cheaply, but a large majority of books now published for this purpose are so trashy that we cannot recommend them as proper for our children to read. The best schools among the Brethren do not use them and they are also being discarded by some of the best schools of other denominations, the fact is, fifty per cent of all the books published for this purpose are not only worthless but decidedly injurious to the young and should be guarded against as cautiously as novels and other light reading. But that children should have some simple but substantial reading to illustrate Bible truths, is evident from the many calls that are made upon us for something of this kind. To meet this want, we have now under contemplation, to publish for another year, a monthly in parts, one for each week, to be made up principally of Bible lessons especially adapted to the wants of the young. This publication must be put at such low figures that all schools and those having families can afford to take it, and we believe that we are prepared to do that. Those brethren and sisters who are interested in having something interesting and good for our Sunday Schools, will please correspond with us as we will be pleased to have the co-operation of all and any suggestions as to the nature and form of the work, will be thankfully received.

Bro. Root, under "arrears," calls attention to an important subject. He knows, as well as do all our readers, that we have been very liberal with all our patrons and therefore does not wish to have us imposed upon, or our liberality undervalued. The best way for our readers to manifest their gratitude, is not to disappoint our trust. We have ever been willing to accommodate our readers by giving them their own time during the year, but because we do this, none should put off payment until the last moment. When we offer to wait you we mean, until you can get the money, but when you get it brethren, you ought to pay us, so if you have it ready please send it along, if not we will try and wait you a little longer.

THE COMMISSION.

Dear brethren: My mind has, for some time, been engaged in study concerning the Commission of our Savior, Matt. 28: 19, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them," &c. When I consider how they are taught and receive the truths of the Gospel, I have been made to wander whether we as a body, are doing our duty when we stay at home and let so many precious souls die without a true knowledge of Jesus, who died for them as well as for us, and who are calling continually for some to come and preach the Gospel to them. Mark says, "Go and preach the Gospel to every creature," and when we look over our country we see so many places where the truth has never been preached, and there are also heathen lands where man worships idols, and knows nothing about the true God. To them, other denominations are sending Missionaries to teach them, and we believe that we preach and practice the truths of the Bible, and this being the case other doctrine must be, in part, wrong, hence will we stand still and see the poor heathen led astray and live and die without making an effort to save them? But we need not go to Asia or Africa, or to heathen countries to find heathen, but we can find them in abundance in America, and why is it, brethren, when we have a civilized government and are protected in preaching the gospel anywhere, that we do not go and preach more than we do? We have our Brotherhood divided into small districts, and from three to five and six preachers in a district, have meeting once in a week, or once in two weeks, and all the preachers sit behind the table while one or two preaches, and so we cannot preach a sermon once in less than four, six or eight weeks, and the Savior, when He sent out the preachers, He sent them two and two, and told them to go from city to city and teach the people the word of God. It appears to me if we had a desire, as Paul had, for the salvation of the people, there would not be so many in our country who never heard the Brethren preach, or the Bible explained in its purity. Here are our cities and villages right around us, and perhaps we have never preached there. Why is it, brethren? Are those souls not worth as much as others, or will we suffer them to go to destruction without a warning from us, and at the day of judgment rise up and testify against us for not doing our duty in warning them? I very much fear we will have to answer for some of this. Should there not be a move made to have the gospel spread more? I answer, yes. If we would take the money we spend unnecessarily for vain and foolish things, and give it for this purpose, I believe we would receive a rich reward at the day of reckoning. I very much fear, brethren, the reason we do not send more preachers to convert the people is, that we are too covetous, and grasp the mighty dollar too tightly. Perhaps we have not yet read "that the love of money is the root of all evil." Truly, the Savior says, "The harvest is great and the laborers few," but I believe the laborers are plenty were they only sent out. The Church calls them to the work, but when they are called then there is nothing more done. Will we not, brethren, give a little of what the Lord has given us for the support of His cause? If not, I fear the love of God is faint in us, for if we have this world's goods and see our brother in want, or our friends, and we shut up the bowels of compassion, how dwelleth the love of God in us, and I am certain we can see numbers in need of the Bread of Life, and we might be the cause, or help of their salvation, did we do our duty. Yet, we stand back and look on and see so many dragged into ruin without lending a helping hand. Will we not make an offering of a little of this world for the Lord, when God has made such a great offering for us, even that of His own dear Son? O, what love! Brethren, let us pray for more love and more of that spirit that will lead us into all truth. My brethren who are young with me in the ministry, let us devote our time and service more to the Lord, and study that we may show ourselves workman that need not be ashamed of our Lord's work, rightly dividing the word of God, and be faithful laborers in the Vineyard of the Lord, not hiding our Lord's money or laying it up in a napkin. Remember God has given us a talent for which we are held accountable. Brethren, pray for us, that we may be able, by the help of the Lord, to accomplish much, laboring for the salvation of souls. What I have written is in love, may it be received in love is my prayer.

ON REPORTING.

Dear Pilgrim:—The time has now come when the Brotherhood throughout may, and should say what are their sentiments in regard to the great question, whether we shall, or shall not have a full report of Annual Meetings. All should, by some means, express their feelings upon this matter. And now, as the established Gospel order is, to settle a question of a local character, in the congregation which it concerns, by the individual voice of its members comprising that body, why should not a question of so general a nature, the entire Brotherhood directly and equally concerned, be settled upon the same principles? This can easily be done by next A. M. This would be the Republican not the (Episcopal) form of government which we preach and practice as Apostolic.

Meanwhile this question should be carefully and prayerfully considered. The result of the past reports, carefully, scrutinizingly observed, and the various results, in the different parts of the Brotherhood, should be reported through our periodicals as they occur, whether they be good or bad. Now as to whether this reporting is a new thing as already intimated by the brother of the Vindicator, I would only say, I am in possession of a similar report. The first meeting of this kind ever held by the Brethren was in year A.D.53, held at Jerusalem, as recorded in Acts, 15th chapter. There Simon it appears rose up after much disputing, and his speech is given verbatim. The next speakers names given are Barnabas and Paul, and after they had held their peace James answered and said: "Men and brethren, hearken unto me.' Then he spoke lengthily and even referred to what Simon had already said and so on. And after his speech it seems it was passed and the decision written out and sent to the churches. So dear brethren and sisters, I conclude that giving those reports is not a new thing but strictly Apostolic. So when ever we seem to see bad results of those late reports, let us be cautious that we give just judgment, and prosecute not the innocent, and acquit the guilty, and see whether it is truly the illegitimacy of the reports, or the disposition of the character in which we see the result. C. C. ROOT

LONGMOUNT, Boulder Co., Col. }
July, 25, 1873. }

Bro. Brumbaugh:—As there are so many brethren and friends wishing to hear from me, since I am in this territory, and as it is out of my power to to give all a private letter, I thought, as it is requested that I should write through the PILGRIM, I will therefore pen these few lines.

In the first place, I will say that it seems rather lonely, as there is no organization of the Brethren here. I find however, three brethren and one sister here in Boulder Co., but know of no others here except at Trindad, in the southern part of the State. I find many kind friends who are anxious to hear the doctrine of the Brethren. They listened with much interest to the story of the man of sorrows. I also find many skeptics and many who have been made to doubt, because of the corrupt conduct of those who have professed to be the followers of the lowly Jesus, and more especially those who come here professing to be preachers. Brethren, here is a wide field for you to use your talents and means for a good purpose. I feel as if the brethren could do much good here if they were settled down and would preach the doctrine in its native simplicity, and then live it out in every day life. This must be done if they ever expect to do anything that will be to the honor of God.—The last few years of my life, and especially the last year, has shown to me more fully than ever, that pride and vanity have taken hold of the church as it were by the forelock, and if, not soon checked must inevitably lead to ruin. Oh! brethren all who are called to watch over the interests of the flock of God, do we discharge our duty in trying to reclaim the wandering sheep? My heart has been sorely pained to see that the world has bought so many away from the simplicity that is in Christ. When the midnight cry is heard, and their lamps are gone out, then their trouble will come.—"The harvest is passed, the summer is ended, and we are not saved."

Now as many wish to know something of the climate &c, of this country, I will say that the climate is very good, especially for weak lungs or Asthma, if the disease has not made too great inroads upon the vitals already. But if diseases are of very long standing, or have made much progress in their work of destruction, it is altogether vain to look for health in Colorado. Persons in advanced stages of these maladies will live longer in the states than here. If men, in the states, would live as they do when they come here, they will find their health improving very nearly, or quite upon the same ratio as here. If, on coming here, instead of fine drinks and highly seasoned food, strong Coffee, Tea, &c., you drink the pure water that comes rushing down through the canyons and gulches of the Rocky Mountains, and use wild beef, and take plenty of exercise in the open air, you will improve. This is a good farming country for small grain if you have plenty of water with which to irrigate.

Yours in love.

A. HUTCHISON.

ARREARS.

I wish to say to those who subscribed to one for the PILGRIM, and who have not paid for the present volume, that I desire to settle up with all the subscribers and the editors in due time to encourage the editors to give all such as need it, time on the next volume. Expecting to travel considerable during our fall communion season, I would be pleased to find all such that I may meet prepared for said settlement. And now as my canvassed territory is at least one hundred and sixty miles in length east and west, and as I shall not likely see them all, I could wish they would all be represented by their names in the PILGRIM money list, or otherwise by the first of November. Fraternally yours,

C. C. ROOT.

LAST NOTICE.

As the time has now come that we must have our copy for an Almanac for 1874, we once more call upon our brethren to help us to make it as complete as possible.

First. Please examine the ministerial list and note mistakes, also make a note of all the ministers that are not in our list and send them to us with their address.

Second. All those that have their District Meeting appointed for 1874, send us a notice of them, and we will have them inserted.

Third. We wish some good copy to fill its pages. Those that feel like aiding us will please prepare it at once and send it along. Biographies or anything of standing merit will be admitted.

Fourth. The cover or outside pages will be used for advertisements. Any person having anything that they wish before the public can have a space at the following rates:

Dear Pilgrim: Please announce that we, the Brethren of the Millmine District, Piatt Co., Ill., intend, the Lord willing, to have our Communion the 25th of September. Meeting to commence at 10 o'clock, in the morning. It is hoped that inasmuch as the brethren of Cerro Gorda district have appointed their Communion on the 27th of the same month, and the Council Meeting of the Southern District of Ill., to be at the same place a few days later, that brethren expecting to attend these meetings will arrange so as to be in time to attend our Communion also. Those coming by railroad will stop at Cerro Gorda. All are invited. By order of the Church.

DANIEL MOHLER.

Announcements, &c., crowded out.

NEWS ITEMS.

The great balloon excitement now prevailing has one good thing about it at least, it turns attention from things terrestrial to things celestial.

Mr. Green's Nassau balloon, which made the memorable voyage from London to Weilburg, Germany—a distance of 500 miles—was fifty feet in diameter by sixty feet long; contained 85,000 cubic feet of gas, and could raise 4,000 pounds, including its own weight.

The new trade dollar is to contain 378 grains of pure silver, and weigh 420 grains, Troy. Of late years, silver has greatly depreciated in value, the supply being greater than the demand; and so, to get rid of our superfluous bullion, the new dollar will be coined, and sent to seek a market in China, where, as is anticipated, it will be as acceptable as the old Spanish and Mexican dollars.

The telegraph is to be utilized in the good work of furnishing the true time every day at 12 noon, The Observatory at Washington being the regulator, the noon instant is to be indicated by it to New York and thence to the principal stations over the country. This will be of immense value to railroads and many branches of business, as well as of interest to all.

The burning of the forests on Long Island is a great misfortune in every way, and entails immense losses in some cases upon those who can ill afford them. Besides the vast quantity of timber and growing wood that has been destroyed, farm-houses have been consumed, two small villages have been burned, and three children perished in the flames. Patchogue would have been burned but for the energetic precautions of her people in building counting fires to head off the column of advancing flame. Such wholesale destruction of property and life seems needless and wicked.

WAITING.

I am waiting, calmly waiting,
Till the Master bids me come
To the glory of His presence,
To the gladness of his home.

Long, the way my feet have trodden,
Dark oftimes my path has been,
Heavy burdens I have carried,
But the heaviest was sin.

Calmly, in the quiet evening
Of life's long eventful day,
I with folded hands am waiting
Till the shadows flee away.

Never more by active service,
Shall I honor my dear Lord;
But perhaps by patient waiting,
May as well fulfill His Word.

Mercies more than I can number,
From a loving Father's hand,
Have been scattered in my pathway,
Even in a desert land.

Often by the cooling fountain
He my weary feet hath led;
Never has my God forgotten
To supply my "daily bread."

Still the best is all before me;
Very soon these bands of clay
Shall dissolve, and my freed spirit
Rise to bright and perfect day.

Then, in my Redeemer's presence,
With the friends who early died,
I shall taste the bliss of Heaven,
And be fully satisfied.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

ENERGY INDISPENSIBLE FOR THE ATTAINMENT OF OUR SOUL'S SALVATION.

"Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope unto the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 1: 13.

Jesus Christ, in the night of His betrayal, said unto this apostle, "Simon, Simon, behold satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." This the holy apostle Peter was now doing in writing letters to the believers scattered through the different countries encouraging them in their trials, and directing their minds beyond this time, where trials shall end in victory, and temptations, endured by faith, shall bring forth rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory; their faith swallowed up in vision, ending in the salvation of their souls—things the angels desired to look into. "Wherefore," in view of these great and precious promises he would say, "gird up the loins of your minds." Meaning by a metaphor derived from the custom of the Orientals, and indeed the ancient world in general, of girding the long, flowing robes about the loins, or engaging in any active exertion, that you should gird up the loins of your mind, engage with activity in working out your salvation; or in other words, keep your minds and affections continually disencumbered and prepared to run the race set before you, by casting aside all carnal prejudices, and abandoning all anxious cares about the things of this life, and whatever might prevent you from understanding, embracing, and obeying the Word of truth.

Brethren and sisters, remember energy on our part, is very necessary in securing the precious jewels, the pearl of great price, the glorious inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; the crown of life, the blessings of heaven, the joys of the saints, and the associates of the holy angels, with God and the Lamb in glory. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." The exhortation to Timothy was, "Thou therefore endure hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully." Hence it requires not only striving, but also a lawful one, that is, according to the directions given by the great Head of the Church. The Christian's journey is represented to us in the similitude of a race to be run which requires the most strenuous effort that can be put into exercise to win the prize. We are commanded to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." These passages show that it requires muscular power; mind, soul and body must be brought into requisition on the part of man. "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be cast away." (Paul.) Hence, the phrase gird up the loins of your mind is a very appropriate admonition of the apostle Peter.

In connection with this he adds, "Be sober." Sobriety is a virtue truly becoming a Christian. One of the most important characteristics in a Christian man and woman is lacking where soberness is wanting. The Greek term used here is Nyphontes, denoting serious sober-mindedness. See 1 Thess. 5: 6, also 2 Tim. 4: 5. In the former, the term is translated, watch and be sober; in the latter, "But watch thou in all things." Hence, to be sober, in the the text under consideration, on our part, requires great care and watchfulness in many things. Sobriety as defined by Webster, means, first, habitual soberness or temperance in the use of spirituous liquors: as when we say a man of sobriety. Secondly, freedom from intoxication. Thirdly, Habitual freedom from enthusiasm, inordinate passion, or overheated imagination; calmness, coolness. Fourthly, "Seriousness, gravity without sadness or melancholy." "Mirth makes man not mad, nor sobriety sad." In order to be sober we must guard against extremes of any kind, or excess in anything, in short to be temperate in all things. Dear brethren we have a conflict here, a battle to fight, and this combat is against three principle enemies; against our own corrupt nature, against an ungodly world, and against the devil; hence our armor must be bright, our equipment of the very best kind, and our armory well filled; for we know not how long the fight will last; our warfare may be a protracted one.

In the Grecian games, one of their important exercises was running footraces and at the end of the race was set up a prize, and the first that came out received that prize, and as many did run at the same time, of course, one only could obtain the prize. Another exercise was boxing, for which the victor received a certain crown, and as those gymnastics had to be well trained before they were admitted, and consequently well up to avoid the strokes they often beat the air. Now the apostle Paul contrasts the Christian's race and warfare with those Grecian ones in a striking manner. The uncertainty of theirs, and the certainty of the Christians. "Know ye not that they which run a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore run, not as uncertainly: so fight I, not as one that beateth the air." If they were temperate in all things, or sober, for that which passeth away, shall we not, brethren and sisters, be sober and temperate in all things for that which abideth forever and ever?

"And hope to the end is also an important point in our text. Hope is an indispensable Christian grace to the final perseverance of the saints. Where hope is lost, labor will cease. In a natural point of view for instance, if the farmer would not hope to realize a crop in putting out his seed, he would certainly not labor to cultivate his field and sow his seed: but hope causes him to do it yet he may fail in realizing his expectation. The nature of the Christian's hope is confidence in God, and a firm reliance of his promises and an assurance of realizing the same providing they do their part. Such a hope cheers them up in adversities, in afflictions and under severe trials. It points to the future, to the life to come, hence, it affords joy. "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer." The thought of the child of God in his hope is, that he will be relieved from all the ills of this life in the future world, and there be clothed with immortality; therefore we may call it a lively, blessed, joyous, cheering, soul-reviving, and soul-sustaining hope. It maketh not ashamed: because the love of God is shed abroad in his heart, by the Holy Ghost which is given him. O, who would not be a child of God! Come sinner, ye that are careless, unconcerned and dilatory in this important work. Perhaps some of you are fearful, distrusting the sustaining power of Almighty God. Hope in God, confide in His promises, and trust in His faithfulness; do your part and I will assure you that God will do His through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Brethren and sisters, be constant, be steadfast; we have strong consolation, I mean, we that have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us; "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vale." "Hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." The object of our hope is to realize grace—which means favor—in the day when the Lord Jesus Christ shall be again revealed. This grace alluded to in our text, is brought unto every child of God that continues faithful in obedience to God, and walketh in all His commandments blameless. It is secured for Him through the meritorious atonement made by Him, who is to bring it at His revelation. It is a final, eternal life, the crowning point of our religion, the finishing stroke of our redemption; it is the final adoption to wit, the redemption of the body. They that have the first fruits of the spirit, even do groan, waiting for that important event.

Glorious things of thee is spoken!
City of the living God;
Zion's children, band unbroken,
Strive to enter, linger not.

Dear children, members of Christ's body; does it not stimulate our drooping spirits and arouse it to activity in view of these precious promises? Happy is that man and that woman that realizes them, Brethren, sisters, household of the same family, regenerated by the same Father; redeemed by the same Savior; received by Him as His brethren and sisters by adoption. Can we not wholly devote ourselves to His service by trying to imitate Him and copy our walk according to His example? Yes we can, by daily dying to sin and live unto righteousness. O, let us be humble, separated from the world, consecrated to God and sanctified by His word. True we cannot obtain these things by our own strength, but we must set our mind and our will to this work, rely on God, depend on his strength; hence, on our part it requires, watchfulness and prayer to God daily, that we enter not into temptation. Hear the conclusion of the matter in Paul's language, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of His own pleasure." Phil. 2: 3. "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, and be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." "Be thou faithful unto death and ye shall receive the crown of life." Wherefore my beloved, let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; Forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

LEONARD FUARY.

SANCTIFIED AFFLICTIONS.

In a time of famine in the land of Israel, Elimelech with his wife Naomi and his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, went to sojourn in the land of Moab. One of the sons there married Ruth, and the other married Orpah. The father and sons all died, leaving the three women widows and childless.—At the end of ten years, Naomi having heard that there was plenty again in Judah, set out to return to her own land, and both her daughters-in-law followed her a part of the way, "And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in- law, Go, return each to her mother's house; the Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead and with me, the Lord grant that ye may find rest, each of you. in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them, and they lifted up their voice and wept. And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people."—Ruth 1: 1–10. Naomi entreated them again to return, "And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her. And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law. And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me. Orpah wept but returned unto her people and unto her god's.—Ruth loved Naomi for her piety. Her decision seems to have been founded not merely on natural affection, but on religious conviction. Her own declaration, "Thy God shall be my God," implied a direct renunciation of Idolatry. The testimony of Boaz shows this. "The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel."—Chap. 2: 12.

Naomi and Ruth having arrived at Bethlehem just at the beginning of harvest an All-wise Providence who guideth the steps of his faithful servants, conducted Ruth to the fields of Boaz, "A mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimeleth," to glean or gather ears of grain after the reapers. He who led Ruth to this spot, directed the foot-steps of Boaz also the same way. Observing among the gleaners a female he said unto his servant that was set over the reapers, "Whose damsel, is this?" When he found that this was the young Moabite who had shown such friendship to Naomi, the heart of Boaz was moved, and he immediately encouraged her in the tenderest manner to glean in no other field. Ruth who was surprised at such generosity, in one to whom she was utterly unknown "bowed herself to the ground" and poured out the effusions of a grateful heart. The noble minded Boaz cheered her by his approbation of her dutiful conduct, and by the uttering of this expressive prayer, "The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel under whose wings thou art come to trust." When Ruth returned in the evening to Naomi, and informed her of all that had happened and in whose field she had gleaned, Naomi saw immediately that the divine hand was bringing about good for them.—"Blessed," says she, "be he of the Lord, who hath not left off his kindness to the living and the dead."

The remainining part of this history is intimately connected with two remarkable statutes in the Israelitish Code. The one was that if the elder branch of a family sold any part of his land, the next of kin had a right to redeem it, and if he refused to do so, the privilege descended to the next in succession. The other law was, that if the elder branch died leaving a widow without children, the next kinsman would marry her, and raise seed to his brother. Naomi knew well the obligation of these precepts, and as she was too old to think of a husband, [Chap. 1: 12.] she transferred her right to Ruth. The Almighty blessed this marriage of Boaz, to Ruth, with a son, to whom was given the name of Obed. This child Naomi took and laid in her bosom and became its nurse.—When Naomi returned from the land of Moab, a disconsolate and destitute widow, her affliction appeared so severe in her own estimation, that she said to the Bethlehemites, who were all moved about them, and they said, "is this Naomi," and she said unto them, "Call me not Naomi [pleasant or beautiful] call me Mard [bitter] for the Almighty hath dealt very hardly with me."

We here notice the providence of God over individuals. The wonders of that Providence appears in the means by which God brought about the conversion of Ruth, and her admission into the family of the Messiah, through the famine in Israel, Elimelech's misfortunes, his son marrying a Moabitess, and her son's affliction in becoming a widow; thus does he overrule evil and afflictions for good.—Psalm 119: 71. Thus were the latter days of Naomi better than the beginning, and the evening of her life compensated for all the afflictive providences. The crosses and distresses which she had experienced in the land of Moab. The dutiful conduct and unshaken faith of Ruth, were abundantly rewarded by the God of Israel, for whom she had renounced all things, and is on record as an example of piety, for the instruction of all generations. On her was bestowed the honor of being the great grand mother of David, and consequently of him who was the hope of Israel, and the redeemer of the human race. Well therefore may we adopt the pious exclamation of Bishop Hall: "O the sure and bountiful payments of the Almighty; who ever came under his wing in vain? Who ever lost by trusting in him? Who ever forsook the Moab of this world for the true Israel, and did not at least rejoice in the change?"

D. NEGLEY.

METHODISM FIFTY YEARS AGO AND NOW.

Alike all other human institutions, liable to yearly amendments, to devolve from generation to generation, and to be entrusted as a whole, into the hands or bishoprick of a few men, has Methodism shared the inevitable fate of degeneracy. It is said of Elder Axley of that persuasion, who had his day of activity in Church; about fifty years ago and upward, that he once presided at a quarterly meeting at the house of a widow Conoway in Blount Co. Tenn. After preaching on Saturday, he announced the order of the meeting for the Sabbath. Lovefeast in the morning, he gave them to understand who were to be admitted and who were not. No rings, no ruffles, no bows on the bonnets &c. Sunday morning came and brought the membership generally. Mr. Axley stood at the door to judge who were proper subjects for admittance as they came in. There was a good sister with a bow on her bonnet. No admittance. The preachers, "continues the biographer, fortified every position by giving book, chapter, and verse. No rhetorical speech making, but plain exposition of Bible truths. Mr. Axley as a neighbor was not surpassed by any. At house raising and log rolling he was put forward as leader, and could plan and have more work done in a day than any other man in the country. As a farmer he was no sloven. Everything was convenient. A tool for every work, and a place for every tool. Nothing was out of place and nothing lost. Here we have an example of Methodism fifty years ago.

Methodism claims for herself great advancement and success in the past fifty years, notwithstanding all her natural conflicts and spiritual persecutions; and through the wise counsels of her episcopacy, great moral improvements; but no degeneracy.

Now my brethren and sisters in Christ, if all the improvments upon rings, ruffles, and bows upon bonnets which Paris with all the fashion inventing world could contrive and invent in the last fifty years can have been episcopated as legitimate advancements or as moral improvements upon the adornment of the women in modest apparrel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, for which Mr, Axley contended for but fifty years ago; and if those delicate effemicate hands with diamond mounted rings, and carried on persons clad in the finest broadeloth that can be obtained, which deal out to those silkey, and gold ornamented, and artificial decorated communicants the Holy Emblems, I say if they are more like the hands of the old fishermen or tent makers than were those of the house raising and log rollers, then the claims of improvements are just, if not, degeneracy was a reasonable term. But now let us look around us and then back fifty years; or even less and ah, we see that the Methodists are not alone in this respect, and perhaps not the fartbest gone in this wild career. But let a hint suffice the wise.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF MEN.

The more this subject is ventilated the more thoroughly, are we convinced that it is not from Heaven. Seeing that its advocates in their determinate zeal to defend, become so nervous, unable to produce a single precept from the Bible, or a single precedent in the history of the Church in the primitive and purer ages are forced to adopt and apply the unchristian and uncourteous epithets to those that differ from them of "prejudice" "ignorance," "selfishness," a spirit certainly not obtained from the school of Christ, but from some school of human invention, and counterpart to the spirit possessed by the Ephesians, when Paul declared, "that they be no gods which are made with hands," &c., they were full of wrath, and cried out saying, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," causing great confusion, catching Paul's companions they rush into the Theatre, and when Paul would have gone in, doubtless to reason with them, as his manner was from the Scriptures, the disciples aware of the danger, suffered him not, and others of his friends, chief men of Asia, desired him not to adventure himself into the theatre. And when Alexander would have made his defense, they perceiving that he was a Jew, and opposed to such idols, to sustain their ungodly cause, "all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, great is Diana of the Ephesians." This was, doubtless, in their minds an overwhelming argument, but not so convincing to the mind of Paul and his companions, and therefore, would be likely to expose them to the epithets, "prejudice," "ignorance" and "selfishness." But so sanguine were these Ephesians that they would say that Paul and his brethren were ignorant of the "sweet consciousness" enjoyed in the worship of the great Diana. They, like some of modern date, needed no divine revelation, for their image had fallen down directly from Jupiter. Acts 19.

We, from this history, may learn another profitable lesson which is that it is vain to try to meet such with Bible argument; that nothing short of legal interference will meet the case. But I speak not of these things because a strange thing had happened unto me, for I have been accustomed to hear continually the appellation "Ignorance," "Prejudice," and "Selfishness," applied to the brethren who contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, before and ever since my connection with the fraternity. Ignorance in some of its aspects it is true, is bad enough, but nevertheless adopting the language of brother Quinter upon a certain occasion, I would say, that there are some things even worse than ignorance." An ignoramus for instance. "An ignorant person. A vain pretender to knowledge." Webster's second definition.

The Rulers, Elders, and Scribes, &c., perceiving that Peter and John were unlearned and ignorant men, seeing their boldness they marvelled. "And they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." Acts 4: 5, 6, 13. They were ignorant as to the rudiments of the world, but had taken upon them the yoke of Christ and learned of Him. They had not learned from corrupted Christianity, nor from men of any stamp, nor yet from Jupiter, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ, here they planted their banner, and like Paul, determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified; determined to know none other as their ruler and governor, he having been crucified notwithstanding. Upon this platform I desire to stand, and by grace expect to stand, until evidence and argument from these premises outweighing that in the side of the scale I now occupy is produced, I will then at once change my position, but the construction of my mind will never allow me to change because some junior, or senior shall say I see the good effects, or "I feel a sweet consciousness" that I am acceptably in the service of the Master. Were I thus easily convinced I might long since have been anything, and everything from Paganism, Judaism, Mahommedanism, Catholicism, all the various forms of Protestantism down to Mormonism, Freemasonry and all its kindred secret associations. They all being in sympathy with these sentiments forming their conclusions from these premises.

Seeing the danger to which the children of men would be exposed, the Apostle Paul gives the following very suitable warning: "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ." Col. 2: 13.

I have merely noticed briefly the form and spirit of the attack of the premises I occupy upon this question, simply alluding to the assertions. Arguments there has none been adduced, when arguments are presented from the Scriptures, establishing the fact that Sunday schools are from Heaven and not of men, I will not only willingly, but gladly change my position for it is extremely pleasant, with me to be on the popular side of any question, with my brethren.

GO ONWARD.

Dear brethren and sisters, we should not grow weary nor faint in our mind, but press on in the narrow way, try with all our minds to follow the example of our Master, as sincere and obedient children, through evil report as well as good report; endeavor to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, day by day, as it is in Christ Jesus. Strive to become humble, meek and lowly in heart and mind and to die unto all self, to become altogether nothing in ourselves, poor, needy creatures, depending alone upon the help and grace of God who will abundantly bestow all needful knowledge, wisdom and instruction. He will help us to walk uprightly in his sight. O, should we not then strive with all our heart, mind and will to leave all self, to die daily and grow in grace, wisdom and strength, to deny all worldly lusts and pleasures, to abstain from every appearance of evil, so that our minds may be placed on heavenly things? There remaineth a rest to the people of God, who soweth not after the flesh but after the spirit, and seek nothing but the will of God, die daily unto sin and all unrighteousness; are no more conformed to the world with its unfruitful works of darkness, but who are transformed by the renewing of their minds that they may prove what is that good, acceptable and perfect will of God.

The grace of God, that bringeth salvation, hath appeared unto all men, teaching them to deny themselves of all ungodly and wordly lusts, to live godly, righteously in this present world, for we are not of the world, even as Christ, whom we, serve and honor, was not of the world but of the Father. We are not born of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, of the word of God which liveth and abideth forever, therefore we bring forth the fruit of the spirit. We sow in tears that we may reap in joy. O, let us then, all try to depart from all iniquity, bringing forth the fruits of the spirit, love one another as Christ loved us, for by this we may know that we are His disciples. How much more happiness would be felt in the heart if we would practice more love towards each other; if more would be constrained to turn from their evil ways; if the Church would make greater progress in the conversion of souls, and if she would exercise, daily, more of that pure and heavenly love. I pray the Lord to give us more of that pure love that we may manifest it among the members and to the whole human family.

TROUBLE.

Trouble is more frequently made than sent. If every person would take the world as it is—its joys and sorrows—and yield at once an humble reconciliation to what is unavoidable, there would be far more happiness, and infinitely less misery than there is. Six thousand years, experience ought to convince mankind that there are clouds here as well as sunshine, and the man who starts life with the expectation that everything before him will be smooth and uninterrupted, is a dreamer who knows nothing of the world's realities. Wealth cannot shield us from disappointment and affliction, and poverty is not as heavy on the heart as the cares brought on by the possession of uncounted riches.

We cannot keep death away from our door, no matter how faithfully we may guard its portal: nor can we so control the mind and disposition of others that the most tender ties and associations are not at times snapped asunder. Let us take matters as they come, and try to be content. If we are prosperous, we should rejoice and give God the praise. If we fail in our enterprise and find our plans of business dwarfed and thwarted, let us submit coolly to the visitation, and try again with renewed hope and effort. There is no use lamenting, when lamentations will do no good—or shedding tears, when they only tend to heighten our sorrows. The grave will soon cover our troubles, and there is a happy life beyond, which we can make our own, no matter how the world treats us.

CHRIST THE RISEN SAVIOR.

The Lord now speaks to us in every part of Scripture as far as it respects our dispensation, and suits our case with as much authority as He did to Israel from Mount Sinai, but with words of mercy and grace instead of terror and dismay. For if Christ be risen from the dead, then is His atonement accepted. He died for our sins and rose again for our justification. He was arrested for our debt and cast into the grave or prison. But as full payment had been made He was speedily liberated. Having overcome the sharpness of death He hath opened the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers. The foundation of our hopes are now surely laid, the way of access to a throne of grace is now made manifest, for the risen Savior is also ascended into the Heavens to appear in the presence of God for us and is able to save to the uttermost all those that come to God by Him seeing He liveth to make intercession for them.

The resurrection of Christ assures us that all power in heaven and earth are given to Him, and that He is made head over all things. To His Church, He both died and rose again that He might be the Lord both of the living and dead. Angels, principalities and powers are made subject to Him. He is King of Kings and Lord of Lords, all nature obeys Him. All the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are laid up in Him. He has unsearchable riches and invincible power. The fulness of the spirit resides in Him. All the fulness of the god-head dwells in Him bodily. He has become the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey Him, and He must reign till all His enemies are made His footstool. It is therefore no light matter that we are considering, yet saith Jehovah, I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. Kiss the Son lest he be angry and ye perish. Every individual must either bow to the sceptre of His grace or be broken in pieces by the iron rod of His omnipotent indignation.

We are also taught that true Christians are conformed to Christ in His death, resurrection and ascension. By motives and grace derived from their crucified and risen Redeemer, they die to their former hopes, pleasures and pursuits, their sensibility to temporal things is deadened, carnal self love, the main spring of their activity in past times is broken, they are crucified with Christ nevertheless they live, yet

WAR OPPOSED TO CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Who can calmly reflect with subdued and unbiased judgment, the following commands of the Bible, and not be convinced that peace is one of the vital principals of the Christian religion, and that, war cannot be tolerated among a christian people, viz: "Thou shalt not kill." "Be at peace with one another." "Avenge not ourselves, but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven."

"Resist not evil; but whoever shall smite the on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger and clamor and evil speaking, be put away from you, and be kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you." "And when his disciples, James and John, saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from Heaven and consume them as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and said, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. For this is the message that ye have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another, not as Cain, who was of that wicked one and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous."

Marvel not my brethren, if the world hate you. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence from your lusts which war in your members?" Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight," lead a peaceable life in all godliness." "The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace," &c. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and the parable of the good Samaritan makes every human being our neigbor. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." Be kindly affectioned one toward another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another." "Bless them that persecute you, bless and curse not." Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." Is it love to an enemy to kill him? is it love to prepare to kill him? and yet the supporter and advocate of war doeth all this. Then how can the love of God dwell in him?

The Bible abounddeth with princiles of peace. It cherishes and encourages all those virtues which lead to peace, and condemns everything which tends to war, and the use of outward instrumentalities as weapons of war and defense.—Messenger of peace.

INCINCERITY IN SPEECH.

Say what you think, rather than what you imagine other people expect you to say. Or if you feel, as we often may, that we had better not, or not then say what we think, say nothing. At any rate believe that it is a genuine promotion of the health of society to let our words behonestly ours. Affect no sentiments which you do not own. I do not of course refer to those phrases of courtesy which are universally current and understood, as when a man sets his signiture to the statement that he is an obedient servant to one whom perhaps he has just been declining to serve. Nor do I mean that we are expected to give utterance to each sentiment which arises in our hearts. That would be selfish. But do not, especially in religion, affect feelings which are alien to you. It is incalculable what wanton harm is done by this. We can see it when a man more honest than others, ventures to put some criticism, which has risen in many minds, into words; or, Luther-like, to question some empty dictum which has been long tacitly permitted to exist. By a touch he can thus free many a mind. He simply makes bold to open the doer and let himself out; and lo! he has provided an exit for a grateful stream of prisoners who follow him, and then see that after all they might as well have delivered themselves.—Leisure Hour.

One reason why christianity has so little success in the world is because professing Christians subordinate to so many uther considerations. Local residence, occupation, friendship, marriage are settled, and the question of religion goes for little or nothing. It is compromised, and a compromise is next to a surrender. Were it the ruling principle with Christians, it would be on the sure way to the world's throne though it might be through suffering.

BIBLE promises are like the beams of the sun, which shine as freely in at the window of the poor man's cottage as at the rich man's pallace.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

S. E. MILLER wishes to know if there are Brethren living in Jewell Co., Kansas. Who can give the desired information?

THE CHURCH at Coffee Run, James Creek Congregation, will be put under course of erection this week and will be pushed along as rapidly as possible. It is expected to be completed early in the Fall.

PROF. WISE, who proposes to cross the ocean in a balloon, grounds his expected success on the theory that at a certain altitude there is a steady and rapid current of air setting from West to East. He says that out of 446 aerial voyages he has made, 414 have carried him Eastward.

THE TIME for political strife has come and dupes are getting to work with a good will. King "politic" has become a tyrant and those desiring the honor of small offices can expect to do large barking for them. Let all true Christians be careful not to perjure their souls, dishonor their profession and sell the Lord of life and glory for a mess of pottage.

A BROTHER of Cerrogorda, Ill., whose name we cannot now remember, wishes to know why his communication was not published. This informs him that it was placed with other copy, for preparation, but by some means part of it was lost, hence its non-appearance. Please write again, and we will endeavor to be more careful in the future.

SOME TIME ago, our old and respected brother Samuel Brumbaugh of Saxton, Pa., met with a serious accident, having his shoulder dislocated and an arm broken. After the first shock was over, his condition seemed to be hopeful and it was tho't that he would soon get well again, but of late, we are informed that there is a change for the worse, and it is feared that his case is doubtful.

ONE of the largest and best buildings now in course of erection, in West Huntingdon, is the Weekly Pilgrim Office. It is a double, three story brick, with basement under the whole house. The one part is intended for the dwelling and the other for press room, store room, sanctum, stationary room, private office and type room. The press room will be in the basement, connected with the type room by an elevator. The store room will be on the first floor, 18x43 making one of the best rooms in that part of the town. The sanctum, statiooary and private office will be on the second floor, having a side entrance from the cross or 14th street, and the type room will be on the third floor. The whole buildiag will be heated from the basement by a modern "heater," making it the best and most convenient publishing house outside of the large cities.—Exchange.

BEAVER COLONY—COLORADO.

The town of Beaver, Weld Co., Colorado, has just been laid out, and a settlement commenced there called "Beaver Colony." It is situated on the North side of the South Platte River in the North E. part of Col., about one hundred miles East of the Rocky mountains and immediately on the line of Rail-road now building from Julesburg on the Union Pacific Rail-road to Denver, the capital of the Territory, which road it is expected will be in running order this coming Fall. Beaver will doubtless be an important point on the road as a depot and eating station, and at no distant day be a county seat, as Weld Co. will eventually be cut up into at least three counties. Surrounding Beaver, it is said by those who should know, there is the largest body of choice agricultural lands to be found in the Territory. Easily watered by irrigating, canals carrying an abundance of water from the Platte River. The matter of irrigation, to my mind, was such that I thought of it with much disfavor until by personal observation I was otherwise impressed. The more abundant yield of superior crops has satisfied me that farming by irrigation in Colorado pays well. The fine dry and healthy climate must be first enjoyed before anything like a just idea of their advantages can be had. Owing to the extensive mining region not far off, thronged with miners, the market for farm products must continue one of the best. Now is the time for the homeless, or any one who desires it, to get homes in that section of country, as it will be rapidly taken up either by pre-emption or homesteads. Any one going there can secure 320 acres of choice bottom land, and have thousands of acres of range for stock. One hundred and sixty acres can be had under the pre-emption bill to which a good title can be had in six months by paying $1.25 per acre. The party then can, if he wishes, sell it readily for $5 per acre. Whether he sells or not, he can then go and take another lot of 160 acres as a homestead which he gets free by living on it five years. Any one can file on both claims soon after arriving there. The prospects are now good for a settlement of Brethren to commence there early next Spring with a speaker or speakers.

We do not desire to over persuade ony one, but would say to those contemplating a removal, we would be glad to have you help build up a flourishing settlement, and if members of the church, help disseminate by word and deed the principles of a true Christianity to a community in that part of the world. This is one of the most successful ways of prosecuting the missionary work to the evangelizing of the world. Other incentives than worldly considerations should prompt us in our change from place to place. The world is large, sin reigns throughout the bounds of civilization, souls are precious everywhere in the sight of God, —His proffered mercy is boundless and free,—from sea to sea, may the CRUCIFIED be preached, His Gospel be believed and practical Christianity, such as exemplified the character and life of our Lord and Master, be the rule rather than the exception.

TO A CHILD.

Never, my child, forget to pray
Whate'er the business of the day ;
If happy dreams have blessed thy sleep,
If startling fears have made thee weep,
With holy thoughts begin the day,
And ne'er my child forget to pray.

Pray Him by whom the birds are fed,
To give to thee thy daily bread ;
If wealth His bounty should bestow,
Praise Him from whom all blessings flow;
If he who gave should take away,
O ne'er my child, forget to pray.

The time will come when thou wilt miss
A father's and a mother's kiss ;
And then, my child, perchance you'll see
Some who in prayer ne'er bend the knee;
From such examples turn away
And ne'er my child, forget to pray.

THE YOUNG NAZARENE.

The story of the child Jesus is so interesting and full of encouragement that it never grows old. Our young readers cannot do better than to make His life a constant subject of study. But the question may be, how came it to pass that he was called a Nazarene. I will try and tell you. Because Adam and Eve ate of the forbidden fruit they became sinners and felt very miserable. On account of this disobedience they for the first time learned that they were subjects of death and already began to feel its affects. In addition to this, were to be driven out of the beautiful garden which God had prepared for them. They were now to go out in the plains and till the land with their own hands with the knowledge that among their good seed sown, should spring up with it, thorns and thistles. This seemed very hard after living so happily in Eden. To give them some hope, God told the serpent (the tempter)in the persence of the woman, that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head. This is the way we generally hear it quoted or said, but by turning to the third chapter of Genesis 15th verse, you will find that it reads a little differently. God says, speaking of the seed of the woman, "It shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel," This was the first promise that Jesus should come, and was afar off, but in every generation after that, the promise was renewed and made plainer. These promises were made through good men that we read of in the Bible, called prophets.

Now because these were good men, all they said must come true. One of them, in telling about Christ and the time He should come, said he was to be called a Nazarene. By reading the history of Jesus, you will learn how this was fulfilled.

The account says He was born in Bethlehem, a village or town of Judea. Some say he was born in a manger, but the account does not say so. It says he was born and laid in a manger. Somewhere in the Bible, it says he was born or brought forth under an apple tree. I will not now tell you where that place is but propose to our Sunday school teachers that they let this be one of the questions to be answered at the next school. No matter how strange the question may appear, it can be found in the Bible, and I hope that none of my young readers will give it up until they find it.

But this is not telling how he came to be called a Nazarene. When Jesus was born it was noised abroad that he was to be king. This reached the ears of King Herod and he became fearful that he might lose his position and to avoid this, he commanded that all the male children of two years and under shou'd be destroyed, thinking that among the number surely this new king would be destroyed, but an angel told his father in a dream that he should take the young child (Jesus) and flee to Egypt, so that when the wicked Herod was destroying the innocent children, the young king was safe with his mother over in Egypt. After Herod's death he was again commanded to return to the land of Israel but when he got into Egypt and heard that Herod's son reigned in his stead, he concluded to turn into Galilee and and dwelt in a city called Nazareth. This was done, the Scriptures tell us, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene. He was called a Nazarene then, because He dwelt a short time in Nazareth. This city had rather a bad reputation for you remember that some time afterward it was asked, "Can there anything good come out of Nazareth ?" Yes, there was one good thing come from there and that was the humble Nazarene, Jesus, the King of righteousness and the Savior of the world. If it had been a city of bad reputation prior to this, the fact of the young Nazarene living there a short time caused it to be a place of note. Just so it is with a wicked and sinful heart. No matter how bad a reputation a sinner may have, if he admits Jesus into his heart a short time, it will be changed and gain as great a reputation for being good as it had for being evil before.

You, dear young friends, have an influence and how well it would be for you if the society in which you associate would always be made better on account of your presence. There are many places that need young Nazarenes to step in and improve their reputation. Study well the character of the young Nazarene and then strive to imitate His example. At twelve years of age, He was at His Father's business. Some of you are much older and are still in the employ of satan whom to serve is sin and death.

UNCLE HENRY.

CHRIST BLESSES LITTLE CHILDREN.

MATT. 19; MARK 10; LUKE 18.

Our Lord came into the world to bless and save not only adults, but also children, and he loved them very tenderly. This he displayed in the following circumstance; Pious Jews were in the habit of begging the blessing of distinguished teachers and priests, on their children. As the people recognized Christ as a teacher who had come from God, some pious mothers once brought their children to Jesus, that he might bless them, by laying his hand upon them, and praying for them. As it was evening and Jesus had been employed all day in teaching and healing the sick, his disciples thought that he required rest, and rebuked those who bro't their children. The parents could very easily have presumed, though falsely, that either their request was improper, or that Jesus, who was kindness itself, did not love children. But when he observed this conduct of his disciples, he was displeased,and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Verily ! I say unto you, he that receiveth the kingdom of heaven not as a little child, shall by no means enter therein." And he took them up in his arms and blessed them.

Here we read of parents bringing their children to Jesus Christ. Your parents also bring you to Jesus, when they send you to school, or to receive religious instruction : for there Christ has his servants who receive you in his name.

You should whilst yet young, belong to the kingdom of God. Remember your Redeemer and Maker in your youth, then at an early age you will be saved.

Many in early youth have had hands laid on them in the name of the Lord Jesus, and they were blessed, but all did not retain the blessing, because they did not persevere in good. The blessing departs from all who do not carefully preserve it.

Our children thou dost claim,
And mark them out for thine,
Ten thousand blessings to thy name,
For goodness so divine.

Our offspring still thy care,
Shall own their fathers' God,
To latest times thy blessings share,
And sound thy praise abroad.

Matt. 18 : 14. Even so it is the will of your father that is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

WATCH YOURSELF.

"When I was a school-boy," said an old man, "we had a schoolmaster who had an odd way of catching boys. One day he called out to us, 'Boys, I must have close attention to your books. The first one of you that sees another boy idle, I want you to inform me, and I will attend to his case.' 'Ah,' thought I to myself, 'there's Joe Simmons, that I don't like. I'll watch him, and if I see him look off his book, I'll tell.' It was not long before I saw Joe look off his book, and immediately I informed the master. 'Indeed,' said he, 'and how did you know that he was idle?' 'I saw him,' said I. 'You did ; and were your eyes on your book when you saw him ?' I was caught, and I never watched for the boys again.—Little Christian.

TWO SOMEBODYS.

I know somebody who always appears to be miserable, and this is the way she contrives to be so : thinking always about herself; constantly wishing for that she has not got; idling her time; fretting and grambling.

I know somebody who is much happier, and this is the way she contrives to be so : thinking of others ; satisfied with what her Heavenly Father has best judged for her; working, caring for somebody else besides herself, and thinking how she can make others happy.

My little "Somebody," which kind of a "somebody," are you.—Little Christian.

"READ—TRY."

There was once a very little boy who used to ask his mother a great many questions, and how do you think she answered him? "Read, and you will know," said she, and then she would give him books, where he found all he wished to know.

Sometimes, too, this little boy used to wish that he could do this difficult thing, and instead of discouraging him, this good mother would say one little word, and that word was "try." The little boy was Sir William Jones, afterwards one of the most learned men that ever lived.

LET us not love those things much which we are not sure to live long to love, nor to have long if we should.

As love without esteem is volatile and capricious, esteem without love is languid and cold.

A SHORT VISIT.

At different times we promised to make a visit to the brethren living in the vicinity of the Cross Roads Meeting house, Clover Creek congregation, but never could see a way of going until last Saturday, being informed of that being the regular time of holding services at that place on Sunday. Wishing those remaining at home to have an opportunity of attending Church, we left our horse and took the morning train south on Broad Top for Cove Station, where we got aboard the hack and in three hours reached Fredricksburg, a distance of about five miles. This may seem like slow travel and it was too, as I walked the same road coming home in one and a half hours, but then we had no load, which we suppose made the difference.

We arrived at Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh's in time for dinner, but as sister J. W. B. was helping to prepare a dinner at her sons, we were taken there, where we were well cared for. After dinner, we called upon bro. G. W. Brumbaugh, and found him in his, or rather, their Foundry, Bro. J. L. Wineland being a partner. They do the general run of work done at foundries of similar capacities, but their principle work is manufacturing plows. They are making a plow at this place that gives very general satisfaction wherever tried, and the demand for them is so great that they cannot keep up with the orders. The great secret of a good plow lies in the moldboard. If this is so shaped that the inclined plane is not too steep and the pressure against it equal there is an important point of excellence gained. In this they claim that they have succeeded, and we think, justly too, as the draft is light and the plow cleans readily. They have also invented a draft rod with a spring attached which is an important addition, greatly saving it from danger of breaking when striking a rock or solid body. On the whole, they manufacture a No. 1. plow and we would advise those who want a good machine in that line to give them a trial. Address Brumbaugh and Wineland Clover Creek. Pa.

In the P. M. Bro J. W. B. took us up to Bro. Daniel Diehl's who resides near the C. R. Church where we were kindly received. In the evening there was an appointment in the Church which we filled. Here we met Eld. D. M. Holsinger also John Replogle, minister in the Yellow Creek Congregation. After preaching we were kindly cared for in the house of Bro. Diehl. Sabbath morning there was public preaching again at the same house, and again we tried to exercise in the ministration of the word, and was followed with some interesting remarks in German by Eld. Jacob Miller of the Yellow Creek Congregation. As the brethren here have Sunday school, and met at 3. P. M. we were invited to be with them and address the School which we agreed to do. We were then taken to the home of Bro. Simon Snider where we were refreshed with the good things of this life and enjoyed a short but pleasant season in the society of the family, Bro. S. B. Furry, Keifer and others. We enjoy such occasions and could wish them to happen more frequent.

At the appointed hour we met in Sunday school capacity where we met a large number of young men, ladies and children, also a number of parents some whose heads were quite gray. That, brethren and sisters is what means success in Sunday schools.

Gray hairs indicates age which commands respect and means order.

Notwithstanding the attendance was large for the occasion, the order was quite good and almost all participated in the exercises. After the regular business of the School was done, we made a short address to the scholars and friends, which was received with marked attention, and we hope that some of the ideas dropped at random may have made impressions that may result in good. S. B. Furry is superintendent and Daniel Diehl and D. Burket assistants. The name of the other officers we have not got. Spent the night at Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh's and early on Monday morning made for Cove Station, where we got aboard for home. On the train we met our esteemed brother and fellow laborer in the ministry, S. A. More of Yellow Creek Congregation, and had a short but interesting talk—Marklesburg—and we are off—home—all well.

THE COLORADO COLONY.

On another page, the attention of our readers are called to the building up a Colony in Colorado. This is an enterprise that we have often thought of, and look upon it as being a move in the right direction. The idea of leaving home, brethren and sisters, relations and friends, to emigrate to the distant west, in a strange land sparsely settled with strangers, is by no means cheering or pleasant and under such circumstances, none will be induced to go but such as are under the stern necessity of bettering their condition in life, though it should be a land flowing with milk and honey. The time has come that we are beginning to live sociably, and we hope spiritually too, and in forming our locations, we are about as careful that these wants can be enjoyed as we are that our bodies can be sustained. By going as a Colony, taking with us friends and neighbors, and especailly brethren and sisters of a like precious faith, our prospects are very much changed, so much so that even a strange land appears as a home. The idea of some 30 or 40 families of brethren and sisters forming a community away out in the promising fields of Colorado is so congenial to our mind that we almost feel like pulling up stakes and going along especially since we learned that our esteemed brother J. S. Flory is to be one of the number. We hope that Beaver Colony may be a success and that many of our brethren and sisters, now seeking homes, may take advantage of this very desirable opportunity, and that by another year the Pilgrim may have a goodly representation in this new field.

AN EXPLANATION.

By reading brethren Moomaw's and Mussleman's articles of this issue, it will be seen that they take exceptions to brother Zuck's "Origin of opposition to Sunday schools" or more especially to the spirit which it manifests. At the time the article was placed on the hook we did not give it a very careful examination, as we were always rather favorably impressed, with brother Zuck's writings. That some of the expressions in the article referred to are rather strong and savored with a seemingly unchristain spirit we admit, but we believe that the protesting brethren have accepted it in a stronger sense than was intended by the writer. In reading articles or a subject having two sides there should always be an allowance made for the excess of force used on one side to meet a corresponding excess on the other side which may be real or anticipated. When Bro. Moomaw proves that Sunday schools, as an institution, is of men, he as virtually condemns its friends, as Bro. Zuck condemns those who oppose them, and we all know there are some very good brethren that are favorable to Sunday schools and also that they have the sanction of A.M. Both sides are represented by good brethren and to condemn either is not good, not proper, not charitable, and is not called for in the discussion of the subject. As said before, we have no objections to having the subject thoroughly examined. To do this, there is no necessity of controverting or being personal. For our part, we are favorable to Sunday schools as held by the Brethren and whose only reading book is the Bible. Precepts for teaching our children the Scriptures are as old as the Bible and we anticipate no trouble in proving that parents are under the most sacred obligations to either teach them or have them taught, but this may be done at home as well as in the Sunday School, but Sunday Schools have this advantage in their favor, they may reach cases that cannot be reached by parental training, and our desires for doing good should by no means, be confined to the family circle. Christ came to save sinners and we are justifiable in making use of any means that will accomplish this great end, without stepping outside of the "landmarks" or the spirit of the Gospel. Our good brother Musselman seems to think we stepped outside of our limits in admitting Bro. Zuck's production, but we hope not, especially when we make due allowance for the pointed and pungent style of some writers. Because we believe in Sunday Schools, when properly conducted, does not cause us to love any the less those who differ from us, but hope, if any more feel like writing they will confine themselves to the subject. This must be done to insure insertion.

ATTENTION.

Last year when we made a call for copy &c. for our Almanac, the responses were so slow that we could scarcely get ready, but after it was too late we had copy in abundance, it even continued to come in long after the Almanac was published. Now we hope our brethren will not do the same thing this year. If you go right to work and prepare something for us, which we hope you will, it can be admitted; if there is any delay, it will be too late as the work must soon be commenced. See in our other notice what is wanted.

LAST NOTICE.

As the time has now come that we must have our copy for an Almanac for 1874, we once more call upon our brethren to help us to make it as complete as possible.

First. Please examine the ministerial list and note mistakes, also make a note of all the ministers that are not in our list and send them to us with their address.

Second. All those that have their District Meeting appointed for 1874, send us a notice of them, and we will have them inserted.

Third. We wish some good copy to fill its pages. Those that feel like aiding us will please prepare it at once and send it along. Biographies or anything of standing merit will be admitted.

Fourth. The cover or outside pages will be used for advertisements. Any person having anything that they wish before the public can have a space at the following rates:

Correspondence.

Beloved brother of the PILGRIM—No. 31, again was welcomed by us as usual, and on delivering unto us his first address, headed "Origin of Sabbath School Opposition," all concluded that the PILGRIM, with his beautiful motto, stepped a little out of his proper Christian element, in spreading an essay through the world and Brotherhood rather harsh against a great number of God's people, and all such that are not in favor, or in other words opposed to Sabbath School. The writer, in said article, speaks very hard and I think in a very unbecoming way and manner against a great number of faithful servants of Christ, and of our dear old brethren and sisters in the Lord. I for one am not in favor of S. S., and am at no time afraid nor ashamed to tell any one so. Also I am well acquainted with a great many faithful brethren and friends, old and young, East and West, brethren standing as strong pillars in Christ's Church, that are not in favor of the cause, as I do not believe it profitable to enter into any controversy, I will not at present give my reasons for the same, but I think I could produce sufficient, lawful and good reasons for saying so. The writer, in said production, is looking at all such brethren and sisters as "not having the clear light of the excellent way," and that such are indeed "persecuting the Lord's cause." This is saying too much. Where is the spirit of Christ manifested in such an expression as this? If the writer is a man of the world, then I have no more to say, and will be still, only I am somewhat surprised that the PILGRIM makes himself a medium for the same, condemning all such brethren, and all that are opposed to S. S. This includes a great many East and West, and perhaps the majority throughout the Brotherhood, which we know walk in the light of the Gospel, sound in the faith, have stood firm as good soldiers of the cross, and as strong and powerful pillars upon the platform of Christ, have done a great deal of good in the cause of Christ and for the welfare of Zion, in its primitive order, have labored day and night, faithfully, in watching over the flock, in preaching the Word, in prayer to God for the welfare of the Church, spend and be spent for the promulgation of true religion, until the present day. Thro' them the word was spread, the churches prospered in number and in reality of religion, they oppose all new inventions and "innovations" &c. Now then, one will have the boldness to attack such, and will look at them to be "in darkness, prejudiced, ignorant and selfish," "being only guided by the fathers creed," "of a silly notion," "would as well condemn singing, praying, and public worship,"—as "looking unto the Gospel of Christ as through a colored medium," that is through prejudice, ignorance and selfwill, &c., and their mind in Scripture were like "a tangled web of thought, full of dust and dead flies, and as persecuting the Lord's cause." Brethren, this will not do. Further, in the 3d and 4th paragraph such are regarded as ignorant, if so, they are then not enlightened by the power of the spirit, and compared unto a frozen churl, i. e. rude, surly, ill-bred, unfeeling, selfish, &c. The whole manufacture bears the spirit of contempt, derision and scorn, against such that are not in favor, or opposed to S. S., and this includes a great number of faithful servants of Christ. In my time I took close and particular notice of S. S., even among the Brethren as well as others, and I fail to see any real good fruit resulting out of it, but rather harm, and therefore I am not in favor of the cause, but not through prejudice, selfwill, or fathers creed, let it be considered a silly notion, &c., I am not ashamed nor afraid to let every one know it. As the question is in dispute, I will not give my reasons for it, because I do not love controversies or disputes among the Brethren, but if brethren do write articles for the press, it should be done in love and in the spirit of love.

Your brother,
S. C. MUSSELMAN.

Dear Brother Brumbaugh: This evening, I feel to drop a few ideas for the PILGRIM and its readers. We all have a work to do and can do something for the cause of Christ either by actions, talking or writing, but we should be careful how we do it. There is a possibility of talking or writing too much or not to the purpose. Our great object in life should be to convert sinners and teach them to look to the Truth as the power of God unto salvation. There are many in our day that cannot or rather will not endure sound doctrine, neither do they love to hear the truth preached as it does not move in harmony with the carnal mind.

Dear brethren, when I look around me it seems as if popular religion was becoming the order of the day, and many in making loud professions do it from the lips only, as their actions speak them far away. I heard a man preach to-day from: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" The discourse was very proper until near the close when he said, "It was not only a great salvation because of its author; its freedom and its great power, but because of its unity. Notwithstanding we have many different denominations, yet they are all christians all being born of the same spirit." How strange it is that men will contend for and preach things that are so antagonistic to truth and sound reason. Do not men know that those who are born of the same spirit will teach the same thing? The Scriptures teach us of the one spirit which teaches the same thing. To suppose that this spirit will teach me one thing and my brother something directly the reverse is to deny its power altogether. Again, there is but one faith. This faith is the result of the teaching of the one spirit. Then, how can all these different faiths be the result of the teachings of one spirit. Truly, the time has come that Paul speaks of when they will not endure sound doctrine.

When I compare the religion of the world, as now held forth, with the religion of Christ, the true principles as set forth in His life and character seems to be possessed by the few only. Pride and corruption are dragging its thousands down to destruction in spite of all the warnings that can be given. Tell some men that they must be born of water and the spirit and they will make light of it. Cannot endure it. Brethren, let us be steadfast and study well to show ourselves approved of God, as workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Our labor will be short and the time will soon come that we can lay our armor by and go to our reward. Then let us labor the more earnestly for the salvation that delivereth from sin so that we may appear before God without condemnation.

SELL—HAGEY.—By Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh, at his residence, Aug. 7, 1873, Bro. Lewis Sell of Bedford Co., and sister Hettie Hagey of Blair Co., all of Penna.

DIED.

BLACKBURN.—Near New Paris, Bedford Co., Pa., Aug. 1, 1873, friend Wm. Blackburn, aged 79 yrs., 9 mos. and 9 days. Funeral sermon on the 10th inst., by J. S. Holsinger, from Job 14: 1, 2.

S. H. FURRY.

EBERLY.—In Pattonville, Bedford Co., Pa., Aug. 5, 1873, sister Eberly, her maiden name was Deardorf, aged 81 years, 9 mos. and 11 days. Disease, old and worn out, which ended suddenly, as is supposed by a stroke of palsy.

Her husband preceded her some years age, about the same age. This family is noted for their heartiness, as they raised 9 children and never had a physician in their house. She was a consistent member and mother in Israel, and maintained her strength of mind to the last. Occasion improved from Heb. 13: 14, by the brethren to a large audience. LEONARD FURRY.

MOREHOUS.—In Solomon's Creek Congregation, of consumption, July 29, '73, sister Mary Etta Morehous, aged 19 yrs. 3 mos. and 23 days.

She suffered extremely for some time which she bore with Christian patience and desired that the time would come to leave this world of trouble and go to rest. Text, Rev. 7: 14, 15. JESSE CALVERT.

BROWN.—In Jefferson Co., Kan., June 4, 1873, our much beloved sister and mother-in-law, Anna, wife of Jacob U. Brown, aged 64 years, 11 mos. and 4 days

She leaves a sorrowing husband and children and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss but we believe that their loss is her eternal gain. A. PEARSOLL.

EWING.—In the west branch of Rome Congregation, Putman Co., O., May 27, 1873, Wm. Ewing, aged 81 years and 11 days. Text, Eccl. 12: 5.

He was for many years a member of the Lutheran church, then of the Methodist, but spent about 8 years of his life previous to his death in faithful service in the church of the Old Brethren. A kind and faithful companion and sister, children and friends are left to mourn their loss.

I. J. ROSENBERGER.

FLUCK.—In the Yellow Creek Congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., Aug. 5, 1873 Emma, daughter of friend Samuel and sister Rosanna Fluck, aged 4 months and 12 days. Funeral services by S. A. Moore and Rev. Shoemaker of the Reformed Church.

SMITH.—In the same county, August 8, Daniel Smith, at the advanced age of 97 years. Funeral by S. A. Moore.

WEST.—In the same Congregation, Aug. 8, sister Lizzie West, aged 19 years, 4 mos. and 1 day. Funeral by the brethren.

Bro. S. A. Moore, says, that the deceased was a lady of excellent morals and approved conduct. Some time ago she became ill and during her sickness she became penitent, with a strong desire to make her peace with God. Three weeks prior to her death she called for brother Moore to visit her who found her quite low but strong in faith and with a determined purpose to serve the Lord. In this condition she requested to be baptized. She was then taken in a buggy to the water, and there, in the presence of some brethren and sisters and friends, buried through a living faith, with Christ in holy baptism. A short time before her death she requested that religious services should be held in her room, which was complied with to her great enjoyment. She died in a full hope of a blessed immortality and we trust has now gone to her reward.

The Post office department has been called upon to decide whether or not living honey bees are to be considered mailable matter. It appears that a Massachusetts man has invented a little cage within the prescribed limits as to size and weight, into which he can pack a queen and seven other bees, and he wants to send bees in this way through the post office. The postmaster and clerks object, and the question has been referred to the Postmaster General for decision.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

SCRIBNER & Co., publishers of Scribner's Monthly Magazine, which is such a universal favorite, announce the commencement of a new Illustrated Monthly Magazine for boys and girls, for early in the present fall. It is to be edited by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, the late popular editor of the children's department of the Hearth and Home. We bespeak for this enterprise a generous reception, and will hail with pleasure this new candidate for juvenile favor. Children need plenty of reading matter suited to their age and wants, and happy the editor that can so conduct a juvenile magazine that it shall meet the want properly.

Homes and Hospitals; or Two Phases of Woman's work, as exhibited in the labors of Amy Dutton and Agnes E. Jones. Published by Hurd and Houghton, Cambridge, Mass. This book is a record of the ministrations of these two brave English-women, who following in the foot-steps of Florence Nightengale, the champion of trained hospital nursing, devoted themselves to the care of the sick and needy; Miss Dutton going from house to house caring for the distressed in their homes and ministering to them; while Miss Jones concentrated her whole time and entire energies to hospital work The book is one of deep interest to all Christian workers, but specially to those whose field of self-denying labor lies among the poor and suffering, the forlorn and vicious, and is calculated to give them clearer views, and a better understanding of their duties, and teach them how properly to direct their efforts. Price $1.50.

The Prophet of the Highest, or the Ministry of John the Baptist. (Hurd and Houghton.) This is a narrative of the life and work of John the Baptist, in the form of a story. It is an interesting little book, vigorous and animated in style, and it is to be hoped may tend to do good by having the reader pattern after the virtues of this great teacher and forerunner of the True Light. Price $1.00.

Homes for the Homeless.

Now is the time to select homes, free to all, in the South Platte Valley, Colorado. Town laid out, settlement just commencing around it, on the line of the R. TRACTS.

"ANXIOUS BENCH RELIGION EXAMINED," BY ELDER J. S. FLORY. A SYNOPSIS OF CONTEETS. An address to the reader: The peculiarities that attend this type of religion. The feelings there experienced not imaginary but real. The key that unlocks the wonderful mystery. The causes by which feelings are excited. How the momentary feelings called "Experimental religion" are brought about, and then concludes by giving that form of doctrine as taught by Jesus Christ and recorded by his faithful witnesses.

POETRY.

TAKE ME IN.

The dark night has come down on the plain,
The shepherd has gathered his sheep
In the fold, where tempests nor rain,
Can ne'er trouble their safe-guarded sleep.

While the ninety and nine are all there,
Calmly resting within the fold,
Take your crook, good Herdsman, go forth,
There is one straying out in the cold.

Oh! hasten, then good shepherd and find,
'Tis weary with toil and alarms,
'Tis famishing, foot-sore and faint,
Then please carry it home in your arms.

Ah, that lost one still wandering away
In the storm and darkness to die,
Alone, without comfort or cheer,
Dear Lord and lovely Savior, is I.

There is many a wand'rer to-night
Far out on the tempest-swept world,
With no landmark or light to cheer,
Struggling on through the darkness and cold.

Yes, many a dear lost one still strays
'Mid the wild delusion of sin,
And many a weary one prays
"To thy fold, dearest Lord, take me in."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE HIDDEN MANNA.

To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Rev. 2: 17.

The above is a part of the message which John was to deliver to the church at Pergamos. This church though faithful in the main, yet the great Searcher of hearts found a few things against her, which after having pointed out, and signified his displeasure against, he exhorts her to repentance, and threatens her with his divine judgments if she persists in error. Then follows the language of our text, wherein is couched a precious promise to those who would heed the divine admonition, and who would overcome or resist those errors which he so much detested.

The great fault of the Pergamos church was, that they tolerated some false doctrine, which is compared to the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. The teachings and practice of this ancient heretical sect, the Nicolaitanes was certainly similar to the insidious policy of Balaam, for the Holy Spirit after having told this church what were the teachings of Balaam, says, "So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. Balaam corrupted the children of Israel by his wicked stratagem so these Nicolaitans were corrupting the Christian church by their impure teachings and corrupt practice.

In the account we have of Balaam in Numbers 22, 23, 24 there is no mention made of this advice given by him to Balak; yet the careful reader can perceive that it was Baalam's desire to grant Balak's request, for the angel with the drown sword told him that his way was perverse before the Lord. Num. 22: 31. It seems clear then, that though Balaam blessed Israel, he did it against his will, being compelled by a divine impulse.

Mortified and disappointed, as he no doubt was, at being thus forcibly held back from honor and wealth, for Peter says, "He loved the wages of unrighteousness." 2 Peter 2: 15. He coveted the rewards of Balak. He seems to have been determined upon revenge. And knowing the holy character of Israel's God, he knew that to compass their ruin, would only be, to seduce them into idolatry, and uncleanness. In this last device this treacherous foe was successful; they were invulnerable until they sinned, their sins drew down upon them the fierce anger of the Lord, and he chastened them very sore. Here we may profitably pause for reflection. Though the righteous are dear to God as the apple of his eye, (See Deut. 32: 10; Psalms 17: 8; Zech. 2: 8.) And though nothing can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, (Rom. 8: 35, 38, 39.) Nor, pluck us out of our Redeemer's hand, (John 10: 28,) yet we may separate ourselves from our divine protector. So long as we abide in him, and his words abide in us, we are in possession of a power which the combined power of earth and hell may not overthrow, for we have at our command, heaven's defense the assurance being given that we may ask what we will and it shall be done unto us. John 15: 7. But if we abide not in him, then will we be cast forth as a branch and be withered. Perseverance of the saints depends upon their own faithfulness. God will remain faithful to us, if we remain faithful to him, but he will not force us against our wills.

But to return to our subject. It is asserted by the father's that the Nicolaitans were a branch of the Gnostics, and that their lives were profligate and vicious. This may be inferred from the manner in which St. John compares their teachings, with the instructions given by Balaam, and which had the same demoralizing effect upon the Christians that Balaam's council had upon the Israelites. To eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication seems to have been a part of the practice of these Nicolaitans. Their object evidently was to gain converts to their doctrine, and therefore they taught that it was not sinful to indulge the passions; and that it was no harm to partake of an idol sacrifice. Perhaps they told these Christians that if their hearts were right, it mattered little what their outward conduct was. That they might have faith in Jesus, and yet approach an idol altar. Faith was all that was necessary, and if only they had faith, their conduct was of little consequence. They no doubt taught that they might mingle with those heathens in their festivities, and associate with them in their pleasures, and yet preserve their hearts pure toward God. The dogma that if the heart is right, all is right, does not appear to be a new theory. By such insidious teachings, they no doubt drew many into their ranks; for man is ever desirous to retain as much of earnality as he possibly can, and yet reach heaven. Therefore many unwary Christians were induced to unite with this sect; being persuaded that they could gain heaven, and yet enjoy the pleasures of sense and escape persecution.

The partaking of an idol sacrifice having become the test to which Christians must submit, if they would escape the rigors of the Roman law, many weak, and unstable Christians, through fear of torture and death, or from love of pleasure, seem to have given heed to these false teachers, and were trying to make their way to heaven over a less thorny and rugged path, than that marked out to them by the great Head of the Church. But what does he say of their conduct? How does he approve of their efforts in trying to avoid the cross? Does he not tell them that he hates this thing, and that unless they repent he will fight against them with the sword of his mouth?

It would seem that the situation of the Pergamos church was peculiarly trying. Their beloved pastor, the faithful Antipas had, a short time before the reception of this message, been torn from them, and put to death in a most cruel and painful manner; and from verse 13 we may infer that the inhabitants of this city were particularly wicked, and depraved, and then in addition to the wickedness from without, with which they had to contend, perverse teachers had come into the fold, and were drawing away the affections of the Christians from the simplicity of the truth. Truly this church had fightings without and fears within.

Their great Master was well acquainted with their circumstances, he knew how much they had to overcome, and he knew that their victory would be likely to cost them the loss of all things on earth, and even life itself; and yet he urges them on to action, he holds up before them a glorious promise, but not a promise of earthly felicity, no, no, he will give them the hidden manna and the white stone, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it.

Ancient Israel, during their long journey of forty years in the wilderness were nourished with food prepared by God, expressly for them, food which the rest of the world knew nothing of. Each day a supply sufficient for their wants was given them. Thus were they nourished by the divine hand, while traversing a desert waste, until they gained their promised possessions.

When Israel first beheld this substance like hoar-frost, lay round about their camp, they were astonished, and asked, "What is it? for they knew not what it was." Moses answered, "This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat." This substance was afterwards called manna by the Israelites. David calls it angels food, Psalms 78: 25. Israel means a prince of God, or one who

KNEEL WHEN WE PRAY.

Kneeling in prayer is scriptural. Elijah, David, Daniel, and hosts of holy men and women of the Bible bowed their knees in prayer. And, above all, Christ our Lord, who is our pattern, knelt. "And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down and prayed." Therefore, "Oh, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our Maker."

Kneeling in prayer is rational. It is the position that expresses dependence and want. Are we not altogether dependent on God, and do we not need anything? It betokens humility, submission, and earnest entreaty. Does it not behoove sinners to approach the Most High and Lofty One, before whose majestic and holy presence angels vail their faces—humbly and submissively, and in all sincerity implore pardon and salvation.

Kneeling in prayer is most natural and appropriately expressive. Does not kneeling come very natural in time of great affliction and danger, even to impenitent and godless men? Have not hundreds fallen upon their knees, and called for help when in imminent danger upon the great deep? Yea, we know that such men dropped upon their knees even during a hail-storm and implored Heaven to spare them. The uncivilized nations of the earth are led by this instinct of nature, to kneel and prostrate themselves when they appear in the presence of their superiors. And this attitude is so beautifully and appropriately expressive of prayer, that it needs no explanation to any one in order to understand what it means. Seeing one upon his knees, with folded hands and uplifted eyes, the wildest savage at once understands the meaning, and even he feels some chord of his rude nature touched.

How, then, shall one find a shadow of excuse for a habit in prayer which our pen revolts to notice; to sit lazily upon the seat, and lay one's head cozily upon the back of the seat in front, whilst the minister, and perhaps a few earnest Christians are upon their knees imploring God to have mercy upon such wretches! And oh! tell it not among the heathen that hundreds and thousands of professing Christians in various denominations of this blessed land, adhere stubbornly to this disgraceful, God-defying habit! To our mind there is nothing more disgusting and revolting than to see a member of the church, one who professes to follow Jesus, too proud or too lazy to kneel in prayer in public worship! And we have no words to express our astonishment at a ministry too effeminate to venture one earnest rebuke of such public irreverence toward God, and abuse of reason and nature in the house of the Lord!—Advent Times.

RULES FOR PREACHING.

1. Do not discover too much of your plan in a sermon,
2. Do not pass anything until you have cleared it of the brain.
3. Use your natural tone.
4. Do not clog your memory too much.
5. Be sure you eye God; His glory and the good of souls; having the day before mastered yourself and man-pleasing.
6. See that you speak slowly.
7. Look to your affections that they are not forced.
8. Preach, speaking and talking to the people—look on them.
9. Take heed of overworking anything
10. Be sure you make the people understand what you wish of them.
11. Take no Scripture slightly; trouble not many open metaphors.
13. Be sure you feed yourself; or it will do little good, and you none.
14. Take these four candles to find out what to say: 1st. The Scripture unbiassed. 2d. The thoughts and experiences of good men. 3d. Your own experience. 4th. The condition of the people.
15. Break off anywhere rather than jumble things together, and tire the weakest of your flock.
16. Never pass over any point of truth if you have aught to say upon it.
17. Let your doctrine, etc., be about spiritual things.
18. Beware of forms; nor be tied to one way. Divide observationally, textually, and doctrinally.
19. Be always on the subject next to your heart.
20. Be sure to extricate any godly point you speak out of any doctrine.
21. Let there be no affected looks, etc.
22. Never mind the people but think of yourself and God.
23. Do not think that your earnestness can prevail; but it is the force of spiritual reason. The Holy Ghost of the power.
24. Do not think your hearers can receive as you conceive.
25. Let there be something in every sermon to draw sinners to Christ.
26. Take heed that your comparisons be not ridiculous, and yet homely.
27. Study every Scripture beforehand.
28. Take heed of bolting truth, of extravagances, needless heads, digressions, etc.
29. Shun apologies, for they always stink. "I'm unwell," etc.—Baptist Union.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

A number of Jewish citizens have addressed a petition to Mayor Medill, of Chicago asking protection from the disturbance of their Sabbath, beginning on Friday and Saturday evening by prohibiting the carrying on of trade in the vicinity of their places of worship. No action has yet been taken on the petition.

The annual retail sale of intoxicating liquors in this country, is $700,000,000; and according to the best authority, it burdens the Republic with 800,000 paupers, at an annual cost of $100,000,000. The cost of crime, from intemperance, is $40,000,000; the waste of grain, fruit, etc., $50,000,000. The loss of productive industry to the country, through wasted time and talent of tipplers and drunkards, is $225,000,000; the support of insane, idiots and disabled, is $100,000,000; wages or value of time of time of manufacturers, dealers, clerks and employes in the traffic, is $300,000,000; wasting our country's resources annually, $1,500,000,000; and adds to the Government revenue only $20,000,000.

How A DEBT WAS LIFTED.—A church in Wisconsin was embarrassed by a debt of $10,000. A crisis came and it must be paid. To have raised this in the usual way would have been simply impossible. But this plan was hit upon: Let one cent a day for five hundred days be a share, to be paid weekly, monthly, or quarterly, as convenient. Every child can take at least one share. The poorest can save and lay by two, three, or five cents a day. Some will take ten shares, some twenty, and a few a hundred. If a thousand persons—and there was as many as that in the congregation—take an average of two shares each—that is, save and give two cents a day each, for five hundred days, the $10,000 will be reached. This was presented and explained from the pulpit. Early in the week canvassers went to work, and in a short time, to the great surprise and delight of all, the full amount was subscribed.—Advance.

A late letter from the Holy land informs us of the discovey of an teresting and important item of history at Nablous, the ancient Sychem. At this place reside the remnant of the Samaritans, who for 2,000 years have had no dealings with the Jews and in whose synagogue is to be found the Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch. In this synagogue a missionary of the English Missionary Society has discovered a record kept by the priests of events that had occurred reaching back to hundreds of years before the time of Christ. Arguing that the commotion created by the visit of the Savior to Schechem would arouse the anger of the priest and provoke him to make an appropriate entry on this ancient register, the Missionary, Mr. El Kary, ascertained the name of the priest in office about the time of Christ, and examined the record. He was rewarded by discovering an entry to this effect: "the nineteenth year of my priesthood, and the 4,281st year of the world, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Mary, was crucified at Jarusalem." Mr. El Kary is engaged in making a thorough examination of the ancient record.

A BAPTIST AT THE WHIPPING POST.—The first recorded instance of public punishment for disregarding the old order of the General Court of Massachusetts which decreed the use of secular force for openly opposing the baptism of infants, occurred in the year 1644, when, we are told, a poor man by the name of Painter, having a child born would not suffer his wife to carry it to be baptized. He was complained of to the Court, and enjoined by them to suffer his child to be baptized. But poor Painter had the misfortune to dissent both from the Church and court. He told them that infant baptism was an ant-Christian ordinance, for which he was tied up and whipped. Governor Winthrop tells us he belonged to Hingham, and says he was whipped "for reproaching the Lord's ordinance." Mr. Backus judiciously inquires, "did not they who whipt this poor conscientious man, reproach infant sprinkling by taking such methods to support it, more than Painter did?

THE DEFECTIONS OF ROME.

IN NORRISTOWN, PA.

The following, written by a correspondent of Nurristown, Pa., we clip from the New York Observer. It shows clearly what Mercersburg is doing for Catholicism, and also how near the Rev. Higbee himself approaches it.

About the first of July the citizens of this place were startled by the announcement that Rev. E. O. Forney of the Church of the Ascension (German Reformed) had resigned his charge (not to the Classiss, but to the consistory or trustees,) and had gone over to the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Forney is a young unmarried man, but a few years in the ministry, this being his second charge, and it supposed his objective point is the Catholic priesthood. As will be anticipated by the reader, he is a graduate of the Mercersburg school of theology. A few years ago a previous pastor of the Norristown Church, Rev. Mr. Ermantrout, went over to Rome, as also, more recently, Rev. George Dering Wolff, who had also been its pastor. Thus this church seems to have been a nursery to those in transit to the papacy. Mr. Wolff first, and Mr. Forney since, made their submission to Rome at a Jesuit college or monastery in the upper part of this (Montgomery) county. Since going over, Mr. Wolff has become the editor of the Catholic Standard, and that journal came out with an historical account of the progress of Mr. Forney, as well as himself, in travelling straight along the road from Mercersburg to Rome. His article was a convincing argument that the current theology of Mercersburg has its objective rest in the bosom of the Roman Church, As might be supposed, this paper flung the question of Mercersburg theology and Mr. Forney's defection into the public arena through the local press, and much has been written on the Protestant side.

Thus the matter stood after a month's discussion, when, on Sunday last, (Aug. 3,) Rev. E. E. Higbee, President of Mercersburg College (by a previous engagement with the late pastor) came to fill the pulpit, which is still vacant. Mr. Higbee preached from the text (Romans viii. 12), "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh to live after the flesh." The Reverend gentleman read all the prayers of the morning services, facing an altar in the rear, which was beautifully decked with a wreath or bouquet of flowers, very artistically commingled with green leaves and vines. During the whole service, except in the sermon and the formal act of pronouncing absolution, the preacher's or rather priest's, back was turned to the people; and I could not help thinking that if there had been a crucifix where the altar stood, the unities of time and place would have been greatly improved! The sermon was mysticism mystified. He opened by describing man as a composite being, of flesh, mind and spirit, but incapable, without a struggle through the agency of God's mysterious grace through the Church; or till as children, we learn through the "sacrament" of the rod, to receive the mystery of redemption; until then, though made in the image of God, we are in bondage. After thus describing the bondage of humanity, he referred to "the seed of the woman who did not conquer the enemy till endued by baptism, and by fasting in the wilderness, and wrestling in the garden, and finally on the glorious morn of Easter he obtained the victory." "Thus not by moral, social or political reform, are we encouraged to hope, but by the Son of Mary," and the officers of the church. There is one baptism by which we are "inserted" into this Christ who conquered the weaknesses of the flesh, and thus makes us partakers of the life to come."

In closing, the Professor referred to the trials of the church in loosing its pastor by a defection to Rome, comparing them to those of Paul at Philippi, Iconium and Lystra, and exclaimed—"Suppose your pastor has left you? What then? are you not left? Suppose five, six or a dozen persons have gone to Rome? To their imputed testimony, that Mercersburg led them there, we offer the evidence of hundreds of our ministers who have not gone over." He urged great charity and forbearance toward the lost pastor, and those others who, from supposed convictions of duty, go to Rome.

In all his closing remarks, which were often personal and apologetic, he never so much as hinted at the corruption, errors, or heresies of the Roman Church. The occasion seemed to demand this, but his tongue was silent.

Youth's Department.

THE LITTLE LABORERS OF NEW YORK CITY.

As Uncle Henry is not around with a paper for our young readers this week, we will make an extract from the Harpers' Monthly of the number of little laborers employed in the different factories in New York. It is really astonishing to learn how many little boys and girls are employed in the factories, and our young readers will, no doubt, be pleased to learn something in reference to them. The father of poor children is often compelled to put his little ones to work very early, and in many instances is indifferent to their natural and mental growth, and believes his children should pass through the same hard experience which he had himself. This being the father's mind, the wages of his children are the most important, and their education much neglected. In Great Britian the children are also employed in the factories and a few years ago the evils of infant workers increased to an alarming extent. Hundreds of thousands of children were found growing up without any education, except the knowledge of a small branch of factory labor, in which they were engaged, without any development of body, their little forms being bent and rickety, and their growth stinted by premature labor. At last a number of reformers and philanthropists determined to put a stop to this overlabor of factory children, and after considerable effort, laws were made to protect these children and provide in part, for their education. This same evil, the overlabor of children in the factories, was also felt in the New England States, and soon laws were made to protect and provide for their education. In Massachusetts a child under the age of ten years could be employed in any factory. Children between the age of ten and fifteen years were not allowed to be employed unless they had attended a day school at least "three months of the year preceeding," and if this amount of education was not secured, the employer was obliged to dismiss the child.

In New York it is difficult to obtain any information in reference to the children employed in the factories. The employers are jealous of one another, and suspect sinister motives on the part of persons making inquiries.

"It is estimated on trustworthy grounds that over 100,000 children are at work in the factories of New York and the neighboring districts while from 15,000 to 20,000 are "floaters," drifting from one factory to another. Of these the envelope factories employ about 8,000 children, one quarter of whom are under fifteen years of age. The average earnings of the little workers are $3 per week. The ventillation in these factories is generally good. The gold-leaf factories employ a large number of children, though the exact statistics of the number cannot be given. This occupation requires much skill and delicacy of touch; it is not severe but demands constant attention. The outside air is carefully excluded from these factories, owing to the fragile nature of the material used. The girls employed are mostly over fifteen years of age. The burnishing of gold, silver and china-ware is mostly done by girls, some of whom are under thirteen years of age. singularly enough, it is said that men in this business require to wear breast-plates, in order to prevent injury from the steel instruments employed, while the girls who labor at it sit at long tables, their undefended breasts pressing against the handles of the frame. Paper-collar factories are a very important branch of children's labor. Fully 8000 from twelve to sixteen years of age are employed in it. A girl can count and box 18,000 collars in a day of ten hours.

Paper-box factories, embracing all sorts and sizes, from a match to a work box, employ at least 10,000 children. These become very expert, and often invent new patterns. The material being cheap, the children are permitted to take home enough to do extra work, and are thus, in fact, excluded from night schools.

In regard to factories for making artificial flowers it is extremely difficult to obtain trustworthy information, as access to the shops is rigidly refused. After dinner considerable investigation; it seems to us that from 10,000 to 12,000 children are engaged in them, of whom nearly 8000 are under twelve years of age. Many are only five and seven years of age. The latter are employed preparing and cutting feathers for coloring. Employers claim this to be a healthy business, but, judging from the pale and sickly countenances of the girls, we doubt the assertion.

Another important industry employing children in the city is the manufacture of tobacco. The tobacco factories contain fully 10,000 children of whom 500 at least are under fifteen years. The youngest child we saw employed in them was four years of age. He was engaged in stripping tobacco, and his average earnings were about one dollar per week. Many laborers work all their lives in these factories. We saw persons as old as eighty years in them A man seventy years of age told us he had spent thirty years in one factory. His two sons had entered the factory with him at the age of ten and twelve years, and were now at work as men in the same shop. Another, the foreman, and general workshop manager had entered that factory thirty-five years ago, when a boy ten years of age. In some of these factories, boys under fifteen years are employed in dusky cellars and basements, preparing, brining, and sweetening the weed preliminary to "stemming." The under-ground life in these damp cavernous places tends to keep the little workers stunted in body and mind. Other boys from ten to twelve years were squatting on the floors whetting the knives of the cutting machines with a mixture of rum and water applied with a sponge. The rapidity with which the girls work is wonderful. A girl of sixteen years can cut up thirteen gross of packages of chewing tobacco in tin foil, and twenty-two gross in paper in one day. Girls and boys from twelve to sixteen earn in this business from four to five dollars per week. Some little girls only eight years of age earn three dollars per week. The fact is that these children are often able to perform the same amount of this light labor as adults, while they only receive a portion of the pay given to older laborers. Thus the children who ought to be in school are made to deprive older laborers of their employment and remuneration.

Still another branch absorbs a great number of children—the twine factories. No accurate estimate can be obtained of the number of little laborers in these, but it is known to be very large. In one up-town factory alone, 200 children, mostly girls, are employed. This work is dangerous. The "hackling machines" are generally tended by boys from ten to fifteen years of age. Their attention must be riveted on the machinery, and can not relax for a moment, or the danger to life or limb is imminent. The "twisting machines," attended to by girls, are equally dangerous. Many have lost their fingers, or joints of them, that were caught in the twine. Only great presence of mind has saved many of these girls from losing the whole hand. We knew in one instance, in a single night school in New York, five factory girls who had each lost a finger or thumb. It is evident that strict legislation is needed here, as it has been in England, to protect these young workers from dangerous machinery. The air of these twine factories is filled with floating particles of cotton and flax, and must be exceedingly unhealthful.

It will be seen that these condensed statistics what an immense population of children in this city are the little slaves of capital. How intense and wearing is their daily toil, and how much of their health and education is sacrificed in these early years and premature labor! The evil in New York is evidently enormous, and most threatening to our future. These children, stunted in body and mind, are growing up to be our voters and legislators. There are already over 90,000 persons in New York who can not read or write. These little overworked operatives will swell this ignorant throng. Fortunately this great abuse has not escaped the attention of humane men.

If we work upon marble it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will crumble it into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds—if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and our fellow-men—we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten to all eternity.

Happiness consists in making others happy.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

We have thought for some time that a few suggestions to those who contribute to our columns might not be out of place, and in doing so, we hope none will become intimidated, and discontinue their efforts to write. There are a number of our brethren who have very good ideas that cannot express them in writing according to any form, that is, they cannot construct their sentences properly, neither can they punctuate and spell correctly. When we come to prepare their manuscript for the hands of the printer, it often requires a great deal of remoddling,and even then, comes through the press in rather a crude state. Much of our literature would not bear the inspection of the grammarian, but in most instances, the ideas are expressed so as to be intelligible, and are the means,we trust, of converting sou'ls to God, and giving energy and vitality to our blessed Zion. Let then, none be discourrged on account of their literary defects. Send us your ideas and we will freely put them in the best shape we can. Our labors as editors and publishers, are greatly augmented by the general deficiency of education in the Brotherhood, and we hope these things may suggest to the minds of the brethren and sisters the importance of securing so much of an education, at least, as will enable them to express their ideas clearly and intelligibly. The importance of this ability can scarcely be over estimated, and we hope in the not far distant future, that the truth which we so earnestly desire to propogate through the medium of the press, may be increased in brilliancy and power,by being expressed in clear, concise tho't, and that the work of those who labor in the capacity of editors and publishers, may be greatly facilitated.

There are just two things however, which if our contributors would observe, that would greatly diminish our labor.

1st. Do not use more words than are needed to convey your ideas. Some communications are so full of words that we can scarcely find the ideas,and thus gives us a good deal of trouble and loss of time. You know there is always a delay and loss of time, when we have to hunt after a thing when we want to use it. We do not want a display of words in our paper,—nothing but sound, solid, pointed truth. Please then do not be careful about that matter.

2. Be careful in the use of quotations. Do not quote more than is relevant to the subject, and quote it correctly. Some of our contributors quote more Scripture than is needed, and then in quoting express it partially in their own language. This is very annoying, and to this we wish to direct special attention. Do not trust your memory in making quotations, turn to chapter and verse and quote the precise language, and punctuate and spell just as you find it there. By so doing you will save us much labor, and your articles will come out more correctly. Then, too, when you wish to give the reference, always put it at the end of the quotation and not at the beginning.

Example.—"But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here."—Acts 16: 28.

Now brethren and sisters, we would not call your attention to these things, if it were not just as easy to do it right as wrong, and at the same time save us so much labor. We would like to make a little advancement towards accuracy in the construction of our literature, and we hope you will do all you can to lighten our labors.

In conclusion we would say, let us hear from you all, more frequently. Do the very best you can and we will be satisfied. When you write to us business letters, do not forget to note anything that might be of interest to our readers. Under the head of "General Intelligence," we have room for all such little items and will be gladly received.

Again when writing on any subject upon which there is a difference of opinion, be careful that you do not throw too much irony in your communication. Base all your conclusions on the Truth, which, accompanied by a meek and lowly spirit,such as should characterize all Christians, will certainly be "mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds." If our brethren are in error in reference to any subject, and are fortifying themselves against us, let us storm them with the Word of God. It is the weapon of our warfare and one word of truth, if accompanied by the proper spirit, may shatter the foundation of the grossest error.

J. B. B.

SUBJECTS.

As a general thing, writers prefer to choose their own subjects and it is right that they should do so, but sometimes we get to running hobbies and the more weighty matters are neglected. On this account we will make choice of a few subjects which we kindly ask our contributors to make use of for some future articles for the Pilgrim.

1st. What is religion, and how obtained? If not obtainable, how is it practiced?

2. What is conversion, and at what time or how far must the sinner go to be converted?

3. What is regeneration, and what is essential to be truly regenerated or born of God?

4. How can we use our money for Jesus and the advancement of His cause, most advantageously? We have all learned too well, how to use it for our own gratification, and the advancement of satan's kingdom, therefore we want our brethren and sisters to suggest or point out some of the ways that it can and should be used in accomplishing good.

We do not give these as a number of queries to be answered for our own information, but as subjects for separate and distinct articles, for the general good of our readers, and we will be glad to hear from all who feel to treat them with a view of accomplishing good. At the same time,all are at liberty and invited to write on any subject that they may deem most profitable to the general reader. We want our Pilgrim to be a pilgrim indeed, going forth filled with Bible truths, (the power of God unto salvation,) and the consolation of the saints,

OUR ALMANAC.

A good Almanac has become a household necessity, and the people are so accustomed to having one that they would scarcely know how to keep house without it. We are now preparing to give to the Brotherhood one that will meet every want of a Christian family. The plan will be the same as that of last year, but we hope to make it much better in contents, especially the Ministerial List. On this, we are determined to spare no pains, and will do everything in our power to make it as complete and correct as possible. We have already added some 200 names not published last year, and made a large number of corrections.

In making it full and complete, much depends on our readers. If every one will feel interested and send us all unpublished names, our object will be attained. This, we think, all should be, when it is taken into consideration that it is a free gift. The paper for the cover will be heavier than that of last year, thus making it more serviceable. We are being pretty well supplied in everything except District Meetings. These should all be sent in immediately, as it would be a convenience to have them published. There is also room yet for some more good copy. Anything to be inserted must be sent in within 15 days.

BOOKS.

We have orders for a number of books of which we have none on hand. We have now sent for them, and will fill all orders as soon as our supply is received. Of the Tune Book and Hymo Books we have a good supply, and can fill orders promptly.

Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles, is one of the most valuable works of the kind ever published on the subject, and should not only be read by every member in the Brotherhood, but should be bought and distributed by the thousands. We have now made arrangements with brother Moore to keep it for sale at our office, and will be pleased to fill all orders now sent us.

PERSONAL.

John Clapper. All right—book sent.

E. P. L. Dow. The subscriptions make $4.50. You sent $5.00, what is the extra 25 cents intended for?

A Number of good essays are now on hands and will be forthcoming.—Among these are, "Youthful Instruction," "A Proposed Compromise," "The Necessity and Advantage of Reading and Writing," and a number of others that will be of interest to our readers. Having these essays on hand, we feel that we can send the Pilgrim on its mission, the coming week, ladened with good things. This we would always desire to do, but sometimes we have not the variety of good, healthful food that we should have, to convey to our readers. This want we hope we will not have to experience so much in the future.

LAST NOTICE.

As the time has now come that we must have our copy for an Almanac for 1874, we once more call upon our brethren to help us to make it as complete as possible.

First. Please examine the ministerial list and note mistakes, also make a note of all the ministers that are not in our list and send them to us with their address.

Second. All those that have their District Meeting appointed for 1874, send us a notice of them,and we will have them inserted.

Third. We wish some good copy to fill its pages. Those that feel like aiding us will please prepare it at once and send it along. Biographies or anything of standing merit will be admitted.

Fourth. The cover or outside pages will be used for advertisements. Any person having anything that they wish before the public can have a space at the following rates:

Correspondence.

Elitors Weekly Pilgrim: —Being prevented from attending A. M. this year, on account of sickness in my family, I felt to appreciate particularly, the new feature in our publications, viz., a full report. All that is lost now by not being at the A. M. is the exquisite sensation of meetings and greetings of those whom we so dearly love, and have met so often that it has almost become a necessity, like the meetiugs of Israel at Jerusalem in ancient days.

I have read with great interest again and again the "Deacon Question" as it used to be termed a quarter of a century ago, and I came to the conclusion that it might do no harm to throw in my mite as commou stock and let the reader take the same for what it is worth.

Some thirty odd years ago the question sprung up "Ought not the deacons have hands laid on at their installment like those seven in Acts?" This was agitated more or less till the year 1849, when brethren were requested to prayerfully investigate the matter so as to be ready by next A. M. to give a decision and have the matter settled forever.

In this interim certain brethren ascertained that neither of those seven were ever called "deacons," and that consequeotly theirs must have beeu a different office, though not named. The conclusion was, that there must have been "Table Servants," like the brethren reasoned this year. Then looking at the qualifications set forth that those "Seven" should possess which are afterwards described by Paul, that Elders or Bishops should possess, the conclusion was that those seven were the first Bishops, who at the same time constituted a committee to set in order that was wanting at Jerusalem in the Church. This being accomplished, they were at liberty to go abroad and preach the Gospel, which we find them doing with great effect. Another consideration presented itself viz: that Christ personally called the twelve, like any other potentate or king calls or nominates his own cabinet and delegated no power to any one to do this for Him, as the calling of Saul of Tarsus, especially proves.

Another idea sprung up; that as God at first created Adam and Eve perfect or complete, man and woman, but they being created, produced children, who had to be brought up to man and womanhood by degrees. In like manner when Christ created his Church, they were complete or perfect, on the day of Pentecost from whence they started out and brought forth children as Paul abundantly sets forth. The office of "Apostle" beeoming extinct with their death, there must of necessity be a begining of such as may fill their places. Their outward "sign" then is the laying on of hands, and the means used to qualify them fully is prayer for the gift of the Holy Ghost, or power and wisdom.

It is a remarkable fact that there were no brethren present from Pennsylvania, Maryland, or Virginia, at the A. M. in 1850 near Dayton, Ohio, where Bro. Hoke presented the conclusions that himself and others had come to with the reasonings, arguments, and scriptural references. While he was reading it brethren took notes, and all agreed that those "Seven" must have been the first ordained Elders or Bishops, and as the question lay settled apparently till now, I suppose that manuscript of Hokes, must be in existence yet, and would probably give much satisfaction if it were put to press and brought forth in our periodicals. I am of the opiuion Bro. H. Kurtz knows all about it, I think he gave a short extract once of the same.

Thus Bro, Ed's, I have given some of what I recollect yet of the above query. You are at liberty to do what you please with the same.

Yours in love,

F. P. Lœr.

Bloomingdale, Mich.

My dear brethren and sisters: —According to promise, I will now write to you through the eolumns of this good paper. Having for sometime been very anxious to visit my dear relatives and brethren and sisters in Christ, in Botetourt County, Va., I took the train here at Sewel depot the 8th of July at three oclock p.m. for White Sulpher Springs in Greenbrier Co., stopped a few moments, then on to Covington Alleghany Co., stopped 20 minutes for supper, theu 14 miles to Clifton, and then same eveniog, a distance of 100 miles where I was met by friends who took me to my dear afflicted sister whom I had not seen for many years and where I spent many pleasant, hours with her and her dear children, she being a widow and very sickly. Her health has been very bad for some time, but I found her and left her rejoiciug in hope of a glorious immortality beyond the cold grave. I had some of our Pilgrims with me, she read them through again and again having never saw them before. I had only two with me, I think the Pilgrim would do a great deal of good in her neighborhood. I promised to send it to her, she is very anxious for the paper. I enclose her name and address, send her the paper, and I will send you the money. (The paper is sent, Ed.) On the 13th I visited some more of my relatives, two sisters and their families. On the 14th preaching by the brethren where I enjoyed myself very much with dear old brethren and sisters whom I never expect to see again in this world of sorrow. Oh how pleasantly the hours passed away while singiug praises to God and hearing the Gospel preached in all its purity. On Monday the 15th, on to Fincastle, spent the day with old acquaintances met with some of my relatives. Took the stage at 2 p. m. for Amsterdam, stopped a few minutes, then on to Bro. Peter Niuingers, the beloved old brother who visited me when I lived in Mercer, twenty years ago. I shall never forget him and the kind brethren that were with him at that time. I took supper with him and the dear sister, his wife, and his son. I would have been pleased to have stayed all night with them but my sister who lives a short distance, in Troutville, sent for me and I very reluctantly had to leave them. Went to my sisters, spent one day and two nights, then my brotherinlaw took me to visit another sister, stayed over night, had a season of joy, found her strong in the faith. She was anxious for the Pilgrim. I told her she ought to take it so that she could hear from the churches and brethren, as she has not the pleasure of attending meeting. A great many sisters are deprived of that privilege. It often makes my heart ache to see them hungering and thirsting after the Gospel, and while so many of us are blessed with that great privilege. Bnt dear sisters, don't be discouraged. I hope the Lord will send a laborer into his vineyard for the Savior says: "blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled. On the 19th. returned to Troutsville and enjoyed the pleasure of visiting many of the brethren and sisters and acquaintaneas near Amsterdam. In that vicinity I was gladly received and kindly cared for. Left there in company with my brotherinlaw, a Baptist minister, and came to Fincastle, spent a few hours with some acquaintances and friends, then, same day, went on to the Run and neighborhood where I was born and raised. It made me feel sad indeed when I saw the old farm and the beautiful trees where I spent my childhood days with my brothers and sisters some of whom are now trying the realities of another world. Spent a few days with friends, then on to Craigs Creek to visit another sister, spent a few days with her, theo in company with herself, her son, and a yonog lady, went to Clifton Depot a distance of twenty miles, remained with my dear afflicted sister until 4th of Aug. then bid her farewell, with a very faint hope of ever seeing her again in this world, but a strong hope, if faithful, of meeting in a better world where parting is no more. Took the train at Clifton Depot on the 4th for Covsiogton. At Sewel Depot I got off and found my son waiting for me, took a little refreshment, and then ferried the river and went two miles to Bro. J. S. Flory's where I was kiudly received, and took dinner. Arrived safely home same evning and found all well.

Your uuworthy sister,

Naocy Cronse.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

THE UNDEVELOPED WEST or Five Years in the Territorities, by J. H. Beadle.

The National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia, has just issued one of the most remarkable, and attractive books of the century. It is well known to every one that, far beyond the Mississippi, and stretching over half the continent, is a vast region which we vagnely term "The Great West" —a region abounding in the most wonderful natural formations, rich in precious mineral deposits, and offering the greatest attractions to the settler and the tourist. Thaugh so often spoken of, it is almost an "unknown land."

Mr. Beadle went into this region for the avowed purpose of seeing and deseribing it, and his journeyings and observations were all governed by a fixed purpose, that of discovering and making known the actnal character, condition and resources of the country visited by him. He first traversed the States of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas, examining the lands, and living and conversing with the people of those sections. For five years he kept moving from point to point, exploring the Territories, and the great and rich States of the Pacific Coast, encountering strange people and innumerable hardships and braving many dangers in his wanderings among the savages. He visited the rich mines of Colorado, Utah, Nevada and Idaho; passed into California and Oregon, and there enjoyed peculiar advantages for seeing and investigating the resources and curiosities of those remarkable States. He spent considerable time in New Mexico, Arizona and Texas, and in his accounnt of his observations and discoveries in those strange and deeply interesting portions of our country will commend this book to the careful consideration of the scholar, as well as to all who seek practical information or amusement. His only companions in his travels in Arizona were Indian guides, and for weeks during his explorations in that Territory he never saw the face of a white man.

To prospective emigrants and settlers in the "Far West," this history of that vast region will prove an invaluable assistance, supplying as it does, a want long felt of a full, authentic and reliable guide to climate, soil, products, distances, localities, means of travel, etc. It may be relied upon, and we recommend our brethren and all those "going west" with the view of locating, to obtain all the reliable information relative to the country that is possible, and the established reputation of the author of this work adds to its value as a reliable source of such information. It is comprised in one large octavo volume of 823 pages, and illustrated with 240 fine engravings of the scenery, lands, mines, people and curiosities of the Great West, and a new map of region described.

It is sold by subscription only and agents are wanted everywhere.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the ORIGIN of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post paid. Address, J. H. MOORE.

INVOCATION TO THE FISHERMAN.

"Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."—Mark 1 : 17.

Come fisherman, come to these whirlpools of error,
Come, cast ye your nets for the famishing ones:
For many are dashed on the wild reefs of terror,
And many sunk down neath the dark waves of sin.

Niagara's rapids! less potent their rushing,
Than these wild waves of fashion on which we are tost;
All the well-springs of love, from the tender heart gushing,
With the dark, chilling waters, are mingled and lost.

Then, come, with your calm words of sweet consolation;
We tire of this strife, of this turmoil and care,
We weary of gaud and the world's dissipation,
Is there room for us there? Is there room for us there?

Yes, come with your broad nets of love and salvation,
And cast in these cesspools of darkness and sin;
From these depths of despair and the soul's desolation,
O gather us in! come and gather us in!

At shrines where we worship friviolity enters,
With gew-gaw and glitter, the spirit to win;
At the Sacrament, oftimes, idolatry centers:
To your Love-feast of purity, gather us in.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE NECESSITY AND ADVANTAGE OF READING AND WRITING.

"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

The above portion of the Holy Scriptures comprehends and implies both the necessity and the advantage of reading and writing. And further, it implies the condition of those who do not search the Scriptures.

There are two distinct elementary operations in the mind when the creature is in the act of doing what Jesus says in the text. The first is the selection of the object to be sought for, and the second is a conclusion as to the proper manner of searching. This or a similar division is indispensibly essential to a correct conception of the gulf which the word "search" is designed to overleap or bridge. Every soul is continually making a selection of something. There is a certain degree or kind of mental consciousness while every one of these selections is made. Even the little infant when it begins to walk soon learns to select, when left alone, the different directions in which it walks, and as its power of determining which way to go increases, so the reason and necessity of exercising that power also increases. When it begins to talk, of course at first, like walking—it is at random, the reason of its operation are very indistinct, and as the fond mother would fain, with her hands, set one foot before the other to make it walk at once as she desires, so she would with her fingers gladly guide its little tongue to make it utter the sentiments of its little heart as she wants to hear them. But soon, by reason of nature and the help of nature's God, it selects in its mind from the many sounds it has heard, those which approximate a representation of its thoughts. As with the first attempts at walking and talking, so with thinking, it is at random. That is, in the judgment of finite man there is no reason or order or truth in it. The thinking of little children is something. God has created it. He has told man to name it for his convenience and benefit, which has been done in the same manner that a certain animal was named horse. But in regard to the material nature of man, the child grows up into manhood or womanhood, and as it does so, its selection of objects becomes more and more reasonable and definite. By and by, the place where "two ways met" is reached,—the point where temporal things end and eternal ones begin,—the position where the soul becomes conscious, though the best selections of earthly objects has been made—that without a Savior it is forever lost, eternal death and eternal life are presented to view as two principal objects, one of which must be chosen. Happy is he who has made the latter his choice, and having done so, happier is he if he searches for that object in the right place and in the right way. The Jews thought they had eternal life in the Scriptures, but really they had it not. They only thought so. For this very reason they were told to search the Scriptures—that they might be enlightened and converted to God,—that they might by this searching and wandering in the dark see and come to the light. The tyro or raw student, who is induced by some influence or other to become master of any one science, must, in order to reach any degree of proficiency, apply either intentionally or accidentally all his knowledge of other sciences to aid him in searching a particular one, so the soul that comes to God employs all its powers intently to become proficient in the service of the Master. Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ, is the only sure foundation that will endure forever; it is the position above all other positions. Money, education, knowledge, ability and all other things that are worthy, are positions, but none of them is equal in importance to that of a genuine faith in God. "Without faith it is impossible to please God" Faith manifests itself by works. Reading the Word of God, therefore is the evidence of faith in it, and it must first be written before it can be read. The art of writing therefore is a prominent agency by which God's word is transmitted to men. As vessels are indispensible to carry water from the fountain to satisfy the temporal wants of man, so the art of writing is indispensible to carry the living water from the eternal fountain to supply the wants of the soul. As the idea of pure water is preserved by carrying it in clean vessels from the fountain, so the idea of the truth is preserved by writing it correctly. The moral condition of those who no not search, is like the physical condition of those who drink water that has, after flowing from the fountain, been carried in polluted earthen vessels, and who will not go to the fountain that they may believe there is pure water. Search the Scriptures.

YOUTHFUL INSTRUCTION AN ADVANTAGE.

"And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 3 : 15.

That this early instruction, Timothy received, was of great benefit to him as a young minister of the Gospel, is evident from the recommendations the apostle Paul gives him to the Church, and that it was according to Scripture and condusive to his salvation is equally plain from the exhortation of the same apostle: "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." That faith and holy teachings he possessed, as is intimated, was owing to his instructions while young, instilled into his mind, first by his grand-mother Lois, and by his moth-Eunice.

Now Brethren, we all know that not every child has a grand-mother Lois, nor a mother Eunice, in which dwells that unfeigned faith to teach him in the ways of salvation, neither has every child a pious father to bring him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Yes, to our sorrow, we often see brethren and sisters suffering their children to run wild, without restraint on their part, desecrating the Sabbath by being in mischief all that holy day. Is it not much better then, for pious, faithful brethren and sisters to collect such children together, not interfering with our public preaching, on Sabbath afternoon or in the morning, to have devotional exercises, reading of Scripture, and expounding the same in its true import, and trying to impress the same upon their tender minds, the necessity of obeying God in all His requirements as He revealed Himself therein, and the great advantages of the early acceptance thereof? Every unbiased mind will certainly have to answer in the affirmative. It is said if we adopt Sunday schools for our help, we will have to employ all the help of corrupted Christianty, &c. With equal propriety, we may say, we have adopted the building of Meeting-houses for our help, consequently we will have to employ all the help of a corrupted Christianity to conduct our exercises, because the building of Meeting-houses has its origin in man, we have it not from the fathers of the Church, nor from the apostles, neither from Christ, hence no divine institution. Wonderful idea! But can the proper use of the same, the one equal with the other, not receive the divine sanction? Certainly they can.

Brethren, do not understand me to advocate Sabbath schools as generally conducted by the mass of professors, or even a mixed up school. If the brethren cannot have it under their own control and conducted according to Scripture, they had much better be dispensed with, and as such do exist among the Brethren, I fear some have resulted in evil, being too much assimilated to the customs of corrupted Christianity. Hence my voice cries strongly in favor of such, to have them rooted out, for from these arises the brethren's opposition and prejudice against the schools in general. But I cannot see any valid reason, where there are two brethren at least, well posted in Scripture, strong in faith and well established in the principles of the Church, why they cannot, in the neighborhood where they live, organize a school, or if the term suits you better, a nursery for the education of the youth in the principles of the Gospel as understood by the Brethren. Gather in the Brethren's children first, then the outcast and all others that are willing to come. Teach nothing but what corresponds with the truth, and especially do admonish them against pride and the corruptions that is in the world through lust. I contend there is a similarity between the synagogue and a properly conducted Sabbath school. For in the former they came together with their families to hear the law read and expounded by those who understood it. So in a properly conducted Sabbath school, the Gospel is read, appropriate remarks made thereon, and if a speaker comes, the invitation is given to give a word of exhortation. The only difference I can see is, that this school is chiefly to supply the wants of the neglected youth, the intention is alike, for the highest good. The thought that a school conducted upon such principles is a desecration of the Sabbath, appears to me simply preposterous. Hence I advocate no other but what the Annual Council recommends in the last decision, 1868, query 15,—Answer. We advise that where the nature of the case will admit of it, for the Brethren to hold Sabbath schools, &c. To be properly understood, I say again, I solemnly protest against Sabbath school as generally conducted by modern Christianity, but am strongly in favor of making every proper, evangelical effort to have our children well instructed in the Word of God, and the principles of the Christian religion, as early impressions will not be easily forgotten as the writer can testify.

TEACHING.

"It is written in the prophets and they shall be all taught of God."—John 6 : 45

In the subject before us, the idea of teaching presents itself to the mind and we readily admit that what we know, has been imparted to us through the channel of teaching. The Prophets have written upon the subject, and the idea is exhibited in lessons to us every day of life. But those lessons are not all from that source, which will give us an eternal benefit. The idea of teaching at once presupposes a teacher and that gives us two characters; teacher and pupil. Then if we are pupils, are we willing to be taught of God, as was written by the prophets? And what are we taught? From common observation, we would think that God had a variety of ways in teaching us godliness for one goes for Paul, another for Apollos, another for Cephas, and a very few for Christ.

At the present day, God teaches the people by His messengers, and the text book is the Gospel, which shows us the way of salvation clearly. Now if we have a little talent, and have made the proper use of it, from the privilege we enjoy in this land of free schools, it will not take us long to decide, when a man presents himself to us in the character of a teacher, whether he is sent of God or not. For whomsoever the Lord sends to teach or preach, will preach God's word, and that is clearly written out in the Gospel. And who of us cannot tell what is Gospel and what is not? Christ said to His disciples, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world."—Matt. 28 : 19, 20.

This brings the messenger of God into close quarters, for the observing man or woman will readily detect him, if he teaches not the "all things" and set him down as an imposter. This we should do, but strange it is, that the close observing are so few and men are permitted to go forth and proclaim what they call Gospel, and it is gulped down by the masses of the community. Astonishing to behold! I do believe that the so-called Christianity is as corrupt now as it was in the days when the Savior tabernacled in the flesh; when He told the Jews that they made the Word of God of none effect through their tradition. Traditions are abundantly taught from the pulpit, and the press in this our day; therefore it becomes very necessary for those who desire to enjoy the benefit of salvation to be on their guard, that they be not deceived with this army of impostors, who are teaching the near cut to Heaven. Paul says, though an angel from Heaven preach to you any other Gospel than that which we have preached let him be accursed. Then the truly responsible position of the true messenger of God is set forth by Paul in the following language: "To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are embassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Cor. 5 : 19, 20. Now if we profess to have received our embassy from the Court of Heaven, or in other words sent out by the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth, and teach not the "all things" commanded by Jesus, we will be branded as liars, and forfeit our inheritance in the kingdom of heaven.

If we were to go on and particularize, our essay would become too lengthy. Christ says: "He that entereth not into the fold by the door, but climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber. Then the idea of a door or a way is presented to us by which we may enter in, and if we enter not in we are on the outside, and those who were outside of Noah's ark, were drowned; which is a representation of the ark of safety to us, and we must enter into it. And how are we to enter? With our sins we cannot enter. Then how are we to get our sins cancelled? John the harbinger's proclamation is the beginning of the Gospel, and he preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Peter, who was chosen by the Lord, preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and promised the gift of the Holy Ghost. Paul tells us the teaching he received from Ananias was, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Here are three testimonies from three inspired persons, teaching the same doctrine, and Christ says, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established." Again, Paul says, when writing to the Gallatians, "Brethren, as many of you as have been baptized, into Jesus Christ, have put on Christ." Then if such have put on Christ, of course they are in Him, and let me assure you, dear reader, whoever you are, if you are in Christ, you are safe; you are well fortified; the wall around you is more precious than gold.

The first step then, is, Repentance, Faith, and Baptism, which is the initiatory rite into the fold. Then the duties begin which connects themselves with the Christian religion, and are plainly set forth in the Gospel. For instance, go with us to the night in which He was betrayed, for there he for us all a pattern laid. He sent two of His disciples to prepare a commemorative supper, but before they ate it, He washed His disciples feet to show forth a cleansing. Although they before had been washed in baptism, they now only need wash their feet, and would be fit recipients to partake of the sober repast and solemn emblems of His broken body and shed blood, when done with a sincere motive, and not Judas-like. Then in the same night, he said, "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation; for the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." Afterward the apostles said, "Greet one another, with an Holy Kiss," which is a token of love. Oh that we had more of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, and that love for one another is our prayer.

GEO. WORST.

New Pittsburg, O.

THE AGENTS OF SABBATH SCHOOL OPPOSITION.

Under this head we will speak of three characters, the well wisher, the sluggard, and the grumbler.

The well wisher.—Opposition, in its mildest form comes from those who are friendly to a measure, but who will go no further than merely to wish it well. Their heart is not in the work, and if they have any faith in it, it must be that dear faith which says to the destitute, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled," without giving as much as a mite of wool or a morsel of bread. In this case, what the tongue says, sounds very friendly, but unless it be accompanied by some effort to mitigate his sufferings, the cold hungry beggar, would look upon it as the basest mockery, and the one that uttered it would be regarded as anything but a friend. Those who pursue such a course, deny in deed, what they profess in word, and are in reality the enemies of the cross of Christ. In somewhat the same light we look upon those who profess to be friendly to Sabbath Schools, but who fold their arms, stand aloof and neglect every opportunity to help along with the good work. Do they not essentially oppose the cause? True, they wish it well, but it is to be feared that they encourage less by their good wishes than they discourage by their conduct. They claim to be neutral, but their influence falls to the side of the opposers of the cause. Others are led by that influence to assume the same or a worse position and every accession to the neutral ranks is a reinforcement against the cause. If one of these neutral well-wishers were to see a child on the street in danger of being run over by a passing train, would he fold his hands and wish that it might escape, while at the same time he might easily save it by a little exertion? If such were his conduct, we imagine that he would be looked upon as being as much of an enemy to that child as if, instead of wishing it well, he had wished it ill. Well, we claim that there are hundreds and thousands of children on our streets and highways, in narrow lanes and dark alleys who are in great danger of being trodden down by the lusts of sin; and we claim, too, that it is the object of the Sunday School to rescue these children, a work so important that no true Christian can consistently stand idly by and merely wish it well. Some brethren are so neutral on the Sunday School question that they do not even wish it success, yet they claim not to be opposed to the Sunday School. They say, "If it be of God it will prosper; if not, it will go down." Well, brother, let us see about this. It is certainly not true that everything that is of God prospers in specific cases, neither is it true that everything that goes down is not of God. The Church itself languishes in some places; in other places it has "gone down." Is it therefore not of God? It is just the same way with the Sabbath School; it may go down in certain sections, and yet the cause itself be all that we claim it to be. Both Church and Sabbath School, as well as every other good cause, go down just as soon as men refuse to be instruments in the hands of God to keep them up, no sooner, no later. God does not work independently of man in these matters. No brother; He does not work independently of what even you, one man, may do or neglect to do. If there is a Brethren's School in your section do not stand idly by and console yourself with the thought that it has your good wishes. Let it also have the prayers of your heart, the labor of your hands and the best thoughts of your mind. There are times when a cause will suffer more by our cold neglect than it would at other times from our active opposition. Does your Sabbath School languish, struggling between life and death? If so, now is the time for you to improve that rusting talent. Dig up the napkin that contains it and away to the rescue! If you can do no more, put on a cheerful countenance and go to the school, go every Sunday. Your friendly presence and smile of approval will revive more than one weary heart and may save the school. Do you refuse to render a service so small to a cause that you can wish God-speed? If so, you are to be pitied for your apparent indifference to what God requires at your hand.

A PROPOSED COMPROMISE.

Whereas there has, of late, rather a spirited controversy sprang up in the PILGRIM about Sunday schools, some writing against and others in favor of them, some of the former allege that they are not from Heaven, meaning, I suppose, that we have no authority in the Gospel, which is from Heaven, for Sunday Schools. Now I would propose a compromise. In the first place, I will state that we, here in the Yellow Creek Church, Bedford Co., Pa, have had, during the Summer months for seven or eight years, a little meeting on each Sunday afternoon, which we have called Sunday School, to distinguish it from our regular forenoon meetings, which meetings are controlled by the Brethren. We meet together, old and young, with our children, and also invite all, children and adults to attend it. This meeting we conduct as follows: We open by singing and prayer, the same as our forenoon meetings, then, having formed the children, and all adults who are willing, into classes, we then read a chapter from the New Testament, (we have also a spelling class for such as cannot read,) then we ask them some simple questions from said chapter, which they will answer if they can, but if they cannot, we try to answer them for them. We also extend the liberty to all who wish to ask questions, which we will answer if we can, and then sometimes we talk to them a little in a simple way. We try to teach them good morals, and exhort them to be orderly when they go to meeting, telling them that God will love and bless them if they will be good, &c. Then we distribute to the children tickets, whereon are printed short passages from the Bible, then we close by singing and prayer and dismiss. We also encourage them to read the Bible at home and commit as much of it to memory as they can.

Now for all this, I think we have authority. We have authority for assembling ourselves together, and certainly our children should have the same privilege, as the lambs need food as well as the sheep, and we have authority for singing, praying, reading, teaching and exhorting, and we are also commanded to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. But the latter may be objected to on the ground that it should be done by the parents at home, which I admit, but it may be a great help to the parents to have their children instructed and admonished at these little meetings, and besides, there are some children who do not have pious and God-fearing parents, who impart unto them the admonitions and instructions which they require, and some of which they receive at these meetings. But we have no Sunday School celebrations, no exhibitions, nor picnics connected with them.

Now as I have proposed a compromise, I would suggest, as the term Sunday School is not in the Bible, and is therefore said not to be from Heaven, to drop the same and call our Sunday afternoon meetings simply Children's Meetings, or something similar. But it may be said, should we not on the same ground drop the terms, Annual Meeting, Standing Committee, Delegates, District Meetings, Visiting Brethren, and other terms which we make use of, which are not in the Bible, and consequently may be said not to be from Heaven. For my part, I have no objections to using these terms, neither could I see any wrong in using the term Sunday School, but merely for the sake of a compromise I would be willing to drop it, but I would be very sorry to have these little meetings discontinued, which I know by experience to have done much good.

ONE LORD, ONE FAITH, ONE BAPTISM.

This portion of Holy Writ is enough within itself, to convince every candid mind, if looked at in its proper light, that God has but one way of worship that meets His approbation. The apostle declares that there is but one faith, and Christ the Author of it. Under the Jewish law, or the law given by Moses, there was but one form of worship, and that alone pleased God; "for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

Then the law of Christ has established union and without union there could be but little peace. God has given unto us a law, through Christ, that will create a union amongst the true believers of His Kingdom. This Kingdom is on earth, though not of the world, and has a law and subjects.—These subjects are entitled to the privileges of this Kingdom, and if not subject to the law, then they are not of that Kingdom; they must surely belong to another one. Then there is but one faith, one way to get to heaven. If there is more than one way, I have never learned where it is.

Brethren, do we possess the one Faith or way spoken of by Paul? If we do, we have found the one way that leads from a sin-cursed world to the bright world above. There are many faiths afloat in the world, and who is the author of them? Is God? Is Paul or some other one? We think God the author of the one, and Paul an advocate of it, and depraved short-sighted cratures the authors of faiths. It would look not much like union in the house of God if all the different ways of worship were of God; for says one, I am sent to teach that none but adults are entitled to baptism, and that by immersion. But another says, I am sent to teach that all are entitled to baptism, young and old, the infant as well as the gray headed father, and this can be accomplished by sprinkling or pouring. Stop says a third, you are both wrong; there is no need of either, we can be saved without baptism. All that is necessary is to be born of the Spirit. In comes a fourth, and says it is all human invention, we will all be saved for Christ died for all, and consequently all will be saved.—Stop says a fifth, you are all wrong, you have not that one faith for you are contradicting each other. What, God send a man to teach that baptism by immersion is the proper mode, and another that sprinkling is right; another that pouring is right, that immersion is wrong; another, that neither of the former are necessary, all claiming to be the followers of Christ!

Brethren what do you think of it? Kind reader, what do you say about it? What kind of a oneness would you call such a mixture? There is but one faith, and the Christian has that faith. Will the Word of God, which is the sword of the spirit, teach me that baptism by trine immersion is right, and another that it is not? Does the Holy Spirit teach me that the Lord's Supper is not the bread and cup, and another that it is? If we thus contradict each other, and fight and quarrel over these plain commandments of God, can we all be led by the Holy Spirit, that was sent to guide the believer into all truth? I think not. Somebody is wrong as sure as men contend for so many ways. The Christians are to speak the same thing; all to have the same judgment, all to see eye to eye, all to glorify God by the same mind and same mouth, all walking by the same rule. These are the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and without them, we are not true believers. Man may think he has the one faith, and still is short of it. It suits the carnal nature to believe a part of God's Word and reject the other. What a different state of things there would be if all professors were bound together by the bonds of true religion. Let us take a glance at the state of affairs. How different it is now from that of the time of the apostles. You see fine houses, gilded seats, in which the hearers receive from the polished minister, that which tickleth their ears, receiving large salaries, &c How different from the persecuted and bonded apostles, driven to and fro, stoned, mocked, and even put to death, just because they contended for the one faith. O, ye who cry peace, when there is no peace, remember that God will call you to judgment, there to give a strict account of your ways. Some will say, all are right and then condemn us, because we contend for the good old way. Brethren, one and all, contend for the one Lord, one faith, one baptism.

Pleasures waste the spirits more than pains; therefore the latter can be endured longer and in greater degree than the former.

Certain books seem to have been written not to give instruction, but to indicate that the author knew something.

BELIEVE THE GOSPEL.

The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand, repent ye and believe the Gospel.—Mark 1: 15.

These words came from the lips of the Savior after His temptations in the wilderness. And as Jesus elsewhere said, "The words I speak are not mine, but the Father's who sent me." And as God said, I will put my words into his mouth and he shall teach the people whatsoever I command him. We suppose it was the command of God he taught. The Gospel, which Jesus commands people to believe, is the good news or glad tidings of great joy to all mankind, which Jesus came to accomplish, and angels desired to look into. These glad tidings was long predicted before Christ said the kingdom of God is at hand. And Christ said, "The kingdom of God is within you." This then, methinks, must be the new birth,the change of heart, which causes those who have experienced it no more to look upon things as temporal and according to the flesh, but as eternal and according to the spirit; but Alas! Alas! there are four births spoken of in the first chapter of John's gospel,and only one which will produce the new creature in Christ Jesus. And for the dense smoke which arose from the bottomless pit (when opened by the star that fell from heaven. See Rev. 9th chap.,) or in other words, those who have been born of any of the births spoken of above, excepting the one which is of God, have so mystified the air or polluted the Gospel light with false and every wind of doctrine that thousands scarcely know their right hand from their left in spiritual matters. Yet like the worshipers of Baal, might be made to cut themselves with knives and lancets till the blood would gush over them in their zeal, which is not according to knowledge. O what a work then to preach the Gospel of Christ in its simplicity and purity.

In the early ages of Christianity, the evangeliats had only to convince the Jews that this Jesus, whom they preached, was that identical person predicted by their own prophets and foretold by their own Scriptures, to be their only Messiah and Savior,and to pursuade the Gentiles that their gods were no gods, but dumb idols, that could neither hear, speak, walk nor talk, but that there was a true and a living God of which they (the Gentiles), had some faint idea of, although unknown to them in His true light, and they were ready to accept the truth, but now-a-days the true evangeliat must needs teach those who think they are enlightened and have the religion of Jesus Christ in their hearts that they must undergo a change, (that even Nicodemus a ruler of the Jews could not comprehend), before they can even see into the mystery of godliness. Now then in what light must we view the world in while in an unconverted state, but as sheep having no shepherd who think they have the light of Christ in them, yet are walking on the barren mountains of sin and folly, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be under such circumstances. How then is this new birth and great change to be brought about? We answer, we have something to do with it ourselves, namely: God who is the author and finisher of our faith, has given us talents more or less which we will term reasoning powers. And by the right exercise of these, the grace of God, which bringeth salvation will appear and teach us that denying all ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Now if we occupy the talent God has given us, we will inquire whence we originated, what we are and where we are hastening to, and thus we may learn both by experience and the Word of God, that we have no abiding city here, and that by nature we are fallen creatures and in an unsaved and deplorable condition. In order to extricate ourselves from this unhappy condition, we will begin to inquire, "What must we do to be saved?" Without faith it is impossible to please God, and we may do well to consider how the fall of man was brought about, and by a careful examination we will learn that our mother Eve doubted the word of God, and finally disbelieved it, and believed the word of the serpent and acted out the principles of her unbelief. So we must believe that God is, and that he is a rewarder of all those that diligently seek Him, and that He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever might believe on Him should not perish, but might have everlasting life. By living out the principles of our faith, we will be made the sons and daughters of God, by faith in Christ, and if we henceforth suffer ourselves to be led by none other than the spirit of Christ, striving to grow in grace and in a greater knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ, whom he has sent, counting all things but as dung, so that we may win him and keep the faith, we conclude that there is laid up for us a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge will give to us in that great day and not to us only but to all them that love his appearing. Amen.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE A. MEETING TENT, it should be remembered, to be a success, should be attended to at once. All those who intend to do anything towards it should report to Daniel Vanimen, Box 53, Virden, McCoupin Co., Ill. The tent, 80x220 feet, will cost $1800,00.

THE EDITOR of Our Church Paper treats the departure of the Rev. Forney very calmly, and prefers the quiet let him go system to that of throwing curses after him and making a fuss generally. Just so. He is only a man and not a very great one. O, what (?)

THERE IS a move on the wing of starting a school for the Brethren in Pa., on the co-operative plan, location not determined. The plan is something like the following: Let the necessary funds be divided in shares of $5000 each, with the privilege of taking as many shares as desired. Those who are friendly to the cause will then report to a properly appointed person, the number of shares they wish to take. When there is a sufficient amount raised to insure success, there will be an election held by the share-holders, each one having as many votes as he has shares, for a board of directors whose duty it shall be to locate and erect the necessary buildings, determine on the teachers, and put the school in operation. Who says success?

THE FOLLOWING views of Advent theology is from an exchange, and is accepted by the Advent Christian Times as being courteous, candid and appreciated.

"The leading points of doctrine held by the Adventists are that man is wholly mortal; that he is unconscious in death; that there will be a resurrection of all men, just and unjust, that Christ's second coming is a literal one, and it is near, but the exact time is not certain; that the earth is not to be burned up, but purified by fire, and will be the future abode of the righteous."

That man is wholly mortal, unconscious in death, and then can be resurrected, kind of confuses our ideas. It seems quite rational for mortal things to be unconscious, but for them to be resurrected and again receive their identity, is beyond our ordinary way of comprehending things.

THE PROBATION SYSTEM.—The Methodist Churches South, have abandoned the "probation system," and Rev. Dr Edwards makes the following report of the success attending the change;—"The transaction was easy and without any friction. Pastors became more careful and guarded in receiving members. The fruits of our revivals were gathered in with caution and with solemn and impressive ceremonies, and the result has been that a comparatively small percentage of their additons to the church is lost. The experiment has proved perfectly satisfactory. I have never heard, to my recollection, a soitary preacher or layman express any regret that the probation system was abolished in our branch of the great Methodist family; but, on the contrary in interchanging views with pastors or people, have everywhere heard unqualified gratification expressed at the change. "New York Observer.

AN interesting Conference, largely composed of converted Indians was recently held in Dakota. About one hundred and fifty delegates were present, some of whom had travelled five hundred miles. Nine churches, under the care of the American Board, have one thousand members, seven ordained Indian ministers, fifty elders, deacons, etc. Last year they contributed about $1,000, and seventy-nine converts were made. The report as to the temporal condition of the Indians is hopeful. About one-third of the delegates to the Conference were Indians who had been arrested and imprisoned for supposed complicity with the Minnesota massacre of 1862, and who were converted in the revival which followed.

ON SABBATH last, Aug. 24, the last remains of Rev. Devolt Fouse, of the Reformed Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., were laid in their last resting place by a deeply sympathizing congregation of members and friends. He was a man of more than ordinary activity and zeal in the cause in which he spent his life to build up. He labored in the ministry some 32 years, and in that time built up some eight respectable congregations, four in Woodcock Valley, and the others, in Morrison's Cove, Blair Co. Notwithstanding he had the oversight of so many charges, it is said that he failed to meet only one or two of his appointments. He was a man of considerable influence in his Church, plain and humble in appearance, and greatly beloved by his flock. The funeral was the largest ever attended in the community, and the religious exercises were conducted by the Revs. Kiefer, Cort, Sangaree and Sykes.

A GERMAN correspondent gives the following account of the social and moral results of the late war: "According to what I observed and learned by friends, the late war, tho' so glorious in victories, has done great injury to the population of Germany on the whole, for Materialism, Rationalism, infidelity, and immorality, are vastly increasing. Even the Prussian army, formerly distinguished for excellent discipline and moral superiority compared with other armies, is now getting corrupted, and losing its strength and valor. I am afraid that the very same sins that ruined France will ruin Germany, unless the whole nation earnestly seek to serve God, instead of their own lusts. The best of the people see the corruption that increases, and mourn for their people and country, and pray for a fresh outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and a general regeneration of the nation. It is the old truth over again. The conquerer loses in the end, and ruins himself by accepting and imitating the same follies and sinful practices of the nation he trod down. So it was with the Medes, Persians, Greeks, Romans, and I fear so it will be with the most civilized nations of the present time."

EMIGRATION OF MENONITES.

On Friday last, a delegation of nearly a hundred Menonites, from the Crimea, arrived in this city on their way to the West to make arrangements for an extensive emigration to this country. They are from the villages of Friedensleig ("Stone of Peace") and Bruderfield (Brother's Field") in the Crimea, five miles from the shore of the Black Sea. It is now five weeks since they left Russia, journeying to this country by way of Feodessa, Odessa, Berlin and Hamburg. They are essentially German, speaking the language of Fatherland. They emigrated a long time ago to Russia on account of their religious principles, one of which is they cannot perform any military service. Representatives of this sect are found in the Netherlands, Germany, Russia, Switzerland, France and America. The whole valley of the Vistula is scattered over with them. In the Crimea they have their own church schools, which their children are obliged to attend from the age of six to fourteen years. They have also their higher schools, up to the grade necessary for teachers of the children's schools. They are nearly all agrieulturists. In settling on the steppes of Southern Russia every colony planted forest and fruit trees, and now every house is surrounded by an orchard, with a piece of woods in the vicinity.

By a Russian edict of the 4th of June, 1871, they, with all the colonies in Russia, were allowed to choose between emigration, or, not having emigrated at the end of ten years, to become subject to all the laws and obligations of ordinary Russian subjects. The Canadian Government held out inducements to the Menonites to settle in Canada, promising them complete immunity from military service; but the people refused, saying that if they were obliged to emigrate they would prefer to come to the United States. This advance guard is principally composed of young men, with their families. They held religious services at Castle Garden on Sunday last. The Rev. Mr. Neumann, of Brooklyn, with whom they had previously been in correspondence, and who has taken a warm interest in them, preached.

A deputation representing forty thousand Menonites has been in America some time, searching for suitable lands on which to establish a colony. They have visited Colorado, Minnesota, Texas and Illinois. They have not yet determined where to locate the colony, but will decide upon their return to Russia, and they hope to send out a company of at least five thousand Menonites in May next.—New York Observer.

SIR WM. Blackstone declares that all human laws derive their binding force solely from their divine original, and must command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; and no law is valid if contrary to God's law. And he does not regulate nor license crime, but prohibits it, as in the commandments, saying, "Thou shalt dot kill; thou shalt not steal." Therefore, all enactments that license, renulate or permit the traffie in intoxicating beverages are wrong, because they are at variance with Divine law, which is, "Wo unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also."

Youth's Department.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

My dear young readers, I have not the privilege of talking to you as often as I could wish or expected to do, but I see you are not forgotten, as every week there is some provision for you through the PILORIM. I love to talk to my young friends and would feel much encouraged if I could have the assurance that my effort in writing for you was interesting and instructive.

You no doubt have heard the often used expression: "The fodder is placed too high for the lambs." You perhaps understand it as well as I can explain. If in feeding, the racks containing the fodder are placed so high that the sheep can just reach it, the lambs will be too small to get any. Therefore, the good shepherd places the rack and feed quite low so that all can reach it, the older ones by bending down a little, and the younger ones, by stretching up. My object is to feed the lambs of the flock of PILORIM readers, therefore I wish to be as low and simple as possible. "Feed my lambs" is the command of our dear shepherd Jesus Christ. You are the lambs of the flock and Jesus, the good shepherd, to keep you within the fold, has commanded that you be fed and cared for. But so soon as you refuse to hear the Shepherds voice and refuse his food, you will begin to stray away in search of other food which belongs to the enemy, and the more you eat of it, the wilder, more disobedient and sinful you become, and if not found and taken back by the Good Shepherd you will get lost in the wilderness and be devoured by the wolves (bad men).

Dear reader, where are you to-day? Are you in the Good Shepherds fold, or are you out on the barren mountains of sin? You can tell this by where you are feeding. If you are in the fold, you are feeding on the Good Shepherds food. A very important part of this food is, obedience to parents I hope my young readers are feeding largely on this very good pasture, as there is nothing in the world that will make you so good as this. The Good Shepherd promises that you may live long on the earth. It will not only make you to enjoy a long life, but it will make you good, useful and happy. Disobedience is the first step outside the fold and just as sure as you are disobedient to your parents, so sure are you outside of the fold and when you get out, you begin to grow wicked, become bold and learn bad things. This you do not wish to do because it is dangerous and will end in death. It will not only make you wicked and miserable in this world but you will thus offend the Good Shepherd and in the world to come, he will not own you as his lambs, but will cast you into outward darkness where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Would not this be very dreadful, especially when Jesus has done so much to save you? By disobedience, which is sin, we were all driven out of God's fold and became as stray sheep, wandering in the mountains without a Shepherd, but God pitied us so much that he sent his own Son, the Good Shepherd, after us to gather us in again. In seeking to save us it became necessary for him to suffer much, and finally to be nailed to the cross and there to die that we might be saved. This is what is called the cost of our salvation and it was paid freely. In this salvation, all little children are included when he says: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Then when you are born into the world, you areall lambs of the flock of Jesus, and if you die while you are thus young, good and obedient, you die in the fold and will be happy in the world to come. But as we grow up in the world, become actual sinners and stray away from the Good Shepherd's fold, and are no more the lambs of his flock, therefore it is said of us "we must be born again" or return again into the fold. I may talk of this in my next.

UNCLE HENRY.

LOSING ALL.

A few years ago a merchant failed in business, and went home in great agitation. "what is the matter?" asked his wife. "I am ruined; I am beggared. I have lost my all!" he exclaimed, pressing his hand against his forehead as if his brain was in a whirl.

"Ah!" said his wife; "I am left." "All pappa!" said his eldest boy; here I am." "I too pappa," said his little girl, running up and putting her arm around his neck. "I's not lost pappa," repeated Eddie. "And you have your health left," "And your two hands to work with pappa" said the eldest; "and I can help you." "And your two feet, pappa, to carry you about." "And your two eyes to see with, pappa," said little Eddie.

"And you have God's promises," said grandmother, "and a good God," said his wife. "And Heaven to go to," said his little girl. "And Jesus who comes to fetch us there," said his eldest.

"God forgive me!" said the poor merchant, bursting into tears. "I have not lost my all. What are the few thousands, which I called my all, to these most precious things which God has left me?" And he clasped his family to his bosom and kissed his wife and children with a thankful heart.

Ah! no, there are things more precious than gold or bank stocks, valuable as these may be in their place. When the Central America was foundering at sea, bags and purses of gold were strewn about the deck as worthless as the merest rubbish.

"Life life!" was the prayer. To some of the wretched survivors, water, water!" was the prayer. "Bread bread!" —it was worth its weight in gold, if gold could have bought it.

The loss of property must not cloud the mind with a wicked forgetfulness of the greater blessings which are left behind. No man should despair; for no man has lost his all until he has lost his integrity, lost the mercy of God, and lost his hope of Heaven at last.—Our Paper.

A TEACHER in one of our city public schools says she can almost invariably select from her pupils those who read the newspapers at home; such are sure to exhibit a better acquaintance with geography, orthography, and the true meaning of words.

DODGING THE QUESTION.

A good brother accuses us of dodging the question relative to Sabbath Schools. We say, nay good father, not so. Our position on this question has been, candid and straightforward. As to the Sabbath school as an institution, we are opposed. But when properly conducted as some of our brethren and others try to conduct them, we are decidedly in favor. The whole taken together, makes too large a dose for us, we cannot swallow it. To send our children to schools where this "any thing-will-do" doctrine is taught, and then send them home with a tale called religious, about "Edie May" "The Drunkards Daughter" "The Little Orphan" and hundreds of others that never existed except in the mind of some visionary money grabber, is a monstrous sham and should be so considered by every intelligent Christian parent. Sabbath schools may have done much good in disseminating religious instruction, but they have done more in establishing sectarian bigotry and still more (pardon the expression) in making novel readers. We are not in market to be sold or bought against or in favor of any side, neither do we intend to ride the rail, but speak with truth and soberness that which we think becometh sound doctrine. To do this, there is no necessity of calling any, ignorant, prejudiced or enemies. These are expressions that we sometimes use thoughtlessly without anticipating their full force of meaning and greatly depreciate our character as a body. We sometimes forget that when we speak disrespectfully of, and injure one of our brethren or sisters we mar the body of Christ of which we are all members. Then brethren and sisters, let us not become excited about our little differencies, but let us manifest the spirit of kindness and brotherly love that characterized the whole life and deportment of our blessed Master. If we would all do this, how much more agreeable it would be all around. We would not need to consume the midnight oil in determining whether or not to publish this or that brother's article, because charity thinketh no ill of his neighbor much less of a brother or sister in Christ. Our productions would accomplish much more good, our blessed cause would be honored and the Pilgrim would become a mighty power for good in the world. Then, because we are not so radical as some others, do not not think we are trying to dodge questions, but laboring to keep in the bonds of peace and brotherly union, remembering that it hath been said, "Blessed are the peacemakers; for the shall be called the children of God."

TO THE SCATTERED MEMBERS.

From the general character of our contributions, you may think that we have too many Martha's and not enough Mary's, that we are too careful about the many things, and not enough mindful of the one thing needful. This may be so, but we hope soon, to somewhat change the character of our reading by being able to give more practical reading better adapted to the spiritual wants of those who have not the advantage of the daily and weekly ministration. We often think of our scattered ones who stand isolated from that sweet communion realized by the assimilation of kindred spirits. The appeal "pray for us" is treasured up and in our private, as well as public devotions we think of you. That the Pilgrim visits are appreciated, encourages us to a greater effort in supplying you with that spiritual food which, to the soul, is more than meat and drink. When you say that the fountain of God's mercy is ever flowing, you are right. It is a glorious faith to believe and realize that God is everywhere present, and that He regardeth not numbers so much as a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Wherever there is a heart to pray, there is a temple for worship and a God to hear. Your hopes for Heaven can be as sure-founded, and your prospects as bright for Heaven and eternal deliverance as though you were surrounded by an encampment of saints. You, no doubt, often think of the advantages that those enjoy who are surrounded by those of a like precious faith, but they may be more imaginary than real. God is our all sufficient good, and the more we learn to associate with Him, the less we care for the association of earth and the house, in which we live. Paul felt, to be absent from the body, was to be present with the Lord. Though we live in the flesh, contaminated with sin and surrounded by the influences of carnality, yet it is possible to become so dead to them all that the imprisoned spirit may soar aloft and hold sweet communion with God and like, with Paul, it will be a question whether we were in the body or whether we were of out it.

Books. We call the attention of our readers to our book notices under the head of "Literature." These are all books sent us by the different publishers for review, and you can feel assured that it is not our purpose to flatter, but only give such notices as we think the merits of the works deserve, and notice only such books as will be safe and advantageous for ourselves and our children to read. We have now made arrangements with a number of publishing firms and can supply our readers with any book desired at publishers prices.

Our Agents and patrons will please make arrangements to settle up their old accounts as soon as possible as the year is growing short and our bills are getting long. One of our agents gathered up almost 70 subscribers, and says he has, as yet, only got between $7,00 and $8,00. This looks a little slow, but perhaps it is for a want of opportunity. Please do not forget us.

Historical chart of baptism by brother J. H. Moore is received and presents a beautiful and novel appearance. The workmanship is well executed, and the arrangement very good, being the result, no doubt, of considerable thought, research and planning, giving, at one view, an abridged history of baptism for the first four centuries of the Christian era. Bro. Moore has given the subject of baptism long and careful study and therefore knows whereof he speaks. For price of Chart &c., see advertisement on last page.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.—It has now stood the test of time, and received in approval not only that popular verdict, which in the United States has called for over fifty million copies of the Webster series, but the thorough endorsement of our best scholars, as put forth individually, and in the pages of the authoritative periodicals. It is not only, to quote Professor Stowe, "in many respects the greatest literary work which America has ever produced," but it is in many respects the greatest literary work produced in any nation or age.—New York Mail.

The Note Taker.—Or Elements of Tachygraphy. Part II.—This work is a complete treatise on the second style of Tachygraphy, or Lindsley's Phonetic Shorthand, and is designed to follow the "Elements." the third edition of which is now on sale.

The Note Taker's style of Tachygraphy differs from the simple style taught in the Elements in the extension of the principles of contraction introduced in that volume, and the addition of such other modes of contraction as are best adapted to the use of students in our Seminaries, Law and Medical Schools, and to professional men who desire a more rapid style than that heretofore published. For a full discussion of the relation of this style to the preceding we must refer to the introduction to the Note Taker published as specified below. The Note Taker's style occupies nearly the same ground as that known originally as the Easy Reporting Style, and is just the thing for all ordinary reports of lectures, sermons, speeches, conventions, &c., and is widely adapted to the use of Reporters for the Newspaper press.

This style is the latest development of the Tachygraphic art, having been elaborated later than either of the others, to meet the demand for a style of short hand that should be simple and natural enough to be easily learned and retained in memory, while at the same time it was rapid enough for ordinary note taking, and so legible as to be read with the least labor.

While the difficulties to be overcome in the undertaking were very great, and the author has devoted much time to the subject for the past ten years, we have the assurance that the measure of success is far greater that has ever been previously achieved.

The style, as here presented, is in many respects entirely new. The manuscripts of this style, made several years ago, and which have served a good purpose in the hands of teachers of the art, present the style only partially and imperfectly. The present work is new throughout, and the style itself has been thoroughly revised, and now embodies the results of previous experience in its use.

The work is now in press, and will be issued complete as soon as possible. It will contain about 200 pages, 12mo. and will be amply illustrated with engraved examples and copper plate reading lessons, similar to those given in the Elements. Price in Cloth, $2.75.

Address OTIS CLAPP & SON, 3 Beacon Street, Boston, or D. Kimball, P. O. Box 398, Chicago, Ill, N. B.—Persons desiring specimen pages can obtain the introduction of the Note Taker, with table of contents and first chapter for 25 cents. The introduction is also given in the Rapid Writer for January and April. Price 25 cts.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim:—To criticise or find fault with the actions or doings of our friends whom we dearly love, seems to be very ungenerous and hard, especially when we are aware that all of us are subject to do wrong and act sometimes inconsistently, but whatever is done out of love is with the design of doing good, and if received in that spirit, will effect good and bring the parties concerned in closer intimacy and firmer friendship.

With these thoughts before our mind, we go back some 18 or 20 years and attend an Annual Meeting where the question came up, whether it was right for brethren to write for the Gospel Visitor under a fictitious name. It was decided that writers should give their real names or at least the initials of their names. In course of time, we got nearly all the writers proper names, their modesty had left them, and conscience acquiesced. Thus we become acquainted with each other, though hundreds of miles apart, friendship was formed, and when we occasionally met at A. M., we enjoyed each others presence largely. True our blunders and shortcomings in our communications were in the possession of our readers with our name, so we strove to do better, and many did much better, and some real good. It is also true there was some sharp cutting sometimes, but what of that, so that we did not fall out by the way, and if we did, that we became reconciled and we did.

Now the above being true, is it not very strange to restrict the Reporters at the last A. M. from giving the names of the speakers? I would have concluded at once that it was an affected modesty, but the thought that this reporting the talks of the Brethren had been strenously opposed formerly and now granted without restrictions, that would be giving too much at once. Where there are many heads to be fitted it requires many sizes and shapes. It is not strange at all that there are differences among a body of people of over 100,000 souls, especially considering that this number is more than double to what it was 20 years ago, many coming in from all other denominations in the land, year by year, with the determination to do nothing but what is directed by the Word of God, and therefore often oppose that where the Word is silent; but the unction from above would teach forbearance. But that unction will never be found where there is selfwill and want of charity. "To be easily entreated" is a virtue that all of us should try, by all means to come in possession of. It produces such sweet feelings, whereas selfwill creates a perfect hell in the breast of him that is in possession thereof. Now I trust we shall not only have no opposition to give the names of the speakers in their proper place next year, but also that we will all strive to lay aside selfish whims and prejudices which are entertained yet more or less by those that came from Babylon to build up the "Holy City."

HE CALLS US.

Dear Brethren and Sisters.—When meditating upon the times, the following lines came to my mind: "O, that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children forever."—Deut. 5:27.

So God's word is to us to-day brethren. Oh, that there were such an heart in them, should be our constant desire and prayer, and to have this desire fulfilled we should cry aloud to the dying sons and daughters of men, that we may thus clear ourselves as watchmen on the walls of Zion. These were the words of the prophet to the Baalites. The children of Israel were commanded to keep the whole law and to observe all that was commanded them, but their hearts were moved from God and he became displeased with them, in the wilderness, and overthrew them because they had zeal for God but not according to knowledge. They were ignorant of God's righteousness and went about to establish their own righteousness, not submitting themselves to the righteousness of God. Therefore they entered not in because of unbelief

Dear reader, how is it with you? Are you safe, or are you justifying yourself in your unregenerated condition? Think a moment is it not God that wants you to hear him when he calls you by the loud soundings of the Gospel? Does he not call upon you to obey all the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ blameless? How are you spending your time. Have you your children around you and speaking to them of the love of God, and trying to impress upon their minds the one thing needful that there may be such an heart within to fear God, and that it may be well with them forever? It is our duty to talk with them in the house, at their outgoings and their incomings that we may teach them to seek the Kingdom of Heaven and its righteousness, first, that we may all have the hope of that inheritance with the saints in light. My love to all the household of faith.

Dear Pilgrim:—In No. 31, of present volume, I find an article written by brother J. Zuck, headed, "Origin of Sabbath School Opposition," which I am sorry has found its way into the columns of the Pilgrim. As a friend of the cause, and a lover of vital godliness, I am firmly impressed with the conviction that the essay referred to will tend to greatly impede the success of many schools now in their infancy, as the manner and language employed in relation to those of the Brotherhood who do not see as others do on the subject, will only tend to embitter their feelings against the institution instead of making them more favorable towards it. Such pointed assertions are uncourteous and quite out of place, especially when they are without a single "thus saith the Lord" for them. Some of the assertions used do not savor the spirit of Christ, and will, no doubt, grieve many of the old veterans of Christ and arouse to action the spirit of opposition to Sabbath School, which every careful Bible reader knows is not altogether groundless. I thank God for the carefulness which some of our brethren exercise in relation to this question, as, by it, I have learned many practical lessons. I think I know in part what it is to disciple brethren's and other children, and feel that if the important charge was left entirely in the hands of novices, the cause might soon fall into disrepute. In these things we should be careful and not overstep or go beyond our bound, not affecting wisdom over our fellows as knowledge unseasoned with grace is a great misfortune.

Dear Editors:—As you solicit Church news from all districts, I will give you a few sketches of news from our new organization, called the Fairview district, Tippecanoe Co. Ind. This is a new organization from the west end of the Northfork. Wildcat Dist. the church line being the county line between Tippecanoe and Carroll county.

About twelve months ago we mutually agreed to divide, and form a new district, and since that time we have built a new meeting house called the Fairview Church, had a Communion on the 20th of June. We also held an election for two deacons and two ministers which resulted in electing brthren Robert Atchison and Joseph Zahn tor ministers, and brethren Adam Sensenbaugh and John Mohler for deacons. I hope the good Lord will enable them and us all to work together in love and union, boping the good work of the Lord may still roll on according to his holy and divine will, that we may finally all be brought together on the flowery banks of eternal deliverance where parting will be no more.

Samuel Ulery.

Dear Pilgrim:—I notice that the subject of dress is much treated of in our periodicals, and I think it is all right. I noticed recently that a sister complained that the sisters' cross in dress is heavier than that of the brethren. I, for my part, do not feel to complain. There is not a plainer command in the Scripture than nonconformity to the world, and if there is a more marked distinction in the sisters apparel, I feel to rejoice that we are in the right, rather than complain.

LYONS—MOUR.—By the undersigned, at his residence, Aug. 18, 1873, Mr. B. F. Lyons of New Enterprise, Pa., to Miss Hannah Mour of Hollidaysburg, Pa.

IMLER—HOOVER.—Aug. 24, by the same, at his residence, Mr. Thomas Imler of New Enterprise, Bedford Co., Pa., to Miss Susan Hoover of Woodbury, Pa.

DIED.

KAYLOR.—In the Logan Church, Logan Co., Ohio, June 26, 1873, sister Laura Rebecca Kaylor, aged 19 years and 10 months. Funeral conducted by brethren Jos. N. Kauffman, M. Savonger and the writer from Matt. 24: 42-43-44, to a large audience.

The subject of this notice was one of a serious nature. Her disease was Consumption. About 5 weeks before she died she sent for the brethren and wanted to be received in the church by baptism. She was very weak, not able to walk. She was hauled ½ of a mile to the stream, and then seated on a chair and carried in a stream and then placed on her knees and baptized with ease. Dear young people, take warning.

J. L. Frantz.

MICHAEL.—In the Middle Fork Church, Clinton Co., Ind., August 2, '73, sister Hannah, wife of brother John Michael, aged 44 years, 6 months and 21 days, leaving ten children, all living, and 6 grand-children, a husband and many near relatives and friends to mourn their loss. On Sunday the 3d, she was conveyed to the Brethren's graveyard by a very large crowd of people, more than ever was seen at this place. Occasion improved by Eld. Isaac Billheimer, from Matt. 24: 42. J. N. Cripe.

STEEL.—In the Hopewell Congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., Aug. 22, 1873, Bro. Wm. P. Steel, son of brother Samuel and sister Phœbe Steel, and grandson of Eld. Jacob Steel, aged 19 years, 2 mos. and 3 days. Funeral occasion improved by the brethren to a large and attentive Congregation. S. A. Moore.

SMITH.—In Jefferson Co., Iowa, March 29, 1873, of Typhoid fever, Catharine, wife of Samuel Smith and daughter of brother John and Margaret Fishel, aged 35 years, 8 months, and 19 days, leaving a husband and four children to mourn their loss. Funeral preached by brother Peter Lutz.

SNOOK.—In the same place, Sarah, wife of Jacob Snook, aged 70 years and 3 months. The cause of her death was palsy. Mother Snook was a member of the Methodist church. Funeral by Bro. Peter Lutz.

PRIEST.—In the same place, Malinda S., daughter of Wm. and Ruth Priest, on the 30th of July, 1873, aged 11 years, 4 mos. and 26 days.

The subject of this notice met her death in a most shocking manner. she was making a fire, and to make it burn, poured coal oil on out of a can, when it caught, the can bursted, and the burning oil flew all over her and burned her so badly, that she died next day. Funeral preached by brother Peter Lutz. David B. Teeter.

KLEIN.—In Fairview, Frederick Co., Md., Aug. 21, 1873, friend Frederick Ernest Klein, aged 82 yrs., 10 mos. and 13 days. Funeral sermon by Elder J. D. Trostle, from these words: "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die and not live."

PHEBUS.—In New Market, Frederick Co., Md., Aug. 8, 1873, brother Emanuel, son of brother Peter and sister Emeline Phebus, aged 13 years, 5 mos. and 7 days. Occasion improved from Rev. 14: 13, by the brethren.

The subject of this notice was one worthy of regard; when visited by the brethren, they inquired how long he had been considering the importance of being adopted into the Father's family, he answered, "For several years, ever since E. W. Stoner was here (which was nearly two years), and preached from the words, "The like figure whereunto baptism, doth also now save us." Although but a youth he had read the truths of the Gospel, and very much enjoyed the society of the brethren and sisters. He was afflicted with disease of the intestines during the Summer, which he bore with Christian patience; never complained of being sick too long nor desired to get well. On the morning of the 7th his mother inquired of him if he was still satisfied to depart unto the Lord? He remarked that there was nothing more for him to do but requested her to send for brother ——, that they "anuoint me with oil in the name of the Lord. Thirty-five hours after he was annointed he expired. How pleasant to see those die who fall asleep in Jesus

LITERATURE.

MAGAZINES FOR SEPTEMBER.—Lippincott's for September is an attractive number. It contains an unusually entertaining paper on "English Court Festivities;" and and an article on "The Patrons of Husbandry." The New Hyperion continues with increasing interest. The concluding paper on Fruits and Flowers of the Tropics gives an accurate and striking description of the marvelous vegetation of Oriental countries, also a sketch of Eastern Travel, &c. Among many very interesting articles we name Our Home in the Tyrol which is continued with illustrations; and how they keep a hotel in Turkey, gives a very entertaining picture of life and manners in the East, as observed in the native Khans and at the great hotels in Constantinople and Cairo. These are a few of the leading articles in this really interesting and attractive number of this popular monthly.

Scribner's Monthly has increased its circulation eleven thousand during the past year, and the increase has been a steady one from month to month. The September number is fully up to its standard. A Cruise among the Azores is of special interest, as also the paper on Central Park. Arthur Bonnicastle and Bret Harte's story continued with absorbing interest. The Birds of the Poets illustrated is exceedingly attractive. Among the many interesting articles will be found the Liberty of Protestantism in reply to a former article under same title; also Modern Skepticism. This is an unusually attractive number.

HARPER for September, continues Gen. Sherman's tour through the East which will be read by the many, with much interest as it reveals many curious facts in regard to the "Ancient land." With the helps that are now within reach of the intelligent reader a man in his chamber can learn more of the world and its history in ten months than can be learned in travelling in ten years. Take for example, this No. of Harper, First, we are led through the strange and curious remains of the Ancient Europe. Next, we are taken into the great City of New York, and there introduced into the wonders of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. We have not only a written description but the whole thing is put before our eyes with such familiar and life-like illustration that the reader can scope the whole thing as correctly as if he were there and indeed he can know more about it than thousands who go there. Then we are taken to Florence there to see the Protestant Cemetery. from there to Copenhagen and take a look at the old Castle, and then around through Africa, in fact every part of the known world with their facts and fancies are presented to the reader through its pages, and no man can afford to sit down in stupid idleness when he can receive a world of useful information by sending $5.00 to Harper & Brothers, New York, and get their excellent Magazine.

A. S. BARNE'S & Co., New York, announce a new Quarterly—The International Review to be edited by Prof John M. Leavitt, The object of the work will be to discuss with the best ability of our country the great questions of the age—literary, scientific, social, national, religious. It will be solid, fearless, progressive; and a medium of communication for representative thinkers of the age. About sixty of the best writers and most valued authors of Europe and America have been secured as regular contributors. The first number will be issued about January 1st, 1873. Subscription price $5.00, for the year.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the ORIGIN of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. POETRY.

THE FAITHFUL FRIEND.

SELECTED BY C. S. C.

When the cup of our pleasure is mingled with gall,
And the tears of our anguish like rain drops descend;
It is sweet to remember and know through them all,
There is still ever living a Savior and friend.

Though the skies may be darkened, and stars be obscured,
And the gloom of midnight encircle the heart,
Yet we still in our sadness by Christ are assured,
That the joy of his presence shall never depart.

When the wild waves were tossing the ship on the sea,
And the tempest was sweeping, and danger was nigh,
There were heard mid the waters of rough Galilee,
Sweetest words of the Savior, "Fear not, it is I!"

All along through the desert so barren and drear,
Where its sands are so scorching and burdens oppress;
He that walked in the furnace is felt to be near,
Even there He is ready His loved ones to bless.

When we come to the river, the river of death,
Though in weakness we shudder, yet Jesus is there;
We can feel through us thrilling His life-giving breath,
And the hope that it wakens soon conquers despair.

O soon when we stand on the bright shining shore,
Will the tears of our sorrow be all wiped away;
And with storms and with tempests to trouble no more,
We will walk in the light of the Lord as our day.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

GETTING RELIGION.

The phrase getting religion has become very common and is much used in our day; sinners are invited to come to what is called the Anxious Bench, and get religion, and many convicted sinners, with a desire to obtain pardon of their sins, being taught by their spiritual advisers, that there they can obtain the blessing which they seek, come to the said bench, and there exercise in leaping and all manner of contortions, in prayer and calling upon the Lord till they fancy that they are through, as they call it, and have obtained the desired blessing; some getting through sooner than others, and some linger at the bench a long time and cannot get through; the preacher sometimes, as though he was getting impatient, tells them that they are through and did not know it. And this is, I believe, what is called getting religion, and, if I am not mistaken, they then believe their sins pardoned, and consequently feel happy.

Now if the Apostle Peter had answered those who, on the day of Pentecost inquired what they should do: "Come to the anxious bench and get religion every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins;" or if Paul had answered the jailor, when he ioquired what he must do to be saved: "come to the anxious bench and get religion and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," then those said advisers and those who are so advised, would have good ground for the course they pursue. But as the Apostles gave quite different answers to those inquiries, we must also, in order to obtain the pardon of our sins, pursue a different course.

I will now explain what religion is, or what the word implies, though I would deem this entirely superfluous, (as any school boy should know this) were the word not so much misapplied. James says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: "To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1: 27. Now this implies practice, and not something that we obtain. The word in Greek is Threskia, which is defined by Grove; religion, worship, divine service, and as a secondary meaning; superstition, false religion. Luther has rendered it Gottesdienst, which is in english, divine service.

Now to say that we obtain, or as it is commonly expressed, get religion, would be equivolent to saying we get divine service, or we get worship. How would this sound? or would there be any sense or propriety in such an expression? I trow not.

I think I am understood that religion is something that we cannot get or obtain, but something that we must practice. If we serve God with a pure motive and according to his directions, we practice pure and undefiled religion. But there is also an impure and false religion, such as the Mohammedan and the Pagan religion, which is practiced by millions of the human race, and there may also be, and doubtless are, thousands and perhaps millions, who profess to practice the Christian religion, and yet do not practice it according to his revealed will, this also impure and defiled. To such the words of the Savior, which he spake to the Scribes and Pharisees would apply: "Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, this people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15: 7, 8, 9.

Then I would advise all who desire to have a knowledge of the true meaning of the word of God, not to misapply the terms found in the Gospel, but read and search the Scriptures carefully and sincerely try to ascertain what God requires of us and practice accordingly. If we do this we have the promise of receiving, not that imaginary thing, which is by many called religion, but the Holy Spirit who shall lead us into all truth, and, being led by that spirit we have the assurance that we are the children of God. See Rom. 8: 14.

REGENERATION, WHAT IS IT?

The term regeneration in its simple meaning is reproduction, the act of forming into a new and better state. Born again is synonymous, and to be born is to be produced or brought into life; so born again is made use of by the sacred writers, to signify that spiritual life infused by the spirit and grace of God, called the new birth.

Man brought forth into natural life is said to be born, so man brought into spiritual life is born again, or begotten again. Now as man, by actual sinning against God, becomes estranged or alienated from Him; consequently dead to good works he loses his relationship to God by doing evil; he is represented in the word of God to be a child of wrath, dead in sins, and in order to become a child of God—alive to righteousness, he must be born again, regenerated. This cannot be effected in any other way but by introducing the power of God. Hence the necessity of the preaching of the Gospel. The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. Herein lies the necessity on the part of man of believing and accepting the truth of the Gospel of Christ. "My words they are spirit and they are life."—Jesus.

By the reception of the word of God then new life is infused into the soul by the grace of God; that change by which the will and natural enmity of man to God and his law is subdued, and a principle of supreme love to God and his law, or holy affections are implanted in the heart. This is an internal work and produced by the will and power of God, but will be made manifest externally in man by submission and obedience to all the requirements of the Gospel. Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures."—James. "For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel."—Paul. Being born again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever."—Peter. Three inspired and infallible witnesses to prove my position. Hence to claim a new birth and reject Christian baptism is erroneous, and he that trusts in it is deceived. To say a man is regenerated who opposeth feet-washing and the Lord's Supper as commanded in the Gospel is absurd and shows a shallow conception of the the theological term regeneration.

A genuine new birth necessitates the word and spirit to co-operate, hence, whatever is commanded in the word of God for man to do, must be obeyed. Inasmuch then as the Author of salvation, the Great Head of the Church, Jesus Christ our exemplar connected water with a new birth, no honest believer will undertake to separate it. "Except a man be born of water and of the CONNECTION.

Ignorant mortals are rash in their conclusions on the conduct of Providence, being blind in their views and impatient under woes. But to compose my combating thoughts, and make me wait the issue of all things with patience, let me look into some remarkable Scripture narrative, and see the fair sunshine of kindness, after the storms of trouble and clouds of indignation are gone.

First, then, let me look into that which befel the friend of God. Think what joy filled the patriarch's breast, when promised a son in his old age, and how this joy was increased when the promised seed was born, circumcised, and grew up to be a pretty boy, the joy of both his parents. But look again and see the amazing temptation, and scene that ensues. The promised seed must be sacrificed, and that by the hand of a most affectionate father, yet see his aged joints tremble all the way to Mount Moriah, to offer up his beloved Isaac, as it were, resigning the promise again to God, trusting that He would make it out some other way, though it were by raising him from the dead. Now let us view the beginning of the trial of his faith. How dark and gloomy, how opposite to reason, affection and religion. But let us connect the latter end with the beginning, and all at once it is beautiful and bright. There his faith is true, here it triumphed; there God commands, here He commends His obedience; there He requires, here He restores Isaac. The voice of God at first, seems to strike at His former promise, here it confirms all with new promises. Enlarged blessings and this glorious name superadded, the father of the faithful, Abraham comes home full of gladness and gratitude. And we have the divine account to teach us to wait the end before we draw our conclusions of God's providential way.

The second is, the account of Joseph. In the first part of the scene, see his young heart ready to burst and break with bitter anguish. Hear his many but fruitless supplications to his cruel brethren. How melting are his cries, while his hard-hearted brethren draw him out of the pit to sell him for a slave. Nothing can save him. Compassionate Reuben is not within reach of his cry. The price is agreed upon, the money is paid, and away he must go, and neither his parting importunities, his piercing cries, nor pitying back looks can move them to relent. Moreover after a little advancement in Egypt, he is thrown from the liberty of a servant into confinement of a prison. This at first sight is a melancholy scene. But if we look to the sufferings of a tender hearted father, it is heightened to the highest pitch. All his sons and daughters gather around the grey headed mourner to comfort him, but in vain, for still he thinks he sees the wild beasts tearing his beloved Joseph to pieces, who screams out for help. But none to help is near, and then he is like to faint thro' the excess of sorrow. Now this is the first part of the providence which indeed, has a very dejecting aspect, and if we had never heard more of the matter, we would have concluded them both very miserable. But let us see how the connection stands. Jacob who had mourned many years is at last overflowed with tides of joy. Joseph, the lost, the long lamented Joseph, is still alive; the youth that was sold into Egypt as a servant. All Egypt is at his service. He who had his feet hurt with fetters, may now bind princes at his pleasure, and teach senators wisdom. He who lately drudged about in a dungeon to attend prisoners, becomes a father to a king, his brothers who envied him for his dreams, which bred their envy, he whose life they so little valued saves the lives of thousands, and at his whose supplications his brethren would not hear. All the land of Egypt is governed, the long separated relations meet and melt in kindness on one another's necks.

We have a similar instance. The great Apostle Paul, and by his own observation too, in his epistle to the Philippians, this great man after his singular conversion, preacheth Christ in many trials and sufferings, till at length he returns to Jerusalem. There by the enraged and unbelieving Jews he is set upon, and would have been slain had not the Roman captain rescued him. But he is so persecuted with their cruel rage, and underhand dealings, that he is compelled to appeal to a heathen emperor. Now the great apostle of the Gentiles, to the grief of the church, is a prisoner. Hence, says he, "I Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ." He is a long time confined in Judah, then sent to Rome, where, though ship-wrecked in his passages, he arrives and is kept two years a prisoner. But says he to the Philippians, "I would ye should understand brethren, that the things which have happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel, so that my bonds in Christ are manifest in the palace and in all other places; and many of the brethren in the Lord waxing confident by my bonds are are much more bold to speak the word without fear."

How noble the connection. Paul intends to visit Rome at his own expense to preach the Gospel, but providence, at the emperor's expense, brings him to make converts, not only in the royal palace. The Jews think they have succeeded to their wish when they have thus got rid of a pestilent fellow, and a ring-leader of the sect of Nazarenes, but they could not have fallen upon a better method to spread his doctrine. From appearance his success must end when his imprisonment begins. But it is quite the reverse, not only Paul persists in preaching the Gospel, but the brethren wax bold. What reason then have I to complain on the first part of the providence. While the outer wheel is only seen should I not wait till the inner wheel turns round and I can read plainly the last connection, and what though that should be reserved for eternity, there every providence shall be completed to mine everlasting comfort.

A PILGRIM.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

BRO. E. SLIFER of Burketsvill Md., under date of Aug. 28, says:

On the 12th day of Aug. 1873, in the morning about 2 o'clock, our country was visited with a very destructive hail-storm, destroying cornfields, gardens, and thousands of panes of window glass. It extended over a scope of coutry 20 miles in length and from 1 to 2 miles in breadth, and in the immediate vicinity of our village, our streams were very much swollen, and additional damage done by the fall of seven inches of water during twenty-four hours after the hail-storm."

HIGH CHURCH PEOPLE BECOMING CATHOLICS.—Of four persons lately received into the Roman Catholic Church in Boston and vicinity, says the Congregationalist, one was Mr. Richard Bliss, connected with the Agassiz Museum in Cambridge and for several years a member of the Episcopal church; another Miss Libby of Boston, a member of the very high Episcopal church of the Messiah; a third a Mr. Ward, a member of the church of England; and the fourth Rev. C. R. Brainard, formerly rector of the Episcopal church in Quincy. Those who are fond of looking up antecedents, will be struck by the similarity in these cases. Prof. Wharton has written lately on "Ways to Rome." Is one of them here indicated?—N. Y. Observer.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred near Lemont on the Chicago and Alton Rail road by a freight train coming in collision with a south express passenger. The coal train was running at the rate of 20 miles per hour and the express at about 30, neither engine seeing each other until it was too late to reverse, a fact accounted for by a turn in the road and partly by a dense fog. The two trains came together with fearful force. Being on the curve, however, each engine left the track and passed eachother, that attached to the coal train striking the baggage car a few feet from the end, breaking the coupling between it and the smoking car, which the engine struck fair in the end and with such force as to throw the forward end in the air, so that the engine ran under it, tearing the floor completely out and hurling the fifty or sixty unfortunates who were in the car in a struggling mass to the lower end where there was no chance to escape, and then ensued a scene of horrors which cannot adequately be described. The smokestack and dome of the engine were knocked off by the collision, and the broken timbers of the smoking car penetrated the boiler, letting loose a dense volume of hot steam, which poured into the car, blinding and scalding the inmates who with shrieks struggled vainly to extricate themselves, but their condition was such as would not admit of help and six had to perish outright, while several others died soon after and still others will follow The cause is attributed to the carelessness of the conducter and engineer of the coal train, whose orders were to lay over at Lemont until the passenger arrived.

CHRISTIANS IN RUSSIA.

While in Calcutta in 1869 we formed a very pleasant acquaintance with a missionary of the English Church, Rev. James Long, who had spent the most of a long life of Christian labors in India. A man of learning, strictly evangelical in his views, and having a truly catholic heart, he was ready for every good word and work. On his return to his native land he made a visit to Russia, notices of which we have seen from time to time in our foreign papers. We have just received the following, which he communicated to the Missionary Intelligencer of the Society with which he is connected:

"The laity of the Russian Church are beginning to take an interest in works of benevolence and religion. I have become acquainted, during my residence in Petersburg, with various interesting illustrations of this. One Madam ——, the wife of a General high in the Russian service, took me one day to visit an institution founded by her for the education of girls and affording aid to poor women. She held a mother's meeting, in which, while the women worked, she expounded to them with great zeal and efficiency the epistle for the Sunday. She has been frequently in England. I visited two of the prisons with a Russian lady who expounds the Scriptures to female prisoners. I went to one of the worst houses in Petersburg, the nest of thieves and the vilest characters, where a few years ago the skeletons had been dug up of persons who had been murdered there at night and then buried on the premises; yet two Russian ladies pay weekly visits to this place, give religious instruction, and are endeavoring to form a ragged school on the premises. The system of district visiting is being introduced into various parishes in Petersburg. I met one lady of high rank, who, when in England, engaged herself as a district visitor in a parish in order to learn our system. I know another case of one who devotes herself to translating books from the English into Russian. Among the books translated is the Missing Link."

It is gratifying always to receive assurances that even in those churches that are most given up to error and formalism the spirit of God is moving upon the hearts of some, and that there are those who truly devote themselves to the service of the Master. "Grace be within them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."—N. Y. Observer.

Youth's Department.

HOW TO ENTER THE FOLD.

In my last I was telling you about the Good Shepherd and his fold and about the danger of getting out of it. By this, I suppose you understand that you are in the fold. This depends on how good you are and how much you are able to do. The Bible says that he that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin. Now, no doubt, some of you are old enough to know to do good and have not done it, therefore you have become sinners and as no sinners can be in the good Shepherds fold, you must be on the outside, and to be there, is very dangerous, just as much so as it would be for a lamb or a sheep to be outside of the sheepsfold in a country where there are bears and wolves. Jesus is a good Shepherd and wants you to do nothing but what is easy. He says, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." But when he tells us that we must be good and obedient and we refuse to do it we grieve him and he finally casts us outside or rather by becoming bad we go out ourselves. We begin to feel like the young man we read of in the Bible. He thought he knew a great deal and was able to care for himself. He thought it was too small to remain at home and do what his father told him. He, at last, begged of his father to give him his share and he would go out and set up for himself. You remember how he went off to a far country where he got among bad people and soon wasted all that his father gave him. Then it was that he became in want and got so hungry that he would have been glad to eat with the hogs that he was feeding, but his money was all gone and therefore no person would give him anything. Just so you will feel after you have become disobedient, learned to sin and strayed away from the fold of Jesus; but will you do like this lost son did? When he found that he was lost and away from his father's house, he repented of his folly and determined to go back again. Now this is what I want you to do. Some of you have grown to years of understanding, to a time that there is more required of you than to simply obey your parents. There is something that tells you that you are sinners, that you have went away from your father's house, that you are in a lost and undone condition, without hope and God in the world. This you learn from reading the Scriptures and hearing them preached. From the same source you learn that Jesus is callingyou and the kind invitation is, "Come to me." To do this you must make a full resolve to forsake your former sins. This is what is called repentance. But this alone did not take the prodigal son back to his father's house, but he had to do something more, he had to return and enter his father's house as a stranger, as one that was lost and had no right there whatever. So you must do. By sinning you died to all that belonged to you as a son or daughter and to again become a child you must be born again. This means a conversion or change of mind, with a determination to do whatever Jesus commands you, it is to stop doing evil and learn to do good. But as God wants us to be known as the sheep of his fold, he has given us a sign that all who see it may know that we have now been made willing to return into his fold and be his sons and daughters. This sign is water baptism. He says, "Repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins," or, "ye must be born again." By being baptized in water, or buried in baptism you go through the sign of a death and by coming out again you come through the sign of a resurrection or birth. You are now born of water, after which it is said ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost or be born of the Spirit. This Spirit will lead you into all truth which will make you wise unto salvation. This is the plan the Bible gives for you to get back again into the Good Shepherd's fold, and I hope that not one of my readers who are conscious of being sinners will feel safe for a moment until they have returned to the fold of Jesus and thus become his adopted children.

I have now tried to be as plain and simple as I could and hope you will understand what I have written. I feel a deep concern for your salvation and now advise you not to put it off till it is too late.

UNCLE HENRY.

A SCAR ON THE SOUL.

One of my most pleasant memories of early Sabbath school days is of a lad who for a short time was my pupil. My acquaintance with him began thus:

Being in the country in the summer, the first Sunday of my stay I went to a different church from that attended by the family with whom I sojourned. We came from a distance and in the same carriage. Knowing it was communion at the church which my friend attended, to save them trouble of calling for me after the morning service I walked to the place where the horse and wagon were fastened under an elm-tree behind the church, intending to sit there until they should join me. Only two other vehicles were there, in one of which sat a boy whom I observed to be assiduously driving off flies from the horse, saying as he did so, "Poor Ned! poor Ned! next Sunday we'll have a new net. Pa won't forget to buy one this week, 'cause I'll help him to remember." His back was toward me, so he was unaware of my presence; but his kind words and acts so attracted me that I resvoled upon further acquaintance. I walked back and forth a few times before taking my seat in the wagon, and soon had an opportunity to observe the pleasing face and gentlemanly bearing of the little fellow. Presently I said,—

Your horse has a kind little master, I perceive."

"That's because father and mother think so much of Ned," replied the boy, modestly. "Besides, I don't like to see him so tormented by the flies. You see he has stood it all the time I was at church, and now I have come to help him."

"Then you were at church during the first service?"

"O yes, ma'am and I went to Sunday school at nine o'clock"

'I should think you would be tired being confined so long. Why not run about a little? Wouldn't you like to?

"Yes ma'am but then poor Ned would be so pestered. I'd rather stay.

"Then your father and mother did not bid you to?"

"No ma'am; but somehow I'd feel better to do so.?

Kind little fellow! I said to myself; and then asked.

"What are you going to do this afternoon?"

"I.m going to read to blind Samuel."

"That will keep you confined, too."

"Yes but I'll have my dinner first, and a little time to run about in the orchard, too," he replied.

"Suppose you let me go in your place?"

"O, but I promised," said the boy, quickly, and looking up earnestly.

"I could excuse you in some way."

"Please ma'am I don't see how, because I'm not sick."

"But why be so particular, as long as Samul is not neglected."

"I can't explain it very well ma'am replied the boy, looking a little troubled,—perhaps feeling a little disappointed in his new friend who seemed apparently desirous to lead him astray,—"I can't explain it but it wouldn't be reading to him, besides, he would be disappointed not to see me; but that wouldn't be the worst of it."

"What would be the worst of it?"

"Well ma'am as you ask me, I'll tell you what my father and mother taught me that to break my promise even in a small thing is a sin, and every sin leaves a scar upon the soul."

I now commended the little fellow warmly, and told him that my questions were merely to enable me to become better acquainted with him.

"O I am so glad!' said the child with a breath of relief; because I was beginning to like you."

"And could you not have liked me otherwise?"

"No ma'am; not if you wished me to do wrong," replied the child candidly.

Noble boy! his nice sense of right and honor increased with his years. He lived to become a fine and high principled young man, possessing a remarkable influence over others for good; his quiet example, and firm but unostentatious adherence to what was good and right giving weight to his words. He died early but lived long enough to make his mark on many souls, some of whom became converted through his instrumentality.

How true the word about the "scar upon the soul!" Yes, every sin even though subsequently repented of, leaves a disfiguring mark, as unsightly to the eye of God as a scar upon the face would appear to us.—S. S. Times.

HOW YOUNG MEN FAIL.

"There is Alfred Sutton home again with his wife to live on the old folks," said one neighbor to another. "It seems hard after all his father has done to fit him for business, and the capital he has invested to start him so fairly. It is surprising he has turned out so poorly. He is a steady young man, no bad habits as far as I know; he had a good education and was always considered smart: but he doesen't succeed in anything. I am told he has tried a number of different sorts of business, and sunk money every time. What can be the trouble with Alfred, I should like to know, for I don't want to have my boy to take his turn."

"Alfred is smart enough said the other, "and has education enough but he lacks the one element of success. He never want's to give a dollars worth of work for a dollar of money, and there is no other way for a man to make his fortune. He must dig if he would get gold. All the men that have succeeded honestly or dishonestly, in making money, have had to work for it, the sharpers sometimes the hardest of all. Alfred wished to set his train in motion, and a smashup was the result. Teach your boy friend Archer, to work with a will when he does work. Give him play enough to make him healthy and happy, but let him learn early that work is the business of life. Patient, selfdenying work is the price of success. Ease and indolence eat away not capital only but worse still, all a man's nerve and power. Present gratification tends to put off duty until to-morrow or next week' and so the golden moments slip by. It is getting to be a rare thing for the sons of rich men to die rich. Too often they squander in a half score of years what their fathers were a lifetime in accumulating. I wish I could ring it in the ear of every aspiring young man that work, hard work, of head and hands, is the price of success."—Country Gentleman.

COMMENTARY ON THE NEW TESTAMENT, designed for Christian Workers. By Rev. Lyman Abbott. No. 1. Matthew, chapters 1. 8 New York: A S. Barnes & Co. 111 & 113 William Street. 25 cents per number sent by mail post paid.

We have had the pleasure of examining No. 1. Vol. 1, of this New Commentary embracing the first seven chapters of Matthew, and are much pleased with the general character of the work. Its purpose is to avoid criticisms and give such an exposition of the sacred Text as will or can be readily understood by the mass of readers. The notes are profuse and comprehensive and less objectionable than that we have heretofore read. There are a few views presented from which we dissent, but on the whole we consider it a valuable addition to sacred literature, and advise our readers to send 25 cts for No. 1 and examine it for yourselves. See extract on another page.

THE MOUTH OF GOLD —A series of Dramatic sketches, illustrating the life and times of Chrysostom. By Edwin Johnson. Published by A. S Barnes & Co., New York. Price $1.00.

This is decidedly a work for cultured minds, and to such it will be intensely interesting. We have taken advantage of our leisure moments in reading its pages, and it has not only proven to be a pleasant pastime, but interesting and instructive. The work is written in blank verse, elegant in diction and elegantly bound.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—From J. B. Lippincott & Co., through Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa.—"THINKERS AND THINKING," by J. E. Garrettson, M. D., (John Darby.) If this book proves to be as good as "Odd Hours of a Physician" by this same author, we shall not hesitate to give it a warm commendation. Price, extra cloth, $1.50.

POETRY.

WILLIE.

BY LOVINA H. BURKHART.

Willie, thou art gone to God,
You fell beneath that chastning rod;
So young, too fair on earth to stay,
So God has taken him away.
Dear Willie, loved so well while here,
Your death caused many a bitter tear;
Your life was very brief on earth,
Your voice is hushed from joy and mirth.

But you have joined that angel throng,
You were too pure to do one wrong;
You've joined that bright angelic band,
Cherubic legions fill that land.
Yes, Willie, you are happy there,
You'll always be an angel fair,
You beckon your dear parents come,
To meet you in that better home.

Dear parents, mourn not for your child,
Just look and see those youths so wild;
Go staggering home along the street,
Their loving parents there to meet.
Your child will never share their fate
He's living in that high estate,
Where only angels ever dwell;
Dear Willie, now, a long farewell.

I'LL PRAY.

BY MRS. MARY JANE PHILLIPS.

When the day-star gilds the eastern sky,
And along the earth soft shadows lie;
Ere breaks the sun's first cheering ray,
I'll kneel and to my Savior pray.

When the noontide sun, with fervid light,
Dispels the shades of the darksome night;
Stealing from earthly cares away,
I'll kneel and to my Savior pray.

When the wearied sun sinks down to rest,
And daylight fades away in the west,
And twilight draws her curtains gray,
Again I'll kneel, again I'll pray.

When I awake at the midnight hour,
In gratitude to the all-wise Power,
That keeps me safe both night and day,
I, to my Savior, God, will pray.

When sorrows rise and my heart is sad,
When life hath lost all the charms it had,
And trouble o'er me holds its sway,
Ah! then I'll kneel and humbly pray.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

RELIGION, WHAT IS IT? HOW OBTAINED?

"What is religion, and how is it obtained? If not obtainable, how is it practiced?"

Dear editor and readers of the PILGRIM, having some time ago despaired in my ability to write, I laid down my pen to write no more for the public eye; but seeing the above subject proposed, by the editor, as a subject for brethren to write on, I feel this morning to give it a few thoughts and if they do not come up to the editor's standard he need not publish them. There are three heads, or points in the subject as proposed, but I will consider them in their order as they are proposed.

First. What is Religion? Religion is a word, a form of speech by which we express the same thing as by Godliness. To be God-like, or Christianity; To be Christ-like. The meaning of the word as defined by Webster and others is, a binding together; a union; a connection. Webster defines from the latin religo, to bind anew, re and ligo to bind. This rendering makes the word very expressive. When applied to man it conveys the idea that he is bound to God; that he is in union and connection with Him; and as the word means to re, bind it implies that he at one time was bound to, and was in union and connection with God, which we all once were; for, "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Thus by this act of God, in which man was neutral, He bound, and brought into union and connection with himself all mankind; or as the text has it "the world." But man, by actual transgression of God's law, breaks the band of union and connection with Him; and hence, the words of reconciliation are given that he may be re-bound to God.

Religion then is a divine principle and power of God in the soul which binds it to him; and brings it in union and connection with Him. The terms binding, union, and connection are expressive of attachment, of oneness, of sameness, and of perfect similarity. To illustrate these, let us suppose two streams of water flowing together and forming but one stream after their junction. Here is a perfect union, a complete connection. So perfect and complete that the waters of the two head streams can neither be separated nor distinguished. So religion brings the soul in union and connection with God, that His "Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. So complete will the Spirit of God, and our spirit be assimilated, that the two bear witness one to the other that they are one and the same.

How is the Spirit of God known? First, It was exhibited to man in the life and character of His servant David, of whom God said, "He is a man after my own heart." Was his a sinless heart? No! David often and sometimes grieviously sinned. In what then was it God-like? Simply in this, that he never justified an error by blaming others, but always, on conviction, frankly acknowledged the sin. Hear him: "I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this great evil in thy sight. Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." "But David spake unto the Lord, when he saw the angel that smote the people, and said, Lo I have sinned, and have done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me, and against my father's house;" are specimens which God claims to be after His own heart; and are striking contrasts with that of Saul who in the face of a manifest disobedience of God's word could boastingly say to Samuel, "Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord."

2. The Spirit of God has been more fully exhibited in the life and character of His Son our Lord Jesus Christ among men while on earth. In the Gospel it may be read and understood by all. He says, "I am meek and lowly in heart," like David, (his type) but more fully developed. Meekness and lowliness of heart are characteristics of the Spirit of God; and these traits of character proceeding from no other source wherever found, are evidences of the "Spirit of God bearing witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Meekness is the evidence of that charity which suffereth long, and is kind; that envieth not, and is not puffed up; and doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; Beareth all things, endureth all things." Where the Jews said unto Jesus, "Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?" Jesus simply and mildly said. "I have not a devil; but I honor my Father, and ye do dishonor me." But He did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth. Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not; but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously." But when on the cross, He prayed, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." Lowliness of heart is associated with meekness and long-suffering. And Christians are bid to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called. "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." And, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus. Who made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men." He said, "My meet is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to promote His work."

This, dear reader, is the fruit of the Spirit of God as exhibited to men in the lives lived by these His servants and Son while among men on earth. And in whom that selfsame spirit works to will, and to do the same things, is an evidence that the soul is bound to God, and is in union and connection with Him, and has religion secured, "and how obtained." Having already referred to the truth, that "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry or word of reconciliation in the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation. it is revealed how to obtain it, and is so plain, simple, and easy to be understood, that looking to it none can err therein. "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bringing upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of, and through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not,and their damnation slumbereth not."—2 Peter, 2 1-3.

These merchandisers and perverters of truth have come upon us, and have so mystified the truth that it is needful that one teach them which be the first principles in the oracles, or word of God. Man must be born again saith Jesus. And to be born again he must repent from dead works, which is to repent from sin, for to sin is to die. The wages of sin is death. Repenting from sin, is to reform, and to abstain from sin; and with sorrow and contrition of heart, confess it to God. Ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well; and the wicked to forsake his way, and the unrighteous his thoughts, is repenting from dead works.

2. Faith in God, which consists not in a mere belief in Him as the Creator of all things, but also that He was in Christ by whom the world may be reconciled to Him; which embraces faith in the resurrection from the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3. Such are to be baptized,immersed, into water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; which is for salvation, and for the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, (Mark 16: 16,) (1 Peter, 3: 21,) and for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 2: 37–39).

This is the New Testament Scripture way of obtaining the religion which binds the soul to God, and brings it in union and connection with Him. But men have sought out many inventions; these however, are cisterns that hold no water, and as walls plastered with untempered mortar.

Third. "If not obtainable, how is it practiced?" I do not understand this proposition; it negatives the whole subject, for if religion is not obtainable, there can be no religious practice. Hence I conclude the language does not express the writer's meaning, and if so it evidences that even editors who criticise the language of others are themselves subject to error. I assume the liberty to change the phraseology to read, And if obtainable, "how is it practiced." (We shaped our proposition thus because many of our brethren object to the term "getting religion" and think it to be a thing to be practiced rather than obtained.—Ed.)

The declaration of the Son of God that man must be born again, and the testimony of the apostle that some in his day were born again, and had purified their souls, is evidence sufficient that religion is obtainable. But if obtainable, how is it practiced. We have seen that to obtain religion man must believe, repent, and be baptized for the remission of sins, and he shall receive the Holy Ghost; and Jesus says, He shall lead him into all truth, and bring to his remembrance all things He had commanded them. Now the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against these there is no law."

These being the fruits of the Spirit, wherever that Spirit bears witness with our spirit, the same fruits will be produced. But as no man can serve two masters, the children of God must not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, but must come out from among them, and be separate from them in all their religious exercises; must have no part with them in any of their amusements, such as pic nics and religious festivals of whatever name they may be; they must take no part with them in their fairs and gambling associations, whether they be church or county fairs; they all originate from the same source, and the Savior, long ago, drove these fathers out of the temple as a set of thieves and robbers. The child of God must not touch any of these unclean things; he must not be conformed to the world in any such like things, but must be transformed from them, having had his mind renewed by the Spirit, in his repentance, faith and baptism; he must prove to the world what is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God; which is ever your sanctification." But to be holy, Christians must forsake all unholiness. If they have any lawful business matter pertaining to this life to transact with unbelievers, they must transact with dispatch, and according to truth and righteousness that the Christian light may so shine that the good works may be seen by all. If the Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God; we must not pattern after the unholy, and unbelieving in any of their sinful practices, their style, and change in fashion; they must not be like them in any of their sinful habits. But they must let the light of their profession be seen in their lives wherever they are or go. Children of God must be, and are, a praying people, they must pray much in secret, they must pray when they retire to bed at night, and when they rise from it in the morning. They must eat their daily food with thanksgiving and with prayer, in such a way that all that are at the table may see it, hear it, and know it; and if they be heads of families they must have stated times for family prayer. In short, brethren must pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting. In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but which becometh women professing godliness with good works." But let her be sure that she be decently covered because of the angels. But as Christians do not use their Meetinghouse for a dwelling, nor a barn; even so let not the sisters use for a religious cover when in the house, the covering made and used for service, and protection, and shelter from sun and storm; but a decent cover made for the express purpose, so when she comes in the dwelling, or the house of worship, and lays aside her weather shelter cover (as her usual manner when coming into our houses is) and she will not be uncovered in time of prayer to dishonor her head and grieve the angels.

D. P. Sayler.

EVIDENCE OR EFFECT OF REGENERATION.

Regeneration infuses a new life, that is, a spiritual life into the soul, whereby it is enabled to perform spiritual action to live a life devoted to God. By the willing reception of God's Word, he will be a partaker of His Divine nature, hence that creature delights in the law of God after the inward man. Whatever God demands of him in His Word, that he will do with pleasure. That God-like principle, love, is so deeply implanted into his soul that nothing will be a burden or too heavy a task for him to do if God requires it of him, even to the losing of his own life for Jesus' sake. Love to God and love to man are the distinguished characteristics of a truly regenerated man. He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love. It is impossible to be born of God and not know Him, and to love Him in the sense the Scripture teaches without knowing Him is equally so, and the evidence of loving Him is keeping His commandments. "For this is the love of God that we keep His commandments, and His commandments are not grievous." Likewise the wisdom of knowing Him is keeping His commandments, "He that saith I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." This connects knowledge and love together as the assurance of being born of Him and the keeping of His commandments, the consequent effect of both. Hence for a man to say he knoweth and loveth God, and doubts the essentials of any command of God enjoined upon man to be observed, is a double evidence of an illegal birth; being born of blood, or of the will of the flesh, or the will of man. Again, do we allege by the Word of God, that it is vain for a man to claim regeneration without loving his brother; "for every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him." "If a man say, I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" If a man loves his brother, he will not suffer him to be in want, if he does, it shows a want of loving God. "But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Brethren, "let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." If a man be truly born of God, that compassionate principle that is in God must pervade his soul entire to bring forth continued actions of benevolence towards his fellow-men, no difference whether he be a friend to him or an enemy; whether he has done good to him or evil. Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, are as positive commands as any in the Word of God by which he is born. God, through the death of His Son, reconciled us to Himself while we were enemies to Him. O love divine, how great to behold! Astonishing! Truly becoming an Almighty Being, whose will is that none should perish but that all should come to Him through repentance and live forever. Can it be possible for any that are born of God to see a lost and a ruined world, although their enemies, suffering and famishing for the want of the Bread of Life more extensively distributed among them when they have the means so abundantly at command.

Brethren and sisters, let us make a stronger effort to evangelize the world, especially our immediate country and fatherland, lest unbelievers may have sufficient reasons to doubt our regeneration. Abstinence from sin is also an evidence, for "whatever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born of God." God's seed, which is His Word, being the origin of the change in man which formed him a new creature, remains in him, a power of God conferred upon man that he, on his part, is able to maintain; that he cannot sin willingly or presumptuously is the meaning of the apostle, "For as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name." This is the internal witness of them that are born of God and that he hath passed from death unto life. "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the Brethren." Love unfeigned, and that one that is the fulfilling of the whole law is the legitimate fruits of regeneration; a holy principle wrought of God into the heart, the inward part of man, but externally manifested to the world by deeds of love, benevolence, meekness, self-denial, goodness, temperance, patience, Christian-forbearance and courtesy, peace, holine-s, godliness, hope and faith which endues him to openly confess to the world by action that he believes the whole Word of God by observing the cardinal ordinances, baptism, Feet-washing, the Lord's Supper,the Communion, the salutation of the kiss and the anointing of the sick as instituted by the Great Head of the Church. Such are the evidences and effects of regeneration. More Anon.

LEONARD FURRY.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

It is easy to love our friends. We can do this without the love of God. It requires no effort. But when we have the love of God shed abroad in our heart, we love our enemies, and do good to those that hate us; and pray for those who despitefully use us.

That person is to be pitied who dares to profess religion, but does not love his enemies. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." Let us look at our Great Exempler.—Christ died for the ungodly. This includes His enemies. Love led our Savior unto the garden of Gethsemane, where he sweat great drops of blood! "His soul was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death!" Saying unto His disciples, "Tarry ye here, and watch with me."

He went a little farther, fell on his face, and prayed, saying: "O, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me;"and instantly exclaimed: "nevertheless not my will but thine be done." As He returned to His disciples He found them asleep. He went away the second time and prayed; repeated the same petition, and enduring incomprehensible agony! As He returned again, he found them asleep. Did He reprove them for having so little sympathy for Him? Did He accuse them of being only partially saved and possessed with sleepy devils? No, no. To one who had declared, he would die with Him before He would deny Him, Jesus said: "What! could ye not watch with me one hour?" but added the apology; "The Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Jesus left them and went away the third time and prayed. As He returned He found them asleep! But there are no reproaches for their want of sympathy. He said unto them, "Sleep on now, and take your rest."

The Son of man was betrayed into the hands of sinners, and nailed to the cross. Even then He thinks of the dying thief, who cries; "Remember me," and answers, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Nor does He forget His cruel murderers, but pleads, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." There was no spirit of revenge there.

God is represented in the Holy Scriptures as being love. "God is love; and He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God; and God in him." While we are commanded to love our enemies we ought also to love one another. If one of God's little ones, a brother or a sister, has got into darkness and temptation, it should be our first business to pray with and for him, and with one united faith, hold on to God, until the power of the enemy is broken. "The Kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."

How is it with you? If men hate you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you, can you rejoice in that day? Can you forgive them, love and pray for them? If not let me say to you hasten to your closet, and there plead with God, for more of the Spirit of Jesus, until you feel a burning love for their immortal souls.

Although you may feel as many times as did David, when he complained of his slanderous enemies, that, "The mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitful are opened against me: they have spoken against me with a lying tongue. They compass me about also with words of hatred, and fought against me without a cause."

Then give yourself unto prayer. Let the inconsistency of others lead you to search well your own hearts. Be very careful what you say with reference to them. Command your tongue to be silent. It is not your work to sit in judgment. O there are wonderful mysteries in this great salvation. No wonder angels desired to look into it.

While it is the consolation of the Christian that God knows his heart, should it not be the terror of the hypocrite that his false dealing is seen by the eye of Jehovah?

The Spirit of God searcheth all things. If you have any hatred towards any one, you cannot hide it from God. His all-searching eye will behold it, and in reality you are none of His.

"If a man say I love God, and hate his brother, he is a liar, for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" This is impossible. For unless we love one another, God will not dwell in our hearts, neither is His love perfect in us. But there are various ways in which we may manifest our love to the children of men. We may speak kindly to the erring. We may feed the hungry and clothe the naked.

"Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

O, think of the love God has manifested toward us. When there was no eye to pity, he gave His Son to suffer and die for us.—Earnest Christian.

SABBATH EVENING.

Sabbath Eve., the day is closing, another Sabbath, sweet day of rest is about over, and soon will be numbered with the things of the past. Thus one Sabbath after another is ushered in and passes away, until ere long, we shall enjoy their sacred influence no longer,—our Sabbath's in this world will be passed But have we spent this day, this sacred day of rest to our own benefit and to the honor and glory of God? This is a question of momentous importance to us. Can we, in this evening hour, review the day that has so rapidly passed by, and say, we have spent its sacred hours laboring in the service of Jesus,—working for the advancement of His cause, and the upbuilding of the Redeemer's Kingdom? If so, we can rest with the sweet consciousness of having done our duty, and the approving smile of God resting upon us. But if we have spent this Sabbath, the day which our Savior set apart as a day of rest, and commanded His followers in clear, concise language to "remember and keep holy," unprofitably, not appreciating its hallowed influence, surely we will have come far short of performing our duty, and have incurred the displeasure of God. It is a season of rest, a day when we should lay aside the cares and vexations of life, and spend it in laboring for the interests of the immortal soul.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a Christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ.

Look to Jesus in the day of temtation and trial. you have left the service of satan. He hates you for it. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His stratagems are cunningly devised. He is the "accuser of the brethren." when the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say, "where now is is your God?" But look to Jesus He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do storms of sorrow fall?—Look to Jesus "He is the fulness of the Godhead bodily." He is mighty to save. His eye is on you. You have a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother. Trust in and obey him and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—M. N. Downing.

MOSES RESISTING TEMPTATION.

"And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side, and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it. And when she had opened it, she saw the child; and behold the babe wept.—Exodus 2: 5, 6. By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; chosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.—Heb. 11: 24, 25."

A princess and her maidens gay
Were bathing in the Nile one day;
Just where the little flags met the tide,
A willowy basket they descried
That little ark a mother's love
Of twisted osiers neatly wove;
And many a prayer and pious thought
She breathed while at her task she wrought.

Without, within, 'twas lined and sealed,
That mother's priceless gem to shield
From sun and wind and rushing wave,
And from Nile's greedy godt to save.
The princess from the river drew
The ark—aside the covering threw;
Behold a Hebrew babe appears,
A loving babe, bedewed with tears.

Compassion touched the lady's breast;
She hushed his infant fears to rest,
Called him her son, gave him a name,
And Egypt's heir the boy became.
Son of a princess!—on the child
A court with all its splendor smiled—
A court corrupt—a king and throne
Sustained by gods of wood and stone.

From Israel's faith to Egypt's sin,
These idols sure the child will win!
Example will his youth betray,
To walk in pleasure's dangerous way.
Mark with what ease, what skill divine
High heaven works out its fixed design;
A faithful nurse the princess sought—
Quick was the child's own mother brought.

From her he learned in youth's first spring,
The wonders wrought by Israel's king,
Learned to deplore his brethren's woes,
And scorn the horrors of their foes.
With purpose firm, in man-hood's prime
He left the gilded halls of crime,
Power, wealth, and honors all laid down,
Nor stopped to catch the falling crown.

On Horeb's mount, in Jethro's tent,
Long years of peaceful toil he spent;
Hallowing the throng of daily cares
With holy thoughts and heavenly prayers.
A Shepherd's staff and seat of stone
Outweighed the scepter and the throne
With conscience pure, and soul serene,
No roof is low, no station mean.

Behold a pattern, bright and high,
To fire the youthful Christian's eye;
Go, mark it well; then ask within,
Have I this holy dread of sin?
No golden bribes, no courtly pride
Could lure this heavenly youth aside;
From scenes of guilty pomp he fled,
In peace the lonely hills to tread.

"How in his place should I have done?
As Pharoah's or as Jethro's son?
Embraced temptation's gilded bait,
Or shared the exile's bitter fate?
"E'en now I hear the still small voice
That whispers, Make the Lord your choice;
E'en now the God that Moses saw,
Strives from the world my heart to draw.

"Oh Thou whose grace when asked is given
To lift the soul from earth to heaven,
Lead me where living waters flow,
And let me with thy lilies grow."

†The ancient Egyptians worshipped the crocodile as a living god.

THE blossom can not tell what becomes of its odor, and no man can tell what becomes of his influence and example, that roll away from him and go beyond his ken on their mission.

RIGHT AND REPUTATION.

Most men possessed of any character or influence, have sometimes to choose between right and reputation.—Two courses are open before them. To go in one of them will be to gain position, win respect, and acquire influence. To go in the other will be to sacrifice friends, forsake honor, and imperil worldly prospects. And at the parting of these ways, some stand besitating until the hour of decision is past, while others promptly choose their course, whether for evil or good. An honorable reputation is a precious treasure. A good name is better than great riches. It is the result of long and faithful labor, the fruit of a lifetime's work. It wins attention and respect, and gives to its possessor influence and position. As a means of good it becomes a sacred trust, to be guarded with unceasing vigilance.—But it is an uncertain possession and may pass away like a dream. A single indiscreet word or act may sully or ruin a reputation that has been built up through many years; and no man has a right thus to waste his reputation, or from mere willfulness and wantonness imperil his good name. No man can afford to defy public opinion when public opinion is right; no man can afford to defy it unless it is clearly wrong. No man has a right to do as he pleases, regardless of the commonsense judgment of mankind. Men are to respect the feelings and wishes of others, and every man is bound to please his neighbor, for his good and his edification. When we say what we like, others will answer with something we do not like. If we move according to the law of selfishness and willfulness, others will do likewise, and that to our disadvantage.

There is, however, for the Christian, a higher law than the law of expediency; a loftier principle than the care of personal repute. High above the standards of public opinion and public propriety, rises the Christian's banner, on which is blazoned, "Holiness unto the Lord." Conscience is more stringent in her rules than society; and, in following the word of God, the Christian will keep his inner life more pure and spotless than the world will ask that his outward conduct shall be. He walks before God, and the consciousness that his fellowship is with the Heavenly Father, gives to his whole existence an elevation which the world can never comprehend. The world's rebuke to such a man is for his fidelity rather than for his sin. They ask him to come down to their level, and to agree with their lower standard of propriety and morality. And failing in their efforts to degrade him from his high estate, they, like Potiphar's wife, accuse him of the very crimes they had vainly tried to induce him to commit.

It is then that the Christian must choose betwen right and reputation.—He cannot satisfy the world's demands. No matter what concessions he makes, its exactions increase from day to day. Each compliance is the basis of a new demand, and Satan is satisfied with nothing less than the whole. Somewhere this compliance must stop, and when it stops, reputation must suffer, and hurricanes of abuse and reproach may be expected. And the best place, the surest, and the easiest place to stop the whole, is at the beginning.

A Christian man can well defy public opinion in a righteous cause; he can brave public scorn, if he is sustained by a conscience void of offence towards God and man. Character is more than reputation, and what a man is, is of more importance than what he is said to be.

He who has given himself to the Lord, has not held back his reputation. Though he would not willingly do anything that should bring reproach upon his fair name, yet when the great batteries of hell are opened upon the hosts of Emanuel, he expects to smell powder, and to be blackened with the smoke and grime of war. And between Right and Reputation it does not take him long to choose. He has a character written on high of which man can never rob him; he is but a pilgrim here; his life and his honors take hold upon the ages of eternity, and what cares he for the plaudits of a single hour; or of the reproaches that rise like a windy tempest, and die away like the murmur of a passing gale.

Man's judgment is a light thing, and a man's day is very brief. And a world like this, the Christian has but little honor to expect. The only faultless being that ever trod this earth, "made himself of no reputation," was hated without a cause and hung between two thieves. And he marks out for his followers a path of shame and sorrow, of cross bearing and tribulation. And the man who follows Christ has no time to turn back and see what the devil has to say about it. Let him keep on his way, careful of God's honor, and careless of men's reproach, earnest to do right, but indifferent to the clamor of these who impugn his motives, or condemn his acts.

"The Day" will reveal all things. High among the thousand conquerors who shall shine in the light of God in the great Hereafter, will be men of no reputation, who were unhonored and unsung at home, and whose acquaintances were hardly willing to acknowledge that they knew them. But their reward is sure. The book of God's remembrance records acts that never were printed, published, praised, nor acknowledged. The book of life holds names that have been expunged from sectarian church-rolls, yes, that have figured in court writs and jail commitments, in prison records and in death warrants!

"A little while!" ah, how this brief hour will change all questions of reputation, and exalt the followers of right. How hypocrisy shall shrink, and self-exaltation dwindle, before the glance of Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. A few brief days will tell the story, and we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known. Let us cling then to the right, no matter how reputation may suffer; and let us "judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come, who shall both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and manifest the counsels of the hearts."—The Christian.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

They who are willing to serve God by doing little things well, may serve Him always and everywhere; but they who stand waiting for some great thing to do, will probably never find the occasion they seek, and therefore will never serve Him at all. They also overlook a plain Bible truth, namely, that to be faithful in little things is often the best way to our being allowed the use of great things. Those who use one talent well, will often find that God increases the well-used talent.—If we would be strong to any service to which God may call us, let us not overlook the means which He generally uses in giving strength. The grace of to day will not do for to-morrow. The petition which our Lord has put into our lips is this: "Give us day by day our daily bred"; or as it is in the margin, "Give us for the day our daily bread."

Little masteries achieved,
Little wants with care relieved,
Little words with care expressed,
Little wrongs at once confessed,
Little graces meekly worn,
Little slights with patience borne;
These are treasures that shall rise
Far beyond the smiling skies.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Coventry congregation, in the vicinity of Pottstown Pa., have had 26 accessions of members since the 2nd of March.

—A Kansas pastor declined an addition of a hundred dollars to his salary for this reason, among others, that the hardest part of his labor heretofore had been the collection of his salary, and it would kill him to try to collect a hundred dollars more.

The Great Graphic Balloon is now on exhibition at New York and if no interference comes in the way, is expected to start for Europe on the 10th inst. By our next issue we expect to inform you of the result of one of the most daring undertakings of the present age. It is hoped that the project will be a success.

Eld. J. R. Hanawalt, of McVeytown Pa. informs us that he has just been raised from a bed of sickness. He is well pleased with the idea of reporting the proceedings of A. M. but does not see the propriety of withholding the names of the speakers, thinks that none should be afraid of their arguments if worth anything, and is not in favor of muzzling the press especially when the editors labor to defend the truth.—Yea, verily, Ed.

The Herald of Truth for September is largely filled with matters pertaining to Menonite emigration from Russia. From it we learn that the Russian brethren are leaving their native land under very great difficulties. The government seems slow to let them go and are throwing in their way every possible difficulty. Officials defer giving them their passes and in some cases they have been compelled to pay as high as eighty dollars in fees to procure them, and after Jan. 1st. 1874 no young man between 20 and 27 years of age will be allowed to go.

Brother W. S. Jones of Amsterdam, Va. says: "Cholera is prevailing at Bottetourt Springs. On Aug. 30 four were buried and since then I have learned that seven deaths have occurred there of cholera since yesterday the 30th. There were also some deaths at Biglick and Gishes Mills on the Va. & Tenn. R. R. It was never known among the mountains of Va. before. A man and his family moved from this place to Jonesborro, Tenn. A short time ago he died, when his widow and two children returned on the same line of road, to Gishes Mills, where they all took the cholera and died.

Extensive Art Gallery.—Next to the Bible no book is more useful than Webster's Dictionary. The Unabridged is an extensive art-gallery, containing over three thousand engravings, repesenting almost every animal, insect, reptile, implement, plants, &c, which we know anything about. It is a vast library giving information on almost every mentionable subject. It indeed has been well remarked that it is the most remarkable compendium of human knowledge in our language.—Household Advocate.

Off to Liberia—Rev T. S. Malcom, of Philadelphia, publishes a statement to the effect that preparations are in progress for another expedition to Liberia. Out of more than three thousand applications for passage, a careful selection will be made. The number sent must depend upon the means furnished. Among the worthy freedmen who wish to aid in building up a Christain Republic in Africa there are not less than one thousand in Georgia. One of these is an elder in the Presbyterian church, and another a Baptist preacher. Many of thier friends wish to accompany them. Such men are peculiarly needed in Africa. Firmly planted in Africa, the work will not only be self sustaining, but missionaries will be sent to regions beyond. We ask help from all friends of the freedmen and of Africa. Fifty dollars will pay the passage of an emigrant, and the same sum will secure six months support while clearing land, building houses, and planting a crop.

—There is some alarm breaking out over the prospect of an inundation of Chinese to this country, swamping Christian civilization with the surplus of China's 350,000 heathen people. As a general thing the Christain press entertain little fears of the issue between Christianity and paganism and no doubt their confidence is safe. The fear of getting the "hords" of Asia within point-blank range of missionary effort ought to be the last thing for Christions to entertain. That the tales of their vicious propensities and brutish practices are largely the invention of those who prey upon them is evident enough from the fact that convicvious for criminal offenses are less in proportion among them, in courts where every influence is against them than among the "native" population of the Pacific slope. As for their heathen superstitions, the idea that they can prevail in the very stronghold of Protestant Christianity is little complimentary to the latter; and at most, the injury to the Christian world would perhaps not be greater than the enforcement by "Christain" nations of the opium traffic on these same heathens.

The following from Harpers Weekly shows very clearly that Romanism is not decaying, notwithstanding the reverses it has had in Europe: But it is not the spiritual but the political power of Rome that is now disturbing the tranquility of Europe and of America. Of the two factions into which the Papal Church has been divided since the Council of Trent, the more liberal has been soppressed. The Jesuits who drove their plowshares over Port Royal and crushed the intelligence of Naples and Florence, rule over the Romish Church. Shorn and maimed, it is still endowed with a terrible energy. It is united pitiless and desperate. By a sudden stratagem it has seized upon the government of France, and laughs at the rage of the people. Its priests have filled Spain, just rising to a better life, with bloodshed and civil disorder. It threatens rebellion and ruin in Germany. It plots the desolation of Italy. In Ireland it has become the center of political strife; and feeble as are its apparent resources, its unity and its vigor, its merciless and destructive policy give to its politicians of the Vatican an extraordinary influence in the affairs of both hemispheres. Yet the press and the public schools are its enemies. The press detects its strategy; the public school lays the foundations of purer morals and a purer faith. The one firmly requires the exclusion of religion from politics, the other makes good citizens even of the least cultivated class of Romanists. To silence or to bribe the press, to close the public schools is the aim of Romanism in Europe and America.

THE WAY OF HOLINESS.

O let me seek that path
Where winds of woe,
And storms of sin and wrath,
Can never blow!

The star of heavenly hope
Has ever beamed
Along the way cast up
For the redeemed.

It is a blissful way,
Safe and secure:
Leading to realms of day,
A pathway sure.

All other paths we tread
Through this dark clime,
Must be with fears o'erspread,
With cares of time.

But O! this holy way
The vulture's eye,
And hideous beasts of prey,
Shall ne'er descry!

Then let me seek the path
Where winds of woe,
And bitter storms of wrath,
Can never blow.

MY FATHER'S BUSINESS.

When Jesus was twelve years of age he was taken up to Jerusalem with His parents, as the custom then was, but instead of returning with them He remained behind, conversing with the doctors and lawyers. When He was missed there was a great stir about Him, and after several days He was found. When asked to give an account for His strange conduct, His only answer was, "Know ye not that I must be about My Father's business?" He was not concerned about the other little boys that must have been in so large a company, but He had a work to do and the time had come that it should be commenced. That work was to attend to His Father's business.

Now every little boy and girl has a work to do and that work is to attend to father's and mother's business, or in other words, to obey and try to please them. You perhaps have never thought that all their labor and concern is for your good and comfort, and were it not for their continual care for you, soon you would come to want and be driven about among strangers without a home or anybody to provide food and clothing for you. When you were young and could not care for yourselves, your parents watched over you and spared no pains or labor to make you happy. Now you have grown up and are able to do many little turns for them and thus lighten their labor. This should be your chief delight and should be your greatest joy to be about your fathers' business. You owe this to them first, because of what they done for you, and second, because all they have is expected to be yours if you be good and dutiful children. Your father's business is your business, and the better you attend to it the better it will be for you.

There is nothing that looks so well and speaks so well for children, as to see them kind and respectful to parents. It is a crown of honor and will receive its reward. When I go to your father's house and find you busy in attending to your father's business, I say to myself, that boy will make a good man or that girl will make a useful woman, and do you think I will be mistaken? Not a bit of it. Just as sure as good little trees grow up and make good big trees, so sure will good little boys and girls make good men and women, if you only keep on being and doing good. You see it is attending to father's business and the better that is attended to the more it will prosper and grow. When you do this you should not think you are doing it for father alone, but you are only helping him to gather that which is intended for you. Then, when bad boys and girls try to tempt you and take you away from your work to go into mischief or idleness, tell them that you cannot go, that you must attend to your father's business.

UNCLE HENRY.

A LETTER.

Dear young readers of the PILGRIM, I have thought of writing you a letter for some time, as it appears to me that your department is partially neglected. Uncle Henry has been writing you some very good and interesting letters, and I hope you will all read them with interest. I was much pleased with his last letter in which he told you how to enter the fold. Will you not all try to enter the fold? This you can easily do by believing in Jesus, and doing what He says. Now you may not all understand what is meant by believing in Jesus, and I will try to illustrate it to you.

Not long ago I heard a boy say that Harry Boyd was the best boy in the country, and when Harry says a thing, you may be sure he will do it, and he will stand by you through thick and thin. He'll never desert his friends, no difference how much it may be to his disadvantage to do them a favor. Everybody believes in Harry. Now this boy by praising Harry, was unconsciously dwelling on the very traits of our lovely Jesus. He always stood by His friends, and never failed in any of His promises, and therefore everybody ought to believe in Him. If you do not know what believing in Jesus means, just apply to Him what the boy has been saying of his friend, only remember that all this is true of Jesus in a higher sense than it can be of any boy, no difference how good and true he may be.

Jesus is our best friend; He has done more for us than any earthly friend can or will do. And he has promised to stand by us at all times, if we will be good and put our trust in Him.

If you understood what believing in Harry means, you can certainly understand what believing in Jesus means. You trust in Harry; you believe what he says he will do, and just so you will do when you believe in Jesus. You will trust in Him, and believe what He says. This is believing in Jesus, and is just as easy to understand as that you believe in Harry Boyd.

Now as you have been pointed to this lovely Jesus, and also how you may enter into the fold, and be under His kind care and protection, I hope none of our little readers will be so thoughtless as to remain outside. If you do, you are subject to very many dangers, and if you have as much faith in Jesus as you have in Harry you will enter at once. Come then to Jesus, believe what He says, and He will be your best friend—a friend that will stand by you in sickness, in health, life or death, in time and eternity.

A FRIEND OF THE LITTLE FOLKS.

THE BREWER'S DOG.

A gentleman taking an evening walk along the road near Grantown, saw two men supporting a third, who appeared unable to walk. "What is the matter," he inquired, "Why," was the reply, "that poor man has been sadly bitten by the brewer's dog." "Indeed," said I, feeling rather concerned at the disaster. "Yes, sir, and he is not the first by a good many that he has done a mischief to." "Why is that dog not made away with?" "Ah, sir, he ought to have been made away with long ago, but it wants resolution to do it. It is the strong drink, sir, that's the BREWER'S DOG."

Beware of the dog.

MINISTERIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

There are two ways of learning the Scriptures. The one is by memorizing and the other is studying their spiritual import. The first should not be made a hobby at the risk of a sacrificing of the other, which is possible. It should ever be remembered that the letter killeth while the spirit maketh alive. To be able to quote correctly and readily is an important qualification and greatly to be desired, but even in this, there may be extremes to endanger the success of the minister. In memorizing, the power of the mind is wholy concentrated or fixed upon words and their order of connection, and while the mind is thus engaged it is not free to scope ideas. Tho'ts or ideas to be of practical utility, must be linked together as a chain, the same as memorized words. When a man exhausts all of his mind power in running a memorized chain, as soon as he gets to the end of that chain he is done unless he can strike another memorized chain, from the fact that his mind force is exhausted in being concentrated, not on ideas, but words, and has not time to form an orignal chain of thought. Thus is produced a memorized sermon or a sermon of quotations which, no matter how orthodox, falls upon the ear as a dead letter void of the spirit. This is especially so when memorizing is done with great difficulty. To such we would advise, not to labor to memorize at the risk of sacrificing the spiritual import and the power of free thought. If you cannot memorize words, take hold of the ideas they suggest, and of that material, form an original chain that will always be at your command, as your mind can thus be free, and you can make it as you go, it is spirit matter clothed in a natural garb and is conveyed to the mind of the hearer on purely psychological principles. When memorizing can be done readily and be retained so as to be reproduced without a labored effort, the memorized and original chain of thought may be so assimilated as to make a complete whole, in which case, it may reach the hearers with power and effect. But whether memorized or its spiritual import utilized, it is the ministers power and therefore, a full knowledge of it should be considered an all important auxillary in successful preaching.

The old adage "Water cannot be drawn from an empty well" is especially applicable in the case of the minister. In order that there may be a ready flow the vessel must be kept full, not only full enough to cause a sickly flow, but there should be a sufficient reserve to form a pressure and the greater that pressure the more freely and with the greater power will flow forth the stream of living water. Our blessed Master is a complete example of this ever abounding fullness. The insects, the tiny plant, the trees, the rocks, hills and mountains, the rivulets, the flowing streams, the great waters and the heavens with all their studded glory was brought into requisition in order to enforce the truths of redemption and salvation. The knowledge that our great Exampler made use of in delivering the plan of salvation, may be embraced under the following general heads: philosophy, psychology, theology, zoology, geography and astronomy.

Some of our brethren may think that these are rather high sounding terms and that they know nothing about them, but this is a mistake as we venture the assertion, that we have not a brother in the ministry that has not a considerable knowledge of all these different branches of learning. Let us define. Philosophy: The science or knowledge of things as they exist and their causes. Psychology: The science or knowledge of the soul. Theology: A knowledge of God. Zoology: A study of the animal world, their classification &c. Geography: A description of the earths surface and Astronomy, a knowledge or description of the heavens. With all these, our Savior was aptly conversant and familiar, and this knowledge is within the reach of every brother that is called to the ministry and to refuse to obtain and make use of it, is to refuse to become fully efficient in this most high and responsible calling. Nature with its causes and effects is an open book written by the finger of God and was the text book of the greatest of all teachers, Jesus. When He wished to demonstrate the nature and growth of the Kingdom of God in the soul, He took up the parable of the mustard seed, the three measures of meal, and the treasure hid in the field. The preacher of the Gospel is beautifully represented in the sower going forth to sow. Regeneration, or the new birth, by the grain of corn planted in the earth, and the end of time by the fig tree casting forth its leaves, in fact, the whole plan of salvation was delivered and enforced through parables of things in nature as they then existed, hence, the necessity of becoming fully conversant with these things in order that we may not only fully understand their nature, causes and effects, but be able to make use of them in enforcing the truths of the Gospel.

In regard to a choice of books treating on the different sciences, we will not suggest as there are many works written by as many authors, and all are sufficiently good to obtain a very fair knowledge of the respective branches they profess to teach. When we are provided with a good knowledge of these things, then it is that we are instruments ready for the Master's use and all that is needed to make us efficient ministers of the Gospel is inspiration. Inspiration, we fear is but vagnely understood. Do not suppose that it is intended to supply the want of knowledge or that it is a creating power. The object of inspiration, is to enable us to make use of the knowledge which we have. That wisdom which cometh down from above, is that power which expands the memory and enables us to grasp that which we know (not that which we do not know) and present such part of it as may be necessary to bring about the desired effect. The day of miracles, is passed the means of knowledge is placed within our reach and it is our privilige to make use of them. We have now given our views of how the material or subject matter may be obtained in order to become efficient in the ministry. If our time will admit we may, in a future number, say something about the mode or manner of preaching in order that it may be made more effectual.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Brother Brumbaugh: I take it for granted that you wish the opinions of the brethren on the different subjects now being discussed in the Pilgrim. I love the paper and the principles that it advocates, but am no scholar and therefore cannot express my ideas as I would wish to. I have been reading the different articles on Sunday Schools, and given the subject some attention, but thus far, I cannot find any thus saith the Lord for them. I fully agree with Bro. B. F. Moomaw's views in Pilgrim of June 10. I have no objections to improvement in the arts and sciences, but God forbid that we should ever undertake to improve or append to the Christian system as laid down by the great Lawgiver. Let those then who have a proper respect for God's perfect law, stand firmly upon it. Though it may seem to be in danger, it is perfectly safe and will not deceive. Like the uncomely rock that lifts its head in the midst of the ocean, covered with the accumulated moss of centuries and has withstood the surging billows of many a storm and still occupies its place, so will you be when you shall have withstood the waves of temptation and the current of popular ideas, and the allurements of modern date. Though the removal of the sands from around may give some disquietude and concern, all will be well, for God hath said, though the stars shall leave their orbits in confusion, the moon mourn in blood, the sun be blown out, the world be enveloped in flames and the heavens pass away, my word shall never fail, while, like the icebergs in the northern seas, though they mount up in columns in appearance like ships, turrets, temples and spires, overlaid with silver and gold as they change their positions to the rays of the sun dazzling to the eye, fascinating to the mind, yea, most magnificent to behold, but presently, when driven into more Southern climes, they lose all their splendor, the burning rays of the Sun falling upon them, down they go, turret after turret, spire after spire, and column after column until all is lost in the sea. So with modern improvements and false principles. Though they are very beautiful while changing their position to suit the age and taste, but when brought into contact with the scrutinizing judgment of Him who has said His word shall judge every man at the last day, then, oh then, what will become of those who have trusted in them? What says the powerful Word? "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you."

Sunday Schools are highly esteemed among men and by the popular religionists of the day, and if we are not careful they may become an abomination in the sight of the Lord. What I have written has not been done for the sake of controversy, but given simply as my views with due respect to those of others.

S. S. Cresswell.

Onburg, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim:—I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know something about how we have to labor in this part of the Lord's Vineyard to accomplish the great work.

I left my home August 14, in company with brother George Crouse. We rode 29 miles, reached the Dewford school-house, on the Blue Sulphur Mountain, at half past two o'clock, P. M., where we met with our beloved brethren and sisters. Had quite an interesting meeting, went home with Bro. Popps, where we were kindly cared for. Next morning set out and rode 39 miles, reached my brother-in-law's, on Anthony Creek, Greenbriar county, where we had meeting Saturday evening, Sunday morning and Sunday evening. We met a large congregation of my old acquaintances. It was quite an interesting time; they seemed to receive the Word with joy. It was the first meeting ever held by the Brethren in that immediate neighborhood. On Monday morning set out and forded Greenbriar River three times, rode 12 miles and reached friend Kiester's, whose father had been a member of the Brethren for many years, now deceased. He was formerly from Highland Co. Here we met with more of our acquaintances, had one meeting, then rode 5 miles, reached the Brush Church and had quite a good meeting there. Went home with friend Henning, spent the night and was kindly treated. Next morning rode 22 miles, reached my uncles, where we dined. They were very desirous for us to return and have meeting there. We started half past 3 o'clock, rode 16 miles and stayed all night with my cousin. Had meeting next morning at 10 o'clock on Laurel Creek Mountain. Then rode 5 miles, had meeting at the Richison school-house, home next day.

We think truly the Lord stood by us, and blessed our labors. There is a great cry in that section of country for the Gospel.

CHARLES H. MASTERS.

GARNETT, KAN. }
Aug. 21, 1873. }

Dear Pilgrim:—I now drop you a few lines agreeable to your wishes in regard to church news. We, the brethren and sisters of the Cedar Creek Church, held our Communion meeting on the 16th of August, commencing at 2 p. m., and continued next day until 5 p. m. We had a good meeting, and good order. The people say it was the largest congregation they ever saw in this neighborhood. We have reason to believe that the Lord was with us. Two souls were added to the Church by baptism, and we think that many more were seriously impressed with the necessity of regeneration and holiness of life. The following ministering brethren were with us: Isaac Hearshy, Neosho Falls, Woodson Co., Kan., Jacob Yoder, Nevada, Vernon Co., Mo., Bro. Barnhart of Franklin county, Kansas, and brethren Hoover and Numer of Bourbon Co., and others.

The brethren labored zealously for our every good, and we were much built up, for which we tender our grateful acknowledgements. We also held a choice for deacon. Bro. Jesse Studebaker was advanced to the Eldership, Peter Struble to the second degree in the ministry. John Miller and Christopher Rodabaugh for deacons.

The church has been organized one year, and there has been eight added by baptism, six by letter. We now number 32, and think there are prospects for more. Yours in love.

N. D. HADSELL.

Dear Pilgrim:—I will send you a few items of news for your columns. The Church here at Limestone has not been prospering much within the last twelve months. We received a few members by letter. Our annual church visit has been attended to and the members have expressed themselves to be in union and love, and to remain with the Church as long as it keeps house according to the Gospel.

Our Church meeting was held Aug. 23. Bro. Jos. Bowman of Knob Creek Church, was with us. At this meeting it was concluded by the Church, that the official force was too weak and accordingly took the voice of the members present to see if they were willing to call one to the ministry and one to serve in the office of deacon, and the result was favorable to the move, but as there was no elder present, the Church agreed to appoint another meeting on Saturday, Aug. 30. At this meeting Eld. F. W. Dove was present and brother James Hilbert was called to the ministry and one for deacon whom I shall not name.

The day previous to our first church meeting we had a harvest meeting. Bro. Jesse Crosswhite was with us and preached twice, also next day, evening, and on Sunday.

There has been considerable sickness here in Tennesee during the Summer. The cholera has been very fatal in places but is now abating. The fever and flux is also prevailing in some localities. In the fore part of the season we had plenty of rain, then dry weather until recently, we are having some refreshing showers. H. M. SHEREY.

Editor of Pilgrim, According to promise, we will, by your permission, give a little report of some funds that some good liberal hearted brethren contributed to help us to liquidate a debt yet standing against us here in the Monticello Church, on our Meetinghouse, which we now have nearly all paid. The Church by being encouraged by these gifts, made another effort, so that we think that we can get through without much trouble, yet if any would still feel to favor us with a little aid it would be thankfully received—could be sent to the undersigned.

Received from Covington Church, Ohio, S. Mohler,	$ 55.00
Harris Church, Ohio, Henry Smith,	35.00
Yellow Creek Church, Pa., D. Snowberger,	8.50

MARRIED.

BRUBAKER—FILBRUN.—At the bride's residence, Sept. 7, 1873, by the undersigned, Nicholas Brubaker (Minister of the Gospel), to Mrs. Elizabeth Filbrun both of Montgomery Co., Ohio.

B. F. DARST.

CESSNA—BURGET.—By the undersigned, Sept. 4th, 1873, near New Enterprise, Bedford Co., Pa., at his residence, Bro. Watson W Cessna to Miss Mary Burget, all of Hopewell township. L. FURRY.

FLUKE—FISHEL.—By the same, at the same place, and on the same day, Mr. John R. Fluke to Miss Sarah Fishel of the same place.

DIED.

PATE.—Near Bloomfield, Bedford Co., Pa., Sept. 7, 1873, Nancy, infant daughter of friends Jacob and Rebecca Pate, aged 2 mos. and 28 days. Occasion improved from Math. 18: 1, 2, 3, by the brethren. L. FURRY.

McCONOUGHY.—In the Aughwick branch, Huntingdon Co., Pa., July 3, 1873, George, only son of brother James and sister Jane McConoughy, aged 15 years, 3 mos., and 3 days. Occasion improved by the brethren. A. L. FUNCK.

BEAR.—In the Limestone Church, Washington Co., Tenn., Aug. 9th, 1873, sister Mary, consort of brother David Bear, aged 11 years, 10 mos. and 4 days. Funeral preached on the 24th inst., by brethren Jesse Crosswhite and S. G. Arnold. Text, 1 Cor. 15 chapter.

The subject of this notice was formerly of Virginia. Very soon after they came to Tennessee, she and her husband united with the Church, here at Limestone, in 1861. After this they again went back to Virginia, and staid until quite recently. She was a faithful member in the cause of her Master. It was said that she was ready to go. We hope our loss is her eternal gain.

HENRY M. SHERFY.

SHOEMAKER.—In the Maple Grove Congregation, Ashland Co., Ohio, Aug. 12, 1873, sister Catharine, wife of Bro. Isaac Shoemaker, aged 41 years and 7 mos. Funeral service by the writer and others, from John 19: 30, "It is finished."

This sister had been a faithful member of the Church for over 20 years having joined when young, and remained faithful, until it pleased the good Lord to remove her from amongst us by death, which was very sudden. She leaves a husband and 4 dear children to mourn their loss.

D. N. WORKMAN.

(Companion please copy.)

FORD.—In the Winamac Congregation, Ind., Aug. 20, 1873, brother Benjamin Ford, aged 76 years, 5 mos. and 5 days.

He had been a member of the Church about two years, and before he died he called for the Elders and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, leaving an evidence behind him that he has gone home to that bright world of eternal glory.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

J. H. BUTLER & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., the celebrated SCHOOL BOOK publishers, have recently issued a very complete series of Spellers and Readers—"The New American Series." Nine years experience in teaching has enabled us to properly appreciate a good text book. We call these excellent. The Spellers comprise two books primary and pronouncing, while the Readers comprise five books, which are gradnated from sentences composed of the simplest words for beginners, carefully up through the series to the complete selections for advanced students. Every book in the series bears evidence of careful preparation with taste and ability. The matter is well selected, and written, and is of such a character that it is at once attractive and instructive. The engravings are superior to those of any other series. The price of the books of this series is lower than that of any other series, though of superior execution and binding. Their adoption by the State of Vermont, in the cities of Philadelphia and New York, besides hundreds of other cities and towns is another evidence of their merit.

BIBLE HISTORY, Illustrated,—A Very Valuable Religious Work.

The great and growiog interest which has been manifested of late years in the study of the Sacred Scriptures, by persons of all religious denominations, has led to the preparation of a number of volumes to facilitate such a course of study. The best of these is The Illustrated History of the Bible, by Dr. Wm. Smith, LL. D., of England, which has just been issued by the National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia.

No one who has tried to study the Sacred Narrative can fail to be aware that his greatest need is a clear, and comprehensive explanation of the historical portion of the Bible. As a matter of course, such an explanation should proceed only from one whose acknowledged abilities as a writer, and whose profound knowledge of the ancient languages and history, entitle his statements and opinions to unqualified belief. Such a man is Dr. Wm. Smith; the fame of whose learning and intimate knowledge of sacred and classical history is worldwide. There is, perhaps, no more profound Biblical and Oriental scholar now living, and in addition to this distinction he enjoys the rare honor of possessing the perfect confidence of all religious denominations, by all of whom he is regarded as a thoroughly reliable, conscientious, and impartial writer. His "Dictionary of the Bible," reached the enormous sale of over 200,000 copies in the United States alone.

The work before us is written in a clear, forcible and brilliant style, and abounds in that particular kind of information which the great mass of Bible readers most need. Few, even constant readers of the Bible, know what a world of romance, beauty, stirring interest and profound dramatic action there is in the Holy Book. This history fully develops these, and carries us from the creation of the world to the death of John the Evangelist, with an interest that never flags.

To this magnificent work of Dr. Smith, is added a lucid and complete history of the Jews, from the taking of Jerusalem by Titus to the present day, abridged from Dean Milman's celebrated History of the Jews. The story of the terrible siege of Jerusalem by Titus, the destruction of the Temple the dispersion of the Jews, their wanderings over the face of the earth, and their persecutions and sufferings in strange lands, form an attractive close to this splendid volume. No one can rightly understand the prophecies relating to the Jews, and the utterances of our blessed Lord concerning them, if ignorant of this portion of their history, for it is here that we must read the fulfillment of those prophecies.

The work is comprised in one large, handsome octavo volume, of 1105 pages, and illustrated with over 250 fine engravings, maps, etc. It is the most valuable religious work of the day, and will have an extensive sale. It is emphatically a great book, and the price is very low, considering its size and value. It is sold by subscription only, and agents are wanted in every county.

MITCHELL'S GEOGRAPHIES have been kept fully up to the times and form the standard series of America. It is composed of six books, and judging from those we have been permitted to examine,—Primary Intermediate, and Physical—they are entitled to the reputation.

This house publishes many valuable text books. D. W. Proctor, Esq., of this place is the agent who will supply catalogues, terms for introduction or books.

POETRY.

I WOULD LOVE THEE MORE.

Lord! I fain would love thee more,
Learn thy precepts, do thy will;
Seek thy dealings to adore,
Trust thy wisdom and be still.

I believe thy love to me,
Seen in all thy wondrous ways:
Shall my heart as marble be,
Cold and silent in thy praise?

Oft I say "for me he died,"
Yet my sinking spirit grieves;
Let my foes in darkness hide
For I know my Savior lives.

Lives! His weakest one to bless;
Lives! the burden of my song;
Lives! a fount of blessedness;
Lives! to love me all day long!

Once I wept my thorny road,
Once I mourned my weary feet;
Now He takes my lightest load,
And He makes my service sweet.

Lo! the hand I pierced, I see,
Opens wide my Father's door;
And on high to plead for me,
Jesus lives forevermore.

WHERE DID CAIN GET A WIFE?

Published by the American Tract Society and translated from the German, by Daniel Snowberger, New Enterprise, Pa.

A dialogue between a preacher and his unbelieving neighbors, Hans and Kunz.

Kunz. Mr. Preacher, the Bible contradicts itself. First it says: Adam and Eve were the first people that God created, and they had two sons, Cain and Abel, one of which slew the other. And then comes up at once: Cain went into another land and there took a wife. There must therefore, already have been other lands and other people besides Adam, Eve and Cain. And consequently it cannot be true that Adam and Eve were the first people.

Hans Men, now-a-days become still more and more enlightened, Mr. Preacher! And therefore they do not so blindly believe what is said unto them, but they examine everything closely. Hence they cannot accept of anything as it stands in the Bible.

Preacher. Sirs, you severely accuse the Bible. I hope, nevertheless, that you possess so much feeling of righteousness, as to permit the accused to defend itself. Well then, neighbor Kunz, will you be so kind as to read to us the passage from the Bible concerning Cain?

Kunz. I think, Mr. Preacher! you are, no doubt, already acquainted therewith.

Preacher. Very good! But I wish that you and neighbor Hans might also become acquainted with it. Please read what is written in Genesis 4: 19 17.

Kunz. Well if you wish it! Here stands: "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the East of Eden. And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare Enoch; and he builded a city and called the name of the city after his son Enoch."

Preacher. Now where is it written that Cain went into another land and in that other land took a wife?

Kunz. Why this must surely stand here.

Preacher. Search now with all diligence, you will not find it. You see, neighbor Hans! Thus it stands with the much boasted searching and examining now-a-days. We examine so carefully that we do not even go to the trouble to open the Bible to see what is written therein.

Kunz. But still it is here written: Cain went and dwelt in the land of Nod. So then there was already a land there, and people must already have dwelt in that land.

Preacher. A wrong conclusion, neighbor. The land of Nod and all other lands, were, of course, there so soon as God had created the world, but from this it does not follow that there were already people dwelling therein. Then please observe: Nod signifies in Hebrew, flight or banishment. So then it is evident, that this land (Nod), which was, till now, uninhabited and unknown, received, through Cain's flight, its first inhabitants as well as its name. When, for instance, we read in the history of America, "The Dutch navigator Hudson, was the first white man that landed in the mouth of the Hudson River, where New York now stands"—we at once suppose, as was truly the case, that this river was named after him. Or, when we read: "The Pilgrim Fathers, who in 1821, sailed from England to America in the "Mayflower," landed in Plymouth, in the State of Massachusetts," we do not conclude that there did already exist, before their arrival, a city and a State of that name: but we come to the conclusion that the founding of the city of Plymouth and the State of Massachusetts followed their arrival. Just so did Cain make the land of Nod an inhabited and definitely named country.

Kunz. Suppose this were so, it still remains for you to show where Cain got his wife.

Preacher. Please first tell me, is it written that he took a wife in the land of Nod?

Kunz. To be sure this is not written, but, "And Cain knew his wife."

Preacher. Therefore not, "He took a wife," but, "He knew his wife." She was then already his wife, whom he, when he fled from the presence of the Lord, brought with him to the land of his banishment. For the wife must go with the husband. So it has always been.

Kunz. Very well, but where did he get a wife? This is a nut, Mr. Preacher, that you will not crack.

Preacher. Oh, if only your hearts had no harder shell than this nut, I would rejoice, for this is not hard to crack. Will you be so kind as to read the 3d and 4th verses of the 5th chapter of Genesis?

Kunz. Here stands: "And Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image, and called his name Seth; and the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years, and he begat sons and daughters?

Hans. What! does this stand in the Bible? Had Adam other sons besides Cain, Abel and Seth, and daughters also?

Preacher. To be sure he had. And so there is much in the Bible, wherewith you men, notwithstanding all your enlightenment, are yet unacquainted.

Kunz. I cannot see how with this, the knot is untied. You do not mean that Cain married a daughter of Adam—his own natural sister?

Preacher. Who else? Why should he not do this?

Kunz. Why this is against all morality, and I should suppose it would also be against the Bible.

Preacher. The Bible is the source of all genuine morality. Where in the world would you obtain rules of morality that would be everywhere valid and binding, if not in the Bible? Philosophers never agree: whatever the Bible, for instance in the Decalogue, teaches as our duty, is so clear that every one understands it alike, and so illuminating, that every one acknowledges it as right and salutary, even those who transgress it. Now as regards the marriage between blood relations, the Bible teaches us that it is sinful now, but in that early day it was not.

Kunz. How could that be sinful now which was not sin then?

Preacher. There is nothing sinful but that which is contrary to the commandments of God. But at that time God had given no commandment herein, and for wise purposes. For he would, as Paul says in his discourse at Athens, that "Of one blood all nations of men should dwell upon the face of the earth."—Acts 17: 26. But if this is to come to pass, all men must descend from one pair, and the children of this one pair must intermarry. Otherwise this could not be. The great idea of the fraternization of all men, which is now a-days boasted of as a discovery of reason and enlightenment, is nothing but an an old Bible doctrine, which at the time it was first preached upon earth, appeared unto the wise Greeks and Romans, as quite foolish and absurd. And our modern enlightened ones would lead us back again into the ancient Pagan blindness. If we would permit them they would make us forget the great truth, that all men are brethren. For this doctrine is undermined, if we rob it of its only foundation and support whereon it rests, namely the descent of all men from one pair.

Hans. I must acknowledge, I had never thought of this. I see very well that there can more be said in favor of the Bible than I had supposed. But you are not done yet, Mr. Preacher, you must explain unto us yet how Cain could build a city when there were so few people in the world.

Preacher. Well this was such a city as we have hundreds here in America, * a city that is composed of ten or twelve, or even three or four houses, and occupied by so many families. You have travelled about a great deal neighbor Hans, have you not met with such towns?

Hans. Enough more than I desired. It has happened already that I have passed through such a town and inquired where the town was, which was said to be situated here, and then I was told the few cabins that I had scarcely noticed, this was the town.

Kunz. But whence came these, be they only three or four families who inhabited the city of Enoch?

Preacher. From the posterity of Cain, the Bible tells us, that men, in that ancient time lived many hundred years. From this we may safely conclude that their vital and generative powers were stronger and more durable than that of the people of the present day, and that we, therefore, when we are told of so many of the ancient fathers; understand from this a great number of children. So it could, in a few decades, come to pass that the posterity of one man could populate a considerable city.

I believe, dear neighbors, I have complied with your wishes and answered your queries. So I allow myself the modest petition to you, that you would now begin to read the dear Bible attentively through in its connections. For I discover anew, that the greater part of the opponents of the Bible, do either not read it all, or only superficially with preconceived unfavorable opinions, and without earnestly endeavoring to understand it aright. So then men generally read things therefrom which are not therein. You see I only desire that you actually do that which you yourselves said was important and necessary, viz. to examine everything closely.

* Such a small collection of houses would not be called a city in America. (Translator.)

MYSTERIES CONNECTED WITH REGNERATION.

Inasmuch then, as Regeneration is produced from seed divine, conceived into the heart of him who is regenerated and is an internal work, wrought in man by cooperation of God's spirit, no man, especially no carnal minded one, can comprehend the mode of operation which brings forth the new man in Christ Jesus. Nicodemus, though a ruler of the Jews, even after Jesus had illustrated that important change effected by earthly things, said: "How can these things be?" "Jesus answered," (in order to humble him and show him his ignorance emphatically asks:) "Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things?" I fear, many who would be masters or teachers in Israel, in this day are as ignorant, or perhaps more so, than this notable ruler, or else they would not teach commandments of men instead of the commandments of God. And why so? because either self-interest or inexperience of the power of God, through want of a genuine conversion, being born of man, converted by man, consequently imbibed his doctrine, and is just as zealous to cleave to it, and defend it as the child of God is to defend the word of God. And indeed his zeal will induce him to go beyond the bounds of a true Christian, for the deceptive doctrine he imbibed does not put him under the same restriction.

The word of God, by which the child of God is born, restricts fighting with carnal weapons. "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds; casting down imaginations, and every high things that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." Paul. But popular religion, or man-teachers, defend their doctrine, use the most powerful and deadly instruments that can be invented to kill their fellow men, and if needs be, their brother, in order to subdue him to their cherished doctrine; and if not successful for want of power, sooner than succomb, lay down their life, seal their faith with their blood. Hence, zeal is no distinctive mark of one that is born of God. For instance, did we not see in the late Rebellion brethren in the same faith fighting against one another, killing by wholesale both sides, calling fervently upon their God for success, and if killed, preached to heaven; hence fearless of death, if heaven be their portion. Sure signs of being born of man whose god is the god of this world.

By the foregoing remarks, I endeavored to show how man can be led astray, deceived, blinded and through deceitful workers influenced to lay down their lives for a false religion. Hence the greatest mystery of a proper regeneration lies on the part of the unregenerate. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—Paul. John the loving disciple referring to the love of God by which they are called the sons of God, says, "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." The Savior on a certain occasion, said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." New born babes are those that are born of God, such that have received the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior, that obtained power from him to become the sons of God, even those that believe in His name." His name is the Word of God, consequently they do all what His Word demands; and this seems foolishness to the unconverted.

This new birth, in a certain measure, is mysterious even to them that are born again. The Savior compares it to the wind. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou heareth the sound thereof, but canst not know whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Now we feel the wind but cannot see it, we do not know where it commences, neither do we know where it ends. A storm may rage some distance from us, we hear it roar, the sound is perceptible, it may be in a short little circuit, and every place surrounding very calm, no man knoweth the cause of it nor where it started, nor where it ends, but the effects can be seen where it rages; and we also know that its power comes from above, God is the author and the moving cause of it. So is he that is born of the Spirit. He cannot see that Spirit which moves him to act, but he feels its operations. He knows that it comes from above, because by Divine impulse, he is moved to forsake sin and all unrighteousness, become obedient to the word of God, and the effect thereof is seen by a holy life and a godly conversation. But where that commences and ends he does not know, for he is yet too imperfect to see it; the changes and vicissitudes and temptations he has to pass through is not revealed to him but he knoweth that if he endureth to the end, that he will be called to another Regeneration more glorious, the Renovation of the body, of which we will treat in our next.

NEARING DELIVERANCE.

"For now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed."

The Bible contains many interesting and soul cheering subjects but there are none so inexpressibly sweet and overflowing as that of nearing deliverance. Every step we take, every breath we breathe, brings us nearer and still nearer. In every age, in every clime the same happy, holy thought has seized the aching and care worn heart and bid it look up and hope on because deliverance is on the wing, and soon will lift the mysterious vail that now hides the desired haven.

Just now we think of the man of patience. He had been blessed to a fullness, all that earth could afford, to make life pleasant and enjoyable was his, but still he was flesh or clothed in flesh, contaminated with sin and susceptible to its influences. Satan came along and strips him bare, first his earthly possessions, then his children, and lastly touches his flesh and wraps him in pain and anguish from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. Every possible source of earthly pleasure was now cut off, and his condition seems to be a sad one indeed, but above and beyond all this, shone the bright star of hope. He saw the joy that earth affords, one after another taken away, but as these faded away, he was impressed with the truth of approaching dissolution. These pains and aches could not always last. He knew that the end was approaching, and with that, deliverance. All at once the blessed truth breaks into his soul and the happy exclamation was "I know that my Redeemer liveth" and if He liveth, what then? Ah, it was everything. It was resurrection, it was redemption, still more, yes, it was nearing deliverance, a foretaste of pleasures evermore. David, Israel's sweet singer, at different times in his eventful life, had the curtain drawn aside and his heart was made to leap for joy when the great deliverance was unfolded to his view. Good old Simeon was so powerfully enraptured at the glorious spectacle that he became impatient and wished to tarry no longer. The fullness of his brightest hopes had now been realized, he asked nothing more but "Now Lord let thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." The Lord's Christ was to him an eternal deliverance from the throes of this death, a passport from death to life, and as soon as his eyes beheld him, the sting of death was removed and he embraced the monster as fondly as men receive their most welcome friends. Deliverance was so very near that he beheld it in all its fullness. Kindred feelings to these were enjoyed by the chosen few that were made witnesses to this great deliverance, especially was this their happy lot near the close of their eventful lives, but perhaps to none of them was this great deliverance so vividly shown as to the apostle Paul. He became so dead to the world and the flesh that it was altogether immaterial to him whether he was in the body or out of it. When he consulted his own choice, it was to be absent from the body and present with the Lord. And when he considered the work whereunto he was called, he was quite willing to remain, not only willing to remain, but to die daily if he could be the means of saving others. He was very willing to be cursed for his brethren's sake, that is, be crucified as was his Redeemer. What cared he for this tenement of clay, let it go, let it dissolve for we know if this earthly house were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. He was fully aware of the approaching dissolution of his body but instead of being a terror to him, it was his greatest joy, because he ever groaned to be delivered from the body of this death. Salvation was the only star in his horizon and his eyes became so fixed on it that he could see nothing but Christ and him crucified. If any seemed to be growing weary on the way, he introduced to them the subject of nearing deliverance. "For now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed."

No waiting or lagging now, the heat and burden of the day will soon be over, fight on, the battle will soon be won, remember the crown is not at the beginning nor in the middle but at the end of the race, Such was the character and disposition of the author of our text. He not only taught by precept but his whole life was a living example of what he taught.

If the hope of deliverance was so unspeaknbly glorious to those who lived and died eighteen hundred years ago, should it not be equally our joy to know that deliverance is nearing? Yea, verily, and it does us good even now to realize the blessed assurance that to-day there are thousands filled with the same hope and are now groaning to be released from this body of death. What are the thoughts, of the old sainted pilgrim as he sits in his lonely chair? Once I was young but now am old, yet the Lord hath never forsaken me, but where are they of my household? Where my brothers and sisters, the companions of my youth, and where, the partner of my joys and sorrows? All gone, gone and I am still left, but time is passing, to-day and to-morrow are only short periods, but when past, will be two days nearer home, nearer the companions of my earthly joys, nearer, perhaps, a dear son or daughter whose eyes I reluctantly closed in death, nearer the one who stood by me in my thickest trouble, nearer the haven of rest, and above all, nearer my Redeemer who died and now liveth for me. Yes for me he suffered, for me he died, for me eternal deliverance is approaching.

Not long since, we visited the home of an old saint whose husband had gone to his reward. For a number of years she has been confined to her room, and to look at her condition from a natural standpoint we would suppose her lot to be far from agreeable, but go to that old mother and you will be surprised to learn the fullness of joy she realizes. No fretting no murmuring there, all is peace and expectation. Ask her how she feels, the answer is, "Oh, I am quite well and have much to be thankful for. I am often alone but seldom feel lonely, as Jesus, my best friend, often stands by me." She is a living example of the patience of Jesus, and is only waiting the invitation to leave this body of clay and go home. She fully realizes the truth of old brother Paul's nearing deliverance. For now is my salvation nearer than when I first believed, a few more risings and settings of the sun, perhaps another dropping of the leaves and then the Master will come. Oh for such an abiding faith, how my soul longs for the time when these eyes, now befogged by the world's gaudy show, will be more fully opened to the joys that are in store for the saints.

Brethren and sisters let us awake to the redemption that is approaching. If we are awake and alive to the holy profession which we have made, we are most certainly approaching deliverance. As age grows upon us let us not feel that we are growing old, but only maturing, only getting ready for the Master. Let us therefore walk the more courageously and put on the whole armor of light. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, ever pressing onward and upward for the prize which will be given us when deliverance comes. H. B. B.

LOVE AND LABOR.

Feeling somewhat lonely this morning, I thought I would write a few lines for the PILGRIM to encourage my dear sisters. I love to read communications written by our own, the weaker sex. There are a great many of us too neglectful about writing for our periodicals. We should all try and do our part. I always think there are others who are more capable of writing than I am, and I presume it is the case with many others. This is why there is a lack of duty performed by the sisters, but this should not discourage us, for all that is lacking is energy, and a good will, and if we desire to do good, such little trifles will be no hindrance to us.

We find it hard to live a Christian life among so much wickedness, for there is so much of it going on at the present day, but this should make us feel more humble, for this life is fleeting and we know not how long we may stay here. Dear sisters, we have many trials, troubles and temptations to encounter, and many obstructions cast in our pathway. We are often looked upon with contempt because we do not follow the frivolous fashions of the world, but this should make our faith much stronger. We should never get discouraged at such things. Let us not care for what the world may say about us. Let us be on our guard for the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open to their prayers; trust in the Lord at all times ye righteous, for nothing shall separate you from that eternal love, which for you, poured out on Calvary the precious blood of Jesus. Let us love one another more and labor as dear children of God. Let us not be idle and say we can't do anything, we have no talent, we can't write for the press, or we can't sing or pray. Let us try and do the best we can.

Do you remember reading the parable spoken by our Lord concerning the talents? We can compare this parable to ourselves. Our Lord was on earth once, He gave us talents and is gone with the intention of coming again to see how we improve our talent. But we did not all get the same amount of talents. Some of us have five, some two, some only one. If we have but one, let us try to improve it and gain more to it, so when the Lord comes He will find us faithful servants.

CHARLOTTE J. MASTERS.

LABOR FOR THE MEAT WHICH ENDURETH.

Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that which endureth unto everlasting life.—John 6: 27.

There seems to be a natural tendency to overestimate the value of pecuniary effort, or that by which our natural wants are supplied. The Savior warned those who were following Him merely that they might partake of the loaves and be filled of this error, and says, "Labor not for the meat which perisheth." By the term meat, as used in the Scriptures, is not meant merely flesh but food in general, and the providing of food is one of the most important considerations of this life. The Savior does not mean that we shall not labor at all for the support of our natural wants, but merely directs the attention of those whom He addressed to the greater importance of laboring for the food which strengthens and supports the soul. It is certainly not wrong to provide for our natural wants. The apostle in writing to the Thessalonians, tells them that those who do not work should not eat; and again it is said that he that will not provide for his house is worse than an infidel, and hath denied the faith. From these allusions it is evident that it is our duty to labor for our sustenance. But while we thus labor we should always keep in view the more important labor, the effort to obtain that spiritual food that will strengthen and invigorate the soul.

When taking a view of the manner in which men perform their labor, and the zeal they manifest in their work, it appears that laboring for this spiritual food is only a secondary matter. We think more of what we shall eat or drink, and labor harder to obtain it than we do for that life giving, life sustaining food that nourishes and keeps alive the inner man. This is not in harmony with the teaching of Jesus when He says, "Therefore take no thought saying, what shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed?" We are first to seek the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and then food and raiment, and the things that we need will be supplied. God never withdraws Himself from those who put their trust in Him. He keeps them as the apple of His eye, as the sheep of His pasture, and why should we manifest so much concern about these things? Take therefore not so much thought about how you shall supply your natural wants, but seek rather the supply of your spiritual wants.

But what is it that supplies our spiritual wants? What is this meat which endureth? Jesus says, "My words, they are spirit, and they are life." We understand then, that the words of Jesus, the Gospel which He delivered to men, will nourish and strengthen the soul, it is to the weak and weary soul what food is to the weary and fatigued body. We must labor to make an application of this word to the governing of our lives, obey its teachings, inculcate its principles, and then indeed will the soul become strong and healthy. We should be induced to labor for this supply from the consideration of the exceeding great value of the soul. The soul is of more value than the whole world; it is so valuable that there is nothing that can be given in exchange for it. But valuable as it is, if the means for its salvation are not applied, if the word of God is not obeyed, it will die. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Disobedience is sin, and if we continue disobedient to the plan for our redemption, the soul must evidently die to the joys and glories that are held in reservation for those who are laboring for the meat which endureth forever.

May we not then, in view of the great value of the soul, and the comparative insignificance of the body be induced to give ourselves less concern in reference to the perishable things of this life, and seek more after the things that pertain to our eternal happiness. Fear not the destruction of the body, but rather fear the destruction of the soul, that immortal principle which must exist forever, either in a state of wretchedness, or everlasting bliss.

"Never is a wise man better employed, never is he more busy, than when in silence, he contemplates the greatness of God and the beauty of his works; or when he withdraws from society, for the purpose of performing some important service to the rest of mankind; for he that is well employed in such studies, though he may seem to do nothing at all, does greater things than any other in affairs both human and divine"—Seneca.

From "Thinkers and Thinking."

IT is the mind that makes the body rich; and as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds, so honor gleams in the meanest habits.

THE labor of the body relieves us from the fatigues of the mind; and this it is which forms the happiness of the poor.

He is the greatest prince who can govern his own passions.

Pride cannot bear reproof, but humility bows before it.

Begin with modesty, if you would end in honor.

ALONE WITH GOD.

Christian life in our day is full of activity. It finds pleasure in planning, giving, and working for the growth of Christ's cause. Meetings for prayer are multiplied in time of revival, and every evening and often hours of the day are devoted to mutual and quickening effort. Associations and conventions of various kinds are held almost weekly, whose chief object is to stir Christian hearts to more earnest and more constant labor for the Master. Young converts are full of zeal to wio others to Jesus; and young men spend all their spare moments in carrying out good plans of Christian labor. An increasing multitude ask in the spirit of the converted Saul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do," and hold themselves ready for sacrifice or service. This spirit of consecration gives joy to all Christians who recognize it, and inspires confident hopes in the aggressive movements of the church.

But it conceals also a great peril. All Christian power springs from communion with God, and from the indwelling of divine grace. One can do good to others only as his own heart pulsates with love to Jesus, and has a present experience of his love. We can impart only what we receive. Any stream will run dry, unless fed from unfailing springs. And Christian labor will be fruitless, and Christian zeal be like sounding brass, unless the soul waits daily on God, and finds new streogth in prayer and in study of his Word.

Jesus, when he forsaw especial difficulties in His way, was wont to go apart by Himself to pray. He made His own soul strong by communing with the Father. He received new quickening by the fuller inflow of divine life. The example of the Master is law to the servant. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." If one would have a warm heart, he must find it at the mercy-seat. If he would be wise to win souls, he must have a rich and fresh experience of the truths of the Bible in his daily life. If he would have power with his fellow men, he must wrestle and prevail with God like Jacob at Peniel. There is reason to fear that much Christian activity is wasted, from lack of the preparation which gives success. Solitude with God should go before intercourse with men. The closet is preliminary to the prayer-meeting.

It is even the more important for the inquirer and the young convert to be alone with God. Depth of conviction, a strong grasp of the promises, firmness of purpose in the new life, are born of direct intercourse with God. He knows the needs of the heart better than the wisest pastor. He can guide the troubled soul more surely than any Christian friend. Solitude with God is an imperative need of the awakened sinner, for help cometh only from him. In the great revival, predicted by Zachariah, when the spirit of grace and of supplication was to be poured out, it is written, the land shall mourn, every family apart."

There is danger, in a time of a religious awakening, of too many meetings, as of too few. It may be hard to know the right medium. But it is certain Christians need to be much alone with God, and with his Word, to receive power for successful labor. It is equally certain that awakened and burdened souls need to be more with God than with men. Their help comes only from him, and they will find it soonest when cut off from reliance on any human helper. Many of our revivals leave weak converts, because they have leaned on secondary agencies instead of on the living God. And they leave Christians with little of permanent spiritual gain, because their fervor has been kindled by meeting together instead of waiting alone on God.

If the activity, which is one of the most hopeful features of our age, can be joined with a love for solitude with God; the Christian life will be rich in fruits, and Christian labor will have signal success.—Selected.

WHERE IS YOUR FAITH?

Professors of Christianity and preachers of the Gospel sometimes complain that the church is cold, the ministry indifferent, and especially that sinners are hardened, and that the preaching of the Gospel does not produce the effect that it did in days gone by. And then they will begin to unpack their mouldy bread, and tell over what good times they had ten, twenty, thirty or forty years ago; but it is all past now—men are hardened, and will not hear and believe the truth.

Is this the way you talk and feel? If so I have a word to say to you. God has not changed during the last twenty or forty years. He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Jesus Christ has not changed, for He changeth not. The Holy Ghost has not changed, nor has it left the world, for it was sent to abide with the Church forever. The Gospel has not changed. No matter how much you may have mangled it, distorted it, revamped it, and improved it with your new notions, pet theories, and vain imaginations= the Gospel and the Bible remain the same. The heart is still deceitful, the flesh is corrupt, and its lusts, desires, works, and fruits, are just the same now that they were when Cain killed Abel, when Lot was vexed in Sodom, when the Jews rejected Christ and crucified the Lord of glory. Sin has not changed,—it is still vile, hateful, polluting, accursed of God and a curse to man.

Now what is the matter? With the same God, the same Christ, the same spirit, the same Bible, the same Gospel, the same promises, the same sinners, and the same wrath to shun and heaven to gain, what is the reason there is not the same result? It may be true that the people where you choose to dwell and labor, who build churches and pay salaries, are some of them Gospel-hardened. But Christ has never bidden his servants to spend their whole lives preaching a rejected message to a rebellious people. He says, "Go ye into all the world," and somewhere in the backwoods, the highways, the by ways, or in the lanes and streets of the city, are hungry, starving souls, waiting for the sweet compulsion which shall bring them in to fill the vacant seats of the marriage of the Lamb, and as ready to hear the Gospel call, as other sinners have been in years gone by. And with the fields whitening, the harvest great, and the laborers few, you cannot urge the hardness of men's hearts as a sufficient reason for a fruitless ministry.

The reason is, you are back slidden yourself. It is needless to mince the matter. You complain that others do not feel under your exhortations or your preaching; the trouble is, you do not feel yourself. You talk of the hardness of sinner's hearts;—the fact is, your heart is hard. You complain of carelessless and worldliness when you are careless and worldly yourself. Christ is just as near to-day as he was twenty or thirty years ago. And if he is not as near, and as dear, and as precious to you to-day as at any time in your life, you are simply backslidden from Him.

Ah, my brother, this will never do! Get near the Lord, bury your old experience,—it is dead, and mouldy, and rank. Go to God's word for fresh bread. Burn up your old sermons. Hide yourself in your closet and draw near to God. Get your own heart broken and then other hearts will break. Put away your whining, and cant, and make believe sympathy; your heavenly tones, and all your tricks to raise a smile or draw a tear, and come down to the solid hard-pan of solemn fact. Do not pretend to be what you know you ought to be, but be content to own up just what you are. Tell the people that you are dead and buried, worldly and stupid, lukewarm, dumb and blind. Tell them the truth; and tell them, worst of all, that you don't feel half so asbamed or so bad about it as you ought to. Get down to the bottom of the hill where you belong, and then God can use you and exalt you.

Away with the doubts and cavils of unbelief. God lives, and souls perish! If you will be His servant, and endure His cross, and obey His commandments, and do His work, He will lead you through trials, toils, hunger, cold and nakedness, it may be, but He will crown your labors with a blessing; and preserve you blameless till He shall appear.

Put away whining, grumbling, envying others or complaining at your lot. Turn to God. Your congregations are as large as you will want to answer for in the day of judgment. Your one talent is quite enough for you till you dig up the old mouldy napkin and get it out and use it; and as for reputation, and bodily comforts, you are ten times as well off as your Master was,—so now, what more do you want? What more can you ask for?—The Christian.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Baptist Church claims that they are taking the lead in Chicago. They have a membership of 5,428. The Episcopalians 3,728 and the Methodists 3943. Chicago boasts of 212 churches as places of worship.

Anti-Tobacco Revival.—Last week, at a Methodist Camp Meeting in Conn. the Rev. D. W. C. Hause gave a sound sermon on tobacco, at the close of which over 20 Ministers come forward and voluntarily foreswore the use of tobacco from henceforth and forever. We know of some other ministers that would be benefited by taking a similar pledge.

A Brother of the Manor Church Md. under date of Sept. 13 says: Last Sunday Bro. Zook of Franklin Co. Pa. was with us. Two young men were baptized, and four weeks previous to this a young woman entered the fold.

Slowly sinners leave the world and its pleasures to become the followers of Christ, but we are glad to see them come if only one or two at a time.

Average Wealth of the churches in the United States.

"The Baptist churches average abont $3,042; the Methodists, $3,273 the Presbyterians come next, at $7,683; Congregational $9,234; Universalist, $9,436; Episcopal, $14,036; Roman Catholic, $16,023; Unitarian $20,266; Dutch Reformed or Reformed Church of the United States, as they now call themselves, $22135 the Jewish very naturaly representing great wealth with their metropolitan synagogues, stand at $33,919, at the head of the list.

The Christian Advent Times Publishing Co. are liquidating a debt of $4,000 by gratuitous funds from its patrons in cash and pledges. Last week there was over $800 sent in pledges besides a considerable amount of cash. That looks like business and throws the Altoona church move quite in the shade. If some of our contributors would give us several good articles on our proposed subject, "How to spend money for Jesus, it might be a help to the cause.

Brethren wake up. Are there none that understand this subject well enough to write on it? perhaps some of our sisters understand it better.

Since the Rebellion, the Presbyterian Church is divided. There has been numerous attempts made to effect a union, but so far there has been but little accomplished. The following opinion is expressed by the Philadelphia Presbyterian.

"The general feeling growing now rapidly at the North is, that the stretched out hand, which no friendly hand from the other side grasps, had better be returned to its place.

A RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT.—Of late there has been a religions movement in Norway. It has been looked upon as the uprising of the people for liberty and justice and goes far to show the tyranical spirit of some of our protestant churches when they become invested with power. Prior to 1845, Norway was an absolute Lutheran monarchy and to be anything but a Lutheran was to be put in jail, and even yet in Norway no one can hold any office whatever under government who is not a member of the Lutheran Church, and has not taken the sacrament; and if any man holding office, no matter whether the highest or the lowest, were to join any other sect or body, he must at once relinquish his appointments.

Such regulations are felt to be extremely tyranical but this is still not the worst part of it. Between the ages of fifteen and nineteen, every young person must be confirmed and take the sacrament according to the usages of the Lutheran Church. If not confirmed before the age of nineteen, he or she is liable to be put to jail. To get from under this yoke of oppression, in the name of religion, the people have called a meeting represented by delegates from all parts of the kingdom and after discussing these and other questions, they voted by large majorities to have them abolished. This same devilish intolerance was by the same sect, meted out to our brethren before they left Germany and emigrated to America.

THERE are those who profess to see indications of a general outbreak in Mohammedan countries against the Christians. Persecutions have been a little more numerous and a little more severe of late, and the increasing friendliness of Mohammedan potentates—the Sultan and the Khedive, for example—is looked upon as ominous for their Christian subjects. All these powers become less formidable in military and naval forces, it is not unlikely that they will be less and less inclined to brook the presence among them as deniers of their faith. It has never been through good will that they have granted toleration, and it wants but the frown of Europe to be turned away, to let their hatred loose.

Youth's Department.

TRUE COURAGE.

There is a great deal said these days about true courage and is considered a great honor for big people to possess and act it out. This spirit by example and precept, takes hold of the young and they too wish to show themselves boys and girls of pluck and courage. This is very proper as nothing good or great can be accomplished without the exercise of more or less true courage. But the trouble is, so few know what true courage is and on this account, it is so badly taught to the young that but few ever learn to practice its virtues.

Not long since, I dropped into a hotel where is sold that ugly stuff sometimes called "wild-fire" or more properly whiskey. Soon a half dozen young men come in, when the leader walked up to the bar and offered to treat the crowd. One after another, answered to the call and stepped up and swallowed down the liquid fire until it came to the one furthest back in the crowd. He shook his head and said that he did not wish any. Several called out: "Come along Harry, this is a treat and the rest of us have all drank, don't you stand back and play the dunce."

This was a sharp cut, but it only brought the man out of him and he said, in a determined tone: "I don't drink neither would I, if a thousand were to call me a dunce."

At this positive denial they all commenced to jeer and laugh at him calling him baby, dunce, coward, and every mean name they could think of, and then one much less than he walked up and bantered for a fight, calling him all kind of abusive names, but he stood firm and calmly said: "I do not wish to fight."

In the room was a man of considerable age, no doubt a father, and should have been possessed of wisdom but evidently he was not, for instead of applauding the boy for his noble conduct, he called out: "You young fool, why do you not knock him down? If you were my boy and would show yourself such a coward, I would thrash you."

The boys reply was: "My father's dying request was that I should not lie, steal, swear, fight nor drink whiskey. I promised, and by God's help, sir, I shall live it out."

The man was confused and had no answer to make. The little bully did not banter any more for fight, but with the crowd, quietly marched out.

Now, my young reader, who was it that had true courage? I know you will all say it was the boy who dared to do right. Just so. The greatest courage that any person can possibly have is to do right. The leader of that crowd was a gross young sinner. The young men that drank with him were cowards because they knew it was wrong and was afraid to do right, and the old man was not only a sinner and coward, but he was extremely foolish in justifying a cowardly act. True courage consists in boldly standing for the right, such courage will always end in a victory. Had the boy been a coward, he would have drank with his companions rather than endured their scoffs, but then he would have broken his promise and thus not only committed a sin, but took his first step in the downward course which might have ended in a drunkard's grave. This young man was a soldier that a widowed mother could well be proud of. Such courage will fight him through every temptation, prepare him for every event of life and give him a character that will open good positions for him, in short, it will make a man of him. He was no coward because he refused to drink and fight, but it was a brave struggle against wrong. By the help of such courage he avoided the first step in sin, and by the exercising of such courage, my young readers, you may escape any snare that the devil can place in your way. Don't forget it, true courage is to do right. When you are tempted to do wrong, remember that it is cowardice pleading with you. Courage says, no, I must not do it because it would not be right. Lying, chewing, smoking, stealing, drinking, swearing and fighting belong to cowards and sinners, and just so soon as you do any of these things, you take one step away from the right path and cause a black spot on your character.

UNCLE HENRY.

NEVER TELL A LIE.

All liars shall have their part in the lake of fire. Never lie because Satan is the father of lies and liars. A false witness will utter lies. A deceitful witness speaketh lies. (Prov. xiv; 5,25.) He that speaketh lies shall perish. (Prov. xix; 9. To deceive any one is to lie. You can act a lie, and the wrong is just as great as to speak one. Do you put your trust in Jesus? Then remember, to lie, to laugh at a lie or in any way to deceive or be pleased with deception, is to dishonor him who shed his precious blood for the salvation of your soul: and yet God's Word says, "I write unto you, little children, that you sin not, but if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous, and if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins."

If you are not one of God's dear children, and sometimes tell an untruth do not trust in your promises to do better; just so sure as you expect to in your own strength, overcome this terrible habit, just so sure will you fail. Go to Christ, dear boy or girl, Go to Christ. He can, and He only will help you, and fill you with the spirit of truth, that you may speak the truth from the heart.

OBEDIENCE.

"I wish I could mind God as my little dog minds me," said a little boy looking thoughtfully on his shaggy friend; "he always looks so pleased to mind, and I don't."

What a painful truth did this child speak. Shall the poor little dog thus readily obey his master, and we rebel against God, who is our Creator, our Preserver, our Father, our Savior, and the bountiful Giver of every good?

The dog had been kindly treated by his young master, his wants had been supplied, and he did not forget it.

Little children, and grown-up children too, are daily receiving favors from the kind hand that supplies all our wants, and yet how often we forget our obligation to Him, and refuse to obey him. Let us try in time to come, to remember with greatful hearts the blessings that our Heavenly Father is so constantly bestowing, and obey him cheerfully.

A LESSON OF GRATITUDE.

A gentleman was once making inquiries in Russia about the method of catching bears in that country. He was told that to entrap them, a pit was dug several feet deep, and after covering it over with turf, leaves, etc, some food was placed on the top. The bear, if tempted by the bait easily fell into the snare.

"But he added, "if four or five happen to get in together, they all get out again."

"How is that?" asked the gentleman.

"They form a sort of ladder by stepping on each other's shoulders and thus make their escape.

"But how does the bottom one get out?"

"Ah! these bears, though not possessing a mind and soul such as God has given us, yet can feel gratitude; and they won't forget the one who had been the chief means of procuring their liberty. Scampering off, they fetch the branch of a tree, which they let down to their poor brother, enabling him speedily to join them in the freedom in which they rejoice."

Sensible bears, we would say, are a great deal better than some people that we hear about, who never help anybody but themselves.—The Children's Dove.

IS CONSCIENCE A CORRECT MORAL GUIDE.

Conscience is that faculty or power of mind which enables us to decide between right or wrong, according to the knowledge we have about the subject upon which we wish to make a decision. Therefore, in examining the subject of conscience, it should ever be remembered that knowledge is the basis; the source from which it emanates, and that without knowledge there could be no conscience. This is fully demonstrated from the fact that our conscience neither excuses nor accuses us in regard to things of which we have no knowledge. We meet with such occurrences in our every-day life. We sometimes speak inadvertently of a neighbor or friend. We do it with a good conscience because there was no evil intent in it, and we do not anticipate any bad to result from it, but perhaps, the next day we are informed, that our friend is offended at what we told him. Our conscience now reproves us sharply, for the very thing we done yesterday, with an approving conscience. The act is not changed, but we have had an addition to our knowledge, and that changed the state of the conscience, and to-day it decides directly the reverse of what it did on yesterday. A man comes into my office and begs alms; just a few minutes prior to his coming, I am informed that he loves his dram, and wishes the money to take it across the way and spend it for whiskey. With a good conscience, I refuse to give him alms because my knowledge tells me that it is wrong to give a man a weapon to kill himself with. After he is gone, a neighbor comes in and tells me that I was wrongly informed, and assures me that the man is strictly temperate but met with a sad misfortune, and is altogether worthy of my charities. I meet the poor man again, and with an approving conscience, tender to him alms. Is my conscience changed? Not at all. My knowledge is changed, and on the strength of that change my conscience changes the decision. I felt just as good when I withheld as when I gave, because, in both cases I done it through a sense of duty. Again, we will take the case of the savage. Some of them are brought up to believe that the white man is their worst enemy, and that the more of them they murder and destroy, the happier will be their condition in the spiritual hunting grounds after death. Imbued with this knowledge, he kills the white man with as good a conscience as we could have in saving a man from death and eternal ruin. In both cases, conscience is based upon knowledge and duty. These illustrations, we think, set forth very clearly, the nature of conscience and prepare us to answer the questions as presented: "Is conscience a correct moral guide? We answer that it is correct just so far as our knowledge is correct in regard to what true morality is, and not a particle farther. If we have a thorough knowledge of good morality our conscience will check or decide against every violation, but if we have only a partial knowledge of morality our conscience will guide us only in that part which we know. Therefore, we come to this conclusion: Conscience always dictates right according to the knowledge we have, but that right (in our estimation) may be wrong from the fact that the knowledge upon which we based our conscience, was wrong. This is a clearly established fact from the illustrations which we gave. It should be remembered that we are brought up surrounded by different circumstances, and that true morality is very differently understood, hence good morality is often grossly violated and that too with a good conscience. This does not prove that those who violate, are necessarily bad or have an evil conscience, but that they are wrongly taught, that they are deficient in knowledge. To make conscience a guide in such cases would be right in principle, but wrong and unsafe in practice, i. e. it would produce bad results.

Just now the question presents itself, what is conscience? Is it a guide at all? Not a bit of it. We will illustrate again. I am travelling along a familiar road, but my mind is so absorbed in my business that, without noticing it, I take a wrong road. My conscience never says a word about it. Something occurs to divert my mind from its course and I look around me, things appear strange, and my knowledge tells me that I have taken a wrong road. This knowledge produces a sensation of sorrow or disappointment, I feel badly. This feeling or sensation is my conscience, and knows no more about the road I wish to travel than do the trees by the wayside, and as a guide, it does not answer my purpose nearly so well, because, when I looked at them they told me I was wrong, but conscience remained quiet until it was informed of the mistake, and then it made me feel badly, and to get rid of that feeling, my knowledge dictated, better go back. Now, it is very evident in this case, that conscience was no guide but a sensation or feeling that served as a stay or check and enabled me, from the knowledge I had of the road, to form a rational decision.

Conscience then, properly defined, is that power or principle that affords us pleasure when we do right, according to the knowledge we have, and, pain when we do wrong, and is no guide morally or spiritually. Conscience is right, is good and its warnings should be heeded if the knowledge from which it emanated was good.

Paul, while earnestly persecuting the Church, was acting strictly in harmony with his knowledge, and said, "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day."—Acts 23: 1. His conscience or feeling was good, his principle was good because he was actively engaged in what his knowledge told him was his duty, but the practice and result was bad. Now if conscience had been a guide to right it would have checked Paul in his mad career, but it did just the contrary, it approved every act he done. It afforded him sensations of pleasure, but as soon as he received other knowledge, his conscience or feelings were changed, and even to think of what he had been doing, gave him sensations of pain. That he was deeply conscientious before he was converted, is plainly shown in his writings. In Acts 26: 9, he says: "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." Again, in speaking of Israel, he says: "For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. Israel was zealous and had a good conscience and they obeyed its voice, yet it was all wrong—because it was not according to knowledge. Just so it is with thousands to day, they live and die with a good conscience, yet the result of their whole life is a series of wrongs from beginning to end, from the fact that they were wrongly taught, their knowledge was deficient. Such act in good faith and may receive their reward on principle. But there are thousands who, unlike Paul, refuse knowledge, and fight against the promptings of conscience, until it becomes seared as with a hot iron. Such are wrong, both in principle and action or practice and will come under condemnation because he that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin.

In conclusion, if you wish to do right and feel right, search the Scriptures, the fountain source of all knowledge, and obey them. By so doing you will enjoy a conscience void of offence. After all, the Scriptures are our only safe-guide, and he that putteth his trust in them shall not be made ashamed.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

When we first admitted the subject of Sunday schools into our columns, we thought our brethren could discuss it without getting into personal controversies, but it seems not. There is a little too much spirit, fire or zeal somewhere and if not checked, will go far beyond its intended limits. First comes reviews, then defenses, then apologies, then reviews of review until the subject is lost in a personal controversy. Brethren these things ought not so to be and for the present, we have concluded to suspend the discussion unless a more charitable spirit is manifested and personalities avoided, therefore those who have written either in the shape of reviews, amendments or apologies, will please excuse us for their nonappearance. From the general views as expressed, we believe that the Brethren, as a body, are in favor of Sunday schools if they can be properly conducted. The great question now seems to be, to know how this can be done, and we know of no plan that pleases us so well as that given by brother Snowberger and practiced in their school at New Enterprise, Pa. Other brethren may have just as good schools, and perhaps better, but as we have not had the pleasure of giving them a personal visit, or having a written form of their manner of conducting them, we can not judge of their merits.

In justice to brother Zuck, we will say, he has written an apology, or rather a vindication of his position, and assures us that it was by no means his intention to hurt or wound the feelings of any of the brethren.

As we remarked before, some of our brethren are entirely too sensitive on questions that do not exactly correspond with their manner of thinking.—We must learn forbearance towards eachother and have respect for the conscience of others as well as our own, but above all, let us have respect for our children and see that we stand not in the way of having them taught the Scriptures.

ATTENTION—PLEASE.

We have, standing out on our books, nearly $1,000. Of this we do not complain as we promised to wait on those who did not have the money when subscribing. We have now patiently waited nine months, and as we have some payments to make, and badly need some money, we now ask every reader who yet owes us for subscription &c. to pay us, if possible, between this and the 15th of October. Now brethren and sisters, let us see how much you can oblige us by sending or having it sent right along Those who pay to agents, don't wait for them to ask for it, but oblige them and us by attending to it at once. We wish it understood that all who can and will pay us between this and the time specified will confer us a special favor.

Correspondence.

Dear Pilgrim:—Perhaps a few words from the Aughwick Congregation will be acceptable to you.

On Saturday eve., August 26th, I boarded the Westward Pa., Central mail train at Mt. Union, and arrived at Mapleton, a village three miles distant, in due time. Nothing worthy of notice came under my observation during this short car ride except the usual thought of the pleasantness of the trip which is embraced by Jack's Narrows, giving a good view of the beautiful scenery which particularly characterizes the banks of the "blue Juniata" at this point.

My chief object being the fulfillment of an engagement to preach on Sunday at Ladda Grove, the name of a school-house about eight miles up Hares Valley, I pursued my journey on foot about four miles, when the day was far spent, and being weary and only a short distance from a brother's house, I turned aside and abode with him during the night. I thought it must be a heart of stone that could not relish such a privilege under such circumstances. I would advise any one who has an aversion to lodging with poor people in humble cottages in the mountains, to start on foot on a gratuitous fifteen mile preaching journey late in the day, and have only one place to feel welcome.

In the morning the brother kindly offered me a seat on his wagon which I accepted gladly with his family. After arriving at the place appointed and engaging in singing several hymns with the assembly, we were not a little surprised and gratified to be joined by brother A. L. Fauck, who preached to us from Acts 3d chapter on the subject of repentance. His remarks, in my judgment, were made to bear upon the essential points, and what was still more important and rare, I think they were tolerably well received.

After services returned with Bro. James Dougherty and family, accompanied by sister Hettie Dell and two lady friends, to his house, dined with him, thought and talked of many things, among which was the sad intelligence that a neighbor's child, a girl seven years old, while carrying a dish down stairs, fell, breaking the dish and falling on it, cut the large blood-vessel in the neck, and expired in five minutes.

I left them, committing them to God's care, and started on my way homeward again on foot. I reached home at five o'clock considerably fatigued, fully convinced that my good things were not in this life.

Two other meetings were attended by the brethren at the same hour at different points. Of their propriety the people who attended and God are the judges. God willing, I will write you again next week.

Yours Fraternally.

J. B. GARVER.

Dear Brethren:—I have just been reading in PILGRIM No. 35, Editors address "to the scattered members," which brought a few things to my mind which I thought to pen for your columns if agreeable. Editors think to change the character of the reading, and give more practical reading matter. So be it. Let us have more matter relating to the one thing needful, and to the fundamental principles of our faith, or, if that is sufficiently established, which it is no doubt with every member (but perhaps not with every reader,) let us have exhortations relating directly to our spiritual duty, as well as our temporal duty towards our fellow-men, or upon such subjects as set forth in No. 34 of PILGRIM. But whatever we do, let it be done in and through the spirit of love and brotherly kindness, coesistent with our profession of peace.

I love the PILGRIM, and always love to read every column in its pages, but I regret to say that there has been recently some matter that has wounded the conscience of some of its readers, and have not savored very much of that charity that thinketh no ill, in fact we doubt if such language would emanate from an humble Christian heart. And also think that if the writer would respect and love the Brotherhood as he does his pet cause, he never would have used such epithets as he did in derision of a part of the Brotherhood

Come, dear brethren and sisters, let us "Awake to righteousness and sin not, for some have not the knowledge of God, I speak this to your shame."—1 Cor. 15:34. "See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time because the days are evil, wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is."—Eph. 5:15-17.

Now brethren, let us prove all things and hold fast only to that which is good. In conclusion, if there is anything herein that seems to be personal, be assured that it is not meant so to be. But if one side is to be fully represented, allow the other to be heard also, but that we may all labor together for the good of souls, for the prosperity and the praise of God, is the desire of your weak brother. J. B. LAIR.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio, Sept. 1, 1873.

Mr. Brumbaugh. Dear Sir: If my request is not out of place, I would like if you would favor us with an explanation on the subject of conscience, through the PILGRIM.—The question has been asked in our Sunday School, "Is conscience a correct moral guide?" and the majority of the leading members of our Sunday School, are of the opinion that it is not, and that it is a creature of education and consequently would be as apt to direct us in the wrong way, as in the right. But when I consider the teachings of the Scriptures, and my own convictions, in regard to the principle of conscience, I am led to believe that such is not the case. I believe that if we would live in strict obedience to the voice of conscience, that our deviations from the path of duty, would be much less than they are, and we would be better qualified to receive and appreciate the truths of the Scriptures. It is said of Paul, when brought before the council, that he said, "Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.—Acts 23:1. It appears that Paul in this case, did not hesitate to accept the testimony of his conscience, as correct, and again Paul says: "For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to youward."—2d Cor. 1:12. By considering these, and other corresponding passages, I am inclined to think, and I am fully satisfied in my own mind, that it is only by neglecting and refusing to obey the dictates of conscience, and indulging in the sinful lusts of the flesh, that we deviate from the path of right.

Inasmuch as my education is very limited, I am not able to express my ideas in regard to the principle of conscience so as to be rightly understood, and for this reason I hope you will favor us with an explanation on the principle of conscience and its tendencies. I have yet much to learn, and will gladly receive all the information that I can get that will enable me more clearly to understand the Scriptures. DAVID BENTON.

For answer see editorial page.

Dear Brethren: I have often tho't of penning a few lines ever since I have been taking the PILGRIM. I have not been taking it long, but long enough to be pleased with it, and like it too well to give it up, would not be without it for anything, especially now, as I am lying on my bed sick and cannot be with the brethren and sisters at Salem Meeting-house where they are holding a Lovefeast, commencing to-day, the 6th at one o'clock, but thanks be to God, I have this hope that while their prayers are ascending to Heaven, they will not forget the absent ones.

E. V. HAUSENFLUCK.

Waterlick, Va.

DIED.

ETTER.—Same District, Aug. 10, Eld. Wm. Etter, aged 72 years, 5 mos., and 22 days.

Bro. E. labored zealously in the ministry until some years ago, he lost his sight, but had it partially restored, and since then has been in feeble health, and could not attend the meetings regularly, but the one at the meetinghouse near his place, where his seat was very seldom vacant. A few days before his death he was afflicted with gravel, from which he suffered much until relieved by death. But we trust his affliction which was but for a moment, has worked for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Occasion improved by Eld. William Boyer and Joseph Oype.

BENNETT.—On Sept. 3, 1873, brother James Y. Bennert, aged 51 years, 9 mos. and 8 days.

Brother James was a minister in the second degreee, and labored with your unworthy servant, as a co-laborer in the Winamac Congregation about four years. He contended earnestly for a conformity to the old order of the Brethren. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. Funeral preached by Bros. John Knisley, Adam Appleman and the writer, to an attentive congregation. D. R. FREEMAN.

FOGLESANGER.—In the Ridge District, July 25th, Jacob Foglesanger, aged 74 years, 8 mos. and 23 days.

The subject of this notice was afflicted for many years, though not seriously, until a few days previous to his death. He was only absent from the table three meals before he died. His departure, although not unlooked for, was sudden when it came, but we fondly hope, that what the church has lost on earth, it has gained in heaven. Funeral services by Eld. Daniel Keller and John F. Stamy.

RINEHART.—In the Black Swamp District, Sandusky Co., Ohio, Bro. Jacob Rinehart, aged 69 years, 1 month and 13 days. Funeral occasion improved from 2 Timothy, 4: 6, 7,8, by the writer.

NOAH HENRICKS.

LITERATURE.

Literary Editor.

"THINKERS AND THINKING." By James E. Garrettson, M. D., (John Darby,) auther of "Odd Hours of a Physician."—J. B. Lippincott & Co. Publishers.

This is a really meritorious book. Its theme is of life, and man's relation with life; its text "Life! no query: What is life? What is it to live? What is it to get the most out of living?" Its search is for that which thinkers and thinking yield, Truth, —the truth of life and of living: It is a book for thinkers; written in that very pleasing style of the author's late work "Odd Hours of a Physician" which was so greatly appreciated, never wearying the reader with wordy detail, but dropping the thought leaving the thinker to clothe it, and passing to the truth adduced. The author sketches pleasantly the various schools of Philosophy, himself a practical philosopher of the most healthful character. It would be difficult to follow him through this book without gaining the conviction that confusions lie in ignorance, and not in facts. It promises to become quite popular, and will meet with warm acceptance by all true thinkers. Send to this office, or to Wm. Lewis Huntingdon Pa., and obtain a copy. Price in extra cloth $1.50.

THE GIFT OF THE KNEES, or the Ministry of Prayer, the Ministry of Power.—Hurd & Houghton, Cambridge, Mass.

The objects of this volume is not so much to bring forward new arguments in favor of prayer, as to exalt its mission and power as vital every-day necessity to the living Christian. Prayer is the sustaining breath of the Christian life,—the Key that unlocks the great treasure-house of the Father, from which flows all the bounties of His all-bountiful hand. How few of those professing the christian name, really possess the faith to enable them to comprehend the full meaning of, and receive with confidence the Savior's words: "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." Few christians could read this book without arriving at a deeper conviction as to the efficacy of daily, earnest prayer, and the necessity of carrying it even into their every-day life. Send to this office, or to Wm. Lewis Huntingdon, Pa., and secure a copy of the book. Price $1.25.

THE INQUIRY.

Tell me, ye winged wind,
That round my pathway roar.
Do ye not know some spot
Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,
Some valley in the west,
Where, free from toil and pain,
The weary soul may rest?
The loud wind dwindled to a whisper low,
And sighed for pity as it answered "No!"

Tell me, thou mighty deep,
Whose billows round me play,
Knowest thou some favored spot,
Some island far away,
Where weary man may find
The bliss for which he sighs,
Where sorrow never lives,
And friendship never dies?
The loud waves rolling in perpetual flow,
Stopped for awhile, and sighed, to answer
"No."

And thou, serenest moon,
That with such holy face,
Dost look upon the earth
Asleep in night's embrace:
Tell me, in all thy round
Hast thou not seen some spot
Where miserable man
Might find a happier lot?
Behind a cloud the moon withdrew in woe,
And a voice sweet, but sad, responded "No!"

Tell me, my secret soul,
Oh! tell me, Hope and Faith,
Is there no resting place
From sorrow, sin, and death:
Is there no happy spot
Where mortals may be bless'd,
Where grief may find a balm,
And weariness a rest?
Faith, Hope and Love best boons to mortals given,
Waved their bright wings, and whispe'd—
"Yes, in Heaven."

NO ROOM FOR JESUS.

O, plodding life! crowded so full
Of earthly toil and care!
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
No room for Jesus there.

O, busy brain! by night and day
Working, with patience rare,
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking till thought becomes a pain!
No room for Jesus there.

O, throbbing heart! so quick to feel
In others' woes a share,
Yet human loves each power enthrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all!
No room for Jesus there.

O, sinful soul! thus to debase
The being God doth spare!
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own;
Heart, brain, life, all, are His alone;
Make room for Jesus there:—

Lest soon the bitter day shall come,
When vain will be thy power
To find in Jesus' heart a place;
Forever closed the door of grace,
Thou'lt gain no entrance there.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE OPENING OF THE FOURTH SEAL.

For the information of the readers of the PILGRIM who may not have easy access to ancient history of the world, I will transcribe for its pages a chapter from S. G. Goodrich's History of the Nations. Vol. II, page 802, 803, chapter ccc4xii, A. D. 526.

The reign of Justinian was marked also by great calamities. The superstitious people were appalled by the appearance of comets of prodigious magnitude. Earthquakes and pestilence added their real scourges to these terrors. In 529, an earthquake at Antioch destroyed two hundred and fifty thousand persons. In 531, the ancient and noble city of Berytus was shaken to the earth. Constantinople suffered severely, and a part of the Church of St. Sophia was thrown down.

In 542, a terrible plague, which originated in Egypt, swept over the whole known world, and continued its ravages more than fifty years. It is said there was not a spot upon the earth, even to the mountain tops, that was not visited by this dreadful scourge. During three months, the mortality at Constantinople was from five to ten thousand daily. Many districts in Asia, dispopulated by this visitation, have remained waste to the present day. As this is the most wide spread and destructive pestilence that ever visited the earth, as far as we are able to learn from history, we subjoin the description of it furnished by Procopius, who resided at Constantinople, who was an eye-witness of this terrible calamity, and, from his connection with the Byzantine government, possessed the means of learning all that could be known of its origin, progress and effects. The account of this writer is as follows:

At this time (A. D. 542) arose a pestilence which almost destroyed the whole world, attacking all nations and tribes of men, and sparing neither sex nor age. No diversity of climate, latitude, diet, habits, or mode of life obstructed the progress of the pestilence, all varieties of mankind fell prostrate before its sweeping march. Some countries were ravaged in Summer, others laid waste in Winter. It first arose in Egypt, among the inhabitants of Pelusium, from whence proceeding in two separate routes, ravaged Alexandria and the rest of Egypt on one hand, and on the other, extended into Palestine, from which country it spread over the entire world, advancing with uniform rapidity thro' out the whole of its progress. It did not suddenly exhaust its venom in any spot, but proceeded with regular steps, and continued in every place along its route a certain space of time, marching thus deliberately to the very extremities of the earth, as though determined that not the most remote corner of the Universe should escape its ravaging search. Not even an island, a cavern or a mountain top was spared. If any spot was passed over lightly on its first visit, the pestilence was sure to return and fall with fatal malignity upon the people whom it had first spared, not leaving them till it had swept the full proportion. It always began on the sea coasts, and spread into the interior.

In its second year, about the middle of Spring, it reached Constantinople, where I happened to be at the time. The plague brake out in this manner; Multitudes of diabolical spectres were seen, bearing the shape of some human figure. Whoever met one of these spectres seemed to be struck on some part of his body, and was on the instant taken sick. At first, the persons who saw these spectres, attempted, by prayers and devotions, to free themselves from their attacks, but all in vain, for in the very temples to which they ran for succor, they fell down dead. Then they shut themselves up in their houses, and if their friends called at the door, they refused to see them; not the loudest knocking would be answered, for every one feared that some demon was in pursuit of him. Some were attacked in another way: they fancied in their sleep that they beheld these apparitions, or heard voices crying that they were numbered with the dead, and straightway they were attacked by the pestilence. Others neither saw the spectres nor dreamed of them, but felt the disease approach in a fever on awakening from sleep, some were seized walking, others while they were about their occupations; they did not change color, nor feel a violent heat or inflamation, but from morning till evening, the fever wore so mild a character, that neither the patient nor physician was alarmed. But on the first or second day, or not long after, swellings arose in the abdomen, under the arms, behind the ears, and on the thighs. These particulars were common to all who were attacked by the plague, but there were diversities in the action of the disease, owing either to the different habits of the body in different individuals, or to the sovereign power of Him who sent the calamity. Some fell into a heavy lethargy, others were seized with a furious madness. In their lethargy, they seemed to have forgotten everything like persons buried in eternal sleep; and, unless attendants were constantly at hand to supply them with food, they died of starvation. In their madness, they never slept, but were continually frightened with apparitions and fears of being murdered; they uttered horrid cries, and ran hither and thither, to save themselves by fright. If the sufferings of the sick were dreadful, those of their friends were hardly less so, for they were disheartened with the labor and anxiety of watching over the miserable patients.

The disease was not propagated by contagion, for neither physician nor other persons caught it by touching the bodies of those infected, and multitudes who nursed the sick and buried the dead, escaped its attacks, while others, who were in no way exposed, took it and died. In their delirious ravings, they rolled themselves on the ground, threw themselves from the house-tops and plunged into the sea, not from thirst, but impelled by an ungovernable fury. Many unattended, perished from hunger. Those who escaped from lethargy and delirium were carried off by excruciating pains in the swellings.

The physicians, ignorant of the nature of the disorder, imagined the cause to lie in the swellings, and therefore dissected their tumers in the bodies of those who had died, to discover the secret of the malady. They found them to consist of coals, or black lumps, containing so malignant a poison, that many of them died immediately from the effects of it. Some found their bodies covered with black pustules, these died within an hour. Many were killed by sudden vomitings of blood. Some, after living in great extremity, and being given over by their physicians, recovered, to the astonishment of every one; others, who seemed quite safe, assured of recovery, unexpectedly died. Human skill and human wisdom seemed utterly at fault, for all things were at contradiction. If one man was helped by the use of the bath, another was killed by it. If some perished in an extraordinary manner, others escaped wonderfully. No remedy for the disorder, no preventive against it, could be found. When a man took the inspection, it seemed by chance; when he escaped, it happened he knew not how. Children born of infected mothers were sure to die.

The plague prevailed four months at Constantinople, and during three months it raged terribly. At first, the number of deaths was but little above the ordinary proportion; but as the epidemic grew more active, they increased to five thousand a day, and afterward to ten thousand a day, and even more. At first, every one buried those of his own household, and such dead bodies as were found here and there; but afterward everything was left to chance, and disorder, for servants were left without masters, and masters without servants. Houses were left desolate, and the tenants remained unburied. All the tombs in the city being filled with bodies, men were sent into the fields in the neighborhood to bury the dead there; but the number of the corpses increasing more and more, they became tired of digging graves, and piled up the bodies in the towers of the city wall, by taking off the roofs and throwing in the bodies, till the towers were full, when the roofs were replaced. A foul air was thus driven by the winds over the city, and added to the infection.

No funeral offices were performed over the dead; people thought it sufficient, if they were able to carry them to the shore, cast them by loads into boats, and let the waves transport them wherever chance might direct. All factions and dissensions were hushed in the city; people assisted one another and buried one another without thinking of their enmities. Vicious and abandoned men, struck with horror at the awful death which menaced them, became suddenly penitent and devout; yet, as the danger passed away, and their fears abated, they returned to their old ways and surpassed their old deeds in iniquity; so that it might be said, and not without truth, that the pestilence, either by chance or the will of Providence, had spared the very worst of mankind."

Were these fifty years the period of time of the opening the fourth seal of the seven sealed book? "And when he opened the fourth seal, * * * I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given him over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth."—Rev. 4: 7, 8.

REFORMATION.

I have often thought that if a desire to do the divine will, which the importance of the subject should at all times inspire, was sincerely and fervently indulged in by mankind, there would be no great difficulty in convincing one another of the important doctrines relating to the kingdom of Christ. Neither would it consist with the wisdom and goodness of God, to permit such to continue in any errors fatal to their own salvation, nor in their tendency to their fellow-heirs.

I would not be understood as inculcating the idea that in the present imperfect state, entire uniformity in either faith or practice is to be expected. The true christian unity is not comprehended in the adoptions of any precise creed, or a test in christian love. This however, is not a mere name, nor that kind of charitable disposition, as some men reckon charity which overlooks the faults of others. It is, to use the language of the Apostle, a drinking together in the same spirit, or a sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

But, although perfection of knowledge is not the lot of humanity, and therefore perfect unity of faith is not to be expected in the present state of being, a perfection of desire to know and do the Divine will is not only to be expected, but is absolutely necessary and indispensible. Nothing less than this perfection of desire can properly be called sincerity, and nothing less than this will be acceptable to the Divine Being, who requires the devotion of the whole heart.

And as this perfect desire to know and perform the will of God, is what is most necessary, so unhappily, it is what is most wanting among the professors of the holy name of Christ, and the want of this all important disposition is, to me, the strongest proof of the degeneracy of the present age. Was this desire prevalent in the minds of Christian professors, how different would be the aspect of things among them. We should not see them indulging in practices adverse to their high and holy profession merely because they were sanctioned by custom or participated in by others whom they had been induced to consider wiser and better than themselves, but despising the world's dread laugh, or the censure of singularity, they would take a firm stand, on Christian principles, in opposition to the current of custom; alike unconcerned with regard to the popular praise or popular odium. This is the only way in which reformation can ever be accomplished, or true Christian principle advanced. Each for himself, must submit to take up the cross and deny himself of whatever is contrary to the laws and precepts of Jesus Christ.

It is altogether futile to suppose, that, at any period, mankind will all be convinced of the truth and make a move for reformation. It is only by every one acting firmly, according to the light with which God has favored him, that we need ever expect this blessed work to progress in the world. The little stone which the prophet Daniel saw in divine vision, cut out of the mountain without hand's gradually grew till it become a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

May the Lord in his infinite goodness, hasten this period and strengthen the little that remains that is ready to die, that the nations may yet come to his light, and kings to the brightness of his rising.

The principle inculcated in this communication, I recommend to the serious consideration of every one. The path of duty is easy and plain. There is a law which writes in the heart—ever present with us to direct us in what is right and if every person would come to the full resolution always to do right, whatever it might subject him to as regards the loss of interest in this world, a good name among men, or denial of anything that belongs to self, we should soon see a great change for the better on the earth.

Where there is a want of this disposition of heart, there is a want of everything which pertains to true righteousness before God, but whoever attains to it, will insure the saving of his soul, which is more than all this world. Therefore, if our right eye, foot or hand cause us to offend it is better for us to part with it at once, however painful it may be to flesh and blood, than to delay it through any earthly consideration whatever, for what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul. PRIDE.

The following is copied from the Religious Telescope, and is from the pen of bishop J. Weaver. The paper was sent us by one who knows, and the subject is so well treated that we gladly give it room in our columns with the hope that it may have a tendency to check that unclean spirit which is becoming too prominent in our own Church. We are aware of the general cry of "old fogyism" but its from the devil and makes it the more necessary that we should continue to show our colors and stand for Jesus.

And now abideth pride, fashion extravagance, these three; but the greatest of these is pride—simply because it is the root of the whole matter. Destroy the root and the tree will die. It is hardly worth while to waste ammunition in shooting at fashion and extravagance as long as the root is alive. Most persons say it does not matter how people dress, pride is in the heart. Very true, but straws show which way the wind blows. Plain exterior may cover a proud heart; but depend upon it, a fashionable exterior seldom if ever covers up a plain heart. Some rules work two ways and some will not.—A lady once asked a minister whether a person might not be fond of dress and ornaments without being proud? He replied, "When you see the fox's tail peeping out of the hole you may be sure the fox is within." Jewelry, and costly and fashionable clothing, may all be innocent things in their places but when hung upon a human form they give most conclusive evidence of a proud heart.

But is it possible that a man can be found at this advanced age of refinement that dares to speak or write a word against pride, and its consequences? The large majority of that class of men died and were handsomely buried some time ago. Now, the pulpits have nearly all shut down on that style of preaching. The fact is we have passed that age, and are living in better times. Our fathers and mothers were far behind the times. They were good enough in their way, but dear me, they would not do now. They wore plain clothes, worshipped in plain churches and sung old fashioned hymns. They talked and acted like some old pilgrims that were looking for a better country; and when they left the world they stuck to it to the very last, that they were going to a city where there is no night. And it is my deliberate opinion that a vast majority of them went just where they said they were going.

But they are nearly all out of the way now, and the people have a mind to try a different route. We can be christians now and do as we like. Yes indeed. We can have fine churches, cushioned seats costly carpets, a fashionable preacher, and have all our fiddling and singing done to order. Why, in some of our modern churches the majority of the choir are not even members of the church;—and they do sing so sweetly,—perfectly delightful. The music rolls over the heads of the congregation like the sound of many waters. Not a word can be heard; but the sound is glorious. Sometimes one sings all alone for a little while, then two and pretty soon the whole choir will chime in, until the whole house is filled with the most transporting sound. Now if this is not singing with the spirit, and with the understanding also, then what is? that's the question. I know it is a little risky to speak out against pride at this day because the church is full of it. It is of no use to deny it. And hundreds who occupy the pulpit, whose duty it is to point out these evils plainly, are like dumb dogs; they don't even bark at it. They just let it go, and go it does with a vengeance. And in proportion as pride gains in the church, spiritual power dies out. They will not, cannot dwell together, for they are eternal opposites.

It is a sin and a shame for men and women professing christianity to spend money the way they do to gratify a proud heart, when ten out of every twelve of the human race are yet unsaved, and eight out of every twelve have not as much as heard the Gospel of Christ. There are many evils in the land, and in the church but I doubt if any evil is doing more harm than pride. It has stolen into the church by degrees and now rules with a rod of iron. Churches that were once noted for plainness, and whose law still stands against pride and fashion are practically powerless on the subject. It seems that nearly all creation is kept busy in furnishing fashions enough to satisfy the cravings of the depraved heart. An old scotch preacher is reported to have said in a sermon at Aberdeen, "Ye people of Aberdeen get your fashions from Glasgow, and Glasgow from Edinburg, and Edinburg from London, and London from Paris, and Paris from the devil." Now I cannot say that we get our fashions by that route but I am tolerably certain that they originate from the same head-quarters.

The religion of Christ is pure, peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, and full of mercy. All Christains are baptized with one spirit, into one body. They mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Their highest ambition is to honor God with all they have and are. They are not puffed up not conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of their minds. There is no such thing in heaven nor earth as a proud Christain; there never was, nor never can be. Pride is of the devil—it originated with him; and he is managing it most successfully in destroying souls. But who is to blame for this state of things in the church? First, and mostly the pulpit is to blame. Men who profess to be called of God to lead the people to Heaven, have ceased to rebuke this soul-destroying heaven-provoking spirit. But why? First for a living, then for popularity Esau sold his birthright for a dinner of greens. That was a costly morsel for him. But now, men sell out "cheap for cash or produce." Churches that were once powerful for good are now well nigh lost in forms and fashions. We may shut our eyes and wink and whine, and cry old fogy, and grandfather, and Moses and Aaron, and all that, but the fact is before us, pride, fashion, and extravagance are eating the very life out of many of the heretofore best congregations in the land. The world is running crazy. The rich lead the way, because they can, while the poor strain every nerve to keep in sight; and and the devil laughs to see them rush on. Pride "thrust Nebuchadnezzer out of men's society, Saul out of his kingdom, Adam out of paradise, and Lucifer out of heaven." And it will shut many more out of heaven, who are now prominent in the church. Neither death nor the grave will change the moral character of any one. The same spirit that controlled in life, will cling to the soul in death, and enter with it into eternity. The angels of God would shrink from the society of many a fashionable christian of this day. A few such souls in heaven would ruin everything. Among the first thing they would propose would be a change of fashion. Those pure white robes that the saints wear would not suit their taste at all. In life they care little about Christ and spiritual things, and they would care no more for them in heaven than on earth. If there were two heavens, one where Jesus is all in all, and the other with a Paris in it, I presume the road to the Paris heaven would be crowded with fashionable Christians. "Ma" said a little girl, "If I should die and go to heaven, should I wear my moire antique dress?" No my love, we can scarcely suppose we shall wear the same attire of this world in the next.' "Then tell me ma, how the angels would know I belonged to the best society?" In the views of that little girl we have illustrated the spirit of many a would-be Christian of this day. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

Contentment is happiness.

A LETTER FROM ABROAD.

Hamburg, Germany, May 1st., '73.

My dear Father and Sarah:—We left New York on Friday at one o'clock April 18th. We took the steamer the 17th at one o'clock; it rained so hard and was such a storm, that we did not leave until the next morning. As soon as we got fairly out to sea, we all took sick. I the first, then Lannie, then Olive and Howard. We lay on benches on the deck all day. At night we dragged ourselves to our beds, but were too sick to undress. The next day Lannie and myself lay in bed all day. Olive and Howard went on deck and remained there most of the day. Howard got well enough to take care of the rest of us, and Olive got better soon; but Lannie and myself were sick all the way over but two days. We were out twelve days and all that time we did not land. We stopped out at sea about one mile, at Plymouth England, where they sent a little steamer to take the mails, and some passengers, and then we landed in the channel, at Cherbourg, France, where they again sent out a little steamer to take the mails and forty passengers, that were going into France. We stopped at Plymouth England, on Monday morning at six, at Cherbourg France in the evning at five o'clock. Then we came into the German sea where it was fearfully stormy. We came out of the German sea into the Elbe River at ten o'clock yesterday morning. We came up the river about twenty miles where we were transferred from the steamer Silex, to a river steamer that brought us to Hamburg, so we were out nearly thirteen days. Oh you do not know how thankful we were when we could set our feet on land once more. The continual motion of the steamer for a long time, seeing nothing but water and once in a while a sailing boat or a steamer, is more tiresome than I can tell, especially when one is sick all the time, and has no appetite. I never want to cross the sea again but once, and that is to go home to America. Coming up the Elbe River yesterday, we saw some strange looking villages. The houses are only one story high, and the roofs run up to a point. They looked so strange to us. But we also saw some beautiful castles and lovely gardens. We landed here at Hamburg at about three o'clock. The city looked very strange to us. The streets are so narrow and the houses so high. Some years ago part of the city was burned down and has been built up since, and is more in the modern style. It is a very clean city, and is really a beautiful city; but the customs, and money—and everything is so different, that we have a great deal to learn. The people can generally understand English, but my German they cannot understand. When I speak to them in German, they do not know what I mean, or what language I speak. The hotel we stopped at, is a very nice place; everything is so clean, and we like the cooking very much. We expect to be here a few days yet, and then we expect to go to Berlin and stay there a few days. Then we go to Dresden, where we expect to stay 3 months, and commence to learn German. We can already read the signs in the streets. We have great appetites. We can scarcely get enough to eat. There was one woman died on the steamer coming over. She died on Sunday evening at eight o'clock. The same night, at two o'clock they lowered her into the sea, but we did not know it till the next morning. She was in the steerage passage.

Now I want you to write to me soon, I am so anxious to hear from you. We all feel quite well since we got on land. Direct your letter to Dresden Germany. The children join me in love to you both. The boys are enjoying themselves so much.

From your daughter,
NANCY L. SPROGLE.

WHO ARE THE ELECT?

Dear Pilgrim:—Whilst meditating on the goodness of God, the subject of election came to mind, and as I often heard people say a part was to be saved and a part lost, and that God designed it to be so from the beginning, for He knew all things, and the thought presented itself, how could God be just? Why not save all? While thus engaged, my mind ran in this way: Can I not say or do something to remove such doubts? And these words came flashing thro' my mind: all they that do and keep the commandments elect themselves heirs of the kingdom, none need to be lost, none will be lost but such as refuse to elect themselves by keeping the commandments. When I look at election in this light I feel to exclaim with the poet:

"Ride on, ride on blest Jesus,
Ride on thy crown is glorious;
Over sin, death and hell,
Thou wilt make us victorious."

HOW TO PRAY ARIGHT.

"When ye stand praying, forgive if ye have ought against any." This duty may be inferred from that petition in the Lord's Prayer, which says, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." But the practical exercise of the duty is here intensified by the injunction not to use an unimpressive generality, but in time of prayer to set specially before the view the case of the individual then offending against us. Only thus it is, that to any real or effective result we fulfil the part enjoined. Christians too frequently hold by the generality and omit the specialty. But when desiring to use Christ's prayer after Christ's manner, they must adopt His own explanation of the way in which they are to employ it.

O, blessed Lord Christ, who hast taught us that unless we forgive, we cannot be forgiven, forbid that our prayer for pardon should ever be rendered void by our slackness to bestow pardon on others; and help us to forgive those who have offended us, as freely as we ask forgiveness from Thee for ourselves.

What is my duty in all perplexities? Humbly to wait on the Lord and to seek his guidance step by step.—Rowland Hill.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE

A party of Mormon emigrants, who recently arrived in Paris on their way to America, have been warned by the Prefect of Police that if they attempt to hold their religious exercises in public they will be expelled from the city.

THE Yellow Fever has been raging with terrible fatality in some of the Southern cities. At Shrevesport, Louisiana, it is reported that there was an average of 40 deaths per day, the population only being 4,000. The city was so panic stricken that the dead could scarcely be buried, while many of the sick were uncared for.

THE Daily Graphic Atlantic Balloon Enterprise proved a failure in the first attempts, but Mr. W. H. Donaldson, the brave balloonist, has determined to reconstruct it and hopes to be able to make a successful voyage to Europe in a few weeks. In the meantime the Graphic Co., have now commenced a silk balloon of smaller dimensions, but with every improvement that modern science can suggest, and are determined to show the world that they meant business.

A strong argument newly illustrated, for the observance of the Sunday laws demanding cessation from labor has just been mentioned. The fact on which it is based we can not vouch for, for we have not inquired into it. It is said that most railway accidents occur near the end of the week, when the powers of the overworked and weary employes begin to fail and give signs of need of rest. This is asserted by the Chicago Mail. Hence it is inferred that there is a strong argument based on the nature of man for Sabbath observance.

NERVOUSNESS.—What is the cause of nervousness? Can it be cured?

ANSWER.—Nervousness sometimes comes from the constitutional temperament. One who has a strongly marked Mental Temperament, and not quite enough of the Vital Temperament, if he or she overwork or study too much, or have care and anxiety arising from unfavorable conditions, or large Cautiousness, will become nervous, as it is called. The way to cure it is to avoid tea, coffee, spices, alcoholic liquors, tobacco and opium; to live on simple, plain diet, retire early, and sleep abundantly, and avoid subjects and people whose tendency is to irritate and excite.

FINANCIAL CRASH.—One of the greatest crashes that perhaps ever occured in the United States, happened in New York on the 19th and 20th inst., 50 prominent houses have been closed, and the end is not yet, as many others must immediately follow.

The cause is wholly attributed to the wrong policy of our men of means, of investing in rail road bonds with the hope of realizing large gains. The result is, their boasted bonds are now worthless bits of paper, and their money spent in wild railroad schemes set on foot by visionary men who saw the beginning more plainly than the end. Those of our brethren who preferred railroad bonds to good titles for the Kingdom, will perhaps, think of our proposed subject, "How to spend money for Jesus," of which none of our readers seem to know enough about to give us an article on it.

BRO. DAVID BROWER, of Salem, Oregon, says: "I have exchanged my farm near South English, Iowa, for a farm seven miles east of Salem Oregon. This is the county-seat of Marion Co., and also the capital of the State. I expect to move on the farm about the 22d of Sept. Our crops are very good here in the valley, such as wheat, rye, oats and grass. Vegetables and fruit we have in abundance. The health is good. The ark of the Lord is moving slowly, but I believe a good feeling exists among the brethren generally. We have meeting about every Sunday but the laborers are few while the harvest is great. We would be glad if some laboring brethren, sound in the faith, would come to our assistance. We would also be glad to have lay members come over and help us carry on the great work of the Lord."

THE following, we extract from a Catholic Journal and goes to show how awfully depraved the human heart may become. Such a thing would seem to be beyond the credulity of an idiot, yet there are thousands who are otherwise intelligent, that will snap at such baits.

"The Rev. Father Lewis, of Clifton, Staten Island, New York., received last week a large supply of the miraculous water from the grotto of Lourdes. Any one writing to him and enclosing an offering will receive by express a flask of the precious water. The offerings will be employed towards defraying the expenses of the freight from Europe, custom house, bottles, labels, packing, etc., etc. Whatever is over and above will be given to the sanctuary of the Lourdes, or to some other charity. In using the water it is customary that the parties seeking to be benefited should make a Novena in honor of Our Lady of the Immaculate conception, and during the Novena receive the Holy Sacraments it possible. Father Lewis begs us to state that, farther than this, he has no time to answer the very many letters he has on the subject, but would advise all who can do so to read the beautiful book, "Our Lady of Lourdes,' by H. Lassere."

THE CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN.—Dedication of the Church of the Brethren took place, yesterday on Marshall street, below Girard avenue. It was formerly called the Church of Christ, and is composed of what are known as Dunkards. This sect emigrated from Germany to Germantown, in 1717, and, on December 23, 1723, were first organized with a charter. They have no written creed or confession of faith. Their place of worship in this city was formerly on Crown street, below Callowhill, which was sold last Autumn, and they commenced in October the erection of the building which was dedicated yesterday. It is a neat brick structure, 42 by 65 feet, the cost of which, including the ground, was $20,500.

The audience room will seat about four hundred persons, and is fitted up with stained pine pews and neat gas fixtures. The pastors of the church are Revs. Jacob Spangle and C. Custer. Among those participating in the services yesterday were Rev. Jacob Riner, of Montgomery county; Jesse Calvert of Indiana, and Grabill Myers, of Blair county, Pa. There is a comfortable lecture room in the basement of the church, and there are 150 scholars in the Sunday school, with an average attendance of 100.—Ex.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE.

The thing to be lamented is that the moment men of science get hold of a fact they instantly begin to see it in opposition to God's Word. But the vaunted "fact" of Tuesday often takes another shape on Wednesday, and on Thursday is found to be no fact at all. The truth is that geology, as a science, consists mainly of probable guesses. That "field of peat," says Sir Charles Lyell, "has probably been 7,000 years in course of formation." "No," replies a friend of his own, in a published criticism, "I think it quite possible that it has only been 700 years in growing." A piece of pottery is found in the valley of the Nile, and a geologist immediately argues that it must have lain there more than 20,000 years. But an antiquarian soon points out marks upon which show it to be less than 2,000 years old. Yet it is upon guesses of this kind, which do not amount to a tenth part of a proof, that the Lyells, Owens and Colensos venture boldly to assert that it is clear that Moses knew nothing whatever of the subject on which he was writing.

Just in the same spirit do Bunsen and his followers unhesitatingly assert that the growth of languages proves that the world must be more than 20,000 years old. We refer them to the confusion of tongues described by Moses, which at once dissipates their dream. "Oh! but that was a miracle," they reply, "and we have made up our minds never to believe a miracle." Very well, gentleman, there we must leave you; for men who make up their minds before inquiring are not acting like reasonable beings. A dozen other little juntos are now at work in the same laudable fashion. One set was not quite certain that a man was "developed" out of an ape. Well, and what was the ape "developed" out of? They do not know. Our comfort in all this is that this influenza will wear itself out like the Tractarian, or like the infidel fashion of the days of Bolingbroke. Men have been striving to get rid of the Bible and its inconvenient morality for nearly these 2,000 years; but they were never further off from their end than they are at present. —The Christian.

SEEKING THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

A farewell essay read before the Brethren's Sabbath School at Waynesboro, Pa., on Sabbath August 23d, 1873, by brother J. Zuck, Jr.

It has always been my desire to do what I could while connected with this Sabbath School, and I desire to cast in my mite to-day, by reading a few thoughts which you may consider my farewell address to the school. My subject is "Seeking" based upon these words of Jesus; "Seek first the kingdom of Heaven."

Seeking means searching, trying to find out, trying to obtain. It implies the existence of desire. We may know that a thing is lost, and this, too, is implied in the word, but unless we desire to obtain it, we will not search for it. The great business of life is seeking for something or other, and this is all right if we seek the proper things. But here we are very liable to fail. Many seek wealth, and when they obtain it, they put it to no good use; others seek fame and power, only to abuse them; some we are glad to know, seek the Kingdom of Heaven, but how few seek first the Kingdom of Heaven? The number is very small, and yet there is no reason why it should not be very large. There are many reasons why we should enter the Lord's vinyard in the morning of life, but no one, that I can think of, why we should neglect doing so until the eleventh or twelfth hour and run the risk of dying in the meantime or of becoming too old to be of any use after we are in. Death bed repentance may win Heaven—remember where there is a may a "may not" is implied—but youthful piety has promise both of the life that now is and also of that which is to come. Seek first the Kingdom of Heaven. This gives the time to seek.

Let us next inquire where we shall seek the Kingdom of Heaven.

Boys you won't find it on the streets and street corners after night. "The prince of the power of the air" is very apt to set up his kingdom at such places—it is a kingdom of darkness, blacker than the blackest night and if you are not very careful he will call you into his service. He is very cunning and deceitful and perhaps you are not as wise as you think you are. Beware, the paths of sin may seem very smooth and easy at first, but you will find them very crooked and dangerous before you go very far.

You have perhaps heard the story of the silly little fly that a big wicked spider coaxed up his winding stair. He told the innocent little fly that he had a fine parlor, a splendid bed a grand mirror and many other nice things, all of which it should enjoy if it would only come and dine with him The ugly spider! He had no such thing. His fine parlor was nothing but a miserable black den, where he would kill his innocent little visitors, and then laugh at their foolishness for believing his polished lies.

Well, boys and girls, let me tell you that the bad man is a big ugly black spider and that you are a silly little fly, whenever you think or say or do anything that he wants you to do. Don't forget this. Every bad thought takes you one step nearer his den; a vulgar or profane word will take you another; a disobedient act toward your parents will take you two or three and a quarrel with brother, sister, or a playmate will take you as many more. You are now pretty close to the cunning spider. Beware that he does not grab you and pull you into his den. If he does, you may never come out alive. His den is full of the bones of his victims! Every murderer that is hanged, every one who dies a drunkard's death, all who go down to the grave in disgrace, all these have been in the spiders den. Many of the spiders victims are put in prison and some are chained. You may see some of these poor deluded creatures at Chambersburg in the County prison, and others in the penitentiary at Philadelphia. All these were once innocent little flies but they have been in the spider's den so long that they have lost their innocence and look almost as ugly as the spider himself.

In other words, all these bad men and women were once boys and girls like you, and perhaps some of them had just as good and kind parents and friends as you have, and thought themselves just as "sharp and cute" as you do. But the spider was too cunning for them; beware that he does not prove too cunning for you. He seeks you day and night, and he often leads you quite near his den without your knowing it. But you can know it; he has three signs, hurry up. Look out for them. On the first you will see these words: "Bad thoughts" This sign hangs just outside the door. The second hangs inside near the door. On it you will see: Bad words." The third sign hangs some distance up the stairway, and contains the words: "Bad actions." You may read all these signs from the outside, if the door is open, but I would not advise you to stay long enough to read them all; as soon as you see the first, it is time to run. Run before you get tangled up in the spider's web, it may be too late afterward. As soon as you are old enough to read these three signs, you are old enough to be tempted, you are old enough to yield to sin; and in my opinion, you are old enough to give your hearts to the Lord, to become the disciples of Jesus, Christians. Seek first the Kingdom of Heaven. This is the only safe course. You will find a knowledge of this Kingdom and of the proper way to seek and find it, in the Holy Scriptures, and these we are all commanded to search. This is just what you are doing here in the Sabbath School. Here you can get help. This help would be very highly prized by you, if you could only appreciate the worth of what you are seeking, or ought to be seeking. It is a goodly pearl worth more than all the world. This being the case, how earnest we should be in our search.

You have heard of children losing themselves on the mountains. How soon the whole neighborhood is aroused in behalf of the little wanderer! A few years ago a child was lost on the mountains near my home, and though I was a hundred miles away, I soon got the news. How eagerly the people turned out to hunt the absent child! Men and boys searched the mountains from morning till evening, and from evening till morning, and so on for several days, but all in vain. All the mothers in the neighborhood made the grief of the bereaved mother their own grief. How rejoiced all would have felt had some one brought the news that the lost was found, and all was well. But this news never came. Months after, some of the bleached bones of the unfortunate child were found far back in the mountains, and near them, some gathered moss and sticks with which the lost child had perhaps built a little play-house to amuse itself in its last hours of loneliness and distress.

Now is it not true that many children are lost upon the dark mountains of sin, and others are losing themselves every day? They are getting farther and farther from home, and it is to be feared that their fate may be as sad, and perhaps much sadder, than that of the lost child. Yet how indifferent we are—we who ought to be seeking them. This thought is for the older members—the believing members of the school—and I would to God that I could present it right forcibly to the thousands of professed Christians who stand aloof from the Sabbath School and take no interest in the spiritual welfare of children.

And now a few more words to the older members of the school. It has been about a year since I become acquainted with you and the work that you are trying to carry on. In view of the sad negligence of some, and the sadder conduct of a few others, —all of whom ought to be here helping you along, in view of this, I think you have done well and that you are yet doing well. Some people are too apt to embrace every wind of doctrine, while some are in the other extreme and will not believe anything until they must. They must be educated into the thing, and education is a growth—a very slow growth too, with some people. The trouble is you can not get them under the educating influence. Could this be done their musty notions would very often disappear like darkness before the rising sun. Like Thomas, they doubt, like him they must see with their own eyes and feel with their own hands, but, unlike him, they will not go where they can have these tangible evidences. In the case of opposition to a good work like the Sabbath School, these things are very disheartening, but I don't think that this is just cause for abandoning the work. During the short time that I have been knocking—and I might add, parenthetically,—being knocked around in the world, I have found that many disheartening things must be met and overcome if we would be true to our sense of duty. It is disheartening to some people to be persecuted and evil spoken of for righteousness' sake—so disheartening that they break their solemn vows and backslide. Is this right? Certainly not, for Christ says to such; "Rejoice and be exceeding glad," and He assigns this reason; "for great is your reward in Heaven." I think it would not be out of place to apply this same language to the faithful Sabbath School worker. There is no temporal reward—not as the "temporal" is generally applied, at least. It is a work of love and self-denial. Selfishness and self-interest—in the baser sense—should have neither part nor lot in the matter. It should be the mission of the Sabbath School worker to impart and receive spiritual culture—heart culture—and at the same time honor God by winning souls to Christ. If he labors for this end, surely he ought to rejoice and be exceeding glad in the very face of discouragements, for great is his reward in Heaven.

The efficiency of a Sabbath School depends very much upon the efficiency of its teachers. A failure here is a failure that impairs the whole school. An indifferent teacher will make an indifferent class, and a few such classes will make an indifferent school. Teachers should be prompt and regular on attendance, and zealous in the discharge of duty while with their classes, remembering that their work is the noblest in which they can engage.

Let me entreat you to stand by your Superintendent and second all praiseworthy efforts to promote the welfare of the school. He needs and has a right to expect hearty cooperation. You have placed him in a position of great responsibility, and one that has, no doubt, been very embarrassing. Don't desert him when help is most needed, for it is a work for Christ and the good of souls. Be punctual, earnest, prayerful. It would be looked upon as cowardly for a company of soldiers to choose one of their number to be their captain and then disobey his orders and run away when the fight commences It would even be tho't unbecoming for a private to merely question the propriety of a command. But in this I am sure your Supt. don't want the comparison to hold good. He will cheerfully accord you the right to question, and will as cheerfully adopt your suggestions, if they would bring about an improvement. But let me entreat you to make those suggestions to him first, not to others until necessary, which will seldom happen.

I leave you, my Christian friends, in the hope that at least some of you have enough interest in my spiritual welfare to remember me occasionally at a throne of grace, while I am far far away, trying by a course of study to better fit myself for the duties of life. Pray that I may become less selfish, less self-willed, more devoted to the Lord and better qualified to discharge all the duties of life. This I ask as the most precious boon that you as honest-hearted Christians could grant. God be thanked for the prayers of pious friends. We all need such prayers—especially we who expose ourselves to influences that draw powerfully into channels that it is not our wish to enter. What these influences are some of you who have always been near those of your own faith, can not fully realize. Pray that I may withstand them.

And now in conclusion, let me express a hope that you may all prosper both temporally and spiritually with a prosperity that the Lord can smile upon and approve; that we may all do something to promote the welfare of our fellow-men and that in the end we may be found faithful and accounted worthy to inherit eternal life and wear a crown of rejoicing evermore.

As a Sabbath School, I now bid you an affectionate farewell.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

GET READY.

The time is now approaching when we will send out our prospectus for the coming year, and we hope our agents and friends will be in readiness to receive it and go to work at once. When we have in view any work we generally give it some forethought, in order that we may accomplish it most successfully, and so it should be with our agents who expect to work for us this Fall. You should look over your respective fields of operation and take a view of the material with which you expect to work. Think of all who might possibly be induced to take the Pilgrim the coming year, and how and where you can approach them so as to best accomplish your purpose. There is a great deal in the place and manner in which you solicit subscribers for a paper. If our agents were to go around among the people when at their work with as much energy as a book agent, or an agent for some patent right, there would probably but few refuse; but this work is generally deferred until Sabbath when they are met at church, and then merely asked whether they do not want to subscribe for the paper. By this method many do not take a church paper that would, if approached at the proper time and manner.

Brethren and sisters, it is important that we all take our church papers, and we should also feel it important that we get as many as possible to take them who do not belong to the church. Every member should have them in order that they may be fed and kept alive by the precious truths of the Gospel. Show me the brother or sister who does not care for our church periodicals, and we will show you one that knows but little about the church, and is dead and inactive. Then too, we should try to get those who are not members to read them in order that we may further the cause of our blessed Master. In view of this it does seem to us that our agents have before them a very important work this Fall, and one too, that should have considerable forethought. It may not pay in dollars and cents, but there is a time coming in which you may feel that you are richly rewarded. Every effort that is made, in true faith, for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom will have its reward, if not in this life in the world to come, and the more we thus labor, the richer and greater will be our treasures in Heaven. We hope then, that this work may receive the earnest attention of our brethren and sisters, that you may prepare yourselves to make a greater effort to circulate our periodicals the coming year than you have ever done heretofore. Wake up, the time is drawing near to commence the work, set everything in readiness and then go at it with a will. Try to arrange your other work so as to have some time to devote entirely to this purpose. Visit our brethren, sisters and friends at their homes, and urge your claims upon them the same as you would if introducing some farming implement, and we feel assured that much can be accomplished. There is no reason why the circulation of the Pilgrim should not be doubled the coming year, and from the letters we are receiving from our brethren and sisters, our prospects for a large increase are flattering, and all that is needed is energy and perseverance to double its present circulation. Then kind patrons, please get ready for a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether. J. B. B.

LONG EVENINGS.

The summer will soon be past and, with it, will end the busy season for many of our readers which will give more leisure for reading and writing. The long evenings are approaching which afford those pleasant little seasons in family circles, in fact, they are the Sabbaths of the days and are made to good account in Christian families in reading and obtaining useful and religious knowledge. The time has come that people will read which makes it the more important that we place within their reach, a sound and religious literature. This is what we wish to do and therefore, solicit the co-operation of all such as are interested in the welfare of Zion. Brethren and sisters, awake to the great work and make use of the talents God gave you in converting and saving the children of men. Many who have the time and ability to write, are apparently indifferent to the power they might exert for good, while others waste their time in writing long letters of complaints against what is written. This is not the way to improve the character of our reading, but get to work and supply us with so much good copy, that we will not be necessitated to use the inferior in order to fill our pages. Give us plenty of the good old wine and the new will be to lay over until it gets seasoned. Brethren and sisters, try it once, fill our drawer, and see if the Pilgrim don't come forth, more than ever, filled with spiritual food, meat for the soul.

A number of good essays will be thankfully received at this office.

JAMES CREEK LOVEFEAST.

Our brethren and sisters will please notice that our Lovefeast will be on the 10th and 11th of October, and that all who have a desire to be with us will be heartily welcome. We expect a goodly number of our brethren and sisters from the neighboring churches to be with us, and arrangements will be made accordingly. This invitation is intended to be general, but ministerial visits are always considered special favors. The meeting will commence at 2 o'clock on the 10th and be continued over Sunday. Those coming, will please make arrangements to remain with us until the meeting closes. We will make arrangements for the cars to stop at the Church in the morning and evening of the 10th, both trains, North and South. For the time of trains see schedule in Pilgrim. Those wishing to enter the evening services should come in the morning trains.

GIVE US THE NEWS.

The news of the brotherhood is called for by our readers, and in order that we may be able to give it more fully, different brethren have suggested that we have a reporter in every Church, whose special business it shall be to report every event that may be of interest to the general reader. This is just what we desire and for the coming year we hope to make such arrangements. Who will be our reporters? We would prefer if the churches would appoint their own reporter, and we will see that he gets such a compensation as our abilities will allow. We are willing to accept any suggestions that will improve the usefulness of the Pilgrim.

ATTENTION—PLEASE.

We have, standing out on our books, nearly $1,000. Of this we do not complain as we promised to wait on those who did not have the money when subscribing. We have now patiently waited nine months, and as we have some payments to make, and badly need some money, we now ask every reader who yet owes us for subscription &c. to pay us, if possible, between this and the 15th of October. Now brethren and sisters, let us see how much you can oblige us by sending or having it sent right along. Those who pay to agents, don't wait for them to ask for it, but oblige them and us by attending to it at once. We wish it understood that all who can and will pay us between this and the time specified will confer us a special favor.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim: It surely affords much gratification to have you say to your readers that my health is about fully restored. It has been steadily improving since last Spring, and I think it is on a better basis than it has been for many years. I have been discharging my ministerial duties regularly this Summer, and hope to be able to continue them unremittingly. I owe my gratitude to God for these mercies, and with His help, I hope to devote my restored health to His service. I hope soon to arrange my temporal affairs so that I can have the time to labor much more than I have heretofore.

For the benefit of those who are similarly afflicted, I will give the remedies I used.

First, I put myself on a strict, hygienic diet, consisting of bread made of unbolted flour, and green fruits of all kinds, canned in the Winter, and baked and stewed in Summer, but never fried in grease. I ate a few vegetables, but none cooked in grease, in fact I repudiated grease in every shape, and butter, and salted meat and pork, and cucumbers, all kinds of pickles, salt and pepper and every other species of condiments. I used eggs and unskimmed milk and buttermilk. I still adhere to this diet and hope to continue it indefinitely, so far as it is practicable. So, when I travel among the Brethren, if they have bread made of unbolted flour, and milk and fruit, they will not fail to gratify my desire as to diet.

For several weeks I took a form of bath called by hygienists, "a fomentation" which did me much good. Apply for instructions how to bathe to Dr. Jackson, Our Home, Livingston Co., N. Y. I would advise any that are afflicted with any disease of the stomach, and most all chronic diseases have their origin there, to go there if their pecuniary affairs will permit it. Also what is very important, I have tried to adhere to the injunction of the apostolic hygienist, St. Paul; "Be temperate in all things."

Our church here held its Communion in August. We were liberally supported by our neighboring ministers and had truly a feast of love. We have had no additions this Summer, but we look hopefully to the future for the time of harvest.

Our Methodist friends have made quite a number of conversions in this vicinity lately. As usual, on such occasions, the forms of admission into the fold were as various as the minds of the applicants. Some were sprinkled, some were poured, and some immersed. In immersing the latter they encountered quite a difficulty in the form of shallow water. But their ingenuity was equal to the emergency. The stream was too shallow to allow the candidate to stand erect and receive the backward dip. Now brethren what do you think was done. The minister directed them to kneel down as we do, and then, in the names of the sacred trinity, he immersed them b-a-c-k-w-a-r-d. It is strange what a propensity these single immersionists have to go backward. Right about face brethren and go forward by the divine order. Christ, the founder of our Church, never gave you a precept or precedent for your backward worship, though His enemies are known to have gone backward on several occasions.

I attended a Methodist sacramental meeting recently. They took the Lord's Supper, so called, at about 1 p. m., consisting of a morsel of bread and a sip of wine. It is hard for us to comprehend the meaning of the terms to designate the ordinance as they use them, while we recognize the intelligibility of our pure and good old English. Our only alternative is to relapse, for the occasion, into a kind of a mental and spiritual hallucination. In that happy state we might be able to understand how a bit of bread and a sip of wine taken at midday, in a meeting-house, by a company of fashionable men, women and children, Campbellites, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists, Lutherans, Calvanists, Armenians, Rationalists, Spiritualists, &c., ad infinitum, can be called the Lord's Supper.

We may be considered mentally and spiritually obtuse, but we choose to remain so rather than to become lost in such a labyrinth of isms and opinions. "Let us be of one mind," is an injunction that has more influence over our actions than the imputation of uncharitableness and self-righteousness which we hear occasionally in whispers designedly audible. Is not that right Bro. Pilgrim? (They all say let him be crucified. Ed)

At some future time I will contribute an item bearing on the famous baptismal controversy. Let this suffice for the present.

Your fellow laborer in the Gospel.
D. C. Moomaw.

THE ANCIENT LANDMARKS.

Dear Brethren:—The Pilgrim still continues to make its weekly visits to our home, and the oftener I receive it the more I feel impressed to write a few lines for its columns on its beautiful motto, namely, "Remove not the ancient landmarks which your fathers have set." When I look around and see the way things are going on in the Church, my heart is made to feel very sorry. I think any brother or sister with their spiritual eye half open, can readily see to their own satisfaction, that the ancient landmarks have already been removed to a great extent; but some one will perhaps say, in what measure have they been removed? We will notice in the first place, the manner in which we dress and see how it harmonizes with that of our brethren and sisters, we will say, of twenty years ago. Let us look back the short period of twenty years and take a glimpse of the church at that day. Every brother and sister could be recognized by their dress, but how is it in our day and age of the world? Do we not profess to be branches of the same vine that they did in their day, and should not we resemble each other more than we do? If we drift along in the same channel for twenty years in the future, where will we land? I fear the ancient landmarks will scarcely be perceptible. We want to complain of the cross being heavy sometimes, why is it that it seems so heavy to us? Methinks it is all our own fault. We increase its weight to a great extent, by trying to bear the cross of Christ on one shoulder, and the fashions of the world on the other. Remember the words of our Savior, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," consequently if we serve our Lord and Master, which I hope we are all trying to do, we will have to leave off the vanities of the world, and if we want to follow the fashions of the world, we will have to lay aside religion. For the apostle says, that to whom ye yield yourslves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness.—Rom. 6:19

Brethren and sisters, let us take up the cross and with a willing mind bear it after Him who bore it up Calvary's hill, and there did not refuse to die for us.

"Take up the cross nor heed the shame,
And let thy foolish pride be still;
Thy Lord did not refuse to die
Upon the cross on Calvary's hill."

A Sister.

H. B. Brumbaugh, dear brother:

Perhaps you are always anxious and ready to hear from the brethren, let the news be much or little.

—The Pilgrim is before me, and among other articles, I have just finished brother D. P. Saylor's on Religion. I generally like the brother's style of presenting his thoughts. They have about them no uncertain sound, but at once tell what kind of mettle they are of. I love to hear a clear and a distinct Gospel tone.

It seems that brother S. has entertained some ideas of laying aside his pen, and not write anymore for the brethren. He is an old soldier, and has fought many long and hard battles, and we can not yet see the propriety of his laying aside his weapons. Peace on earth has not yet been fully established, the enemy is not vanquished, false teachers abound as the waters cover the great deep, false religion is everywhere, and we now need more help in the great cause than ever before.

Christ requires that His servants enlist for life, or during the war—put on the whole armor of God, take the sword of the spirit and fight manfully till the war is over, then the righteous judge will give to all the faithful a crown of life that fadeth not away. As a thought of my own, I suggest that many of our aged brethren, who have both the knowledge and experience to do so, do not generally write enough. The apostle John finished his last roll when he was nearly one hundred years old. Moses continued to write till near the close of his long and eventful life. Solomon gathered his Proverbs when he was well advanced in life. Paul, when ready to lay down his useful life, did not forget to write to his son Timothy. We think brother S. has been on the field too long to now retire amid the din of battle, we need those aged and tried veterans who have long borne the heat and burden of the day, to lead on the destined victorious band, and when they retire let them fall while in ranks with the faithful, engaged with deadly conflict with the enemy, and then when with sad hearts we bare their bodies from the field to the tomb, we may console our afflictions with the thought that they have fought a good fight, they have finished their course, they have kept the faith, and there is laid up for them a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give them at that day. J. H. Moore.

Dear Pilgrim:—On last Sunday I attended meeting four miles South of Mt. Union. The attendance was small. The National Camp Meeting at Newton Hamilton, three miles East of Mt. Union, attracts the attention of nearly all classes of people at present. "Whithersoever the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together."

On Saturday eve., the Mail train Eastward was already filled to overflowing at Tyrone City. Large crowds were waiting patiently at the station for transportation, but were of course disappointed as the train rushed through as if it were a "fast line," and the disappointed crowds were obliged to walk or wait for the next train. On Sunday our town seemed to be almost entirely deserted. The meeting continued until Thursday. As to the merit or demerit of the affair I cannot say, did not attend. Those who were in attendance (some brethren) should be better qualified than I am, but one thing I am free to assert and prepared to prove, that God will be the final and just judge. In my next, if the Lord will, I intend to give you a description &c., of Mt. Union.

Fraternally yours,
J. B. Garver.

DIED.

MASTERS.—In Fayette Co., W. Va., Sep. 12, 1873, after a short illness, Ida May, daughter of brother Charles and sister Charlotte Masters, aged 5 months.

Thus dear parents, your little Ida has been called to go on before you, to rest in the bosom of God's love. A bright gem in eternity whom you may meet and greet in the realms of bliss. Labor and live on as pilgrims seeking a better country, abide your time patiently, and the day of deliverance will come to free you too, from this world of sin and sorrow, then in the great resurrection morn children and parents shall all come forth unto eternal life, the hope of that blessed meeting is sweetness even in the greatest of our sorrows. Look up and see the bright golden edge to every cloud of sorrow, affliction and bereavement, which shows God's light and love is just beyond. Lines by the mother:

Farewell my little Ida,
Thou hast from sorrow gone,
Left parents, brothers, sisters,
Deeply thy loss to mourn.

I miss thee, sweet little Ida,
But my loss is your great gain,
This world is naught but trouble,
Temptation, toil and pain.

We will strive to meet thee
When with earth we are done,
And live with thee forever,
'Round God's eternal throne.

J. S. Flory.

BYRD.—Near Ottobine, in the Beaver Creek District, Rockingham Co., Va., Sept. 14, 1873, sister Catharine, consort of Jacob Byrd, aged 70 years, 5 mos. and 27 days.

Funeral service by Eld. Geo. Wine and others, from Paul's letter to the Philippians 1:21., to a large concourse of people. These words were selected by the deceased, as she bowed in humble submission to the Lord. She leaves a large connection of friends and relations which are scattered over different States. S. N. Wine.

The following deaths occurred in our District, since February last, none of which were noticed in the Pilgrim. By request of the friends I send them for insertion.

Elizabeth, wife of John Hershey, deacon, Feb. 9, 1873, aged 82 years, 11 months.

John Shengle, deacon, Feb. 23, 1873, aged 74 years, 21 mos. and 17 days.

Abraham Kagy, deacon, June 22, '73, aged 55 yrs., 5 mos. and 20 days. The above suffered terribly of cancer, was under treatment of Dr. Metz of Massillon, O.

Susan, wife of Bro. Jos. Summers, July 29, 1873, aged 75 years, 1 mo. and 17 days.

Rebecca, wife of Christian Sollenberger, Aug. 25, 1873, aged 63 years and some months. Apparently in the best of health during the day—she left at evening—apoplexy.

Elizabeth, daughter of friend Joseph Brechner, Aug. 29, '73, aged 1 year and 10 mos.

Samuel Brechner, Sept. 4, 1873, son of the above, aged 3 years and 3 months.

Hiram, son of friend Jacob Hershey, Sept. 11, aged 16 years and some months.

Daniel Edward, son of David Flory, Sept. 16, 1873, aged 1 year and 6 days.

The above were all buried at the Centre Meetinghouse two miles south-west of Lonisville, Stark Co., O., Canton District. Services by the Brethren and a few others.

B. B. Bollinger.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa.
Literary Editor.

THE LAST PASSOVER.—A harmony of the Evangelists. An account of the closing incidents in the life upon earth of Jesus Christ, Our Passover; Showing the verbal harmony of the four Gospel narratives, arranged by John R. Whitney.—Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia 16 mo. Price, $1 00.

In the preparation of this Harmony the author has simply interwoven the different accounts given by the four Evangelists of the same events, so as to give, in their own words, one simple and complete narrative, not even adding a single word or phrase, not even an 'and,' 'but,' 'if' or 'then.'

The author says, "In this arrangement every word is recognized as a pearl of price, and every phrase as a thread of gold; and the attempt has been in the spirit of prayer, to so weave all together as to produce a royal fabric where the warp is God's truth and the woof the rich unfoldings of his grace; and the whole is presented as an offering of praise the King of Kings."

This is a very desirable title book. For sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa., or at this office.

THE ANCIENT HEBREWS: with an introductory essay concerning the world before the flood. By Abraham Mills, A. M.—A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. Price $1.75.

Few books can be selected that contain subjects of such deep interest as those, whose pages are devoted to matters pertaining to the Ancients. While this is true in regard to the history of the Grecians, the Romans, and other profane nations, it is peculiarly true in regard to the history of the Ancient Hebrews. "Here no darkness or uncertainty veils the mind respecting the truth of what is recorded; but everything stands out in bold relief; characters are exhibited as they were; transactions are recorded as they occurred; vice is uniformly detected and punished, and virtue, recognized and rewarded. JEHOVAH himself is the judge; and of the justness of His decisions no question can properly arise."

No books in our library are read with so much interest and profit by ourself and family, as those histories whose narratives relate to subjects contained in the sacred Scriptures. The perusal of this book will afford any of our readers subjects for profitable contemplation.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL.—An Illustrated Weekly, of Literature, Science and Art. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price 10 cts. per number or $4.00 per year. Monthly parts $4.50 per year. This is a deservedly popular Journal. It gives, in a weekly form, all the features of the best monthly Magazines, while its weekly issues brings it a more frequent visitor to the family than is the case with a monthly periodical. It bears evidence of the same thoroughness, care and ability characterizing the great number of publications—periodicals and books—issued by the Appleton's. The POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY published by them at once rose into favor with the intelligent reading public. It should be still more generally known and appreciated. THE NEW AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, their special work, has taken the lead and became a valued necessity to many thousand "learners" throughout the land, and world. They take the lead in Scientific publications. Also in valuable school and text-books.

THE GOSPEL VISITOR, a monthly Magazine devoted to the defence of the Gospel principles and practices, christian unioc, brotherly love and universal charity. Vol. 23 for 1873. Edited by Henry Kurtz and James Quinter; and published at Dayton, O., by H. J Kurtz Terms $1.25 per year

This is the pioneer periodical of the Brethren and commends itself to them by its consistent advocacy of a pure christianity free from creeds, confessions of faith or ecclesiastical rule. It has lived now over twenty-two years, and its annual volumes neatly bound, as we have them, would form a valuable addition to every brother's library.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the ORIGIN of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post paid. Address, J. H. MOORE.

LONGING FOR HOME.

BY WESLEY.

I am longing for the coming,
Of the snowy-vestured band,
That will bear my weary spirit,
To the sinless, summer land.
As I tread the narrow causeway,
Through this thorny vale, I dream
Of the joys that ever brighten,
Where the pearly waters gleam.

Where the flowers, by the river,
Fling their fragrance to the gale,
Where the ransomed of the Father,
The rich odor, may inbale.
While a strain, unknown to mortals,
Wakes the echo's of the shore,
As it sweeps its glassy surface,
In the happy evermore.

I am waiting for the signal
That shall speak my full release,
And present my welcome passport
To the realms of perfect peace.
Yea, and when my lagging sandals,
All the dusty way have trod,
I shall sing amongst the angels,
By the golden throne of God.

I am longing to be going,
Yet my Father's kind command,
Bids me tarry mid the shadows
Of this misty lower land.
When my pilgrimage is ended,
I shall stem the turbid flood;
And recline upon the bosom
Of the spotless Son of God.

PRAISE THE LORD.

BY CATHARINE MITCHELL.

Come to the blessed Jesus,
And rest within his arms;
Then you will fear no evil,
Nor shrink at earth's alarms.
Come, tread the shining pathway,
Protected by his grace;
It were worth a life of trial
To see his gracious face.

Sing to the great Redeemer,
Who formed the wondrous plan,
And left his heavenly kingdom
To ransom fallen man.
This world is fair to look on,
And mountain, sea and land,
All bear the solemn impress
Of an Almighty hand.

On all creation's altars
A sweet oblation lies,
And earth's unnumbered voices
Send praises to the skies.
The birds of varied plumage
That soar on wings above,
Join in the choral anthem,
To sing a song of love.

Each flower by the wayside
Lifts up its blooming head,
And breathes an odorous perfume
O'er field and valley bed.
The winds that sway the tree-tops,
And kiss the dancing brook,
Sigh with soft gentle murmurs
Through every shady nook.

All speak in glowing language
Notes gladsome or profound;
Then why should man be silent,
When nature's tongues resound?
Chant then the loud hosanna,
And swell the vocal songs,
To worship God, our Savior;
All praise to Him belongs.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

For the PILGRIM.

REGENERATION OF THE BODY.

In our former articles we have treated of the regeneration of the soul. In this, we propose to say something of the regeneration of the body. We have shown in our first essay that the primary meaning of the term is reproduction; bringing again into existence or to life. The necessity of a regeneration of the body presupposeth this body to die and to return to corruption which is plain, and we all know it by experience. But the same body shall be renewed and come forth. A renewed life is only revealed to us in the Scriptures. Through the atonement of Christ we all are reconciled to God as His children, but by committing sin we incur God's wrath, hence we become enemies to God, the soul defiled, the mind impure, controlled by the prince of darkness, under his power, and in consequence we act in opposition to the will of God. But by accepting God at His bidding and born of the water and of the spirit, we are adopted as God's children spiritually, the soul cleansed through the efficacy of Christ's redeemed blood, the mind renewed, the body still the same corruptible mortal.

The tabernacle in which the immortal soul dwells must be dissolved, die and turn to corruption before it will be clothed with immortality. The Savior compares the moral change in man to seed sown in the ground, "Except it die it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."—John 12:24. So the carnal mind must die, the old sinful man crucified, buried again, rise to a new life before fruits unto holiness will be manifested, and this moral change is called regeneration. Titus 3:5. Even so does the change in this physical body bear equal relation to same comparison. "Thou fool, that which thou soweth is not quickened except it die."—I Cor. 15:36. Hence the redemption of the body is called an adoption. "They that had the first fruits of the spirit," in the days of primitive Christianity, did "groan within themselves, waiting for that adoption."—Rom. 8:23. Now as the physical change bears the same relation to the moral one, we understand the Savior to use the same term, regeneration, to signify the renewing of the body in Matt. 19 28, the two only places we find it in the Bible.

The Greek term used is Paligenesia. Grove defines the term, 1. A new birth, 2 regeneration, 3 renovation, 4 change for the better, 5 resurrection, 6 existence after death, &c. A. Campbell and the revised translation use the term in the latter place, renovation. It certainly will take place "When the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of His glory," and when the disciples, who have forsaken all and have followed Him "shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." O, the glorious resurrection "when mortality shall be swallowed up of life," the ground-work of our faith, the anchor of our hope, and the eternal rock on which we will land and abide forever. Christ, the first fruits of the resurrection, burst the bars of death and triumphantly arose from the dead, and thereby obtained the victory over death, hell and the grave.

Brethren and sisters, let us be encouraged to persevere in our holy calling; there are great things before us, exceeding great and precious promises, for he that endureth to the end shall inherit all things. May we be revived in our spirits to put forth strenuous efforts in improving our time in the spread of the Gospel when we see so many famishing for the want of the Bread of Life dispersed among them. Let us remember we are citizens of a spiritual kingdom which had a small beginning, and is yet very small compared to the kingdom of this world, but finally is to swallow up all other kingdoms, and shall stand forever. Therefore let us labor for its enlargement with all our might for our days are few. Let that blessed change be ever bearing on our mind, anxiously waiting for that blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who then will regenerate our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself, for we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

O, the happy change, from corruption to incorruption, from mortality to immortality, when the sayings that is written shall come to pass, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Therefore my friendly readers, let us be born of God, show forth the fruits of regeneration as the adopted spiritual children of God, walk in all the commandments of God blameless, still try to go on to perfection till God takes us home, seals our perfection in death through Christ's atoning blood, in order to realize the final adoption, even the redemption of our bodies. LEONARD FURRY.

LIFE!—That which a man has, and has had,—the past, the living present, the future,—the oneness. Not alone to have come; not alone to breathe; not alone the play of muscles and the twitch of nerves;—but the doing, the evolution, the work performed, the destiny accomplished, pleasure made, evil avoided, the gloriousness of creation correlated into ourselves, and given forth by us."—From "Thinkers and Thinking."

DON'T.—Don't scold. It is a violation of christian principle.

Don't tell lies. It is a detestable sin and leads to ruin.

Don't speak evil of your neighbor. It is a violation of God's law.

Don't smoke, chew or snuff tobacco. It is an offence to thy brethren. —A. B. B.

IT is not the hasty reading, but serious meditating upon holy and heavenly truths, that makes them prove sweet and profitable to the soul. It is not the bee's touching on the flowers that gathers honey, but her abiding for a time upon them and drawing out the sweet. It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on divine truth, that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.

I am the way, the truth and the life, and no man cometh unto the Father but by me.—Jesus.

THE "CAP" CONTROVERSY.

As the question of wearing the "cap," as a covering for the sister's head in seasons of devotion, is creating a feeling of discord in the peaceful bosom of the Church, whatever will aid in clearing away the mists and stilling the tempest will, I presume, be acceptable. I propose to give for that purpose, a couple of paraphrases of the Scripture which alludes to the controverted subject, and, for the convenience of the reader, I will place each verse opposite to each. Where the interpretation is accepted alike by all parties the mark of equality (=) will indicate it.

1 Cor. Chapter XI.

Ver. 3rd. But I would have you know that the (spiritual) head of every (converted) man is Christ and the (spiritual) head of every (converted) woman is man, and the (spiritual) head of Christ is God. (God is over all.)	Ver. 3. =
V. 4. Every man praying or prophesying with his hat on dishonoreth Christ.	V. 4. =
V. 5. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth without an artificial covering on the head dishonoreth the man, for that is equivolent to having her hair cut off.	V. 5. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her hair cut off dishonoreth the man, for that is equivolent to having her hair cut off. That is a thing is equal to itself.
V. 6. For if it be shameful for a woman to cut off her hair let her put on an artificial covering, but if she will not wear the artificial covering let her cut off her hair, for it has the same effect in bringing dishonor to her spiritual superior, man.	V. 6. But if it be shameful for woman to cut off her hair let her wear it, but if she will not wear it, then let her cut it off.
V. 7. For a man indeed ought not to wear his hat in his devotions, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman, because she is the glory of man, ought to wear an artificial.	V. 7. For the man indeed ought not to wear his hat in his devotions, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God, but the woman ought to wear her hair for the same reason, that is, because she is the glory of the man.
Ver. 8. The man was not taken from the side of the woman, but woman was taken from the side of the man.—Gen. 2: 21.	V. 8. =
V. 9. Neither was the man created to be a helpmeet to the woman, but the woman was designed to be a helpmeet to the man.—Gen. 2: 20.	V. 9. =
V. 10. On account of this physical and spiritual dependence the woman ought to have an artificial covering on her head because this token of her dependence and this acceptance of her sphere, will be pleasing to her angels who minister to her spiritual wants.—Heb. 1: 14. Matt. 18: 10.	V. 10. On account of this physical and spiritual dependence the woman ought to wear her hair, because this token of her dependence and acceptance of her sphere will be pleasing to her angels who minister to her spiritual wants.
V. 11. Nevertheless the man and woman are mutually dependent on each other for their temporal and spiritual blessings, through the influence of their Lord who is their advocate with the Father.—1st John 2: 1.	V. 11. =
V. 12. For as the woman at the first issued from the side of man she has become an essential agent in the perpetuation of our species, by the ordinance of God.	V. 12. =
V. 13. You shall judge this simple matter yourselves. Is it proper or modest for a woman to pray unto God without an artificial covering?	V. 13. You shall judge this simple matter yourselves. Is it proper or modest for a woman to pray onto God with her hair cut off?
V. 14. Nature, that is the sexual, social and constitutional difference between man and woman, should teach us that it is shameful and degrading for a man to wear his hair long like a woman's or to apparel himself in any one style like a woman's, even as it is immodest and uncomly for a woman to wear a style of garments that belong to men.	V. 14. =
V. 15. But if a woman suffer her hair to grow long it is an honor to her sex for her hair is given her for a covering, or a visible manifestation of the physical distinction between the sexes.	V. 15. But if a woman suffer her hair to grow long it is an honor to her sex, for her hair is given her for the covering which she is to wear when she prays or prophesies.
V. 16. But if any man is disposed to object to my recommendations and demands a thus saith the Lord or authority from the Gospel, I cannot plead the pre-existence of the custom nor its adoption by the churches that were established by the other apostles but I advocate their adoption because I am the chosen instrument to preach to you Gentiles, and I think I have the mind of Christ.	V. 16. But if there are any that are not disposed to submit to these regulations then let them do as they think right. It is a matter of indifference, let them be pursuaded in their own mind and if any think it sinful to pray without an artificial covering let them wear one but if any think it not necessary they are at liberty to pray without it.

The brethren and sisters can read the foregoing paraphrases, as they justly represent the different positions of the contending parties, and if they contribute anything to produce a harmony of thought and action among us I will be more than gratified. In conclusion I will submit a few criticisms on the paraphrases of those who maintain that the hair is the covering alluded to by the Apostle.

Ver. 5th. and 6th. would sound more like the twaddle of an idiot than of an apostle, eminent alike for his depth of learning, his purity of heart, and his highly refined spirit; more like the gibberish of a soothsayer, than of the chosen of the Lord to instruct and enlighten an ignorant and superstitious world.

Ver. 15, would advocate the propriety of a detached covering of hair, something like a modern chignon, I presume, that could be put on when she was at her devotions, for this covering, take notice, is only required at times of worship. Taking that view of it, the apostle would have said nothing of certain specified seasons when the covering was essential.

Ver. 16 is the most incongruous and inconsistent of all the others if the anti-covering advocates are right. Paul has stigmatized the practice of praying uncovered as shameful, unnatural, dishonorable, graceless, &c. He used terms that we commonly apply to persons of lewd and profligate characters.

After such severe strictures and criticisms he is supposed to grow suddenly indifferent about it and to give every member liberty to do as he or she pleases. It is a shame, and it is not, it is dishonorable, and it is not, it is graceful, and it is graceless. It is, and it is not. Now the sum of such logic amounts to this. Evil has no other existence than in the mind of man, that is, if we conceive a thing to be evil it is evil, if we conceive a thing to be good it is good. If that is our law then repudiate the Bible, God and Christ, and everything else that the Christian holds dear, and embark on the rudderless craft of private opinion; and on the shoreless ocean of speculation, and soon the gloomy maelstrom of infidelty and rationalism will engulf us, and a putrid sea of spiritual filth will send such a horrid stench into the nostrils of the Eternal that nothing but a deluge of fire and brimstone can satiate his righteous vengeance. Brethren let us be one even as Christ and the Father are one.

D. C. Moomaw.

P. S.—I will not impugn the motives of those who differ with me on this subject, but suffer me to relate an incident that occurred here recently. A certain sister, after reading 1 Cor. 11th chapter, concluded that verse 15 was a key to the whole subject, and consequently she refused to wear her cap. She was affectionately admonished by able committees of brethren, but all our efforts failed. Soon she purchased a fine breast pin, and wore it, and then we justly concluded that it was the key to her objection to the cap. She is now with the Methodists. A brother who sympathizes with her opposition to "caps" thinks that it would be more consistent to wear the hair in plaits around the crown of the head. I think both ought to read 1 Pet. 3: 3. 1 Tim. 2: 9.

MY SAVIOR IS WITH ME.

What great consolation it is to know as we pass along through this world, that our Savior is with us, for He has promised to be with us if we do as He has commanded us. How these words cheer and encourage us on our way Zionward! They help us to bear up under our afflictions better than if we were alone. They are as sweet music to our ears, as we sit by the bed-side of our departing friends, to hear them say the Savior is with them. O that we could all have the privilege of hearing these precious words fall from the lips of our friends as they leave the shores of mortality. But there are so many that are not willing to accept of the company of Jesus whilst they are enjoying the blessings of health and the pleasures of this world, and therefore they cannot expect Him to be with them in a dying hour. What a dreadful thing is procrastination. It is one of satan's instruments in procuring subjects for his kingdom. How many a poor soul, is to-day lifting its fruitless cries in the regions of dark despair on account of that thief of time. Many times did the spirit strive with them, but procrastination whispered in their ear and said, it is time enough, you are quite young yet and there is plenty of time, wait for a more convenient season. But that convenient season never came, they kept putting it off until it was forever too late; they perhaps, were snatched away without a moments waroing. So it will be with many more if they are ashamed to be found in the company of the followers of Jesus.

My dear sisters, let us all with one mind and heart, ask the Savior to be with us, and let us show by our walk and conduct that He is with us and that we are not ashamed to learn of Him and be meek and lowly in heart. Let us not be ashamed to speak a word for Him whenever an opportunity presents itself. Let us not be ashamed to visit the poor and afflicted in the lonely garret, the dark dungeon, or wherever they may be found. Let us ask the Savior to go with us, and we will be sure to be benefitted by the visit. Many happy seasons have the disciples of Jesus in visiting the sheep of the fold, many deep impressions have been made on such occasions that will last through all eternity. They will have cause to praise and thank God forever more for the privilege and opportunity of visiting such in their affliction, for for we expect to pass through this world but once and let us do all the good we can. Then we shall be permitted to roam over the green fields of Paradise, and walk the golden streets of the New Jerusalem.

Our work will then be done,
Where troubles and trials never come,
We shall sing and praise forevermore,
On that bright and happy shore.

M. C. K.

FEAR NOT I AM WITH THEE.

How often has our hearts been cheered while passing under the heavy rod of affliction by the blessed promise of God, "Fear not I am with thee." He is with us in the hour of trouble to bestow his blessing; he is with us in the dark hour of temptation, and he is with us when danger surrounds us on every hand, always with us, ready to watch over, and comfort us.

Dear brethren and sisters, I am one of Gods most humble children, but as unworthy as I am, I can throw myself at the footstool of His mercy, and trust Him as the sinner's friend. I have been among you but a short time, only about two years since I cast my lot with the people of God. Since that time, I have undergone many trials and temptations. I have like many of you, but few friends among the gay and proud. They seem to think that my plain dress is a disgree to their society, but I have no desire to mingle with them. I would rather spend my time with the friends of my master.

Then let us, dear Christian friends, heed not the frowns of the cold world or the scornful smiles of the gay and proud for we need not fear while God is our friend.

"He knows what all his children feel;
He knows our feeble frame,
He knows what sore temptations are
For He hes felt the same."

When we pass through the valley of the shadow of death he will be with us, to lead us safely over the dark stream to the bright heavenly shore, where we will meet with the loved ones who have gone before to bask in the sunshine of his glory forever.

How sweet the thought that after all of our troubles, trials and persecutions, we shall rest in the bosom of his love, never to suffer again, but above all to see the Savior who has died that we, through him, may live in that blessed land of perfect rest; we shall be free from sorrow, sickness, pain and death, for naught can ever enter there to molest the peace of those made perfect.

It may not be long till some of us are called upon to cross the river. We may now be standing on the very brink of eternity for the angel of death to lay his hand upon us. Then let us try to live nearer to the cross of Christ, so that when he sends his messenger we will be ready, and then we need not fear for he will lay his hand beneath our sinking heads, and bear us safely to the other shore.

Your unworthy sister in Christ.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

Dresden, Germany, May 30, '73.

Dear father and Sarah: I wrote to you a month ago from Hamburg, and am very anxious to hear from you, to know how your health is, and how Sarah is by this time. Hope she is better, and that you are stronger and better since the weather is warmer. We remained at Hamburg three days, then we came to Berlin, the city where the King lives. The country between Hamburg and Berlin is very flat and low. It looks very much like our Western praries. The farms are very large and no fences. The farm houses are all built in clusters, and then the farmers go out any direction to farm. Sometimes there is no house for two miles or more. It does not look near as nice as our country does, with farm houses dotted all over the country. Berlin is a very massive city. It is so solid. So many soldiers there; wherever you look, soldiers everywhere. The women have hard work to do, and the able-bodied men are in the army, or rather walking about with their swords strapped to their sides, and smoking and drinking wine and beer. You never get water at the table for dinner unless you ask for it. Every one has wine or beer before his plate. The dissipation in Germany is fearful. We were at Berlin a few days, then we came to Dresden, where we still are. Dresden is a very pleasant place. There is so much to see here of interest. They claim one hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants. We visited the green vault last week where the jewels of the Kings and nobility are kept, or rather the jewels of the royal family of Saxony. They also have a very valuable gallery of paintings, one of the largest in Europe. So many of the pictures were painted in fourteen and fifteen hundred. We also visited a small town near Hamburg, named Eppendorf, where we saw houses about one thousand years old. We often talk about that; we can scarcely realize that we are in the old world. Yet everything is so different here from what it is in America. We see old and young women pulling small wagons about half as high as our spring wagons at home, and draw coal and wood. Sometimes they have one dog to help them draw, and sometimes two. I do pity the poor women; they are just as much of slaves in this country, as the blacks were in the South, only they are not bought and sold. I hate all the German men, they think a woman has to turn off the sidewalks, but they would not lord it over me if I had them much to deal with.

Olive, Howard and Lannie, have been taking German lessons the last three weeks. They can read a great deal, and speak a great many words; understand almost every word. Lannie writes a nice German hand, better than either of the others.

We expect to stay here two or three weeks longer, then we expect to go to Vienna to the Exposition, where we expect to remain one month. Then we go to Minich, then to Switzerland. We have all been quite well since we came to Germany with the exception of colds. I have so often wished for a good American night to get a good long night of sleep. It is not dark here until nearly ten o'clock, and a little after three o'clock in the morning it is daylight again, and as soon as it is light in the morning, the wagons commence to pass along. Then I can sleep but little. It is now seven o'clock in the afternoon, and with you it is about one at dinner time. We are about four thousand miles from you. When we were on the water, the steamer used to travel about three hundred miles in twenty-four hours, and sometimes more. Then we would turn our watches forward about half an hour every day, then they would be about right.

Some days I feel quite lonely and wish I was at home, then again we are seeing a great many wonderful things. I saw the silver cup Luther used to drink out of. There is a beautiful painting in the gallery of a discussion between Luther and Dr. Knox at Leipsic. Luther was born in a little town not far from here, the name Eisenach. We intend to visit the place week after next. There are some very old churches in this place, one built over one hundred years ago, and a great many forts near the city that were built in the time of war. Saxony has a King; his name is King John, the Wise. The Saxony people do not like the Emperor, King Willhelm. He is Emperor over all Germany, and Saxony is part of Germany.

The weather has been very cold, and a great deal of rain ever since we came to Germany. The leaves have not their full growth yet. I took a walk into the country two weeks ago, the rye was then coming out in heads.

It is so hard to get letters from home, we have had but two letters since we are in Germany. We expected to go to Frankfort when we left home, so our letters were directed there, and they neglect to send them to us, therefore we seldom hear from home. It takes three weeks to get our letters. We will have them addressed to the United States Consul at Dresden, and he will send them to us wherever we are. I am so anxious to hear from you, and to know how you are getting along. The children join me in love to you all. May God bless and keep you; hope it is His will that we can meet on earth again. NANCY L. SPROGLE.

THE POVERTY OF CHRIST!—How it sweetens and ennobles the poverty of his humble followers. What though men despise our lowly condition and extend their scorn to us. Christ has honored it, has borne its mysteries and looks with loving pity upon those who patiently endure it. He does not require us to bear any thing he has not borne. Are we cramped and harrassed for means to meet our necessities? He wrought a miracle to obtain the quota of the tribute money. Are we condemned to coarse and scanty fare? He plucked green corn to appease his hunger. Are we homeless wanderers among the bright and happy homes of earth's prosperous sons and daughters? "The foxes" of Judea "have holes" in the leafy coverts of her sacred mountains, "and birds of the air had nests" amid her vines and fig trees; but among all the dwellings of her pleasant villages and goodly cities, "the Son of Man had not where to lay His head."

Although homeless on earth, how glorious is His home above, "that house of God not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens." The homes on earth from the lowliest hut to the lordliest palace, are made discordant by sin and darkened by sorrow, while from cottage and hall is heard "the voice of Rachel weeping for her children." But within the pearly gates and jasper walls of the New Jerusalem "is no sin, neither sorrow nor crying, for God shall wipe away the tears from all eyes."

There he is preparing a place for us; and here he is preparing us for that place, leading us by the way that seemeth to him best. "Then let us endure as seeing him who is invisible, for our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And though we have no treasure on earth, let us diligently strive to "lay up treasures in Heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

Is God with us? What more do we want? Omniscience, omnipotence, and infinite love, are all these leading the van? Then we will not fear to follow, though it were into Hades itself; for if Jehovah led the way his saints would be safe even there. Treasure up that direction. Do not think so much of the presence of friends in trouble as the presence of God in trouble. "Fear not." What is the next word? "I am with thee, be not dismayed." What is the next sentence? "I am thy God." The richest consolation you can have is that which is derived from the presence of the Lord.

EMOTION IN RELIGION.

Surface emotion doesn't amount to much and isn't worth much. It comes and goes like the shadows of an April day. But there is a deep and abiding conviction, which is of another character, and has another price.

It seems to me that we want more Christian sensibility, more tenderness, more feeling—or breaking up of the fountains of our heart, like the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, a melting that shall dissolve all our hardness into tears.

This overflowing sensibility, this tender and weeping state, suits well every relation and duty of our Christian life.

Certainly it fits our return to Christ as those who have wandered away from him into paths of worldliness and forgetfulness. Think of coming back to him to hear him say: "I have somewhat against" carrying in our consciousness the self reproach—"I have not lived so near Jesus as I ought. I have followed him like Peter, afar off." If any of us are passing through an experience, does it not become us to go weeping night and day?

This weeping state suits even the joy of restoration. No one has ever had any very great joy who has not known what it is to weep tears of joy.

Could you come to Jesus and receive a fresh and full forgivness; feel his hand laid upon your head in welcome and benediction; hear him say, "Go in pence, thy sins are forgiven thee" sing that song, "Love I much, I'm much forgiven!" and yet keep the tears back? If you were revolving it in your heart, "O, what compassion my Savior has shown me! Every shadow between my soul and His face has departed. I am in near and constant communion with him once more!" would not your eyes overflow?

Such deep sensibility suits well the offering of earnest prayer. We cannot wrestle with God for great blessings with a heart cool and calm, whose pulses are unquickened, whose tenderness is slumbering.

Especially is this tenderness of heart our indispensable preparation for winning souls. You know what the promise is: "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing bringing his sheaves with him." Tell a man he is in danger of losing his soul and tell him as though it were a fact which you bore philosophically, and not as though it were a grief that were breaking your heart, and you will not move him, except to anger and contempt. You can say anything to a man without offense, which you say through tears. If you fling your arms around his neck he cannot resist you. You cannot go hopefully on an errand of salvation, unless you go tenderly. Loving and longing, don't use cold words.

Pray for this precious grace, or rather for this baptism of all the graces. Bring before your mind all the scenes that stir penitential sorrow, tender joy, love's warm solicitude and the fulness of the heart of Christ.—Rev. A. L. Stone.

HE CAME TO HIMSELF.

A marvelous sentence it is. In the Greek the thought is stronger. He returned and entered into his own self-hood, he passed from all surroundings, and lifting the veil, stood face to face with his own spirit—his own wasted, forlorn, degenerated, yet still grandly gifted and immortal self.

"He came to himself." Hitherto he had been a man "Beside himself," out of "his mind," acting without reason—bewitched by the spells of some strong sorcery, moving in the somnambulism of a wild and wretched dream. But that dream is now breaking. It is as if his spirit had returned from the sphere of the disembodied, to look upon the realities of the mortal life. He looked upon himself.

He saw himself as he had been—a fair young child in his mother's arms, a beloved boy, his heart bounding, his eyes flashing in the exuberant life of his father's home—a fair young man rich in money, in friends, in social influences and position, in appliances of mental and moral culture, in sparkling gems of tho't in golden, glorious possibilities entering upon life amid the noble arena of a great commercial city.

He saw himself as he might have been and as he hoped to be—in the full career of successful manhood—his eyes flashing with intellect, and eloquent with genius; walking bravely, grandly, among the multitude—a leader, a benefactor, a successful, honored, triumphant career—a full-grown, majestic man.

He saw himself as he was—a wretched outcast. His brow matted with shaggy hair, his dark eyes sunken and heavy, his face bloated, his eloquent lips swollen, his lofty form bent, and crouching, and covered with tattered rags; shrunken, wasted, famishing, wallowing in the mire wherein unclean beasts wallow, munching the unseemly husk whereon the swine fattened. A beloved son! a spurned menial! a glorious man forlorn, ruined, lost!

He looked into himself, bending under his degrading task, lying down in dreamy rest in the sty and pen. And all this in the midst of God's fair world; the Summer hills all around him waving their palms as brave banners; the winds, as they wrestle even with his tangled locks, shouting their watch-words; the great blue Heaven above thrilling with voices, flashing immortal man to life's brave struggles and grand reward; and yet he a discord among nature's harmonies—a blot on nature's writings—a spirit fallen from life's high places, something meant to be a man, but now only a wreck—a desolation! So he seems to himself.—Charles Wadsworth.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE

ANOTHER fire occurred recently in Chicago. The flames spread rapidly until sixty-four houses were burned, chiefly wooden tenements. The loss is estimated at $125,000, which is largely covered by insurance. A large number of families were thrown out of homes but were properly cared for.

THE German Government has resolved to expel the members of the religious orders of the Redemptorists, Lazarists, Congregations of the Holy Ghost and Sacred Heart, and the occupants of close convents from the country within the coming six months.

GEORGE SMITH, of the Daily Telegraph, correspondent in Assyria, has found the King's library at Ninevah, and discovered numerous valuable fragments, particularly the missing portions of the broken tablet containing the history of the deluge, hitherto deciphered in the British Museum.

Between two and three hundred Japenese youths are still in this country in the pursuit of education, notwithstanding so many have been recalled. These men will be agents of civilization and many of them of Christianity when they go home.

They will be if they are not taught creeds and faiths instead of the doctrines of the Bible. True Christianity is indeed a civilizing agency.

The new Jewish year 5634, commenced last Sunday, and the Jewish Messenger prays that it may bring every blessing to those that dwell on earth, and imbue their hearts with the proper spirit to act right, so that when they are called upon to close their account here they may have some claim to enjoy happiness hereafter.

ELD. A. J. Correll of Forest City, Mo., says: "We have had a very dry season this Summer. The corn crop will be short but will be sufficient for home consumption. Of wheat, rye and oats, we had a heavy crop and sells at fair prices. As for the church, it appears to be in a good condition, and the ark of the Lord is still moving along. The church within the last three years, has increased nearly four double. To God be the praise."

The troubles of the Roman Catholics in Prussia are endless. The endowments of many parish priests are derived from interest on invested capital and rent of land. It has been pointed out to those who have to make payments from these sources to the parish priests that they expose themselves to be sued if they hand the money to priests appointed by the bishops contrary to the laws, and whose receipts could therefore not be legally recognized. There is only one way to be delivered from Rome, and that is to come out of her and be no more a partaker of her sins.—N. Y. Observer.

JEWS IN THIS CITY.—There are more Jews in New York than in Jerusalem, and more than any other city in the world, it is said by those who have studied their present state. Mr. Mingins says of New York, "There are more Germans than in Berlin, more Irishmen than in Dublin, more Catholics than in Rome and more Jews than in Palestine." The census does not give religious statistics, but the number of professing Jews residents of this city, has been approximately estimated by the number of Passover biscuits manufactured for their use. The bakeries produced on the average for the last decade, 800,000 pounds yearly, which at the rate of one pound per day for each adult during the eight days generally observed, would make a number of 100,000 persons. They have an Orphan Asylum to accommodate 250 orphans, a Hospital and a number of charitable societies, among which is the Independent Order of B'nai Berith, and have also established within the last few years a Home for aged and indignant of both sexes managed by ladies.

THE YELLOW FEVER.—Most distressing accounts come from Shreveport, La., concerning the ravages of the Yellow Fever. The number of deaths has been very large, and great suffering has prevailed. Large donations of money are being made throughout the country. The great deficiency is in nurses and physicians. The Howard Association, Masons, Odd Fellows, and other Societies, are doing all they can for the relief of the afflicted. The disease is also epidemic in Memphis, but it is believed that its spread may be checked.

THE Methodists and Baptists down in Charleston, South Carolina, have had a little business set-to, which goes to show that neither party has had the leaven of worldliness quite kneaded out yet. The Baptists had a $60,000 church they couldn't pay for, and sold to the Methodists for $20,000. But before the transfer was made, they saw a chance of escape, and repented of their bargain. But the shrewd Methodists insisted that "business was business," and held them to the letter of the contract, threatening them with a lawsuit for damages if they receded. The Baptists find themselves minus a meeting-house, and the Methodists have got a $60,000 church for a third of its value. It was a sharp business transaction as between brokers, but shows that Southern Christianity needs reconstructing slightly.

THE question whether the Bible shall be read in our common schools is considerably agitated and discussed in some States. In New York a Methodist minister recently preached a sermon on the subject, and at the close of the sermon they really appointed a committee to examine the matter and ascertain whether the Board of Education could with legality suffer the Bible to be taken from the common schools. It does seem strange that there should be any discussion about this matter. Can there be any evil result from the reading of the Bible? The idea is preposterous. It is really a shame that a question of this kind is discussed in a Christian land like ours. There is something at the bottom of this discussion that emanates directly from the adversary, and is hurling thousands to perdition. It is prejudice. If men would read the Bible with an unprejudiced mind, a different state of affairs would exist. These sectarian differences would be all wiped out and men would be as the apostle exhorts, "all joined together in the same mind and the same judgment." Then there would be no fears about having the Bible read in school

A Presbyterian minister in giving an account of the contributions of the church on the Pacific coast says: "During the past year the church gave to the boards &c., $13,316, or about $2.28 to each member. The average throughout the church at large is, however, about $3,28 a member."

This looks as if they have a zeal for the cause they are advocating, and are willing to give of their abundance to the advancement of their doctrine. It does seem to us that the zeal manifested by other churches should teach us, as a church, how to labor for the advancement of the true principles of the Bible. The apparent zeal may not be according to godliness, but still it should be an example to us who profess to have a a zeal that is according to godliness. Why do we not, according to the directions given in divine record, lay by every week for this purpose as the Lord blesses us? There are perhaps many of our members that have given comparatively nothing, perhaps have never given $3,28 for the support of the church. Why is it? Is it not a duty? And if so, will not our negligence, may we not say covetousness, stand against us at the great day of final accounts? These are considerations for us to think of, and it does seem to us that it is high time we as a church learn better how to spend our money so as to meet the approval of God.

Youth's Department.

MY THREE LITTLE TEXTS.

I am very young and little;
I am only just turned two,
And I cannot learn long chapters,
As my elder sisters do.

But I know three little verses
That ma has taught to me,
And I say them every morning
As I stand beside her knee.

The first is, "Thou God seest me."
Is not that a pretty text?
And "Suffer the little children
To come unto me" is the next.

But the last one is the shortest:
It is only "God is love."
How kind He is in sending us
Such sweet verses from above!

He knows that chapters I can't learn,
So I think He sent those three Short easy texts on purpose
For little one's like me.

THE HIDDEN SERPENT.

Serpents or snakes, notwithstanding their spots, stripes, and pretty colors, are looked upon as ugly things, and there are few but what dread the sight of them. This may be largely the result of training, as there are many other things that we love that are really much uglier. We suppose this is on account of the part it played in the Garden of Eden. Those of you who read the Bible remember how Satan entered the serpent and then approached mother Eve and tempted her to eat the forbidden fruit. Why it was that satan made choice of the serpent, we cannot tell, but the possible reason is on account of its cunningness. It is said to be the most subtle creature of the field. Because it was cunning and showed its wit among the other creatures of the Garden, satan made choice of it as a mantle or covering to hide his own ugliness, and thus accomplished his designs in deceiving our first parents. Because of its being used for this bad purpose God declared it should no longer walk on its legs but crawl on its belly. Ever since that time, the snake has had a bad reputation and every man's, boy's and girl's hands are raised against it, just as if satan continued to speak from his ugly forked tongue. This, though, is a mistake as satan has got entirely too proud to be a snake any more, but now enters the very prettiest places and things just wherever he can get a hole in which he can creep in order to do some mischief, hence, he is still compared to the snake in the grass, or called the hidden serpent. It is true, he is said to be going about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, but he wears such pretty clothes and makes such fine speeches that no person seems to be afraid of him. This is what makes him the more dangerous.

Not long since a little girl, as she was walking along, noticed a bunch of very beautiful flowers and with joy, she ran to secure the coveted prize, but as she was about to grasp them, she saw in the bunch a large serpent ready to make the fatal stroke, should she attempt to take them. Now what we wish to tell you is that this hidden serpent exists not only among the pretty flowers, but in every forbidden pleasure. Every sin puts on its most beautiful colors, but beneath them lies the hidden serpent. Sin within itself is ugly, hateful, and there is no little boy or girl that would think of touching it, was it not, that it hides its ugliness behind some pretty flower or tempting enjoyments. Many of these things are the devils bait, and if you are not careful to let them alone, you will be caught in his trap. Thousands of our young men are tempted by the sparkling cup. When it is red it is beautiful, and to the taste it is pleasant and sweet, but in the end, it stingeth like an adder and biteth like a serpent. The hidden serpent is in it, but reserves the the bite until the victim is within his grasp. Just so many of our young girls and boys, and old ones too, are bitten by that most deceptive of all flowers, pride. To the eye it is charming and the flesh lusts after it as if there was nothing else half so desirable, but at last the hidden serpent appears for it is declared that those who sow to the flesh, reap corruption, and again; the proud, with all those that forget God shall be cast into hell. Fashions, with all their allurements, are the devils trappings and are used as baits to get you in. He well knows if he can keep your hearts on these things you will have no time to serve God, because he always keeps you busy while in his service. My young friends beware of the hidden serpent.

UNCLE HENRY.

I DON'T CARE.

A few days ago a number of boys were playing in the street and presently a lady come out of the house and called her son, who was among the number, to come and help her do some work in the house. But the boy paid little attention to her call and still kept on playing. After while a younger brother came and told him that his mother was needing him very badly and if he did not come she would punish him. And what do you think was his reply? He really said I don't care. Is it possible that a boy will not care for the feelings of his kind mother? Now that mother must have been wounded to think that her son did not care to willingly disobey her, and that he would refuse to assist her when she so much needed him.

"I don't care!" Boys and girls, think of what your parents have done for you; how they watched over you in your infancy, how they have provided for you, how they have cared for you. Surely you must conclude that it is very ungrateful to be so indifferent to their wishes. If you do not care to comply with the wishes of your parents who have done so much for you, what is it that you will care for? If you are careless and indifferent to their wishes, you will be so to every one, your brothers and sisters, your friends, and in fact to everything you do. It is only the boy or girl that cares for the opinion of others that is loved and respected. If you do not care for the feelings of others or what they may think of you, it is not likely they will care about you, and if you have no one to care for you how very unhappy you must feel. If then you would be happy and make others happy, you must not be indifferent to the feelings of others, you must care to obey your parents, your teachers, and treat with respect all who may care enough for you to advise or instruct you.

"I don't care," has caused much sorrow in the world, and we hope the little readers of the PILGRIM will avoid this feeling of carelessness. The first command of promise is that you be obedient unto your parents, and if you are careless about it you will incur the displeasure of God. Remember boys and girls, that it is this carelessness about your duty to God and man that will be the great lament of many a soul.

YOUR FRIEND.

TELLING A LIE WITH A FINGER.—A little boy for a trick pointed with his finger to the wrong road when a man asked him which way the doctor went. As a result, the man missed the doctor and his litte boy died, because the doctor came too late to take a fish-bone from his throat. At the funeral the minister said the boy was killed by a lie, which another boy told with his finger.

I supposed, says uncle John, that the boy did not know the mischief he did. Of course, no body thinks he meant to kill a little boy when he pointed the wrong way. He only wanted to have a little fun, but it was fun that cost somebody a great deal; and if he ever heard of the results of it, he must have felt guilty of doing a mean and wicked thing. We ought never to trifle with the truth.

A HOUSE uninhabited soon comes to ruin, and a soul uninhabited by the Holy Spirit of God verges faster and faster to destruction.—Toplady.

THE MODE OF PREACHING.

At the close of our treatise on Ministerial Qualifications, we promised to give our readers something on the mode of preaching. This is our present intention, and we have just been informed that theories consist of nice calculations and fine wit, but when we come to practice, we have stubborn facts to deal with. Just so, and the more stubborn these facts are, the more carefully and persistently should we deal with them. Incorrect habits are harder to unlearn than are correct ones to learn, hence it becomes the more necessary to give them our early attention.

After the necessary qualifications, intellectual, successful preaching consists, first in the man. Notwithstanding, many people denounce the science of phrenology yet the first thing they do on seeing a man is to portray his character, and pass their opinion on his disposition. Ask them for the basis of their opinion, and they will tell you that they judged from his appearance. Just so and that is the very way that phrenologists come to their conclusions. Then in a certain sense we are all phrenologists, but ofttimes do not arrive at strictly correct conclusions for want of thorough investigation. Nevertheless, it is a stubborn fact that all will, whether experienced, or inexperienced, form an estimate of the character and ability of others at sight, and very often pretty correctly too. Of all callings, the minister of the Gospel must pass through the most rigid investigation and criticism, hence the great importance of us studying how to appear before our congregations, in order that we may exert the most favorable influence for good. The first point we will notice is that of cleanliness of person and apparel. Some writer says that cleanliness is next to godliness but we would prefer to have it, cleanliness belongs to godliness. A man to enter the stand filthy in person and apparel not only shames himself but he disgraces the place he occupies and the position he fills. This may seem a little severe but we mean all we say in its fullest sense. There is positively no excuse for filthiness as long as God sends us rain, which is intended especially for our purification. Cleanliness is not only a christian virtue, but it is essential for the enjoyment of good health and when it adds to our influence for good its importance is made doubly great.

Tidyness is another essential point in the appearance of the minister. This consists in having the hair and beard nicely combed and the clothes properly adjusted. A neglect of this amounts to carelessness and exerts an unfavorable influence, as a man that is slipshod in his apparel will manifest the same disposition in everything else he undertakes. The apostle says: "Let everything be done decently and in order," and to wear our clothes in a slovenly manner is not in order. In taking this position, we do not wish to be understood as advocating pride, that is quite another thing. Many of our old and most influential brethren were very strict in regard to cleanliness and the order of their apparel, and in this respect, set examples worthy to be followed by some of our young ministers. No matter how plain or cheap the clothing may be, if it is clean and worn in a tidy manner, it looks well and commands respect. Jewish historians say that Christ, our Savior, was exceedingly comely in His person and of more than ordinary taste, having his hair parted in a straight seam on the middle of his head, and wore his clothes strictly in accordance with the Jewish custom of style and cleanliness. If any imagine that slovenliness is humility they are very much mistaken, as religion has a purifying effect on the body as well as the soul. Let us ever remember that our calling is an "high calling," and to fill it honorably we must have pure hearts and clean garments.

Another very important feature in successful preaching is that of jesture, which signifies bearing or movement of the body and limbs so as to convey our ideas with greater force. The best possible rule for gesticulation is, be natural. It is as natural for man to make gestures as it is to talk, the fact is, men cannot and will not speak without making gestures, more or less. The true minister speaks with his whole body, the feet, the legs, the arms, the hands, the eyes and the head all are aids in enforcing our ideas, but if any of the parts are used out of place, they fail to fill the design, and the gestures then become ludicrous and are out of order. Some of us, through force of wrong habit, have got to doing this, and to break ourselves of it, is exceedingly difficult, yet it can be done if we are determined, and to become efficient, in so great a work is certainly worth an effort. True gestures consists not in stamping the feet, pounding the desk, beating the air, knocking over the lamps and clapping the hands. This may do if we expect to take the devil by storm, but he is accustomed to so much clitter clatter that we can scarcely hope for this, yet boisterous speaking and boisterous gestures go together. The apostle Paul, when standing on the stairs, to get attention, gently waived his hand. This silent move of the hand had the designed effect.

Again, we say, be natural, don't be boisterous. Let your jestures be in harmony with the nature of your subject. Every move of the foot, the hand and the eye ought to assist in conveying an idea. If it does not, it is a false gesture and has a tendency to confuse the hearer. This is a fact well worthy of consideration, gestures mean something or they mean nothing. If they have no meaning, better not make any, if they have a meaning, still better not make any than use them out of place. If we, while speaking of the earth and the grave, were to raise our eyes upward, and point towards heaven, it would seem strange indeed, yet it would not really be more out of order than to be continually beating, pounding and clapping the hand when it means nothing at all. Such things, when not in extremes, may be in an animated discourse when the speaker is filled with his subject, in short, the gestures should be the result of the subject. Stand erect on both feet, don't prop yourself with your hands as if you were afraid of falling, present a bold front, look as if you intended saying something, and then say it.

A VISIT TO SOMERSET COUNTY.

On Friday morning of last week we stepped aboard the H. & B. T. Railroad for Somerset Co., and in a short time arrived at Bridgeport, the point at which this road connects with the P. & C. Railroad. Here we had to wait over three hours, which by the way is not one of the most pleasant places to pass the time. The accommodations are rather poor and the surroundings not at all inviting. The train South soon arrived and with it brought a number of others to experience with us the vexations of a long wait at a Railroad Station. A gentleman and lady from Illinois were among the number and they soon evinced their impatience by denouncing the country and railroad. They did not want to get into such a dilemma again and seemed to be surprised that people live in such a country when good level land can be had in the west cheap. Well there may be advantages in some parts of the west, there is no clambering thro' and over hills and mountains, but then it is certainly a good thing that all persons do not think and feel alike in reference to these things. The earth's visage in places, is seemingly marred by these mountains and hills, yet after all, give us the mountains and hills, the infinite mind was at work in their formation, and there is beauty in them that lies too deep for the conceptions of some minds. If any of our readers find it necessary to travel this way, and cannot appreciate natural scenery, we would advise them to provide themselves with plenty of reading matter, as there are over three hours time to spend at this point.

The train arrived on time, and after a short ride we were at Dale City. We soon wended our way to the Companion office and found Bro. Beer at his post and very busy. He expected to go to Armstrong county to take part in a discussion to commence on Monday of last week, subject, the Supper. Bro. Holsinger was on a visit to Philadelphia, and the latest intelligence from him was that his daughter, Annie, had cast her lot with the people of God. We were glad to hear of this, and hope she may hold out faithful, become a bright and shining light in the church, so that others may be constrained to follow her in the good resolution she has taken.

On Saturday morning early we went to the station to take the train for Mineral Point, and from thence to Somerset. At the station we had the pleasure of meeting our brother C. G. Lint who was also taking the train. We had not been personally acquainted with brother Lint, but as he had been described to us as a man of large proportions, we were not long in concluding that he was in our presence. He accompanied us as far as Mineral Point, and then directed us to the home of his brother, Daniel Lint, who lives near Somerset. We arrived there and remained with him over the Sabbath. We shall not forget brother Lint and wife for their kindness. We were conveyed by them to the homes of a number of brethren, and thus we formed acquaintances that we shall remember with pleasure. We attended church on Saturday eve., and Sabbath. The preaching was done by a lay member. This was a new feature to us. If it is right for members to preach without being called by the church, and if a good talker is the qualification, then we suppose the brother is the "right man in the right place." We don't, however, understand it thus, and we hope those of our brethren who may differ from us, will excuse us for saying so. We are not a David and will not therefore go out against Goliath, but if we were to exercise our feelings in reference to the matter, we would put a stone in the sling and hurl it at the head of this innovation. We do not by any means wish to insinuate that the brother is not sincere, but it does seem to us that if he will consider properly the nature of the ministry, and the medium through which ministers are to be called, he will not feel to assume so responsible a position. But we do not intend to discuss the matter here. From our knowledge of Holy Writ, we have an opinion in reference to it, but it may not be prudent for our humble self to be too free in expressing it. We hope however our brethren will stand by the "ancient landmarks" as established by Christ the great head of the Church, and followed by the apostles in reference to these things.

On Monday morning we were taken by our aged and much esteemed Bro. Lichty to the home of brother John D. Bear, whose acquaintance we formed while attending school at Millersville last Winter. We were pleased to meet him there and our object in taking a trip to this locality was to spend a few days with him. We had a pleasant time at his home and other places we visited during our stay. All will please accept our thanks for their kindness. Brother John expects to teach this Winter, and we feel assured that those who may employ him will soon find that he is just the man for the position.

On Wednesday morning he accompanied us to Dale City. On the train we had the pleasure of again joining the company of Bro. C. G. Lint. We accompanied him to his home where we spent a pleasant time. Spent the night pleasantly with Bro. Beer. Next morning visited the homes of sister Sallie Beechly and Dr. Forney, where we enjoyed ourself much. At noon started for home where we arrived in the evening. J. B. B.

A VISIT.

On last Saturday Sept. 27, we had the pleasure of a visit from our brother and relative, D. O. Brumbaugh of Neb. It was a long time since we saw brother David, and we were right glad for the opportunity of meeting him. He was formerly a resident of this State, but some years ago, determined to cast his lot out in the land of prairies where he is now doing well, and says he does not regret the change. From his information, Nebraska has many advantages and is destined to become a State of considerable importance. It is level and laid off in sections, half sections and quarter sections with lines and roads all running at right angles. This alone, adds greatly to its appearance. The soil is easily cultivated, productive and has an abundance of grass for grazing and hay. Water can also be had in abundance by digging from 20 to 40 feet. They are also greatly improving the desirableness of the country by planting groves which forms wind breaks and protects the buildings from the storms, but they are not half so fine as our old hills. Hills are ugly things to plow over but when we wish to dodge the storms they are real nice. Let others do as they please, we believe in hills, we can't help it.

Brother David also reports favorably of the people and the Church. Since there, he has been called to the ministry and seems alive to his duty. While with us he preached in our meeting house, and we were pleased with the effort he made. Though young in the calling he manifests a spirit in the work, and by proper care and study will make a useful laborer in the Vineyard of the Lord. He has our best wishes for success both temporally and spiritually. His visit East was partly to see his father Samuel Brumbaugh, who some time ago, met with an accident which it was thought, would take his life, but notwithstanding his age he survived and is nearly well again.

ATTENTION—PLEASE.

We have, standing out on our books, nearly $1,000. Of this we do not complain as we promised to wait on those who did not have the money when subscribing. We have now patiently waited nine months, and as we have some payments to make, and badly need some money, we now ask every reader who yet owes us for subscription &c. to pay us, if possible, between this and the 15th of October. Now brethren and sisters, let us see how much you can oblige us by sending or having it sent right along. Those who pay to agents, don't wait for them to ask for it, but oblige them and us by attending to it at once. We wish it understood that all who can and will pay us between this and the time specified will confer us a special favor.

Correspondence.

Dear Pilgrim: Again I will venture a few thoughts.

Mt Union, twenty years ago, when I first came here, was a small village containing about three hundred inhabitants. Since that time it has been steadily increasing. The present population is said to exceed seven hundred, among whom are only three families in which we find members of the German Baptist Church.

The prevailing religious denominations being Methodists, Presbyterians, and United Brethren, and each of them has a stylish meeting-house. Some brethren think we ought to have a meeting-house here, and some think of founding and establishing an institution for the "Training up of the Brethren's children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." I believe that both of these enterprises have become an actual necessity here. There is no place in the U. S., where these two things could accomplish more real good than at Mt. Union. The mind very naturally inquires, why so? and he who investigates thoroughly will find the following causes.

1. That the town is new and destined shortly to attract considerable of attention from the busy children of this world.

2. That the facilities which Mt. Union and its surrounings afford to the children of light for the interception and overcoming of evil cannot be excelled anywhere else upon the earth.

3. That the power in which man is an agency does not inhere so much in different earthly localities as in the man himself.

In regard to the first proposition, it is only necessary to say that the real age of towns does not depend so much upon the length of the time during which it has existed, as upon its condition with respect to its growth, and that condition with reference to Mt. Union is determined by the fact that there are already surrounding it, extensive manufacturing establishments, and more contemplated. Also three R. R's running into it, and the fourth one strongly contemplated; all of which has been induced by the recent discovery and development of inexhaustible quantities of minerals in this section of Pa., with other natural advantages, such as water-power and navigation, fertile valleys, well adapted to grazing, horticulture, agriculture, which are surrounded by mountains covered with valuable timber, &c.

The mere inklings of arguments which I have given to make clear the truth of the first proposition, will apply to the second. The true spirit of Christianity encourages its advocates to press forward and meet the enemy in his "strong-holds" seeking and saving that which was lost.

Lastly.—If the Brethren select Mt. Union or any other place having equal advantages, whereat to accomplish a useful object, they will find after succeeding, that their success depended mainly upon their constant perseverance. "As a bird that wandereth from her rest, so is a man that wandereth from his place." First select the place, next learn what it is to "wander from it," and finally stay in it. Fraternally,

J. B. G.

Dear Pilgrim: Please give notice in your pages that the Eastern District Meeting of Pa., gave a grant to a church, or as many as may join in the enterprise, to get up a better collection of Hymns that will be more adapted to the general wants of our German Churches, than the new one that has been published of late, by the general council of the A. M. Many of our members in this part are not satisfied with that edition, and therefore have concluded to try and suit our own taste by getting up a new book as an individual enterprise or grant as above, and have appointed a committee of three brethren for that important work, namely: Bro. John Hertzler, Bethel, Berks Co., Pa., Jacob Reinhold, Lancaster Pa. And as several churches of the Middle District of Pa., will concur, we thought it would be expedient to give those a representation in the committee, namely; brother Thomas Gray, York, York Co., Pa. These compose the committee, and are requested to convene on the 24th of October next, in the Spring Creek Church, Dauphin Co., Pa., to commence the work of the contemplated Hymn Book. We call upon all who have favorite Hymns, old ones, or yet in manuscript, good matter for the book, to please send them to one of the members of the committee before the date mentioned. We are desirous of having a good collection, and therefore solicit a liberal contribution, as the book shall come forth German and English, and therefore desire matter in both languages. Written by order of the committee.

Wm. Hertzler.

LITERATURE.

Literary Editor.

MAGAZINES—October.

Nearly every paper of interest and merit, of the present time, is first given to the public through some one of the leading monthly magazines. Many of the finest records of travel, and of the most popular books, in serial form find their way to the reat listening ear, admiring mind and appreciating taste, through the same medium. Politics, Science, Literature, Art, Religion, —all have their leaders, agitators and champions, and their mediums of communication; and those who do not avail themselves of the opportunities afforded through these channels fail to enjoy some of the richest intellectual feasts, and obtain the most valuable information.

The low price at which these periodicals are offered in clubbing with the PILGRIM and other papers brings them within the reach of all.

HARPER for October is filled with its usual variety of interesting and valuable articles. The leading paper "A Lady's Experience," is specially suggestive for woman. This magazine is now in its 47th volume and is still increasing in public favor. Subscription price $4.00 per year. Harper & Bro's, New York.

LIPPINCOTT'S for October presents rare attractions, and has an excellent table of contents. This magazine is a younger applicant for public favor. It is the most finely executed magazine in the country, and one of which Pennsylvanians can justly feel proud. $4.00 per annum. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

SCRIBNER for October is a capital number, and replete with attractive articles. The Scribners seem determined to make their monthly the successful rival of all competitors for excellence. We are pleased with its growth and progress. This number closes the 0th volume, and the new volume will open with new features and great attractions. $4.00 per annum. Scribner and Co., New York.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for October comes forth laden with good things. It is the champion of Progress and liberty of thought; and its pages are always fresh and exceedingly entertaining. $3.00 per annum. S. R. Wells, New York.

REPUBLIC.—This Journal has already become the recognized exponent of correct political principles. We like its tone. It discusses with ability the great political issues of the day. $2.00 per annum. The Republic Pub. Co., Washington, D. C.

SANITARIAN.—We have received a No. or two of this new monthly devoted to Sanitary Science in its various phases, and especially as related to the preservation of human life. A valuable periodical. $3.00 per annum. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co. have recently added to their list of valuable publications the first volume of a new and revised edition of "PRESCOTT'S WORKS," to be completed in fifteen volumes.

They are the publishers of the SUNDAY MAGAZINE, a profusely illustrated monthly of recreation and instruction. It has a high aim, and a good prospectus for 1874. $2.75 per. annum. Specimen Nos. mailed for 20 cents.

SCRIBNER'S announce the appearance of their new Boy's and Girl's magazine—"St. Nicholas," in October. Don't fail to please the children by commencing with the first No. $3.00 per annum. It will be sent with the PILGRIM at $4.00 for both.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the ORIGIN of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post paid. Address, J. H. MOORE.

POETRY.

EVENING BY EVENING.

Good night, ye gems of beauty,
Good night, thou gently blue;
On quiet bed I lay me,
And bid farewell to you.
Good night, ye wakeful woodlands,
Good night, ye sleeping flowers,
Amid whose smiles and odors
I've passed day's wayward hours.
Good night, ye star-tipt mountains,
Old friends, the tried and true;
Good night, ye wandering waters;
Ocean, good night to you.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

Good night, dear faces round me,
Night's hours will swiftly run;
And we shall say, good morning,
At the ascending sun.
The farewell hour is coming,
The last good night is near,
When I shall part in silence
From those who love me here.
Then, all my farewells over,
Just passing out of sight,
Unweeping and untrembling,
I'll look my last good night.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

Yet not good night forever;
For He who is my day
Will wake me soon;—I see Him,
Already on His way.
No, not good night forever;
I shall but sleep in Him,
Who shall arouse me early,
While yet the dawn is dim—
Who shall arouse me early,
And bid this flesh arise,
In glorious resurrection,
To meet Him in the skies.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

I see Him, lo, He cometh!
Himself the morning light,
To bring the dawn of gladness,
The dawn that knows no night.
O Bridegroom of the morning!
Bright bringer of the day,
Put on thy fair adorning,
Thy beautiful array.
Lord Jesus, star of evening,
Yet star of morning too;
Earth's uncreated splendor,
Rise on our longing view.
Good night to all, but not to Thee,
My God, who ever art with me.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE ONES FOR WHOM WE SHOULD WEEP.

"Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children." (St. Luke xxiii: 28.)

When they led the Son of God away to crucify Him, a great company of men, and of women followed Him; and it appears the women bewailed and lamented Him. But He turned unto them and said: "Daughters of Jerusalem weep not for me." Sensitive people, and especially women are easily moved to tears on hearing of, or seeing a scene of suffering or distress endured by some one, and it is readily understood why these daughters of Jerusalem should weep while they beheld the innocent and meek Jesus, who had never done harm to any one, and who had never spoken a harsh or unkind word while among men on earth, so used, and so ill-treated. But why is it that so few, if any now weep on hearing the account of his suffering read, or talked of. It has been, and still is a source of grief to many pious and good people that they cannot weep on such occasions. For the comfort and relief of all such, I will here say, that no human being can possibly take any part in the suffering of the Messiah. His sufferings were such as only God in the flesh could bear, or endure. And as they were all of an expiatory nature, no man can take part in them. Again, the sufferings of Christ are not a cause of sorrow to man, but are a cause of rejoicing to a lost world, for which He suffered alone; bearing in His body our sins on the tree, hence His suffering is no cause for men to weep. But for themselves, and for their children they must, and do weep.

In reference to the suffering of Christ poets sing, and Christians use unguarded expressions, in these songs and prayers: such as, "Give me to feel thy agonies;" "One drop of thy sad cup afford." Expressions like these are very inconsiderate and improper. One drop of that cup he so earnestly prayed his Father, if it were His will to remove, or take from him, would sink the soul into inextricable ruin, while the agonies he endured when his sweat fell like great drops of blood to the ground, would annihilate the human family. He suffered alone, because His sufferings were to make an atonement for the sins of the world. "Of the people there were none with Him, and in the work of redemption he had no helper." And for Him He will have none to weep.

But weep for yourselves, and for your children. Weeping when produced by ardent and holy desire, is a weapon most powerful in its effect; there is nothing that can awaken the latent sympathies in man so powerfully as heart-felt weeping; and when it is mixed with heart-felt prayer at a throne of grace, will move Jehovah in mercy to the weeper. Weeping is characteristic of God's people in all ages of the world, and Christianity. The patriarch's wept, the prophets wept, the Savior wept, the apostles wept, and God's people still weep. And so profitable and good it is to weep that the prophet felt like weeping much. He says, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people."—Jer. ix.

"And they that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing the precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Psa. cxxvi: 5, 6. And Jesus says: "Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh."—Luke 6: 21. Thus it is good to weep; the cause for our weeping must be good, or the effect will be lost. Tears are not always a true index to profitable weeping. Some persons weep and shed bitter tears of wrath; these I consider tears of sin, and of shame to the weeper. These Jesus loving daughters of Jerusalem must not weep for the cause they were weeping.

When the woman which was a sinner stood at His feet behind Him weeping, and washed His feet with her tears, &c., he forbid her not; but said to Simon, her sins which are many are forgiven her; for she loved much. This woman wept over her own degredation and sins, and obtained the forgiveness of all her many sins for which she wept. But these daughters of Jerusalem wept of sympathy; they felt for Jesus in His sufferings, which the Father could not remove from Him, hence He must endure it to save the souls of the children of men from eternal death; and the weeping and tears will be useless. They must not so weep for him, but should weep for themselves and for their children. And so Christ-loving women should weep. I think Christ-loving men should also weep, but as Jesus addressed Himself to women, I will confine myself to them in this article.

Mothers often feel grieved because of their own imperfections and shortcomings, and weep bitter tears of sorrow over it; but are more frequently overwhelmed with sorrow when they think of these children God has given them, and upon whom they bestowed so much care and concern, and prayed so often for, and over them, should feel so little interest in their own salvation. Not unfrequently while seated at the Lord's table contemplating their Savior, whose suffering, crucifixion, and death they are about showing forth in breaking the bread, a noise and disorder is heard about the door among the unregenerate; her heart throbs in her breast at the thought, my children may be among them. Mothers weep, not for Jesus, but for yourself, and for your children. And let your tears not be in secret, like your alms and prayers must be, but let them be seen flowing freely by those for whom they are shed; the effect will be powerful in breaking down hard hearts.

Young women, sisters, daughters of the church who have no children to weep for, have brothers and sisters to weep over; and perhaps even an unconverted father or mother may be the subject for their weeping. When these contemplate the vanities of the unregenerated, and knowing that these brothers and sisters have made this their companions and associates, and knowing too that evil communications corrupt good manners, their hearts are filled with sorrow, and weeping is the result. To these let me say, do not suppress your weeping, do not restrain your tears in the thought that some one might think you were unhappy in your religion. Let your tears flow freely, and let all know why and for whom they are shed. Your tears are precious, they are put in God's bottle, they are in His book, don't fear to shed them, first for yourselves, and then for your parents, brothers, sisters, and friends; mingle them well with your prayers, and you will prevail with God in your and their behalf.

"Weep for the lost! Thy Savior wept
O'er Salem's hapless doom;
He wept to think their day was past,
And come their night of gloom."

NON-RESISTANCE.

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is now power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinances of God: and they that re-ist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain.—Rom. 13: 1–4.

It is thought by many that this passage of Scripture permits a Christian to bear arms, provided he is commanded to do so, by the government or the "higher powers." At the same time there are many that will a limit, that we have ample proof to show that it is wrong to kill our fellow man in an individual combat. And there are others, who would not have it wrong even then, if they were in self-defence.

If we consider the subject under this hypothesis, we must notice how it may be lengthened out, and where will it land us. If we have the right to break this one command,—"Do not kill"—because it is the call of our country, have we not with equal propriety, from the same theory, a right to pass by other commands as well as this one? For instance, if the government would command us to worship idols, shall we not obey that call too? Let us suppose that we are under the control of king Nebuchadnezzar, and he sits up an idol, and sends forth a decree, that all nations, kingdoms, tongues, and dominions, must fall down and worship it, must we obey? "Shall we obey man or God? Judge ye."

And again, suppose we were under the government of Rome. "Who sat upon her seven hills and ruled the world," and the command would come from her tribunal, that all in her dominion, shall worship that one church and no other; and fall upon those heretics, as they termed them, (but in reality the saints), and "put them to death by fire at the stake." Would it be our duty to obey that command? Its the call of your country. Come drink of the blood of the saints, for it would not do for you to be one of those saints yourself. That would be disobeying the "higher powers." O what folly and vain imagination! The fallacy of such reasoning is evident to every mind and is enough to convince any unprejudiced mind. Could I only picture to you the amount of blood shed by martyrs, caused by the government commanding them to do that which is not in accordance with the Gospel. If I were to say that two-thirds of them suffered for this cause, I do not think that I would be far out of the way.

We have now considered the subject by reasoning alone. Now to the law and prophets; let us not read truth with one eye closed. Let us read it with its connections. It is true that we must be subject to the "higher powers," but I do not understand that we should do that which conflicts with the laws of God. The government at all times, gives us the privilege to submit ourselves by obedience or death, and if we have done either, we have paid the debt, just as much so, as did the Lord when He gave Himself into the hands of the Jews. But if laws do not conflict with the laws of God, we should obey every call, "paying tribute to whom tribute belong, and honor to whom honor belong;" for it seems that the Lord designs that they shall try us at times. By these trials we are purified and for that reason they are called, the ministers of God; because they administer just such things as God would have us undergo.

Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? "Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same."—Rom. 13: 3. Well may we not fear, when we do that which is good. We have then performed our duty toward man and God, and if fallible man calls us to do more, we can say why need we fear thou hast not power to destroy the soul.

"But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid. For he beareth not the sword in vain." 4th verse. What is meant by the phrase to do that which is evil? I understand it means to disobey the laws, and commands of God. Such as the following: "Thou shalt not commit adultry. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness. Thou shalt not covet."—Rom. 13: 9. Well may we fear, while we stand in the way, of Him that beareth not the sword in vain; when we have not done our duty toward man and God, for He hath power to destroy the body; and while engaged in sin, he "hath power to destroy both soul and body."

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."—Eph. 6: 12. The above is so plain, that I will occupy but little space in commenting upon it, as it can be plainly seen, that there would be no reason for us to wrestle against principalities, powers, and rulers, without a cause. And the cause is simply this: they call for us at times, to perform that which is wrong, and put us in a strait between the laws of God and man. But let us ever bear in mind, that man has not the power to inflict the punishment upon us for disobeying his laws that God hath.

We will now notice the actions of the apostles, and see if they obey the laws of man, when they conflict with the laws of God. "And when they had called the apostles, and beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name. And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ."—Acts 5: 40, 42. Little did they adhere to this command, for it was just reverse to that of God recorded by St. Matt. 28: 19. They remembered the mission of their heavenly Father.

We will now refer the reader, to the example of our Savior, and as He taught more lessons of non-resistance by action, than word, we will only repeat one sentence He spake while teaching this important doctrine: "Put up thy sword again into his place: for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword."—Matt. 26: 52. Sword, in the last of this sentence, I understand to be that sword that came forth out of the mouth of the Son of man, (The Word,) of which we have a symbol in Rev. 1: 16.

The question may arise, what should we do if some vile persons would fall upon us for some evil design? I have no other answer than this: We would have to let them stone Stephen to death, and the remainder take to flight like sheep.

Then is there no fighting for us to do? There is. And He has given us a complete armor to fight with, and we have it minutely described in the sixth chapter of Ephesians. And when thus armed, we are told that we "shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked," and I believe that we can stand, and bid defiance to all imperfect laws of man, to call us from our religious duties; For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come. Nor heigth nor depth nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. 8: 38.

WANTING.

Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.—Daniel 5: 27.

Were we to consult taste, fancy or pleasure, our pen would have nothing to do with this subject.

Touching upon this solemn subject, places the cross so heavily upon our shoulders that it makes writing at this time, quite a task. "Weighed in the balances and found wanting." How sublime! Aliens to God, aye, Christians, how many might we find bearing this honorable appellation, who would faint at the idea of being weighed, for fear of being found wanting. If we are not too delicate, let us look at the state of depraved humanity as it exists in this enlightened age, an age noted for its progress, an age remarkable for its wisdom, admitted to excel all others, both financially and commercially. What do we find? A world stained with pollution and crime. Shall we weigh it in a balance? No. God has weighed us and found us wanting. He has found us wanting in faith, in purity and in energy. He has found us to be a very complaining people. We have complained more to Him than ever the Hebrews did to Moses. Actions speak louder than words, and is it not to be feared that our actions tell, too frequently, that we are complaining? I think they do. I occasionally, while on my pilgrimage, meet those who give no words of comfort, but to the contrary, complain and fret about their wretched lot in life. No one sees half so much trouble, no one ever suffered so great temptations, with them all is clouds, no sunshine, just because they always looked on the dark side. Are they Christains? This is a question I will not answer. After the Lord has weighed them in a balance we shall learn.

It is a great pity that any one should lack any good thing, because that individual that is wanting in any of the religious virtues, is, as the apostle says, after giving us a list of essential rules several religious virtues, "blind and cannot see afar off." Knowledge is virtue, and it is one of which the apostle strongly recommends.

But a glimpse only, brings to view so many of the sins of ignorance, that we are forced to take up the prophetic wail that might be heard in every land and nation: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." May we not safely attribute the slow progress of Christ's blessed, though suffering cause to a want of knowledge?

Three years have elapsed since the writer, then a mere youth, recommended and urged the organization of a Sabbath School in a congregation that numbered one hundred or more members. Did you organize? We did not. And may I tell the reason? There being but One whom I fear, with a considerable degree of reluctancy, I shall. It was not because of a want of knowledge, not that those who opposed the good work were too ignorant to teach or conduct a Sabbath School, but they were those that lacked self-confidence. They were aware too, that the labors of those who conduct Sabbath Schools are attended with great self-denial, hence a life of pleasure and ease. "Who of us are able to conduct a Sabbath School?" Dead silence could echo none, but too many unanimated eyes, dimned with disinterestness did. What has been the result? Why the weak have grown still weaker by inaction. They have gained no strength by irresolution. Nearing manhood and womanhood are those of their own families, in whose care they would shudder to place the cause of One in whom they have failed to find that implicit faith and the altogether loveliness, which must be found in well conducted Sabbath Schools. Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting.

Trusting the few ideas already advanced, will cause, at least, some serious thinking,—we want no other—we shall now endeavor to ascertain whether we are not found wanting many good things by never seriously considering our individual responsibility to God. We are addressed, or rather warned by the text heading this essay, in the singular number.

We are apt to run about making a great fuss about some being too fast, others too slow, and when the fussing is done that is about the end of it. This is not the way to progress; I know no better way to retrogress. I believe in, and would strongly recommend the old adage: "Be sure you are right and then go ahead." There is no telling how much one will accomplish by being right--right in the estimation of God. We will take Webster's place awhile and try to define that man or woman who is right in the estimation of God. 1. One full of the Holy Ghost. 2. One who, regardless of the opinions of man, will assimilate himself unto Christ by acquiring and retaining a holy character, and by doing whatever good in the world he is most capable of performing. 3. One who attributes all the good he may do, or ever has done, to the inspiration of God. 4 One who looks upon his flesh as a bundle of crucified lusts, living only to breathe the air that animates a higher life, a life which not only angels love to admire, but one that God Himself will receive from, and send communications unto, concerning His great work which must, if accepted, be performed in the spirit and fear of God alone.

Such an one need not fear to be weighed in the balance of eternal truth, for in such a soul there is more real worth than in the whole world. And will God give this priceless inheritage to every earnest inquirer of Divine Truth? He will if you are willing to give up all for Christ, perform every known duty, and make no reserve for yourself.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE CHURCH.

Husbands love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having, spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.—Eph. 5: 25-27.

In this Scripture the Apostle wishes to impress the mind with the nature of the love that should exist between man and wife, and from the simile used, we have the idea of the exceeding great importance of the Church of Christ. Some persons look upon the Church as a very insignificant institution, and of very little importance, but such persons have surely never thought of the value that Christ, the great head of the Church, and the apostles put upon it.

Its importance is shown in what Christ has done for the Church. He died for it. He loved it enough to leave the shining courts of Heaven, come down to this world and die on Calvary's rugged cross in order that it might be established. Does this look as if it was an insignificant institution? Surely those who look at it in this light have never learned that they need a Savior, and that he is to be found alone in the Church. There are others again, who look upon it as an institution of some importance, yet do not appreciate it as they should. We should love the Church. This love is made apparent in various ways, and among these, there is none more evident and unmistakable than a concern for the Church. If we are indifferent to what the church does, it is a sure sign that we do not love it. There are those who scarcely ever attend the Church meetings, and know but little of its proceedings. Surely such persons have never fully learned of its importance, and consequently have not the proper love for it.

In this life the importance of a thing is estimated by its value, or the price paid for it. The larger the sum of money we pay for a thing, the greater value or importance do we attach to it. Now Christ gave a large price for the Church. He bought it with His own precious blood. Although the Church is not perfect, and indeed it cannot be while its subjects have the world, the flesh and the devil to contend with, yet He loves it and will finally cleanse it, and "present it to Himself a glorious Church." If we then judge the value of the Church, as we do other things, by what is paid for them, we must certainly consider it an important object, and one too, to which our attention should be constantly directed. There is nothing that has cost so much, and consequently there is nothing of so much importance, and that should so constantly demand our attention.

The importance of the Church is further seen from another standpoint. In Tim. 3: 15, the apostle in giving Timothy directions how to conduct himself in the Church, calls it the pillar and ground of the truth. Its importance is here shown by what it does. The truth is here represented as a building supported by one pillar, and that pillar is the Church. This is a very beautiful figure of the importance of the Church. Remove the Church and the grand edifice of truth must fall to the ground.

But the importance of the Church is still made more apparent from a consideration of what truth is. Jesus answered the question on one occasion very definitely, but when Pilate interrogated him in reference to it, he answered him more indirectly in these words: "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." God's word is the truth, and is supported alone by the Church. In view of this does it not seem important that we uphold the Church, which is the pillar and ground work of the truth, the Gospel to all the world, going forth sharper than any two-edged sword, conquering and subduing the world.

Then dear Christian reader, let us be live, active members; let us look upon it as something that must prosper, and that its prosperity depends upon us. If the Church fails the truth must suffer; that word which became flesh and dwelt among men, in order that the great sin might be canceled will be crucified afresh, for every feeling of coldness or indifference towards the Church is virtually dishonoring Christ. He loves the Church as a true and devoted husband loves his wife, and as the Church is to be the bride, "the Lamb's wife," when He comes again, does it not seem important that we honor it with our whole soul, body and mind. Then indeed will we see the Church come forth "Bright as the sun, and fair as the moon," and by it the truth will be supported and carried into all the world. J. B. B.

YOU ASK TOO MUCH OF THE MINISTERS.

Dear brethren and sisters, I have been thinking for some time of writing a few lines under the above heading. The minister is often called away from home to attend appointments, and must leave his family that is as near and dear to him as yours is to you, not knowing, in many instances, how they are to get along during his absence. He must leave his work undone or hire some one to do it, and be absent three or four weeks at a time. Then in addition to this he must pay his own traveling expenses, lose his time, and then when he returns, pay the man who has done his work, all out of his own pocket. The burden is all on the minister, and this is entirely too much. Did the Lord intend that the minister should feed the flock and receive nothing in return? Verily no. Our just and merciful Savior does not ask one of the body to bear all the burden and the rest go free.

When the minister's grain goes to mill the toll dish is dipped into it the same as others. When his wool goes to the carding machine, he must pay the customary price for carding. When the tax gatherer comes around he has to pay the same per cent as other people. When he hires a man to work for him in his absence he must pay the customary price, and get nothing for his time. Too much. And when he gets the members together and asks them for a little help, they think that is too much. You soon hear the cry, preaching for money. Ask them to bear half your expenses and they say it is too much. Ask them to pay one fourth of your expenses and still it is too much.

Just so the minister can say when you want him to come and preach, that you ask too much. When you ask him to write out a note of his travels, it is too much. The minister is frequently asked by the brethren and sisters to write to them and let them know how he is getting along. It takes time and money to write and answer every individual letter. I have felt the burden brethren, and speak from sad experience, and have good reasons to say that you ask too much of your minister. Place yourselves in their stead a little while, and when they ask for a little help, you will not say that they ask too much. WILLIAM BAILEY

HOW TO BE MISERABLE.

Never extend to your fellow-man, in the hour of need, a helping hand. Sit idly down and allow your tho'ts to dwell upon "the might have been." When a friend offends you in word or deed, mope it out in sullish pout. To allow self and all its sensual gratifications to predominate over your better virtues, and mistrust all around you.

Now is this the way to live? Is this the way to pass away the life that has been bestowed on us by our beneficient Creator? Can we, leading such a life as this, prepare for the great beyond? The echo of my heart answers me back, "No, no!"

Then let us be up and doing; let not the golden hours pass unheedingly by. Dwell not too earnestly upon the past; for yesterday we were, to-day we are, and to-morrow we hope to be.—Sel.

THE fountain sends forth pure, sparkling water because the head from whence it flows, is pure. So love emanates from the heart that has been purified by "obeying the truth." The fountain head from whence it flows being pure, a continual stream of love will issue, shedding an influence all around that will alleviate our sorrows, quell our fears and perfect us in the school of God's love, light and liberty.—J. S. Flory.

TYPES.

It is somewhat a remarkable circumstance that Christ our passover was sacrificed for us, and our deliverance from the bondage of sin completed in the same month, and on the same day of the month, that the Israelites were delivered from the bondage of Egypt. The Israelites went out of Egypt, and Christ was put to death on the 15th day of the 1st month, Nisan, (March or April). Man did not intend this coincidence, (compare Matt. 29 : 5, with Acts 13 : 27 ;) but here is evidently an adaptation by God of this part of the history of His chosen people to the times of the Gospel. So also their passing from Egypt through the red sea, the wilderness and the river Jordan, to the promised land is a lively representation of a Christian's pilgrimage through life to that rest which remaineth for the people of God.

The great subject of revelation which was to be fully unfolded, in the New Testament, was the mediatorial character of Christ. This consists in His being a King, a prophet and a priest and in each of the points he was typified by Moses as King. Christ rules over His Church, and so Moses was a type of Him, in being appointed the ruler and leader of the Israelites as prophet. Christ has given laws to the Church, and so Moses was a type of Him, in being a lawgiver to the Israelites. As Priest, Christ, by shedding His own blood, has made a covenant between God and man, and is now interceeding for His Church at the right hand of God, and so also Moses was a type of Him :

1st. In being commanded to ratify the covenant made between God and the Israelites, by the sprinkling of blood, (Exodus 24 : 8,) which act reminded them of their unfitness as sinners to enter into any covenant with God except through an appointed atonement.

2. In His powerful intercessions, (Ex. 15 : 25, 32 : 11,) by which many blessings were obtained, and the wrath of God was turned away from his people, compare Ex. 12 : 46. which gives an account of the paschal lamb, or as it is called in verse 27, the "sacrifice of the Lord's passover," with John 19 36, and 1 Cor. 5 : 7, 8. Observe how the blood of the victim was made the means of preservation from the wrath of God, and how by partaking of its flesh they were strengthened for their journey.

The manna was a type. Compare Ex. 16 : 15, with 1 Cor. 10 : 3, and John 6 : 31-49-58. Its spiritual significance, we are taught, was the type of Christ, the living spiritual bread, with which God feeds his redeemed and spiritual people in their passage thro' the wilderness of this world to the true Canaan of everlasting rest.

The smitten rock was a type. Compare Ex. 17 : 6, with 1 Cor. 10 : 4, John 7 : 37. "They drank of that spiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ." The true rock stands revealed in the presence of the whole world, and we hear him saying : "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."

The ark and mercy-seat, which covered it, was a symbol of God's presence. Compare Ex. 25 : 17-22 "And there will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat," &c., with Heb. 4 : 14-16 10 : 19. "Seeing then that we have a great high-priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, having boldness to enter into the holiest by his blood."

The daily sacrifice and burning of incense shadowed forth the sacrifice and intercession of Christ. Compare Rev. 8 : 3, Luke 2: 10, with Ex. 29, 42, 30 : 7. As to the use we may make of these types, let us remember that under temptation we have a great Mediator ; under a sense of sin, we are called to behold the very paschal lamb who was offered for us. In His name, let us not fear to come boldly to a mercy seat, and let our hearts be filled with His wonderful condescension in having tabernacled in our nature, praying that the same mind may be in us which was in Him. A day did not pass but the whole congregation were reminded of their constant need of an atoning sacrifice, and invited by faith to partake of its blessing. Let this teach us to live a life of faith in Christ our Savior ; esteeming, as Moses did, the reproach of Christ, greater riches than anything that this world can give.

This is to apply the types to their right use, and shows how the Jewish and Christian dispensations mutually illustrate and confirm each other, the sacrifices and ceremonies of the law preparing for the atonement of Christ ; and that atonement reflecting a dignity and glory upon them, by manifesting their nature and completing their design.

D. NEGLY.

ARE YOU CHRIST'S?

The Apostle closes a burning climax with the exalting word, "For ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." Are you Christ's? Many talk about him commendingly or the contrary. Who feels that he is his? That is entire dispossession of yourself. All unrenewed people have a fancy that they are their own They can do what they will with themselves. They can employ their affections, their time, their money, their brains, or what they please. If they owe allegiance to any person it is to those of their own household, or to human beings to whom they are indebted, not to Christ. They may have a blind thought of something due to God, but only in the sense of not violating any voice of conscience in themselves that is, not opposing their better self. Any thought of personal allegiance to Christ, they do not entertain any affection for him, any solicitation for his guidance, any conference as to the direction of their affairs, or the bestowment of their means, or time or words, they do not for a moment entertain. They write books about him, and never ask him to help them in the compositon. They prepare sermons even, on him and never employ his aid in the preparation. They rush into business without any consciousness that all their success must come from him. They engage in their professions and pleasures, unmindful of him by whom are all things. Be ye not like unto them. Do not disregard Christ. Ye are Christ's. Do you show it by frequent interviews with him? You consult your partner ; consult this Chief Partner. You even ask information of your clerks, workmen, servants. How much more of your Lord and Master. You seek wisdom of the thermometer and barometer. How much more of him who maketh winds and weather. You ask advice of your wife how to spend your gains. How much more of him who alone has given you anything to spend.

"Ye are Christ,s" implies complete absorption in him. He is all in all. He is your breath, your thought, your love, your wisdom, your business, your pleasure your other and greater self. You think his thoughts, feel his feelings, live his life. You are not your own, you are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. So live, so love. Then will you have perpetual peace and power. Then will nothing trouble you above your ability to bear. Then will you go forward cheerfully on the path of life, absorbing to yourself all that is good repelling all that is bad, serene of soul, dwelling in the Heavens. All are yours, because you are Christ's and Christ is God's. Here and hereafter, life and death time and eternity finite and infinity, creature and Creator, man, angel devil even to conquer, Heaven to enjoy, hell to subdue and shun, all are yours, for "Ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's!"—Zion's Herald.

USE YOUR OWN TALENT.

Use your own gift—don't try to imitate others. Saul's armour would not fit you. You have not proved it. Down yonder street, where the factory lifts its tall chimneys to the skies, an operative has caught his arm in the hurrying wheels and severed an artery. A hundred men crowd around him in helpless, dumb despair. If only there were a phisician near! If we had only remedies and surgical instruments to staunch the red tide that ebbs so fast! But before the surgeon can be summoned he will bleed to death without an effort made to save him. Stop! out of the crowd a smoke-begrimed artisan steps. He stoops over the wounded man, and places his thumb with the pressure of an iron vice upon the gushing fountain from which the blood was spouting. It was a simple thing, but it saved his life. That man had no medical skill. He possessed no surgical instruments. But God gave him a hand and he used it. Brother, is there a soul near you dying? Away with Saul's armor! "Put it off!" But use the sling and smooth stones of your own God-given opportunities.

THE DUTIES OF A MOTHER.

By the quiet fireside of a home, the true mother, in the midst of her children, is sowing as in vases of earth, the seeds of plants that sometimes give to Heaven the fragrance of blossoms and whose fruit shall be as a rosary of angelic deeds, the noblest offering she can make, through the ever-ascending and expanding souls of her children to her Maker. Every word that she utters goes from heart to heart with a power of which she little dreams. Philosophers tell us in their speculations, that we cannot lift a finger without moving the distant spheres. Solemn is the tho't that every word that falls from her lips, every expression of her countenance, even in the sheltered walk and retirement of home, may leave an indelible impression on young souls around her, and form, as it were an underlying strain of that education which peoples Heaven.—Exchange.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE Baptists are discussiog the question as to whether all the members should be allowed to vote at their church meetiugs. The objection to all voting is the incapability on the part of some to know how to vote.

The Presbyterian Weekly says—"It is rumored at Lancaster that Prof. D. M. Wolf, of Franklin and Marshall College, while interfering with some hazing sophomores, on Saturday night, was stabbed in the abdomen, and dangerously wounded."

Pretty bad sophomores, those. If they have been preparing for the ministry, we suppose their intentions are changed now.

A BROTHER of Mercersburg Franklin Co., Pa., says the agent missed sending his name, and that he can't do without the PILGRIM any longer. This is the precise language of a number of others who have tried to do without the PILGRIM. We hope all will take warning from these experiences, and not attempt to be without it the coming year. Our agents should also be on the alert that they do not miss sending the name of any one who desires to be a subscriber.

The criminal code of Nebraska, which went into effect on the 1st of September. contains this provision against swearing—"If any person of the age of fourteen years and upward shall profanely curse or damn, or profanely swear by the name of God Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, every such person shall, for each offence be be fined not less than twenty-five cents, nor more than one dollar."

This is a very commendable law, but the penalty is not very heavy. If such a law was to be established in Pa., it is likely some persons would lose a good many twenty-five cent pieces.

A French paper has the following in reference to their people:

"What is taking place in France is likewise taking place in Belgium. On all sides an effort is being made to make the population fanatical. In some of the most ignorant places they even go so far as to sell small bits of the straw, as 'coming from the dark prison in which our Holy Father the Pope is groaning,' and hearts are melted or exasperated by the thought of this unhappy one, shut up in his prison, lying upon straw, and without doubt also deprived more or less of food."

If this were so the Pope would have a pretty hard time of it, but he is really living in a magnificent palace, amid the greatest luxuries of life. This is a fair specimen of the wickedness and deception of men, and also of how grossly superstitious they will become.

THE Baptists of Georgia have resolved to raise $350,000 as an additional endowment to a university located at Macon. This is certainly a pretty good sum to be raised in one State, and if the membership is not large it will certainly pull pretty heavy on the pockets of some. If the Baptists of Georgia alone, can raise $350,000, ought not the Brethren of all the States in the Union raise enough funds to build one institution of learning. We as a people are by no means poor, and as it is now generally acknowledged that we should have a school especially adapted to the church, it does seem strange that a more strenuous effort is not made. Is it not probable that we love our money too much, and that we all appreciate it more than we do knowledge. If this be so, then indeed it is an evil, and the sooner we get rid of this feeling the better. The love of money is the root of all evil.

Youth's Department.

WHAT IS LIFE?

A little crib beside the bed,
A little face above the spread;
A little frock behind the door,
A little shoe upon the floor,
A little lad with dark-brown hair,
A little blue-eyed face, and fair,
A little lane that leads to school,
A little, blithsome, winsome maid,
A little hand within his laid;
A little old-time-fashioned store;
A little family gathering round
A little turf-heaped, tear-dewed mound;
A little added to his soil,
A little rest from hardest toil;
A little silver in his hair.
A little stool and easy chair;
A little night of earth lit gloom,
A little cortege to the tomb.

TO THE YOUNG.

David and Solomon and the other holy and wise men, whose writing were inspired by the Holy Ghost, frequently notice how the works of the Almighty are made to express both His power and His will. They are held out to us to be studied and pondered in our hearts. What we call nature, or the works of God in the creation, is like a large book of pictures in which every one may read the meaning without knowing a letter of the alphabet.

Among the things contained in this large book, let us make choice of a very little creature, and inquire what it is calculated to teach us. The bee is a small insect without reason or knowledge, a fly that lives and moves about for awhile and then perishes, but the whole of its short life is a continued lesson to us, and we will consider how we may best make use of it.

The bee has a wonderful instinct. By instinct we mean that feeling which inclines an animal to do what is right for its preservation or comfort, without its being able to understand why it ought to do so, and without being taught. How much more precious and valuable is reason, which we are endowed with, than the finest instinct of animals; yet very few of us make half as good or constant use of our reason as the beasts do of their instinct. The Lord has been pleased to design that the bee should furnish a great quantity of a very rich and wholesome nourishment for its own use and for us. Honey is very frequently mentioned in Scripture, and of such value was it considered, that the distinguishing character of Canaan, the good land which God chose for His own people Israel, and which is a type of Heaven itself, was a land flowing with milk and honey.

Flowers that so delight the eye by their lovely colors, and charm the smell by their fragrance, are the chief source from which the bee can gather its honey. In a wild state the bees are found in the hollows of rocks and ties, and in the cavities of old walls buildings, but those who keep bees in order to make money from their honey, put them into hives made on purpose for their habitation.

Now no sooner is the bee settled in the hive than it sets about doing its work there. There is no loitering up and down, no resting at ease, or basking in the sun. All is a scene of the greatest activity, and each one goes to work as if the prosperity of the whole hive depended on its exertions.

How few of the youth do this when old enough to know for what purpose they are put into this great habitation, the world. How you love to idle away the precious hours, and make a thousand false and foolish excuses for what you know to be indolence. The little bee goes to work to lay in a store of provisions for the Winter, while it is yet very far distant, and it cannot reason as you can on the value of time, nor understand that if life continues, days of helplessness and sadness must come—days when the flowers will wither, the ground covered with snow, and there will be no possible way of getting a supply if it be neglected while Spring and Summer last. Yet this instinct bids it work, and it works with all its might.

You can well understand what you are told, both by your teachers and by your own reason and conscience. You know that the spring and summer of your life will soon be gone, and that age, should you live to be old, like a dreary Winter, will soon arrive, and that death in the end, will shut you up in the dark tomb. Beyond the tomb you must exist forever upon what you have provided in this world, whether with the blessed, you have laid up for yourself treasures in Heaven, or with the wicked, treasured up unto yourselves wrath against the day of wrath and the revelation of the righteous judgments of God. Knowing this, compare your carelessness and indifference with the diligence and activity of the little bee. Do you think that God will require less from you to whom He has given so much than from this poor insect?

The bee having examined its habitation, goes out in search of proper material to fill it with. It finds in the pleasant garden a thousand lovely flowers and sweet blossoms and upon these it alights, dips its trunk into the cup at the bottom of the flower, takes up a proper quantity of the nourishment, puts it into its little bag and goes on to another flower, and so it proceeds until it is laded with a rich treasure, when it flies away to its hive and carefully lays it up, working busily until it is time to go out for a fresh supply.

Such a garden is the Scriptures. Such flowers blossom in every page, offering you a rich banquet if you will pause to gather it. Oh, that like the bee, you would often alight there, and having read or heard as much as you can bear in mind, take it with you into retirement, meditate upon it, and pray over it until it has nourished your soul, and remains laid up in your memory as a most precious store, to be applied on every needful occasion. Surely the busy must enjoy very much, the warm beams of the sun, the fragrance of the flowers, the freshness of the soft air and it is sweet to hear its pretty humming noise.

I am convinced that if you look attentively at both, you will say that a bee is a more useful and active insect than a butterfly. Though they may be roving among the same flowers at the same time, there is something restless and unmeaning in the motions of a butterfly. I could almost fancy it is only reposing on the flowers for me to admire its beautiful wings. It reminds me of those who do indeed study the Bible and other books, but merely to get credit among men, and to show their talents, not to derive any real benefit from them; and you see the consequence. The butterfly builds no house, lays up no store for the Winter, and therefore as soon as the warm days end, it falls down and dies under the cold breeze.

But how different it is with our little friend, the bee. How wise and discerning is this insect. You may put an artificial flower, made of paper, in the garden and the butterfly will rest upon it, and spread its gay colors in the sun quite contentedly; but not a moment will the bee consent to stay, for there is no honey in that flower. Profit, lasting profit, is the end that this creature has in view. What yields no honey has no charm for it, off it flies to the blossom of the Thyme or the Nettle, or of any lovely looking shrub, whence it can extract its sweet food.

How foolish are they who suppose that an idle life, passed among gay sights and trifling amusements, is happier than that which is devoted to piety and useful knowledge. Will you say that the bee is a melancholy creature? O, look and attend but a moment as she nestles in a sweet blossom, and springs away with her treasure to alight on the leaves of another flower, and bury her little head in it and away again with her bright wings glittering in the sunshine. Poor children you who think religion gloomy, and pity others for being so strict, as you fancy it, I wish you knew how much happier they are than yourselves. What are all your expensive toys, your showy dresses, and your well guilt books of fairy tales and foolish stories? They are but so many paper roses that never yield any nourishment to your minds nor give you material for an eternal store.

CLOVER CREEK LOVEFEAST.

Tuesday evening Sept.,30, being the time appointed by the brethren of Clover Creek, Blair Co.,Pa., for their Love feast, we concluded to be with them. After a pleasant ride across Tussey's Mountain, a distance of some 9 miles we arrived at the appointed place for the meeting where we found a goodly number assembled and were at the waterside where prayer was wanted to be made and a believer to be engrafted into Christ by baptism. The exercises commenced at 4 o'clock p. m., where we found the following ministers present: S. R. Zug, of Lancaster Co., Stephen Hildebrand of Conemaugh, J. B. Miller of Alumbank, and Brice Sell of Duncansville Congregation, also the ministers of Yellow Creek and Hopewell congregations. The evening exercises were well attended and the preaching edifying, but not so pleasant to communicants and spectators, had they a better arranged house. The congregation at Clover Creek deserves a better and more conveniently arranged house, and the probability is that they will have one before many more such seasons pass. There are so many advantages in a well arranged house that they cannot be appreciated except by those who have them. This thing of women, especially those having children to care for, sitting on seats without backs, during a two or three hours service, is an act of penance done with exceeding bad grace, the fact is, it is worshiping God under serious difficulties.

The membership present was quite large, and as a consequence, it took a long time to get through with the services, yet, the order in the house, was as good as could be expected under existing circumstances, and the participants of the holy ordinances, no doubt enjoyed a pleasant waiting before the Lord. During the night, we were accommdated with a comfortable resting place in the house of our respected brother J. L. Wineland, a resident minister. In the forenoon at the same place, the congregation was entertained in the German by S. R. Zug, followed by Stephen Hildebrand and others in the English. The congregation was well entertained and we hope the good seed sown will produce an abundant harvest.

After the meeting closed, many of the brethren started toward the Yellow Creek Congregation, where another communion season was to be celebrated on the 3, & 4, but we made our way homeward, though reluctantly, as we much desired to be with our brethren at Yellow Creek, and could we always follow our inclinations, we would have been there, as it is our greatest pleasure to commune with God's people,

McVEYTOWN VISIT.

On Saturday morning, October 4, we took the train at our station with the intention of visiting Mc Veytown. On entering the cars, we met brother S. R. Zug and wife, brother Marston and wife, and others from Lancaster Co., Pa., on their way homeward, also brother L. Furry, on his way to the Mc Veytown Meeting. As we had business to attend to at Huntingdon relative to our building, we remained there until the evening train. On our arrival at our stopping place, we made our way for the home of our esteemed brother Abraham Myers, but they were not at home, being on a visit in the West, and as his daughter had already, a number of strangers to entertain, we thought it prudent not to add to her charge, although she had charity enough to receive and entertain us with a grace that would have made us feel at home. We then called upon Bro. Henry Hertzler, who lives just across the way, where we were kindly received, and where we again met our brother, L. Furry, who, whatever his deficiences may be, is filled brimfull of love for Jesus and the cause, and is an active supporter of the Weekly Pilgrim. At this place, we were hospitably entertained for the night.

On Sabbath morning there was an appointment at or near the station, now called Maitawana. At this meeting there was an excess of ministers, but as we also need an occasional sermon, some of us did well by occupying back seats. The services were opened by George Brumbaugh, and preaching done by L. Furry, J. B. Garver, and closed by John Spangle. After taking dinner at brother Hertzler's, we noticed a large number of Amish going towards the river for the purpose of performing baptism. Having never seen them perform this rite, we, with a number of others, concluded to witness the ceremony. We did not get there in time to hear or see any of the preliminaries, if they had any, as the last candidate was in the water when we arrived. We were informed that there were eight baptized, but as six of them preferred not to go into the water, they were baptized in the house, which left two to be baptized in the river. They were taken in the river a short distance where the water was about 3 or 4 inches deep, and there kneeled, when the administrator, with his hands, dipped some water and poured on the head of the candidate three times, once at the naming of each person of the godhead. These people are strict conformists, plain and modest in apparel, sober, honest, and generally of good deportment and are said to be good neighbors and citizens. From here, we went to the Spring Run Church house where the Lovefeast was to be held in the evening, but as we have the promise of a local report of the meeting, we will omit the details. The meeting was largely attended, order excellent and the exercises thro'-out interesting and edifying, and we can truly say that we enjoyed a feast of fat things to the soul long to be remembered. This Church is under the care of Eld. J. R. Hanawalt, and seems to be in quite a prosperous condition.

THE PILGRIM FOR 1874.

As some subscribers for 1874 are already being received, it becomes necessary that we commence to make our arrangements and set before our readers, some of our prospective improvements. Since our commencement, we have steadily aimed at improvement, and if the opinions of our readers can be accepted as evidence, we have not altogether failed. Whether or not we shall be able to give our readers more interesting reading for the coming year, depends much upon what our contributors will do for us, but that part of the publishing which we have under our control more especially, we expect to improve. One important feature for the coming year, will be better mail facilities, by our removal into our new and commodious office at Huntingdon, which will be completed in some four or five weeks, of which we will speak in another number. Good mail facilities is an important feature in publishing a paper that should not be overlooked, and for this, Huntingdon cannot be excelled, as it is situated along the great thoroughfare of the United States, the Penna. Central R .R. Another important improvement will be the enlargement of the Pilgrim without raising the price. Our present intention is to increase the size 77 inches of surface. This we can scarcely afford to do unless we can largely increase our circulation, but as there has been some complaint that the Pilgrim is too small for the price, we are determined that there shall be no more just cause for such complaint. If our agents and friends will go to work in good time and double our present list, which can easily be done, we can still, by economizing, make our ends meet.

As an additional inducement we will soon have ready for 1874, one of the best Almanacs ever published by the Brethren, to be given free to every subscriber. More than this could not reasonably be expected for the small sum of $1.50, but it is hard to tell what we may do should our circulation be largely increased. With our present facilities we can publish a paper, perhaps, a little cheaper than any other company of brethren in the Brotherhood, but we wish to have it understood that we are not holding out these inducements for the sake of competition, as all our periodicals are really too cheap now considering the circulation we have. In due time, our prospectus and Almanac will be ready, when we want three or four hundred new agents, to whom liberal inducements will be given.

MARRIED.

MYERS—NALLEY.—On the 2d day of Oct., 1873, at the residence of Francis Pike, by the undersigned, Mr. Simon Myers to Miss Mary E. Nalley, both of Washington Township, Polk Co., Iowa.

May peace and harmony attend their happy union. D. E. Brubaker.

DIED.

RUSSEL.—In the South Santaam congregation Linn Co., Oregan, June 13th, 1873, our much beloved sister, Ellen Russel, wife of Bro. William Russel, aged 44 years, 9 months, and 12 days.

She leave a sorrowing husband and two children to mourn their loss which we hope is her great gain. Bro. William has lost an affectionate companion, her children a kind mother, but we do hope they will prepare to meet her in the bright world above — Her disease was consumption, which she bore with Christian fortitude, and oftimes she spoke of her home above. Funeral services by brother David Brower, from John 5: 25, 28 and 29th verses, to a large and attentive concourse of people.

Aaron H. Baltimore.

WHITMAN.—In the limits of the Lower Cumberland Church, York Co., Pa. Sept. 26, 1873, of old age, brother William Whitman, aged 82 years, 5 mos. and 8 days. Funeral text "Our light affliction which is but for a moment," &c., by the brethren.

He lived a single life. He has two sisters surviving him. Years ago he retired from his business capacity, submitting himself to the care of his nephew and neice, who also have the care of their frail aged mother, his sister in the flesh and in the Lord. As their hearts are glowing with love and care for their dear old friends, so may it glow for the religion of Jesus Christ.

FLEMING.—In the Lower Conawaga District, Aug. 24th of dropsy, Abrahum Fleming, aged 69 years, 2 mos. and 5 days. During his sickness he inclined to the Brethren for refuge, and made very remarkable acknowledgments to them, requesting them to preach his funeral sermon which they did from Psalms xc: 12.
ADAM BEELMAN.

EMMEL.—In the Newton Church, Miami Co., Ohio, July 31st, 1873, sister Catharine Emmel. Also in the same church Sept., 19th, 1873, brother Andrew Emmel, husband of the above named sister. Funeral services of both by the brethren. The subjects of the above notices emigrated to Ohio in the Fall of 1858 where they became members of the church. Their former residence was 15 miles east of Lewistown Mifflin County, Pa. S. MOHLER.

ROWDABUSH.—In the Dunnings Creek Congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., Sept. 1st 1873, Mary Etta, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Rowdabush, aged 5 mos. and 12 days. Funeral services by the brethren J. B. MILLER.

Correspondence.

Munich, Bavaria, July 18, '73.

My dear father and Sarah: I received your welcome letter, dated June 29, yesterday, and was so glad to hear from you as I never had heard one word from you since I saw you. I am very sorry you are not very well, hope you are feeling better. I am very sorry Sarah is not better than she was when I was there. We hear from home about once a week. Our letters are about four weeks generally coming from Chicago. I wrote to you last from Dresden. We left Dresden on the 7th of June, came up to Ruthen, and stayed there over a day, visited the Bastee, where there are mountains of rocks, and which was at one time a great stronghold for robbers in the tenth century. We saw the caves and the places where they hurled people down among the rocks into the ravines. The scenery was very grand. While among the mountains, a thunder storm came up; when we were coming down, we had to take shelter under a large rock. The next day we took the train and came to Bodenbach, where we crossed the line from Saxony to Bohemia, and our baggage was examined here. In the afternoon took the train for Prague, arrived there in the afternoon or evening. We remained there over Sunday and visited a number of churches, however, all Catholic. The people here are nearly all Catholics—a miserable set of people—lazy, filthy, and very ill looking, and beggars running after you all the time begging. We were really afraid here. Some of the churches are fine. They all have a clock here from which when it strikes, twelve saints come walking out. It is wonderful.

On Sunday evening, at seven, we took the train for Vienna, where we arrived on Monday morning at eight. In this city we spent two weeks and a half. We spent about six days in the exhibition, where we saw people and their finest wares from every part of the world. I cannot begin to tell you what I saw here, the finest machinery, steam plows, and steam wagons. The machinery room alone is one half mile long. It was a great wonder to me. Here they wove from the finest fabric to the heaviest, fine lace, silks, ribbons, velvets, in fact, everything. They also had a great many wax figures with their different costumes, from Sweden, Turkey and Egypt, and the finest fruit I ever saw, from Greece. The center dome is the largest in the world, and is to be left standing after the exhibition is over. It is to last till the last of November. When we first went to Vienna they told us that about one hundred and thirty thousand people visited the Exhibition daily. The last week we were there the crowd was not so great, as the heat was very intense. We could not go out in the heat of the day, on account of the heat. I never felt the heat like it was there. They also had cholera there the first of July. I should think it was not a healthy city as it is not kept neat. The buildings are very large and fine, and is a beautiful city. They number 663,000 inhabitants. There are 12000 Protestants, 10000 Jews, 800 Greeks, and a garrison of 28000. The people are rather a nice looking people—rather fine looking, and it is a fine business city with very fine stores.

We left Vienna June 26, and came up the river Danube to Welk, where we remained over night. Next morning we visited a celebrated Benedictine Abbey, 185 feet above the river, founded in 1089, re-erected 1701, resembling a large palace rather than a monastery. They took us through a number of fine rooms. Our guide was a Monk 75 years old. He told us he saw N——the first, and seemed to take great pride in telling us. At Welk we took a steamboat, and came up the Danube to Grein, a little town among the hills, where we remained two weeks, and saw German life among the peasants. They seem to be a hard working people and very kind. They looked at us as if we were a show. Americans seldom get into this part of the country, being out of the way of travel. At Grein we took a steamboat again, came to Linz, where we remained two days and visited places of interest.

On last Saturday evening we took the train and came to Salzburg where we remained two days. On Monday we visited the largest salt mines in the world, and Konig Sea. This sea is six miles long and one and a half wide. Some of the mountains surrounding it, which rise almost perpendicularly from the water, are 800 feet in height. It is sublime. On Tuesday we left Salzburg for Munich. I forgot to tell you Salzburg was a walled city once, a great part of it a natural wall. They also have a great many soldiers there, and it is quite a fine city. The finest church we have seen in Europe we saw at this place. After leaving Salzburg we passed through a beautiful country. It took six hours to come to Munich. We have not yet decided how long we will remain here, this is also a very beautiful city. The streets are very wide and clean, the buildings are very fine and the people generally very nice looking. The weather is much cooler than it had been, it has been very pleasant all day.

We do not know when we will get home, but expect to make that point late in the Fall. John says he is quite lonely at times, Oliver says he is getting along right well. Have you heard of brother Samuel and sister Kate? I have not heard from them since I left America. I often wonder whether Samuel answered that letter I wrote for you when I was there. Oliver and myself both feel quite well, we are much stronger than we were when we left America. We walk a great deal. The boys are very well and growing to be quite large, I think they sometimes get rather tired having nothing to do but sight-seeing. It becomes tiresome at times, especially when it is so hot.

We do not enjoy the German cooking, we much prefer American cooking. We always see rye bread on the table, the poor live on it altogether. I think they don't get much meat in this country, it is very expensive. Of the working class I see a great many taking large pieces of black bread from their pockets and eating it, and they seem to be satisfied. They drink a great deal of beer, the better class drink wine. Water is not very good and they drink but very little.

I would like you to write to me again as soon as you get this, as I am always so anxious to hear from you, if you can only tell me how you are. I hope you will keep well, and that we will be spared to return to America to our dear ones. I hope to see you on my return home. May God bless and keep you well, is the prayer of your daughter. The children join me in love to yourself and Sarah.

From your daughter,
N. L. SPROGLE.

Dear Pilgrim: Our Communion Meeting is now past. Once more the brethren and sisters have shown to the world that God has a people on the earth, a people that is not ashamed of His Word. They have witnessed to both small and great, none other things than has been commanded them by the Great Head of the Church. How pleasant to see brethren all agree, all of one mind, all willing to obey God our Heavenly Father in the one way. Yes as pleasant as Solomon's beloved, as beautiful as the rose compared to our beloved. But our feast did not continue long, the vocations of life have called our brethren to their homes. Yesterday the kiss of love and a warm farewell shake of the hand was given. But we meet to part here, brethren and sisters, and when we part, we shall meet, but ah, where and when, will the "again" be? Will it be where we will never sever, as we sometimes sing, or will it be here where sin and sorrow come? But by and by it we fight and labor we will be where we will not labor day after day; it will be in mansions prepared by Jesus. Those mansions are not strewn with saw-dust, and cotton-wood boards for wind breaks. The streets are pure gold, no bleaching wind, no rain, no storm there. O, how many times did our mind center there while the meeting continued! Yes, while others seemed to enjoy life well, our mind was thrown to where the "Sweet by and by" will be fully realized. How vain are the things of this world, how little are they appreciated. The child of God cares not for the giddy show of the frivolous fashions of this dark and benighted world. Brethren, what is this world? What else but a space given to us to prepare for Heaven? It is only a desert of thorns, a quag, a mire, a pit, a world of tears, and a nest of demons with poison under their tongues, ready to hurl you and I down beneath their hatred into hell's dark domain," where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Our Master has warned us to take heed of ourselves lest we become a castaway.

There was a large crowd of spectators, many of which never witnessed the Gospel-show before. I am satisfied that many went away wiser than they came, and no doubt some thought if these people are right, we are wrong, it could not be otherwise. Quite a number of members were present, and behind the table, was able, willing, and ready hearts. A. J. Correll, D. D. Sell, elders, and D. Gibson and S. Blocker, constituted the mouth-piece of the Lord on the occasion. Many solemn impressions were made. Our prayer is that they may be made lasting. One soul was made to rejoice in the act of obedience to the mandates of Heaven. This sister came a distance of thirty miles, (walking part of the way,) to unite with the church. The brethren, we trust, were built up O may the little army of forty strong, here in Andrew Co., Mo., bow in humble submission to the requirements of the Gospel; may their united strength be for the upbuilding of Zion. To thin the ranks of the enemy, brethren, we must be at our post preaching to the world by our walk and conduct, for actions speak louder than words. If our walk before the world does not correspond with what we profess, better would it be if we would step aside and let others fill our places whom we keep away. O let our chaste conversation at home, (for there is where charity begins,) and abroad be well spoken of. Yes, my brethren, if it takes all we have, if we must sacrifice all for the sake of cultivating the spirit of love, gentleness, meekness, longsuffering, and every principle that Heaven demands of us, let us not be forgetful of these things, and ere long you will see the fruits of your labor. May God help us all to be in the discharge of our duties. S. C. BASHOR.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

BOSTON JOURNAL OF CHEMISTRY; devoted to the Science of Home Life, the Arts, Agriculture and Medicine. Of the many periodicals coming to our house this is considered the most valuable, useful and practical, and after an acquaintance with it for ever eight years, from its origin, we still look forward to its monthly visits with pleasure, and derive profit from each number. Each number is worth much more than the subscription price. We advise every one of our subscribers to try it a year upon our recommendation; and in order to afford them the opportunity we will club with the PILGRIM, and send both for $2.25 for a year. Published by Billings, Clapp & Co., Boston, Mass. $1 00 per year.

THE LITERARY WORLD.–This is a monthly periodical devoted exclusively to literature; and contains careful reviews of the most important, and choice readings from the best new books. Also book notices, literary news, and a list of new American publications for each month. For years we felt the want of just such a periodical, and now feel greatly pleased to know that it has attained to such a position in literary circles, that it is the acknowledged guide in the selection and purchase of new books. Published by S. R. Crocker, Boston, Mass. Price $1.00 per annum.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.—The new Illustrated edition of Webster's Dictionary is just the book for everybody. To educated men and women it is indispensable. No student or learner can afford to be without it. The vast amount of various and useful knowledge contained in this ponderous book can be found nowhere else without days and weeks of tedious search. It is a whole library in itself. Next to the Bible it should be valued in every intelligent family.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED ILLUSTRATED.—"Viewed as a whole, we are confident that no other living language has a dictionary which so fully and faithfully sets forth its present condition as this last edition of Webster does that of our written and spoken English tongue."—Harper's Magazine.

CHILDREN WITH THE POETS.—By Harriet B. McKeever. This is a carefully compiled volume of beautiful poetry, specially designed "for children between the ages of eight and fourteen" years; but we hesitate not to say that there are those of all ages, through life, who would derive from its pages pleasure, profit and enjoyment. The selections have been made with a view to inspire reverence for holy things and places; to elevate the taste, purify the imagination and improve the mind; and there are thousands of precious youths to whom such a book would be the opening of a new life, and in whose minds many of these poems would wake responsive echoes of love, joy, hope, and lead them to virtue and God.

Give the children plenty of good literature and it will yield abundant returns. If this book contained nothing more than the "Night before Christmas," by Dr. Moore it would be abundantly worth all its costs; but it contains over two hundred charming poems besides, making it a treasury of good things for the young. Published by Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia., and for sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa., or sent from this office. Price $1.50 to $4-50.

For the Pilgrim.

THE CHRISTIAN.

BY WESLEY.

Walking in the shadow of the reeking cross,
Counting earthly treasures to my soul but loss,
Following the Master through this nether vale
Though the hosts of darkness fiercely may assail.

Gloom and pain and sadness now my steps attend,
Now a gleam of sunshine does its luster lend;
Weary fluctuations, check my forward course,
Dim the light that gushes from its mighty source.

But the valiant Leaden of the ransomed host,
Lights the glaring beacons on the distant coast;
Lures me by caresses, clasps my trembling hand,
Points to life eternal in the glory land.

Cheered by His blest presence still I follow on,
Battling with reverses, weary, faint and wan;
Leaning on the promise oft in mercy given
If for Him I suffer I shall reign in Heaven.

Though the wiles of satan oft my soul beset,
Fill me with forebodings, sorrow, and regret,
When the sunlight flashes o'er the darkened way,
Basks my soul triumphant in its mellow ray.

By the surging river turbulent and wild,
Free from earthly trammels, God's unsullied child;
Kept by Jesus' power, calmly I shall wait
Till his angels bear me through the golden gate

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

EXPOSING ERROR.

A great deal of fault is found with the reformers, of the present day, for exposing the errors and corruptions prevalent among professing Christians, not that it is denied, but what evils exist, but by exposing them they say it furnished unbelievers with an occasion to triumph, and contributes to the furtherance of infidelity. I acknowledge that infidelity has more or less prevailed in proportion to the decline of true religion, the probable reason of which is, the votaries of infidelity unjustly charge to the account of Christianity all the bad conduct of its professors. But would this be the case were Christians honest to discountenance in each other every thing prohibited in the Gospel? I think not, for what has the pure Gospel of the Savior to do with the treachery of Judas, the cowardice of Peter, or the bad conduct of modern popes and prelates. But it is with the various sects of religion as with individuals when they depart from the simplicity and purity of the Gospel. They still wish to keep a fair outside, and so long as they succeed in hiding their state from the knowledge of men, they think all is well. Nor is it likely their state will ever be better while they continue in this course, for he that covereth his sins shall not prosper.

There is no sin we are required more carefully to avoid than the leaven of the Pharisees, hypocrisy, and it must be as hateful in the sight of God when found in a community, as in an individual, nor will any man who is acquainted with his Bible and Church history, undertake to say that the most likely way to remedy evils is to conceal them. Why then should he be considered an enemy who like a good surgeon, searches out the part affected, and let the operation be ever so painful, probes it faithfully that he may effect a cure and save the life of the patient. But to view as enemies of religion, those who expose corruption, in the ministers of the present day, is the more extraordinary, seeing these very men who find fault with this course, at the same time admire the honesty and zeal of the ancient worthies spoken of in the Holy Scriptures, who bore their testimony against sin, as well when found in the royal person of a king, as that of an humble peasant, and denounced the judgments of the Lord against the false shepherd's, who instead of feeding, devoured the sheep and clothed themselves with the wool. Nor was this honesty less remarkable in their faithfully recording these things, not even sparing their own foibles which is a trait that distinguishes the Holy Scriptures from human productions, for when a member of a religious body now, undertakes to give to the world a history of the sect to which he belongs, the grand defect which proves the work to be human is the careful avoidance of every circumstance in the narrative, which in the opinion of the narrator, would deform the fair picture he wishes to draw. Thus by a want of true candor, he betrays that weakness and fallibility which in others he is ever so ready to condemn. The extent to which this covering system has been carried by these false friends of religion has proved fatal to the interests of the Redeemer's Kingdom. It was because of this our Savior when on earth found even under the shadow of the Jewish sanctuary the vile broods of serpents, the generations of vipers against whom he pronounced the most awful judgments to be found in the Gospel; nor did this high priest of our profession, like many in this present day, deem it incompatible with the interests of religion, but considered it an important part of the duty of a prophet of the Lord, to unmask these hypocritical pretenders to godliness, and expose their real characters to the world. It was by concealing the evil deeds of the clergy within the walls of cloisters and threatening with tortures and death, any who should dare to call in question the immaculate purity of the church of Rome, which generated and nourished up that monster of ecclesiastical corruption called in Scripture the man of sin, a beast.

Many of the professors of religion at this day do not a little resemble the scribes and pharisees of old, who while they garnished the tombs of the prophets manifested great hostility against Him of whom all the prophets spake, and only because he testified to them that their deeds were evil, nor need any who follow the example of the Savior expect better treatment from those of a similar character, for they in high esteem hold the names of Wickliffe, Luther, Calvin and others, for stemming the tide of corruption, while flowed around them these pharisees Brethren the same spirit which lighted up the fires at Rome and Smithfield, that consumed to ashes the faithful servant of God, David Simpson, that bold champion for truth, when he opposed the corruption of the church of England, did not conceive, as many do, that the interest of religion would be promoted by concealing abuses in his Book a plea for religion and the sacred writings. He laid open abuses and corruptions in all their aggravation, nor was any of the opinion that the course was improper, save the religious body in which the evils existed. Such is the inconsistency of frail man, that while he approves of the method pointed out by Divine wisdom in relation to others, yet when applied to himself, it serves but to awaken his resentment not against his sinful practices, but the one who, like the prophet, Nathan charges home his guilt, by saying, thou art the man. A Pilgrim.

STRENGTH IN CHRIST.

Although, then, thou seest thyself the most witless and weak, and findest thyself nothing put a prey to the power of darkness, yet know that by believing, the wisdom and strength of Christ are thine. Thou art, and oughtest to find thy-elf, all weakness, but he is all strength all mightiness itself. Learn to apply his victory, and so it is thine. Be strong, how? In him and the power of his might. But thou wilt say I am often foiled; yea I cannot find that I prevail at all against my enemies but they still against me;—yet rely on Him. He can turn the chase in an instant; still cleave to him when the whole powers of the soul as it were scattered and routed. Rally them by believing. Draw thou unto the standard of Jesus Christ and the day shall be thine; for victory follows that standard and cannot be severed from it. Yea though thou find the smart of divers strokes, yet think that often a wounded soldier hath won the day; believe, and it shall be so with thee. Remember that thy foils, through the wisdom and love of thy God, may be ordered to advance the victory, to humble thee and drive thee from thine own imagined strength to make use of his real strength. And be not hasty. Think not at the very first to conquer. Many a hard conflict must thou resolve upon and often be brought very low, almost to a desperate point, that to thy sense it is past recovery. Then it is his time to step in, even in the midst of their prevailing.—Leighton.

A preached gospel by men whose life is such as to destroy all confidence in them is like tendering water in a defiled cup, it disgusts rather than pleases!—J. S. Flory.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

NO. I.

"Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."—St. Luke 23: 34.

I. "'THEM'—has reference to:

1. Judas—the hypocrite; the covetous disciple; that had the bag, and betrayed his Lord and Master for thirty pieces of silver, that too, like many in these days verify the truth, that the love of money is the root of all evil.

2. The Jews,—who with wicked hands, and false words, and lying tongues, condemn and denounce the Lord.

3. The Romans,—who gave His sentence of death; mocked, scoffed, and scourged the Savior, and delivered Him to be crucified, and nailed Him to the cross, and pierced His side.

4. The Transgressors,—who railed on Him, with those who wagged their heads as they passed by.

I think the above will include what was directly intended by the Savior by using the word them. We simply remark that as it is declared by Jesus Himself, that whatsoever is done to the least of His disciples is done to Him, and as it is possible for us to crucify the Lord afresh, to mock, scoff, and taunt, the Christian; we too, may with propriety be considered among them.

II. "THEY DO."

1. They covenant to buy and sell Jesus, that the innocent may be numbered with the transgressors, that His blood may be shed in lieu of the murderer Barabbas's. They also agree upon a sign like many similar evil and wicked associations do in order to carry out their unholy ends. "Now he that betrayed Him gave them a sign, saying, whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; hold Him fast."—Matt. 26: 48, also see verses 3 and 4.

2. They come and seize Him as a thief and a murderer. To have seen that crowd going out to take Jesus would remind us much of the mobs of the city of New York. But as Jesus meets them, He says: "Are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves to take Me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on Me."—Matt. 26: 55.

They now bind Him and take Him to Annas first. "Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound Him, and led Him away to Annas first; for he was father in law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same year."—John 18: 12, 13.

3. They now take Him before the high-priest, Caiaphas, and to accuse Him falsely, saying: "This fellow said, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days." Matt. 26: 61. They pronounce Him guilty of death, Caiaphas, who was also Christ's enemy, declared, "Behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy."—Matt. 26: 65. "They answered and said, He is guilty of death. 66th verse.

Now commences a pitiful sight. Reader picture the scene in your minds, that now takes place. Here is God's high priest, with quite a number of priests, scribes, and elders, &c., representing the people of God, the chosen of God, the household of faith, to whom had been committed the oracles of God, and behold what THEY DO. "Then did they spit in His face, and buffeted Him; and others smote Him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophesy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee."—Matt. 26: 67, 68. Luke says: "And the men that held Jesus mocked Him and smote Him, and smote Him, And when they had blindfolded Him, they struck Him on the face, and asked Him, saying, Prophesy, who is it that smote thee? And many other things blasphemously spake they against Him."—Luke 22: 63–65.

4. They next take Him before Pilate the Roman ruler there, at that time. It seems that they had not the power to put Him to death, but must have the sentence ratified by the proper authorities of the land. But Pilate finds no fault in Him. He therefore says unto the Jews, "Take ye Him, and judge Him according to your law. The Jews therefore, said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death."—John 18, 31. Now here then they desire to have Him tried according to Roman law, and they are prepared with false accusations—accusations quite different from those made before Caiaphas. They say He perverteth the nation and refuses to give tribute to Cesar, and says He Himself is king. "What accusation bring ye against this man?" "They answered and said unto him, If He were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him unto thee."—John 18: 29, 30. Luke says, "And the whole multitude of them arose, and led Him unto Pilate. And they began to accuse Him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation (i. e. the Roman nation) and forbidding to give tribute to Cesar, saying that He Himself is Christ a king." Luke 23: 1, 2. But still Pilate could find no fault in Him, his mind was less biased than the high priests, "For he knew that for envy they had delivered Him."—Matt. 27: 18. Their rage increases, "And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewery, beginning from Galilee to this place." Luke 23: 5.

5. He is now taken before Herod, who was then in Jerusalem. Pilate having found out that he belonged to his jurisdiction, being a Galilean, so away to Herod they go with Him, only to augment His reproaches. True Herod was glad at first that Jesus came, but only for self-gratification, for he had heard a great deal about Jesus, and now thought he would see some miracle performed, just to please Him, but in this he was foiled, hence this is what follows: "And Herod with his men of war, set Him at naught, and mocked Him, and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe, and sent Him again to Pilate."—Luke 23: 11.

6. Again He is brought before Pilate to receive His sentence, to be scourged by him, and to be mocked and abused by the soldiers; soldiers! yes, those men, who know but little refinement, and who always are posted in the way in which torture and insult can be the most successfully administered. They are generally (if they are soldiers long) of a low-lifed, and a degraded disposition. Reader never be a soldier.

"And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required."—Luke 23: 24. "Then Pilate therefore took Jesus and scourged Him,"—John 19: 1. Now He gets into the soldiers hands. "Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto Him the whole band of soldiers, And they stripped Him, and put on Him a scarlet robe, and when they had plaited a crown of thorns, they put it upon His head, and a reed in His right hand; and they bowed the knee before Him, and mocked Him saying, Hail, King of the Jews! And they spit upon Him, and took the reed and smote Him on the head. And after that they had mocked Him, they took the robe off from Him, and put His own raiment on Him, and led Him away to crucify Him."—Matt. 27: 27–31.

7. His crucifixion.

They now lead Him away to crucify Him, followed by an immense multitude of people; some rejoicing, others indifferent, while a few are sadly lamenting his fate. And on reaching the spot, I imagine they lay down the cross, that rude piece of timber, they stretch the innocent Lamb of God upon it, but He does not strive nor cry, never draws back His hand whilst the nail was placed upon it to receive those clinching blows that shall pin Him to the cross. Oh! awful! SHAMEFUL! SHAMEFUL!! death. He is then raised amid shouts of derision. Oh! the tearing of that sacred flesh as it (the cross) is left down into the hole made to receive it. But it is fastened in the ground.

8. They now all join in general mockery. The soldiers mock Him saying, "If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself." They also take His garments and gather into a group and divide the spoils, and like soldiers (in general) gamble for His coat,—"cast lots" for it.

Then around come some very lewd fellows. "And they that passed by reviled Him, wagging their heads, and saying, "Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildst in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross."—Matt. 27: 39, 40.

A little to the one side stand a set of self-righteous, well dressed priests, who join in the general scene, saying, "He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He be the King of Israel, let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe Him."—Matt. 27: 42.

The thief takes occasion to rail on Him, "And one of the malefactors which were hanged, railed on Him saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us."—Luke 23: 39.

III. "THEY KNOW NOT."

They were ignorant, of the fact that they were torturing the Son of the living God, the immaculate Lamb, the promised Messiah, their Redeemer and Savior, who was then and there suffering for their sins, and the sins of the whole world.

They knew not that He must needs suffer in the way and manner that He did.

They knew not the extent of His suffering—the mental as well as the physical suffering which He endured. They were ignorant that He was made perfect by the things which He suffered," and was opening up a perfect way to glory.

They knew not that He was the first and the last, the beginning and the end, and that in Him was everlasting life. And like Saul, because they did what they did in ignorance, He desired their forgiveness.

IV. FORGIVE THEM.

Here reader is shown the mind of Christ in all its perfection, the mind that every believer in Christ should have, the spirit or disposition that Christians should show toward their enemies.

Why did He ask their forgiveness? Why, but because reason could not reach their prejudiced, maddened minds. The first martyr (Stephen) showed a desire that his enemies should be forgiven, and their deeds might not be laid to their charge, which was conclusive evidence that he had learned of Jesus, and was following the Lord in the way.

Jesus desired their forgiveness on account of their ignorance, "for they know not what they do." This forgiving spirit accords well with all His and His apostles' teachings. The Lord's prayer breathes the same spirit as our text.

And not to multiply words we will speedily close. Dear brethren and sisters, old and young, (and especially the young, for they cannot bear reproach perhaps as well as the elder brethren) when you are derided, mocked and persecuted, think of Jesus on the cross. Turn and look upon the lovely Savior, surrounded by such a multitude of enemies; and as He looks over them, views their evil and unholy deeds; hears their scornful words of derision and shame, and then with upturned eyes, towards heaven, breathes out in sweet and melting tones the words, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do," and then like the apostles you can be made to rejoice and be exceeding glad that you are counted worthy to suffer with Him.

DOING GOOD.

Doing good is a subject of vital importance and should receive our sincere and candid attention, yet how few if any do it justice, There are a great many ways in which we can do good, and to improve all the opportunities which are afforded us, requires us to give the subject very careful thought. We may see many opportunities in which we might have done good, but just in time for them to pass. Therefore we should be watchful and energetic. Watchful that we may consider the circumstances, and energetic in acting out that which we consider our duty to do.

We have all been placed upon the earth for a wise and noble purpose, by a wise, good, and just God, whose end is to glorify Him. In what nobler act can we be engaged or give God more glory than by doing good? As he is a wise God we should exercise wisdom and discretion in the performance of those things which tend to give Him honor, as a good God, would have his creatures do Him homage by doing good, and as a just God he demands justice at our hands. Since he has prepared all things well and good, and best adapted to our convenience, He would have of us a repentance, which is nothing less than to do good. As every man is by justice bound to pay his debts, it therefore becomes of us, a duty.

We will consider doing good, a duty or as payment on the debt which we owe to God. As He is continually extending His mercies and kindnesses toward us, we are to do the same to our fellow creatures as in a measure payment. There is one point which we wish to consider before going farther, and that is, in what condition should we be, to fully discharge our duty? Can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit? Can one that is in allegiance with a spirit entirely averse to the one which God would have us possess, discharge his duty, or teach of Christ whence all good cometh? No a soul must become regenerated, entirely opposite to his former allegiance, and so long as we adhere to the teachings of the adversary we can produce no good. We must put off the old yoke of sin and put on the new which is easy to bear. Now since we have volunteered in Christ's service, we must bear reproaches for Him as He has borne them for us.

Let us notice the manner in which he came into the world, poorer than the poorest on earth, so much so that his first couch was the manger of a brute. Behold the exceeding love of the son of God! He who inherited all things, permitted himself through love for humanity to occupy the lowest position among men, that the poor and vile might approach Him. Had he come in his original splendor who would have dared to approach unto His presence, for His purity and holiness would have prevented even the most righteous from entering His presence. But he assumed flesh and came and dwelt among men, suffered the infirmites of the flesh and was tempted like unto men that He might bear their infirmities. His whole life was one of continual doing good and we as His followers are commanded to imitate His example, and if we do not try to imitate Him we are violating one of the principle commands of God. How can we return good for evil unless we have love for all? And if it were not commanded us to do so, it would be a duty because Jesus loved us. As the life of Christ consisted in continually doing good and loving His enmies, so must our lives be if we desire to do His will, ever having the interest of our fellow beings in view. It is our duty to contribute to their relief as far as lies in our power. We must do them good in word, deed and action, devoting our lives to their interests. In other words; "Live for the happiness of others." In what can we effect so real a happiness as in doing good to others, and having them to adopt the same prineiple?

How much we can effect by our influence especially, if it be in the cause of Christ. We should try to gain all the influence we can, and by extending it, we may be the means of drawing some precious souls to Christ, and this is the greatest possible good we can do. No temporal contribution can satisfy and make us happy as that contribution to the soul.

Doing good, is also a privilege and the most amiable disposition is the one which acts not merely from a sense of duty, but from option. We should all, I was going to say, try to do good more from privilege than duty, but I fear if we did not consider it a duty and feel under obligations so to do, we would not appreciate it aright. But those who do so from mere option will ne ver lose their reward, and this encourages us; that every good deed or word, as well as evil done, will be rewarded. Therefore we should live so that as our days decrease may our good works increase, and as death approaches may sin recede.

Yours in Christ.

HOW TO MAKE THE PROPER USE OF OUR MONEY.

As the editor has given the above as a subject and wishes some one to write on it, I will endeavor, through weakness to do so, hoping the few thoughts I have to offer may tend to our edification.

First, we may give our money to our ministers who are in needy circumstances. They have to ride miles away from home, and whether rain or shine, the poor minister has to go. In the meantime the laity can set at home or go, just as it suits him. Then again when seed and harvest time comes, the minister may be very busy at his work, and at this time he is often called away to preach a funeral, and it is perfeetly right that he should go, but the trouble is, his work stops at home, and he is not able to get hands to carry on his work. To such we should give our money instead of giving it to our children, and thus enable them to dress after the foolish fashions of the world. Brethren and sisters, I maintain we might as well dress our own bodies in fashion with the world as our children. Who can show the difference? Money that is spent in such a manner is certainly not spent for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom. We are taught in the Scriptures to bring up our children in the fear and admonition of the Lord. We generally see where brethren follow this rule, their children come into the church at an early age, while others who grant their every desire are pained and grieved to see them stand aloof, and in some instances never come in at all.

In the next place we can help to support the Sunday School. The money that is spent for vanity would be sufficient funds to provide for a Sunday School in every neighborhood where children might be gathered in Christian order, and taught the way in which they should go. If this were done when they arrive at a mature age, they would be more fully prepared to enter the church. Timothy was taught the Scriptures from a child, and so should we teach our children while in their youth. This is the design of the Sunday School, and if properly conducted, not only will the children be benefitted, but the teachers will become more enlightened while trying to teach others, and thus may God's name be glorified.

Many are the ways in which we may use our money for the cause of Jesus. We should give to the poor who are destitute of daily bread, and have no clothes and no home. By giving to the poor we lend to the Lord, and will in no wise lose our reward.

Lastly, we can help to build churches, that we may have convenient places to worship in, and that the Gospel may be preached over the whole world. But we should be careful that we do not follow after the world in building them too grand. I fear there is danger of this, and it seems to me that this danger has recently been made apparent. Brethren be careful, the day is fast approaching when we shall have to give an account of our stewardship.

TEMPTATIONS.

John Newton says, Satan seldom comes to a Christian with great temptations, or with a temptation to commit a great sin. You bring a green log and a candle together, and they are very safe neighbors; but bring a few shavings and set them alight, and then bring a few small sticks and let them take fire, and the log be in the midst of them, and you will soon get rid of your log. And so it is with little sins. You will be startled with the idea of committing a great sin, and so the devil brings you a little temptation, and leaves you to indulge yourself. "There is no great harm in this," "no great peril in that;" and so by these little chips we first easily light up, and at last the green log is burned. Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation.

WHEN it is not despicable to be poor, we want fewer things to live in poverty with satisfaction, than to live magnificently with riches.—St. Evremond.

It is a pity to see a neat dwelling in which everything seems to dwarf the occupant, in which the occupant is the least circumstance. I have seen men that were only the punctuation of their wealth.

WHENEVER I see a child of God becoming less holy than he was, I know the secret of it—he is clinging less firmly to Christ than he did. Our root must be right, if our fruit is to abound.

IN God's finest plan there is nothing small or trivial. The humblest life cost the death of the Son of God. Does it not throw a veil of sanctity around the poorest and most unworthy when we think of the ransom paid for such a life?

SALVATION BY FAITH.

BY WEBSTER O. MOORE.

There is a seeming conflict between us and others on this question. The difference is as to whether we are justified by faith, or faith alone. Those taking the latter position claim that prayer is essential to a Christian life and the gaining of a glorious immortality. So do we. Are we then justified by faith alone?

Our Savior says: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." This proves that we can be saved by faith. This is then the question that should concern us: Have we faith in the Son of God? This expression of our Savior is similar in construction to that utterance of the apostle Paul: "If children, then heirs." Those who accept of this truth do not ask to have it proven that a child of God is an heir of God. The only point to be determined is whether they are children; for, "if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

Near the close of Christ's ministry on earth he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you that one of you shall betray me." One of the disciples said; "Lord who is it? Jesus said, "He it is to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped it." Did his disciples spend time to prove that the one receiving the sop should be the one to betray him? They believed that. They would be more likely to watch and see who should receive the sop.

Let us be concerned about the right matter. There are many expressions to prove that a man can be saved by faith. To write essays on this topic is as useless as an attempt to prove that twice six is twelve. Let us consider the foregoing question: "Have we faith in the Son of God?"

1. "Faith without works is dead." Every seed can produce only one kind of a plant. The species of seed is known by its species of growth. The kind of faith that saves is known by the kind of work it produces. It leads its possessor to abide in Christ—to do His commandments.

Here we are met by this objection: Do not hypocrites keep the commandments of Christ? We are aware that wax fruit often appears like real fruit; that some appear to fast when the heart is not in it. In order to make full proof of our faith we will not rely exclusively upon the external evidence, although we are firmly of the conviction that those who always abound in the work of the Lord have pure hearts. If a tree has thrifty branches, it is safe to conclude, without examination, that it has lively roots. In order, however, to make full proof of our faith, let us examine the internal evidences.

2. Those who believe are not ashamed of Christ. Many hesitate because their faith is weak. To take a stand for Christ demands publicity. They love the approbation of those who seek their own, and not the things that belong to Christ. They are not ashamed of the sentiment that rises against Christ sufficiently to resist it. They will have this proof of faith when they can say:

> "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
> Nor to defend his cause;
> Maintain the honor of his word,
> The glory of his cross."

The sufficiency of this proof is known by external evidences—owning Christ before men. An individual acknowledged to me at one time his desire to become a Christian, but expressed a desire to be immersed where he was not known. He was ashamed to own his Lord before acquaintances. Instead of complying with his desire, I sought to strengthen his faith. In due time he did not care how many witnessed his obedience to Christ. Thus his faith was strengthened, and he became a child of God.

3. Another evidence of saving faith is to disbelieve everything said in opposition to Christ and his word. How many have listened to the Gospel until almost induced to become Christians, and then have turned away because some one has said; It is not essential. How can I be certain that I believe that George Washington was born February 22, 1732? By knowing that I disbelieve every one who speaks differently from that. Christ says "If ye confess me before men, I will confess you before my Father in Heaven." In his commission to the apostles he says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." How can a person have assurance of faith that is free from objection, who hears the Gospel and then abides by the sayings of those who say: Baptism is a non-essential; you can be saved without it as well as with it; if you will live uprightly before men, you will be saved whether you belong to the church or not. When he disbelieves all this, he may have assurance that he believes as the oracles of God speak, and that it is better to obey God rather than man.

Hence to reiterate, we know that we have faith because,

1. We obey him. "Faith without works is dead." If we concede that faith alone will propel the Christian, and that steam alone will propel the locomotive, we must also concede that neither of them can exist in any degree of importance without something else equally essential.—their antecedents and consequences.

2. We are not ashamed of him. "Whosoever believeth in him shall not be ashamed." We are "not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

2, We do not believe men when they speak differently from him. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life."—John 5: 24, also 10 27.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

CANADA is having a temperance revival headed by the Bishop of Montreal, who is an earnest advocate of total abstinence.

A Baptist chapel has been completed in the city of Paris, costing $60,000, and seating 600 persons.—The Baptists lead numerically, in Chicago. Their membership is 5, 438; the second church numbers 1, 217.

It is estimated that the 20,000 members of the congregational churches in Illinois give a little over two cents per week each for five different benevolent objects recommended by the general Association.

THE Secretary of War, it is said, has engaged Mr. James Parton as editor of the original manuscripts of George Washington, which have recently come into the departments possession. Among these papers is the original note-book which Washington used while in command of the army on the field.

THE Yellow Fever has terribly scourged Shreveport, La., nearly depopulating the city, and is still unabated. At last accounts about 400 cases were still under treatment. At Memphis, Tenn., the state of affairs must be deplorable. People die faster than they can be buried. Nine hundred have died since the outbreak of the fever, and still it rages. Hundreds have died unattended. There is a great lack of nurses, and money is urgently asked for and greatly needed.

The yearly meeting of the orthadox Friends held at Richmond, Ind., is now in session. This is the largest yearly meeting of Friends in the world, and its membership has increased 850 in the past year. Last Sunday special services were held, attended by large crowds not connected with the yearly meeting. Wm. Baxter, father of the Indiana Temperance Bill, and Caroline Talbot, who, beside being an eloquent speaker, is a leader in the reformation of fallen women, are present at the meeting.

YELLOW FEVER RAVAGES.—Memphis is suffering terribly from the yellow fever. During the past week there were 240 deaths, of which 146 were from yellow fever, against 68 the week before. The total number of deaths since the disease appeared is 502, nearly all of which occurred in the infected district. The German Bruderbund earnestly appeal to German societies and Germans generally for aid in nursing their sick and burying their dead.

THE jewish ceremony of removing the shoe from the man who refuses to marry his brother's widow was actually performed; as we mentioned a few weeks ago, in Oakland California. Our informant, if we remember correctly, was the Observer. But the Jewish Times takes Rabbi Wise to task for marrying a man to his brother's widow. The law regluating the former case is explicit, to be found Deut. xxv. 5-11, but as to what tradition has made void, the positive requirements of this law, so as to make compliance a crime, we confess our ignorance, and would be glad to be enlightened.—Christian Standard.

The Romish church has met with another check, in Brazil, in asserting her extravagant claims to determine the civil as well as the spiritual status of individuals. The question whether Protestant marriages are dissolved by the conversion of one of the wedded pair to Catholicism has been decided against her. Many Brazilian jurists defended this monstrous assumption, the Catholic bishops sanctioning the re-marriage of converts without regard to their existing wedlock. This state of things has come to an end through the instrumentality of Herr Hermann Haupt who, being in Rio Janeiro, while the post of German Charge d'Affaires in that capital was vacant, called the attention of the Government to the remarriage of two German converts whose protestant husbands were still alive. The Emperor, after consulting the State Council, decided that Protestant marriages are indissoluble except by judicial decree, that the two women had incurred the guilt of bigamy, and that they and the priests who performed the ceremony of marriage had laid themselves open to a criminal prosecution.

AUTHOR OF "HOME SWEET HOME."—In his oration at the dedication of the bust of John Howard Payne in Brooklyn, last week, Hon. Wm. C. Dewitt, in alluding to the authorship of "Home Sweet Home"—said: "Payne never knew what it was to have a home after he was thirteen years old. About this period of his life, his mother, whose love and virtue probably planted within him those sentiments which burst from his soul years after she was gone, and his father, who stood behind the scenes in tears when his boy first trusted himself to the temptations of the stage, went to their long home beyond the grave. From this moment Payne was a wanderer, and despite the tenderness of his heart, and the fascinations of the fair sex, he maintained his celibacy and homelessness until he consummated it by death upon the remote and hoary shores of the Mediterranean. Strange that a wanderer should have sung this song of home. Nevertheless, it was while in London, engaged in writing a drama and when his mind was doubtless dwelling upon his delightful boyhood at East Hampton, that he wrote. "HOME, SWEET HOME." This little poem, like its author, is largely indebted to providential aids for its celebrity. It was not the coinage of many years of meditation, like Gray's "Elegy," nor was it written like our national anthem, amid the scenes it sought to consecrate. Indeed it had been in Payne's possession among his rubbish for a long time before it was brought out at all.

A convention of the Spiritualists was held recently in Chicago, and many of the leading men from all parts of the country were present. During the session a number of speeches were made on various subjects and their radical utterances show very clearly of what spirit they are. Miss Anna Middlebrook, of Connecticut said:

"I stand here to night, as far as the Christian religion is concerned, determined on its destruction. In politics I am a rebel. I avow it boldly. This is a sham republic. With reference to the social problems I am a revolutionist. Why should we in the nineteenth century go eighteen hundred years for our doctrine? Is there not more than we can learn from the living present? If we live up to our philosophy, we will see the time when the mummy creeds of Christianity will be overturned.

Another speaker W. B. Anthony Higgins of Jersey City, said: "We are called Spiritualists. I have another name for our sect. Anti-Christians. (Applause.) To be consistent Spiritualists we must not only change men, but change theories. We have evolved in this country the right to be happy as best we may. Since the Christians have failed to elevate humanity, we must seek that elevation by different paths from those which they have pursued. We have enunciated to the world another form of political liberty— that is, individual liberty—and we are teaching the world that there is no political liberty without individual freedom.

SOME of the difficulties which Mormonism may experience, should they exist long enough, are presented in the following from a letter to the New York Sun:

The water of the lake has certainly risen twenty feet since the Mormons first entered the valley. I have seen Saints who tell me that they used to go in swimming at the foot of Black Rock. The rock is now several hundred feet from the shore, and is surrounded by twenty feet of water. If the lake rises in the same proportion for a hundred years the Saints will be drowned out, and Salt Lake City will be sunk as deep as Sodom and Gomorrah. Over twenty years ago the Mormons drove a herd of church cattle over to Church Island, which proved a wonderful grazing ground. They found a ridge extending from the main land to the island covered by barely three feet of water. For years they drove their herds over this ridge.

To-day the ridge is over twenty feet deep, and no beeves have been taken from the island for years. Thousands of wild cattle roam over its valleys and gorges. But one family ever lived there, and that was the family of the church herder. Last year he died, and the island is deserted. At some time the water has filled the whole Salt Lake Valley. A rim or shore line is visible on the side of the mountains thousands of feet above the city. This rim is so plainly defined that a railroad could be built on the side of the range for miles at a stretch without excavating a ton of rock.—Cynosure.

Youth's Department.

TO THE YOUNG.

I do not say that you should do nothing but work and study, but I do say that you cannot be happy here nor blessed hereafter, if you make no better use of your valuable time and opportunities, than to gratify your own inclinations, and to obtain the admiration of your fellow creatures for things that a butterfly may perhaps excel you in, or in which at least even if you are skillful and well read, a wise heathen may put you to shame by his superior knowledge. You are Christian children in name, and if you be so in reality, you must do such good works as God has designed that we should perform and walk in them, both old and young.

But we have not yet done with the bee. You will hardly believe that these little insects have in every hive, a queen, to whom they pay the most devoted obedience. They work for her, feed her, take the tenderest care of her young, and will fight and die in her defense. If you rob them of their queen, you reduce them to despair, if you entice her away, you may lead the whole swarm with you wherever you please, they will follow and nothing but death puts an end to their loyal attachment. Here is a beautiful example of submission to parents and teachers, and all that are put in authority over young people, as well as of obedience to the government and the laws. A country disturbed by evil and rebellious spirits, a family of unruly servants and children, or a school where the voice of the teacher is disregarded, and noise and disorder prevails, must be put to shame by a peep into a common bee-hive. We are told in Scripture that God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, and all scenes of disorder and disturbance must be displeasing to Him. Think of the hundreds of bees that inhabit one hive, and how they are crowded together; their delicate cells in the honey-comb, one small entrance to the habitation where the comers and goers must constantly meet and be in danger of disputing the passage, yet who ever hears the little creatures quarreling, or sees them fighting or disturbing one another at their employment. Among them all is order and harmony. They exemplify that excellent rule, "A place for every thing, and everything in its place." And so obliging are they in accommodating and assisting each other, that in this you may find a good example in their conduct. There is no truer happiness than that realized by being in concord. "A house divided against itself cannot stand. If ye bite and devour one another, take heed lest ye be consumed one of another.".

Let us then bear one another's burdens, be helpers together in faith and love, and good works. But we have one Sovereign who has claims on us of a stronger kind than any earthly friend or ruler can have, even the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the head of the Church and the King of His people, who showered the exceeding riches of his love in coming among us to suffer and die for guilty sinners. We are then in duty bound to present unto Him ourselves, our souls, and bodies as a reasonable, holy, lively sacrifice, which he will design to accept if we yield ourselves freely to his guidance.

But even here alas, how shall we bear a comparison with the poor little bee and its monarchs? Do we show such devotedness to our Lord? Do we work and study for opportunities of doing Him service? Do we deprive ourselves of any indulgence to feed his poor members, and to assist in distributing the Bread of Life among His flock, both those already brought to the fold, and those who are yet wandering without a Shepherd? Are we willing if called on not only to part with our substance, but to hazard our lives in His cause? Preferring death to sin is the thought of being separated from His love, the most unsupportable of all our fears, and alway content to follow where His word leads us. If the ungodly oppose us, endeavoring to drive or to draw us from the path of duty, in all these things the bee may show us what real love and loyalty are capable doing, and if we fall short of such a pattern, what excuse can we make? This is a very serious inquiry, and one at which we ought to pause. We know our duty, and we also know that by neglecting it, we draw down the wrath of the Most High upon us. We feel ourselves continually turning aside from the way of holiness, because our natures are evil and satan tempts us to transgress, but greater is He that is for us than they which be against us, and if we fall or quit the straight path, it is because we do not watch, pray and seek for the help He is so ready to bestow. God teaches the bee to make a right use of what it finds there, and shall He not also teach us, if, like the bee, we fulfill His will. God has made His promise to His believing children, "Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, this is the way, walk ye in it. When ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." This is the voice of the Holy Spirit who instructs those who humbly depend on His teaching, warning them from sin and encouraging them to holiness, and many good works you have it in your power to do if your hearts are so inclined. There are many treasures for you to gather, and many may be made rich in spiritual things by your labor, not only from the Word of God, but from all His works, and everything that surrounds you, may you derive valuable instructions and impart it to others.

To do this you must ever pray for grace to improve the time and watch for opportunities of carrying your good wishes into effect, The flower loses no sweetness, though the bee loads herself from its store, and so it is with what I am recommending to you. The riches of God's Word and works are inexhaustible; they will be always sweet and new to you. Every time when you return to gather the good with which they abound, the bee does not, because it was very industrious yesterday, neglect to work to-day, and feast on what it has gathered. No, it knows the value of time too well, and improves every hour. The counsel given to us in Scripture is, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave." The bee labors all Summer that it may in the Winter eat the fruit of its industry, but we rob it of its sweet store, and too often are the harmless creatures put to death, at the same time losing all that they have so toiled to lay up. With the diligent Christian this can never be the case, for thieves cannot break through nor steal. The treasures which are reserved in Heaven for him, and death itself is but the entrance to His eternal inheritance.

Let me hope that a bee will never cross the path of my young readers without awakening a serious thought on the lesson which God has fitted it to teach, and may we all be found with equal diligence and steadiness occupying the stations assigned by His Almighty wisdom and everlasting love.

JAMES CREEK COMMUNION.

In life, we all have our prospective seasons or wants to which we look forward with interest. Our Communion was an event of this kind to us, not only on account of the communion we expected to enjoy with our Divine Master, but also with His children, and we feel that we were not disappointed, as we truly had a good meeting.

Our exercises commenced on the afternoon of the 10, with the following ministerial aid: J. R. Hannwalt, Grabill Myers, Jno. Knisley, Leonard Furry, Jacob Steel, A. L. Funk, J. W. Bromhaugh, P. S. Myers, Geo. S. Myers, Geo. Swigart, J. R. Lane, S. A. Moore, J. B. Replogle and D. S. Clapper.

Notwithstanding the large number of speakers present, we had good and interesting preaching and none seemed in the way of others, which often appears to be the case on such occasions.

After the first meeting two persons were initiated into the church by baptism. The evening exercises were largely attended and conducted in such a manner as to inspire the congregation to respectful attention. Quite a number of the members of the surrounding churches communed with us, making the number of communicants much larger than it would otherwise have been.

On Saturday morning we again met for public preaching and had several profitable discourses. For the afternoon there was no appointment made but as there were a large number of people remaining about the church, it was thought prudent to have religious exercises, accordingly it was agreed upon to have a meeting of short discourses, about 10 minutes each, and to see how nearly each one would measure himself we timed them with the following result in minutes: Grabill Myers, 5. Jacob Steel, 20. A. L. Funk, 4. S. A. Moore, 6. L. Furry, 4. John Knisley, 8. J. B. Replogle, 3. P. S. Myers, 12. A. L. Funk, 2. Grabill Myers, 2. J. R. Hannwalt, 16. The training of children was the topic and proved to be interesting, and we hope, instructive.

We also had very good preaching on Saturday evening, Sunday a. m., and Sunday evening. During the meeting we had a number of calls by brethren and sisters, also the following ministers: L. Furry, P. S. Myers, S. A. Moore, D. S. Clapper, and our esteemed Eld. John Knisley, of Ind., who occupied a seat in our sanctum to-day. Our brother S. W. Bollinger is also with us. He is busily engaged in selling a valuable medicine which we are glad to know is giving general satisfaction where tested.

WANTED.

As we expect to send out our prospectus shortly, we would be much pleased to have a large number of new agents to work for us. There are places where the Pilgrim is but partly introduced, and other places again where it is not known at all. Any of our brethren and sisters having acquaintances at such places will confer upon us a special favor, by sending us the name of some one whom they think might act as our agent. We will gladly supply any one with prospectus, &c., who will consent to work for us, and we hope our friends will help us to establish agents wherever there is any prospects at all of obtaining subscribers. We are more than ever in earnest in our work, and we hope every one who has the advancement of the cause of Christianity at heart will be willing to give us the helping hand. Let us then have a large number of new, live, active workers. If there are any of our former agents who cannot work for us this year, we hope they will see to getting some one else who is interested in the work, to take their place.

A MISCOUNT.

By a miscount somewhere we failed to have enough papers to supply all of our readers last week. About one hundred of our western subscribers could not be supplied. For this we are very sorry and hope those unsupplied will excuse us, as such mistakes are beyond our control. If any of the number are preserving them for binding and let us know we will try and get the Nos. for them, but hope that none will ask for them but such as are saving them for that purpose.

Send us a Report.—The Communion season is now about over, and as we are all interested, or should be at least, in the prosperity of our Zion, we hope to hear from the different churches, as they certainly will have something of interest to tell us. Let not some one fail to give us the news.

PERSONAL.

Hattie F. Miller.—R. Ralston's Pilgrim is marked paid on our book. We cannot now say how the oversight occurred in not giving credit in the money list. Our clubbing list will be announced soon, in which Harper will be enclosed. We can send you both papers for about the same as Harper will cost alone.

S. Musselman. All right. Almanac will be ready for distribution in a few weeks.

J. L. Frantz. The three subscribers you speak of are in the Galley. Huntsville Logan Co., Ohio, and we cannot see how they can possibly be missed in mailing.

Jno., Zook, Correct, thank you, quite satisfactory.

J. H. Biddle. All right. Your name is booked for 1874.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Hotel Londres, Paris, Sept., 8, '73.

My dear father and Sarah: I have often thought of writing you, but we have been travelling so much lately, that we have had but little time to write. I think I last wrote you from Munich, from there we went to Insbruck, then to Lindau. Then crossed Lake Constance, to Romanshorn, Switzerland, and to Zurich, where we spent several days. Here I made some inquiries to the name of Longenecker and Eshleman, and they told me the Longenecker's were from near Lake Constance, and the Eshleman's from Zurich, but I did not see any of them. From Zurich we came to Lucerne, then we took the tour of Lake Lucerne to Fluelen, then over the St. Gothard pass to Andermatt, then the Furca pass to the Rhone Glacier, the source of the Rhone River. Then over the Grimsel pass to Lake Rienz and Interlachen. From there to Berne, a very old town, then to Freybourg and Lussan, on Lake Geneva down the Lake to the city Geneva where we spent two very pleasant weeks. We like Switzerland very much, better than we did Germany. On last Friday at five o'clock we left Geneva for Paris, and arrived here in this beautiful city on Saturday at four, after twenty-three hours ride on the cars very tired. This is by far the most beautiful city we have seen in Europe. It is so large we have not seen very much of it, but every part of it we have been in is very fine. The buildings and the streets are the finest I ever saw. We think Philadelphia is beautiful, but it cannot compare with Paris. However we see a number of buildings that were destroyed by the late war, and still more that were burned by the Communes. It seems a shame that they should destroy their own city in that way. We now expect to stay in this city perhaps a month, there is so much to see here. We always hear in America that Paris is such a fearful wicked city, of course we do not know about that, but the people are very nice looking, more so than in any other city we have been in. The streets are very wide and paved very beautifully, it looks to me as if it was cement of some kind.

Last night we had a rain, and this morning I saw the men with large brushes sweeping the water on the sides to run away. A person being in Paris would think it was the best governed city in the world, everything seems to move on like clock work.

We have all been so well all Summer, we are so strong and walk a great deal. Olive often speaks of it, if she visited you she could understand nearly all the German they could talk to her now. Lannie can carry on a conversation in German, and so can Howard, but Lannie speaks it the best of the three. Here they speak French, we get along very nicely as Olive speaks French very well, and the boys are very anxious to learn it. For my part I never expect to learn to speak French. We expect to go to London from here. I do not know what our address will be there, but when I do I will write you again. I would like so much to hear from you but it takes so long to get an answer from America that we will not likely be here long enough to get an answer. John wrote me he paid you a visit on his way to Philadelphia.

We now expect to sail for America early in December, we would like to get home till Christmas. I am beginning to think it very long to get home, however I am much stronger than I was when I left home. Olive is so much stronger. I often wonder how you both are getting along and how your health is. I wrote to Blaus Gander soon after coming to Europe, but have never had an answer. We have had a very hot Summer, but since we came to Paris it has been quite cool. It seems quite Fall like, I see that some of the leaves on the trees in the Park are beginning to color. I think it is quite early for that. It was very hot in Geneva last week, but that is so near Italy, we are now twenty-three hours ride north-west of Geneva. Remember me kindly to Yoder's family. The children join me in love for yourself and Sarah. From your daughter,

N. L. Sprogle.

Dear brethren and readers of the Pilgrim: In No. 39, page 311, Bro. J. H. Moore writes in reference to what I said in No 37, "Having despaired in my ability to write, I laid down my pen to write no more for the public eye." I don't know how the word despair got into the article, whether I wrote it so by mistake, or whether the printer could not decipher my bad chyrography. I meant to say, having mistrusted my ability to write, &c., I thought my reasons justified the conclusions. I wish brother Moore however not to understand me as having laid my weapon down, or my armor off, I still fight small battles for the Lord. I had what I thought sufficient reasons to justify me in the conclusion not to write. My reasons I think are known to the Editors of the Visitor and Pilgrim, to whose columns I had frequently contributed, yet I did write some during the past Winter months, and prepared eleven articles written on eleven different texts or subjects, too long I fear for the columns of our weeklies at one insertion, and I don't like to have my articles cut in twain. I however took them with me to A. M., but none of the Editors asked me for my contributions, and having so little confidence in my ability to write, I did not intrude them on any one. I returned them to their former place in my desk where they now are. So I remained silent until contributions were solicited for the C. F. C., I have contributed some little for its columns, these, however, much against my will and natural inclination, partook too much of a personal and controversial character. This kind of writing is not congenial to my Christian or moral feelings. A reference to my writings in the Visitor and Pilgrim will show that practical religion, and not controversy, is my part. But I could not see how to avoid personality and controversy in my late writing in the C. F. C. The faith, order, and practice I believe to be the true faith and order the Gospel teaches,—is the same faith and order my fathers' believed and practiced in the church 123 years ago, and has come down in an unbroken line of descent, without a change of name. This faith and order I not only believe to be that of the Gospel, but deferred it as such, and when it is assailed and denounced by men and women, who by profession would have men believe they believed the same thing, my spirit within me is stirred, and I become terribly aroused, and know no one after the flesh; the mother that gave me birth, and the father who provided me food would be alike subject to sharp reproof.

I hope the publishing of articles in our periodicals, written against the order of the Church in any of her practices will forever cease, and the necessity to reply will be avoided. If there is a spirit of insubordination among some members in the Church, and if there be within her folds those who would cause divisions, and to subvert the simplicity that is in Christ, avoid such as says St. Paul, and don't give their heretical views and notions publicity in our church papers, to the grieving and wounding of the brethren who love the church in her faith, order and practice. If there be any who do not so believe, let such seek their associates among those who are of like precious faith with themselves, but suffer them not to corrupt the faith of the lambs of the flock through the medium through which we profess to strengthen their faith.

D. P. SAYLOR.

PILGRIM OFFICE, }
Oct 14, '78 }

Dear Brethren and Sisters: This morning I am in the PILGRIM Office, where the hands are all busy setting type for the next weeks paper. This is certainly a great satisfaction, that from one place and in so short a time, the good news can be sent broadcast over the land.

I have been looking around in the office, and seeing the care and energy manifested by our dear Bro. editor I do think that all the brethren and sisters should encourage and take the PILGRIM' at least, it should be taken by every family, so that our dear children may have the opportunity of reading it. Dear parents, see that your children have implanted into their minds, while young, the true principles of holiness and they will not depart from it. By reading the PILGRIM, our children can learn the practices of the gospel and the Church which will enable them to avoid many of the dangers to which they will be exposed in after life. I do hope that every family of the brotherhood will subscribe for at least, one of our periodicals. and then have a reporter for each Church district. By so doing we could have much more interesting news, and thus become more familiar with the condition of the different churches throughout the brotherhood. Not only may we realize this advantage but it may be the means of converting our children which we should esteem more highly than if we could gain the whole world.

Now dear brethren let us all do something towards enlarging their circulation so that they may have compensation for their labor and enable them to make still further improvements as they intend to do this year. I feel fully persuaded that the more we read and learn of each other the more we will prosper. How glad we feel on entering a house to find one of our periodicals! I soon look over its pages after some familiar name. How good it is that we can thus become acquainted with each other though thousands of miles apart, and instruct each other in those things which are for our eternal good. Brethren and sisters, let us try and get better every day, as we are all nearing the tomb and very soon may pass away.

I have just now, received a letter from my children which gives me much joy to hear that three have been added to the Church since I left home.

Yours truly.
JOHN KNISELY.

REPORT FROM SPRING RUN.

The Lovefeast in Spring Run Congregation, Mifflin Co., Pa., commencing October 5, is now over, and we had a good meeting. The ministerial aid was abundant.

At this meeting a deacon was chosen to the ministry, viz., John S. Hanawalt, and three persons baptized. Since about the first of April, twenty-four have been admitted by baptism and nearly half as many by certificate.

About two hundred communicants were present, and as a few could not be seated at the tables, several strange members, (especially such as had been or expected to be at an other Communion meeting) yielded their seats to as many of this congregation.

A movement is on foot to build a Meeting-house in Matawana which should be a large one, with a gallery so as to accommodate many members, and also a large number of spectators.

The Spring Run Meeting-house should also have a gallery. The want of sufficient room to accommodate the people here is a strong arguement in favor of the new M. H. being a large one. Too many are barely large enough at the time of building, and then as the church increases, and the audience gets larger, the house is too small.

S. W. BOLLINGER.

Mc Veytown, Pa.

Brother Pilgrim: The Coventry Congregation of the Church of the Brethren, held their Lovefeast on Saturday the 4th inst. There were many assembled to partake of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our blessed Lord and Master, whom we are trying to serve, for we are not our own, but we are bought with a price.

There were brethren and sisters present from Dauphin, Lebanon, Berks and Montgomery counties. Although the sky was overshadowed with dark clouds, yet all was quiet within. No unruly spectator to mar the solemnity of the occasion. Sometimes a sad feeling would cross our minds when we would think of the dear departed ones who used to sit with us around the table of the Lord, whose loved forms are now hidden away from our sight beneath the cold, cold clods. But we have the hope, the blissful hope, that they are now feasting in the Paradise of God's unchanging love.

Where the anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul.

H. HOLLOWBUSH.

Pottstown, Pa.

Mr. Editor.—In the PILGRIM of the 7th of October, you notice the purchase, by the Methodist, of a Baptist church in Charleston, S. C., at $20 000, which the Baptist claim was worth $60.000, and you close with this uncharitable language, "It was a sharp business transaction as between brokers, but shows that Southern Christianity needs reconstructing slightly," forgetting that the value of property has greatly declined in that unfortunate city and State, under the reconstructing policy persued towards them by the general Government.

Now Mr. Editor, nine-tenths of your readers will understand you as referring to the Southern "Methodist," but this is not correct. The purchase was made by a Negro Methodist church, which belongs to the Northern Methodist church. Why did you not so inform your readers, and let justice be done to a greatly abused church (The Methodist Church South) "though the Heavens fall."

The M. E. Church South needs no "reconstructing slightly," for she is constructed on the broad Scriptural basis of "do justly and love mercy," and return not "railing for railing." It is too much the habit of northern editors to confound the M. E. Churches North and South, in the Southern States, and to blame the M. E. Church, South, with things she has nothing to do with.

Believing you would not willingly do injustice to a branch of the Christian Church, and mislead your people, I ask you to insert the above in the PILGRIM.

Dear Brother: I am pained to have you announce the sad intelligence of the death of our very dear brother and Elder Joseph F. Rohrer. He was attending the Lovefeast and Communion Meeting at Marsh Creek, last Friday, took sick, and was bro't to his home near Smithburg, Md., yesterday while our Loveteast was being held at the Welty Meeting-house, near his home. This evening we have the news of his departure. I cannot realize it! He has been one of our faithful fathers in Israel. He has long and to the last, stood up in defense of the pure Word of God, and faithful vindication of the Christian life that is "not conformed to the world." O what a good record!

Some one will, I trust, communicate a biographical sketch of his life.

Yours in Christ,
D. B. MENTZER.

ANNUAL MEETING TENT.

Ed. of Pilgrim: —Please say to the Brotherhood that the purchasing of a tent is considered a failure for the present, the proposed donations amounting to about four hundred dollars. Only thirty-four churches, out of the many, reported as having considered the matter.

MARRIED.

SNDWBERGER—RHODES.—At the residence of the undersigned, in New Enterprise, Pa., Sept. 30, D. F. Snowberger, and Nancy Rhodes, all of Clover Creek, Pa. S. A. MOORE.

NORRIS—SAYLOR.—At the residence of the brides' parents, Sept. 9th, by George Brumbaugh, Abraham Norris, and sister Kate Saylor, all of Huntingdon Co., Pa.

DIED.

HARLEY.—In the East Coventry church, at the house of her son Rudolph Harley, (deacon) sister Elizabeth Harley, aged 88 years and 2 days.

She was a member of the Coventry church upwards of sixty years and was baptized by Eld. John Price. She lived a widow forty-nine or fifty years. Truly she was a mother in Israel; naturally of an amiable disposition, and this combined with the Christian spirit, made her a lovely wife, a fond mother and a very agreeable sister — She was very tenacious to the old order of the Brethren and had a strong desire to walk in all the commandments of the Lord blameless. The occasion was improved by Elders Keim and J. R. Price.

H. HOLLOWBUSH.

PERKY.—In Warsaw, Koscinsco Co., Ind., August 5th, '73, brother Daniel Perky, aged 94 years, 9 months and 13 days.

He was immersed two years ago and united with the Brethren. He was annointed with oil before his death. His burial service was held in the Baptist Church in the city, by brethren O. P. Miller and George, Cripe from Rev. 14: 13. Bro. Perkey was quiet and unobtrusive and had, in the course of his daily life, sought and obtained that peace which passeth all understanding. His sufferings he bore with patience and resignation, never murmuring, only expressing a desire that he might die and be at rest. He never sought after wealth or worldly gain, but with heart and hopes stayed on the divine creed, he resigned himself to the keeping of him who doeth all things well. Though a martyr for truth and right, he sustained himself to the last day of his life with unwavering faith and confidence in his Savior.

AGNES E. STONER.

RISH.—In the Logan church, Logan co., Ohio, Sept. 19 '73, our esteemed old sister Rispah M. Rish, aged 76 years, 6 mos and 27 days. She was a consistent member, her seat seldom vacant in the sanctuary. Funeral preached by the writer and M. Swonger from Rev. 14: 13.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa.
Literary Editor.

THE RIVER OF LIFE is a new collection of popular Music for Sunday Schools by H. S. Perkins & W. W. Bentley, Published by Oliver Ditson & Co. Price 35 cents.

The title of this book is well chosen and suggestive, and clearly connected with that of various hymns, as "By the Crystal River," "Watching on the Shore," "The Shining Ones," "The Water of Life," &c.

The authors seem to have been unusually fortunate in their helpers, having secured contributions of words and music from perhaps forty distinguished writers and composers.

Among the hymns for Infant Classes, we notice:

"Take my hand, dear Jesus,
Let me never stray."

Among those for general purposes:

"My Savior's voice is low and soft,
It's tones are clear and calm."

On the whole, it is fair to conclude that "THE RIVER OF LIFE" is a decided success in its compilation, and can hardly be less so in its sale.

HURD & HOUGHTON, Cambridge, Mass., have in press a new book by Mrs. Clara Erskine Clement—"Painters, Sculptors, Architects, Engravers and their work." Fully illustrated. "The Grammar of Painting and Engraving" by Charles Blanc is also promised for the "Autumn List." "Bianca Cappello," a fine act tragedy, in verse, by Mrs. E. C. Kinney will be ready early in autumn. "The Egyptian Sketch Book," by Charles G. Leland is a lively and humorous description of travel in the East. Mrs. Ames does the children a great favor by collecting the ballads and songs and bits of muse for the children written by the 'Carey Sisters" into a volume to be entitled "Ballads for Little Folks." "The work of the Spirit," by Rev. Samuel Cutter is a book of meditation and directions for daily use and will doubtless prove a valuable aid in many families. "Apples of Gold" bound for 1873, will be a treat for the children as it is profusely illustrated. We will supply any of these words as soon as published. Any book published in this or any other country, may be ordered through us at publishers prices.

H. N. MCKINNEY & Co., of Philadelphia, have just issued another book by Harriet B. McKeever—"The House on the Heights." $1 50.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., have just issued "Out of Sweet Solitude," a book of poems by Eleanor C. Donnelly. Extra cloth; full gilt, $1.50. "Appollos or the way of God" by the Right Rev. A. C. Coxe, D D., cloth $1.50. The first volume of their new edition of Prescott's Works is "Ferdinand and Isabella" and is edited by J. F. Kirk. Extra cloth, $2.25; sheep $2.75.

WHISPERS TO A BRIDE AND CHRISTIAN HOUSEHOLDS, by Mrs. Lincoln Phelps. With an Appendix containing a History of the Order of Deaconesses 1 vol. cloth, no edges, $1.00. White calf extra gilt, for bridal presents, $3.00.

There are few authors better qualified to perform the delicate task accomplished in writing this gem of a book, than Mrs. Phelps.

The Christian home, the fittest emblem of heaven which earth affords, should be the abode of peace and love, with all minds attuned to harmony, every member a worshipper at the family altar, inscribed to the God of Love and Father of Mercies, with the din of peace hovering over all; this forms a picture as beautiful as it is lovely. Upon every page are thoughts which tend to ennoble and dignify the sacredness of the family relation; and it were a good thing to let those whisperings come to the ears of many a wife, who has nearly forgotten the time when she assumed the bridal vows.

FAIRMOUNT PARK.—Sketches of its scenery, waters, and history. By Charles S. Keyser.

"Fairmount Park, at Philadelphia is the most extensive, and in natural advantages the most attractive, among the pleasure grounds of Europe and America. It extends along the Schuylkill River over seven miles, and along the Wissahicken over six miles. It begins at Fairmount and terminates at Chestnut Hill, a distance of nearly fourteen miles, and comprises nearly 3000 acres We cannot here describe its beauties and attractions. No one going to the "City of Brotherly Love" should fail to visit Fairmount Park, and spend at least one day among its beauties: but those who cannot go will be amply rewarded for the perusal of this little book which gives an accurate description of the Park with fine engravings of its places of interest. Published by Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, and for sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa., or at this office. Price paper 75 cts. Cloth $1.00.

POETRY.

For the Pilgrim.

IT MUST BE SWEET TO DIE.

It must be sweet, in early years, to die,
Like gentle fading flowers;
And pass away without a parting sigh,
To Heaven's blissful bowers.

It must be sweet in early childhood's love,
In gay, harmless infant life,
To leave behind, this world and soar above,
Far from earthly care and strife.

It must be sweet in gentle Spring to die,
Among the early flowers;
As a balmy breeze wafts its sweetness by,
To close young life's earthly hours.

It must be sweet in artless infant years,
To leave all earth's joys behind;
To leave behind its sorrows, joys and fears,
A happier home to find.

O it must be sweet, like a fading star—
To pass in childhood away,
To that beauteous land from earth afar,
Where 'tis everlasting day.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

HOW SHALL I INVEST MONEY FOR JESUS?

It is with much reluctance that I attempt to offer a few thoughts to the readers of the Pilgrim upon such a topic. First, on account of my inability to treat it as it should be, and secondly because I know that there are brethren who are better fitted for the task. But to the subject.

That it is allowable and right for the people of God to lay up treasures and accumulate the goods of this world seems clear, and admits of no doubt from the teaching of the Scriptures. But that the people of God have a Gospel right and privilege, either by precept or example, to apply the same accumulated goods in any way, or to any purpose that their fancy or wishes may dictate to them, we greatly doubt. This is far from being the way that Jesus points out to us, as we are by Him represented only as stewards over the goods, while the Lord is the rightful proprietor. So that if we wish to serve our Master acceptably we must necessarily consult His divine will, as to how we shall dispose of them.

And as money seems to be included as a part of the goods over which we have the stewardship, I think the caption of this article a pertinent one. It is well known that many of our brethren have grown wealthy, and no doubt, legitimately so, in an honorable, upright, straight forward business, and as long as we see them making a faithful disposition of their accumulated goods, we have no cause to censure, but rather feel to justify them. But when we see them follow the example of a money-loving, money-craving, monopolizing world by investing the Lord's goods in Rail road bonds, or place them in the care of some wealthy bank, or worse yet, to see them go into the banking business themselves, then our justification ceases and a disposition to reprove such a course takes its place.

I think we ought to consider it one of God's scourges if some of our brethren have met a temporal loss in the late financial panic, on account of non-producing stock, gamblers and reckless speculators. Perhaps a few more such shocks will give us more confidence in the "Lord's securities," and a little less confidence in the wild cat securities that have characterized the late money panic. The Lord tells us that "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." And when our confidence in that promise is lost, we then lend to the rich, thinking our money is more secure. So when the bottom falls out of these earthly securities, let us try the Lord's banks and see whether we will be disappointed.

Do the Brethren know generally how many hundred little congregations are scattered over the West, (and elsewhere for aught I know) that have no houses of worship, save their own private houses and schoolhouses? And when they wish to hold a Lovefeast they are compelled from the force of circumstances, to build a temporary shed, a tent, or fix up an old saw mill or something of the sort. How easy it would be for some wealthy brethren to lend without interest some of their money for a stated time, to such brethren under the above circumstances. How many prayers would ascend up to the throne of God in behalf of such brethren that would lend their means in this way.

Again how many of our dear brethren and sisters who are toiling day after day without the means necessary to get a fair start in life, that have neither teams, houses, nor land, and yet have families to support. How easy to raise the burden off of such by lending a few hundred dollars for a few years on low interest or no interest at all. My mind just now runs to the benevolent acts of a good old brother that is now across the jordan of death, that had accumulated much worldly goods and lived in Northern Illinois. I know of another old brother who was in very needy circumstances, and perhaps would always have remained so had it not been for the kindness of the rich brother. The rich brother let the poor brother have a farm and stock to raise on the most liberal terms, and the result was the poor brother soon accumulated enough to go west where he was able to buy him a comfortable little home, and though the rich brother is dead, he yet liveth. Such a brother cannot be forgotten. The old brother that was thus favored and who is still living, often repeats the acts of kindness from the rich brother, and even the children of the poor brother rise up to-day and call him blessed; and without doubt the children's children will yet learn the name and the kindness of the rich man.

Thus we have pointed out a few of the ways that we may "invest money for Jesus," but there are many more, too many to point out in one essay. Perhaps some other Bro. or sister will carry the subject farther, or if this should prove acceptable, you may hear more in the future on the same subject from your weak but well wishing brother.

PAST TIME.

We are in a fast age, everything is constantly changing. There is no necessity for a person being drawn back, for the word go or advance is now the ruling element, everything is bustle and speed all around us. Just think for a moment, what wonderful inventions the mechanist bro't to light in the period of the last fifty years, and the artist with his pencil has portraited and decorated the palaces of Kings and Queens. If the vice would only be tolerated with such, but the evil is cropping out and being engrafted in churches, on individuals, &c. Oh! pride stop. I was going to say, if a person at that time, (that is fifty years ago), would have told that generation in the next fifty years, there would be rail roads built, that is, roads by which people, Mdse. &c., will be conveyed from one place to another by steam at the rate of one mile per minute, that person would have been looked upon as being crazy, or accosted as an idiotic imbecile.

At that age of the world our brethren had to travel hundreds of miles by the wearisome way of horse back, to hold forth the Bread of Life to dying souls, spend half of their time in going from one place to another, whereas now they can travel more comfortable, and meet their appointments at very short notices, which is appreciated by all. Look where you will and you will perceive that every person is trying to advance and move on as fast as the wheels of time can carry them. If we meditate upon the subject of past time, oh what wonderful changes. We can not find words to express our thoughts about the matter, and judging the future by the experience of the past, who knows what will be brought about the next fifty years? Things perhaps more marvelous and astonishing than those at present. Language fails to depict the change, and what will become of the Church of the Brethren, (or Church of God, as some frame objection to calling it our Church or Church of the Brethren?) if we don't fortify our ranks a little stronger, I am afraid some of our peculiarities will be lost, because they are just on the brink now,—we are fast following popular churches.

Brethren, you who are placed as watchman on the walls of Zion, cry aloud lest the enemy will get power of the pulling down of strongholds; arouse, and with a determined zeal fight the battles of the Lord. Press forward with one united effort for the mark, make your calling and election sure, never waver or yield in one point, and I am frank enough to say that at the end of our pilgrimage we will all be united in one family where Christ is at the head. What a glorious consummation that will be! Think about it, meditate upon it, for surely you will not rue it, as it is worth striving for.

THE TEACHER.

"Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand."—Isa. 28: 9.

The above Scripture has forced itself upon my mind with such vehemence, that I am constrained to comment upon it and hope some poor souls may be awakened out of their lethargy. I understand the prophet to have reference to Christ as being the teacher. In different places Christ is spoken of as a teacher. "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow into it, and many people shall go and say: Come ye, and let us go up into the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths."—Isaiah 2: 23. This is the word which Isaiah saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem. Christ, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, is represented as being a teacher. Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, acknowledges Him to be a teacher come from God. But now that He has come in form of a teacher, whom shall He teach? In short, I answer, all who will be taught. It is written, "They shall all be taught of God." Sometimes we are told that all does not mean everybody. If this be true, who is able to tell how many are included in the word all. I understand the Savior to mean everybody, or in other words all who are capable of being taught, when He told His disciples to preach the Gospel to every creature, and teach all nations. The reason why so many are in the broad road that leads to destruction, is they are unwilling to come to this teacher. Think not friendly sinner that the Scriptures are too great a mystery for you to understand, for they are the teaching of Christ; by no means. Hear the Savior, "I thank thee Father Lord of Heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes." This is sufficient proof to any candid mind that Christ requires no impossibilities of any person. The plan of salvation is so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool cannot err therein.

But do we find objections to some things required in this teaching? We should not expect God's blessing in observing only a part. He may say to us at His second coming as He did to the Jews at His first coming, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Non-essential, is another objection to some of the requirements of the Gospel, as Baptism, the Lord's Supper, Feetwashing, &c. Well let us see how Scripture and such conclusions agree. Ananias said to Paul, "Why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.' Thus he thought baptism essential, even to wash away his sins. Jesus said to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."—John 13. So you see it was necessary for Peter, in order to have a part with Him, to have his feet washed, and we may safely conclude that the washing of Peter's feet, was a prerequisite to a part with him; that is a spiritual part. How can any in the face of these scriptures doubt the essentiality of these things? Oh says one, "faith alone, faith alone is sufficient to save us." But what saith the Scripture? "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart," that is the word of faith which we preach."

That the Word should accompany faith, is fully set forth in this language: Our faith should be in the Word, and if this be so, it is impossible for us to wilfully reject any requirement therein. Faith is the prerequisite to repentance, and repentance the pre-requisite to baptism, and baptism a pre-requisite to remission of sins and gift of the Holy Ghost. These three, must be observed in order, or in other words lawfully, before we have the promise as aforesaid. This is taking "the yoke upon us," and nothing short of this will bring us under the Gospel yoke.

What! says one, a yoke to wear? Yes but it is easy and the burden is light, and by taking the yoke upon us we are then, and only then, prepared to learn of Him. Hear Him: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me." Hence those are the ones whom He will teach knowledge; having the yoke of Christ upon them, they are willing to be taught of Him, hence will learn of Him meekness and lowliness of heart. Those He will make to understand—all that is necessary, for He will impart to them, He will give them His spirit to guide them into all truth. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."—John 17 chap. So said this teacher. Now in order to obtain sanctification, it is necessary for us to go through the truth, not to stop in the middle but go through. Now this clearly proves that if we do not go through, that is submit to every precept and example, our sanctification will never be complete. We will become blind, and forget that we were purged from our old sins, but if we, as Paul describes, "Put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand: and having done all to stand, we must not only have on part of the armor. No. This will never protect us, but we must then do ALL and then we will stand. Though Christian, while in the "valley of humility," had on the whole armour, yet when attacked by Appollyon," he had to fight—do all. Thus if we stand in the King's highway, the way of holiness, Christ will fight. While Christian was contending with his ruthless foe, "He gave him a deadly thrust, which made him give back as one that had received his mortal wound." Perceiving that he made at him again saying, "Nay,' in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."—Rom. 8: 37. And then Apolyon spread forth his dragon wings, and left Christian, that he saw him no more. Thus may we put to flight the great dragon or enemy of souls, and only thus.

Let us stand fast in the liberty wherein we are called, for we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

J. M. WELLS.

BE INSTANT.

"Be instant in season and out of season"—2 Tim. 4: 2.

Dear Brother Pilgrim: By the help of God, I wish to pen a few thoughts for your columns from the above heading, for the consideration of those who wish to see eye to eye in the great work of salvation.

1st. We will take Local Option. Perhaps this is out of season, but Paul would say: press on at all events. Now many of the Brethren could or would not go to the polls to vote to put down this traffic which is sending thousands of our fellow-creatures to perdition. But they thought all they were in duty bound to do was to stay at home and pray. We suppose, pray that the great evil might be removed. But we take the ground that they should have gone and voted in favor of a law that would have rebuked the dram seller and waked up the half dead and stupefied drinker. And now to the law and testimonies for the evidence of our assertions. When long ago, God's people sinned, God permitted them to be taken captive and carried to Babylon. There, in their low distress, they hanged their harps on the willows and when their captors required of them mirth and to sing of the songs of Zion, then alas; oh how could they sing in a strange land? But we think there they could pray and did pray for their deliverance and for the restoration of their beautiful house at Jerusalem and the church of the living God. And now what effect had their prayers? Why they caused God to move and soften the heart of Cyrus, king of Persia, so that he gave them an opportunity to rescue themselves from the power of bondage. But now they must embrace the opportunity and take the long and wearisome journey, and then with great affliction, and at the expense of the good will of Sanballet and others, rebuild the house, with the sword in one hand while building with the other. So we think they had something more to do than pray. And we think that the prayers of the righteous has entered the ears of Jehovah, and caused him to move and soften the hearts and minds of those of our fellow-men who hold the reins of government, to give us an opportunity of extricating thousands of our fellow-creatures from a drunkard's grave, and rebuking those who give their neighbor drink, and we should have done it.

2nd. Tobacco and pride are also frequently mentioned in our journals and if there is a cause for mentioning either of them by way of reproof, the accused must be guilty of intemperance which Paul forbids. As a general thing, when intemperance is spoken of it is understood as using too freely the intoxicating bowl, and we will admit that rye, corn, apples, peaches, &c., though very good in their place, yet were never intended to be converted or distilled into spirits and used to the degredation of mankind, but we think when the great orator of the New Testament, speaks of temperance, he means the total abstinence of all unnecessary things and would have us to offer our bodies a living sacrifice wholly and acceptable unto God which, he said, is our reasonable service.

3rd. There is considerable dissatisfaction in the manner of holding our A. M., and no wonder in my opinion, yet it appears almost impossible, taking into consideration the vast number of members in the Brotherhood, that every one willing and able to discuss, to have an opportunity to do so. And indeed I think things belonging to the Church of God, are too solemn, too weighty, too important to be passed by hasty discussions. And are there not many queries brought before A. M., of which by far the majority of members present have no knowledge until brought up for discussion. Now if the weightier matters were postponed for another year, and the queries inserted in the minutes of A. M., and each individual congregation urged to discuss the same in their private counsels and also in the district meetings and then send their conclusions to Annual Meeting, would it not be charitable, would it not be brotherly and would it not have a tendency to conciliate many minds? Yea, we think it would, and think something of the kind should be, so as to come nearer the mind of the whole Church. See Acts 15th chap. 22d ver.

4th. There also appears to be some difference of opinion as regards the new commandment, see John 13: 34, 35, which I believe to be the washing of the saints feet for the following reasons: feet-washing, according to Gospel authority, is a new commandment. By Mosaic authority, the means were provided and Aaron and his sons, under penalty of death, must wash both hands and feet and elsewhere, a little water was provided for the weary and respected to wash their own feet. Under the new covenant, Christ washed the disciples feet, teaching a humiliating and leveling system, and is there not one feature in this manner of feetwashing that strongly indicates charity which has a figure of cleansing and which we all need? By this we show to a guilty world that we are willing to condescend to this low act to save those for whom Christ died, showing thereby that we are willing to sustain and help them in working out their soul, salvation. Therefore all men may see and know that we are the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ when we condescend to the weak things of the world, which God has chosen to confound the things which are mighty.—1 Cor. 1: 27, 28.

"Awake my soul and with thy utmost care,
Thy true condition learn;
What are thy hopes, how sure, how fair,
And what thy great concern."

A LETTER TO SISTER MAGGIE SUTTERFIELD.

Dear Sister:—Your long looked for letter came to hand at last, bearing the sad news of the death of your dear mother and loving sister. Little did I expect to get such news from you, although I often wondered what was wrong that I could not hear from your folks in their new home in Kansas, but your kind letter explains the whole matter. Sad indeed is such a bereavement. As for your dear mother, that was not so much unexpected to me as our dear young sister Catharine.

No doubt you feel sad, as also I do when I call to mind the joys of past associations with your mother and sister. If we have any power of judging in regard to true virtue and piety, I think I can safely say you should not sorrow in such bereavements, you may sorrow in the gloomy loneliness of life, and in the absence of such dear loved ones, but then rejoice, inasmuch as they are released from this earthly tabernacle, and are now enjoying the fruition of a holier tabernacle, a house not made with hands. Yes, I am constrained to believe that those dear sisters have been stripped of mortality, that they might be clothed upon with a bright, glorious, and heavenly body, in which the pure robes of righteousness will ever bespeak their bliss and happiness.

As I have often with them and you, drank deeply of the cup of joy in earthly vessels, while mingling our prayers and tears, our songs and praises around the family altar, in social communion, oh, would I not rather quit this vale of tears, this world of trouble and sorrow, and with them be singing around the throne of God and the Lamb, the blessed songs of deliverance. I call to recollection the happy hours in which we feasted together on heavenly manna, and drank together from the fount of living waters. And ah! I remember well the last farewell tear that was shed, that earnest throbbing of the heart, that last, long sad look of sorrow, and yet filled full of joy, in the blessed hope that if on earth, we meet no more, in Heaven we'll meet on the ever green shore.

This teaches us, dear sister, that this is not our home. We are all frail beings, and the great question with us to be solved, is, how shall we live so as to meet those loved ones that are gone before? They have left foot-prints in the sands of their time that we would do well to heed. Pride and fashion are leading the van. As to its being the companion of your father's family, I never met it there as I meet it in the world elsewhere. Humility and plainness beautifully characterized your mother's household. Ever remember that chastity under which you were brought up. You have now taken the place of a mother, and cannot too carefully guard the young and tender plants given to your care and culture. Be as devoted a mother as your own departed mother was. Let your light shine brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. You have, too, a kind and I trust a devoted husband, and I hope by this time, nearer in the relation by a union of faith. I feel assured his heart is in sympathy with your practice, and that if he loves the blessed Master, all things shall work together for good. I remember your good neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. McFarland. Often have I reflected on the sweet interviews we had together. Hope they are still surviving and leaning closely to the Savior's fold. I wonder if she has forgotten the humble preacher that used to stop and comfort her in her lonely invalid hours. How my heart bounded in the hope of leading a wandering soul to the cooling water that quenches thirsty souls. The narrow way unfolds itself to us mysteriously, and in the imagination of our heart, we close the door and will not let the Master in. I should like to hear from Mrs. McFarland.

Now dear sister, I have no doubt you are lonely; you have no brother or sister near you to fellowship your troubles, but you and all God's dear children have a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. He is near you, yea, within, a secret monitor to teach you, and to lead you into all truth. Obey that loving Teacher; gird about you His armor, and you shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of your foes, and will bring you off more than conqueror. And now may the love of God and the communion of His spirit be with you and all the bereaved of your family, is my prayer.

We are all well, my wife joins me in love to you and your kind husband. Remember me to Mrs. McFarland. Our present address is Adamsboro, Cass Co., Ind.

SAMUEL MYERS.

THE THOUGHT OF DEATH.

It is important that all men should frequently meditate upon death and be ready to meet it, for they know not at what moment they may be called hence. But especially should the sick do so. Sickness is a messenger sent to warn us of its approach.

It is well to think of our death as near at hand, because it tends to draw our hearts away from earth and all its vanities, and fix them upon religion and Heaven. It is calculated to weaken and destroy our sinful passions and desires, and strengthen our Christian graces and holy affections. The man who seldom thinks of death, or always views it as far off will be greatly tempted to forget God and eternity, to live in sin and for this world alone, and to put off religion and all preparation for another world to a future day. This is the cause of the eternal ruin of tens of thousands.

It is useful to meditate upon death as near at hand, because it tends to strip it of its terrors, and prepare us for it. It leads the Christian to set his house in order knowing he must die. He even feels a desire to depart and be with Christ, which he knows to be far better. The fact that a sick person meditates much upon death and prepares himself for it, is no evidence that he certainly must die, and cannot again recover. By no means; he may sincerely repent of all his sins, forgive, and pray to be forgiven, set his house in order, give up the world, and resign himself fully into the hands of God. All this will not cause him to die a moment sooner than the time appointed.

Physicians and friends often make great mistakes, and we have reason to believe do great injury by concealing from the sick their real situation and danger, until they are sinking into the arms of death. To flatter the sick with the belief that they are not in danger and will recover, when it is known to be false, is downright lying, and to lie to a dying man when his immortal soul is at stake, is a crime of which surely no man should desire to be guilty.

We ought not to think of death with that dread and horror which is sometimes manifested by the sick. We can excuse the heathen in view of the gloom which always hangs over their graves, for saying that death is the most dreadful event that can occur, but Christians ought to feel that as life and immortality are brought to light in the Gospel, death is robbed of its sting, and the grave of its victory. The believer dies in the grace of God, the arms of Jesus and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, and why should he fear?

LANNA E. MILLER.

THE FULLNESS OF CHRIST.

It is only by looking to Jesus alone that we can ever attain comfort, and we can only do this by the power of the Holy Ghost. "None can call Jesus Lord, but by the power of the Holy Ghost." Now this He has promised you, if you will but ask Him, wrestle with Him, and let Him not go until He bless you. He is willing—come without money and without price. He loves to give and to be importuned. You will never obtain joy and peace by looking within—it is simple and only, Look unto me and be ye saved. "He that believeth in me hath everlasting life." Seek the special influence of the Holy Spirit, and He will take of the things of Christ and show them unto you. Then shall your joy abound, and your peace flow as a river. Keep close to the precious Bible, and God will open to you its rich treasures by the teachings of the Holy Spirit.

Be of good courage. Faith is the gift of God, and God is your Father: and will a father deny his child any good thing? And will a good God, a gracious God, whose name is love, deny you the Holy Spirit, if you ask Him? If he does not answer at once, it is because He loves to hear the pleadings of His child? See in how many instances Christ appeared not to hear when at the very time He designed to grant the petition.

We had better seek Christ sorrowing than to sit down satisfied with a little, and with some vain notion in our heads which brings no fruit to God's glory. Mary sought her Lord sorrowing at the door of the sepulchre, but went away rejoicing to tell the disciples—"The Lord is risen indeed."—Winslow.

No thoughtful man's life is uninteresting or barren of marvels. A life real and earnest cannot be devoid of memorable occurrences.—Spurgeon.

THE LOVE OF MONEY.

A sister, in last week's issue, notices some of the ways in which we may use our money to advance the cause of Jesus, and while preparing the manuscript, the query arose in my own mind, why is it that so little money is spent for this purpose. There is a cause, and when we wish to remove an evil it is always well to strike at the cause first. That the Scriptures plainly teach that we should give of our wealth towards the support of the cause of Christianity is too evident to admit of doubt by those who are Bible readers, and this being so, it is just as much of a duty as any other of the requirements of the Bible.

Why is it then when our money is needed for the furtherance of the Gospel that we do not give it? Why is it that our ministers do not receive the necessary help when they are willing to leave their homes and spend and be spent for the furtherance of the good cause? Why is it there is so much difficulty in raising money to build churches, where it is evident to every one they are needed? Why is it too, that the richest congregations in the Brotherhood are the ones that, as a general thing, do but little, and frequently do nothing at all? To our mind the cause is evident, and I feel free to say that it is nothing more nor less than the LOVE of money. This is the cause, remove it, and we will soon know how to spend our money for the promotion of the good cause. This may seem like a strong assertion, but the thing is becoming to be too prominent to admit of doubt, and it is certainly high time that every true Christian should go out with might and main to battle against the evil that is now growing amongst us.

The apostle says the love of money is the root of all evil. From this declaration it is evident that his conclusions were that this undue desire for money was the first cause of every moral evil. What is it that has a greater tendency to debauch the mind with corrupt prejudices, and create unholy desires? It leads us to covet that which does not belong to us, and thus "pierce ourselves with many sorrows." Surely when we think of the result of this unholy desire we should guard against it.

It is really covetousness. Some persons have an idea that by the term covetousness is meant merely the desire to obtain the goods of another, or what does not lawfully belong to them. But this is not really the idea; an undue desire for money in whatever form it may manifest itself, is covetousness. All that we have in the world is the Lord's. He has loaned it to us, and as long as we make use of it as though it were not ours, and so as to meet the design for which He loaned it, then all is well. But it is to be feared that this is not the way in which many look at these things. We look upon the wealth of this world as our own, and make use of it in the gratification of our unholy desires. This is covetousness; it is desiring what does not belong to us; it is robbing God of what belongs to him. There is a time coming, however, when he will demand it of us, and then indeed will there be a dark account to give. Fearful indeed are the denunciations against the covetous or those who do not make a proper use of that which is entrusted to their care, and should cause every soul to shudder.

In 1 Cor. 1: 6. it is ranked with fornication, adultery, idolatry, theft, drunkenness, &c., and none of these, it is said, shall inherit the kingdom of God. Again the apostle in writing to the Collossians says, that covetousness is idolatry. Many more references might be cited to, to show the magnitude of this sin, but let this suffice. Those who have a love for money can see clearly the ground upon which they stand, and we would that they consider this matter. It seems to us that it is time there is a reformation in reference to this matter as well as in other things. The cry now is REFORMATION. The Church is becoming proud, &c., and this is all so. We need reformation, but we need it in other things too. Let us have reformation all around, and let us not watch the enemy at one point only, and let him make inroads upon us at other points.

But how are we to determine when we have a love for money? We answer the same as in reference to other things. We can know the tree by the fruits. When persons decorate and adorn the body with useless clothing, it is an evidence that they have a proud heart. When men lie and swear it is an evidence that they have a very wicked heart, and when our whole desire is to lay up money, and are unwilling to give to the support and furtherance of the Gospel, it is an evidence that covetousness exists in the heart.

In 2 Pet. 2: 14, we read of a certain class of individuals whose heart was exercised with covetous practices, and it seems to us there are some at the present time of that description. What think ye? A brother who is immensely rich was induced to subscribe for the PILGRIM, but after some time he concluded that he could not pay more than $1.00, and ordered us to stop it when the time was up. Now brethren and sisters, I do not mention this because it is the only instance of a similar nature, nor that we care for the 50 cents, but there is a disposition manifested in these things that does grieve our soul. It is paving the way of more than one soul to perdition, and if we can warn any one of the danger that is lurking unobserved behind them, we shall have accomplished a good work. May God help us all to seriously consider these things, for it is evident that there is too great a love for money in the heart of such persons. Their habits, their ways of doing indicate it in unmistakable language, and are just as devoid of the Christian spirit, as are the proud, the profane, the idolator, the adulterer, &c. There is nothing less than the love of money that can engender such close, miserly actions, and this is the root of all these things. Let us then, brethren and sisters, endeavor to root out this evil from amongst us, for it is lurking at the very core of our Christianity and is doing much to impede our progress as a body in the divine life. ONE CODE OF MORALS.

It is a good sign of the times that one occasionally hears a woman say "How strange it is that men will not see that there cannot be but one code of morals, and that one for both men and women."

I am always glad to hear it but always feel like answering:

"Yes but it is more strange that women do not make men see it."

This I believe, is one of the things which women must do, if it be done at all. It may seem unfair to lay the blame of this false opinion regarding the morality of men and women at women's doors' I will not say that she was the original cause, but she certainly allows the evil to remain, when it is in her power to remove it.

So long as women receive without demur, as lovers and husbands, men whom they know to be of loose morals, or, rather of no morals; so long as they overlook sins in a man which they would condemn in a women; so long as they laugh at young men's "indiscretions" or carelessly remark, "You can't expect men to see these things as women do, they are different you know;" and worse than all so long as wives say, with a satisfied air, my husband is no worse than other men," just so long will men live on in the old way, cling to the old opinion and remain on the old level, Alas, how low that level is!

If women would demand that men should live as pure and true lives as men demand of women, then would begin the redemption of the world. This I fully believe. But I have little hope of any improvement in morals until women arouse themselves and take a decided stand against immorality, until they refuse, ay, refuse, I know what I am saying, to marry men who do not live strictly pure lives, who cannot reach to them as clean a hand as they expect to receive.

Young women must no longer excuse sins under the name of "wild oats" which young men must of necessity sow; they must no longer draw aside their skirts from the woman who offends, while they reach out a hand to the male offender Mothers of dissolute sons must no longer sigh, "Oh, if he would only fall in love, and marry some good girl, he might reform." They must rise above such cruel selfishness: selfishness of the worst type. Is this for what our daughters are made? Have they no higher mission than to sacrifice their whole future, that a man may, peradventure, leave his evil ways for a little while?

Away with such blasphemy. Women arise and assert your right to demand as clean a heart and hand at the altar, as you yourselves are expected to carry thither, and accept nothing less.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Seventh Day Baptist Anniversaries were held this year in Westerly, R. I., with a large attendance. This body of Christians, numbering 7000 in this country, are raising a memorial fund of $100,000, one half of which is subscribed.

There are 800 Protestant Sunday Schools in France. The Reformed Presbyterian Synod adopted the following on titles: Resolved, that wherever the clerk has appended to any member's name the capital letters D. D., he be directed to strike them out." The Theological school of the same body opened this Fall 19 students.

The Illinois Wesleyan Conference met at Kishwaukee last month, Rev. J. M. Snyder, member of the Executive Committee of the National Christian Association, presiding. This Conference raised $1652 for the Wesleyan Publishing House.

The Illinois Conference of the Free Methodist Church was held the first week of the month in Winnebago. This conference numbers 1,346 with 31 preachers. Since its organization in 1861 it has sent out three branches, now grown on distinct bodies: the Michigan, the Minnesota and the Kansas and Missouri Conferences.

The summary of the reports of the American Board for the past year is follows; recipts, $331,000; mission fields 19; station 70; out stations 466 ordained missionaries, 143; female assistants, 199; whole number from this country, 352: native pastors, 104; native teachers, 406; native pupils, 134; churches 197; church members, 9,435; added during the year, 794: training and theological schools, 12; common schools, 396: whole number of pupils, 18,644.

Rev. George Kerry, an English Baptist missionary, writes of a kind of a religious awakening spreading all over Bengal, among both Hindus and Mohammedans: while Rev. R. Bion, of the Dacca Mission, avows his conviction, with regard to the wide region over which his journey extends, that "the number of those who secretly believe in Christ is as great, if not greater, than the number of baptized believers in all our stations put together."

COTTON ON THE PACIFIC.—It is estimated that the cotton crop of California in 1873 will amount to about one thousand bales, of which nearly one half will be exported. Speaking of this crop the San Francisco Alta says: "No sales have been made yet, but the price will probably be twenty cents per pound, at which price it will net twice as much per acre as wheat. The picking was commenced two weeks ago, and will be continued until frost, which usually comes in Fresno Co., the middle of the cotton district, about the middle of October. The bolls are beginning to open in the fields, and none of the fields will be caught, before maturing, by the frost, as some were last year. The general opinion of farmers from Merced to Bakersfield is favorable to cotton, and an enlarged area will be planted with it next year."

THE YELLOW FEVER SOUTH.—The latest accounts from Memphis indicate no abatement in the ravages of the yellow fever at that place. As late as last Saturday, citizens continued to leave the place, as the epidemic was spreading to the heart of the city. Eighty deaths were reported during the previous twenty-four hours. Many people who have overtasked themselves in their labors for the sick and are physically exhausted take the fever and die in a comparatively short time. Appeals for assistance for the sick and convalescent are responded to, as the Howard Association acknowledges in a circular it has published. The officer says: "We return our heartfelt thanks to our sister cities and towns for the bounteous aid extended to us in this hour of sadness and distress. From Boston to San Francisco; from Lansing to New Orleans; from almost every hamlet in the land, and even from far off Old England has come such evidences of sympathy as to make our hearts overflow with gratitude, binding us as it does to them with the dearest of ties. The fever still continues its march among us, increasing day by day, taking rich and poor. God only knows when and where it will end. Our receipts for the present are ample to meet our wants and we feel assured that all the aid we need will be forthcoming."

MOTHER'S GROWING OLD.

Her step is slow and weary;
Her hand's unsteady now,
And paler still, and deeper
The lines upon her brow;
Her meek, blue eye has faded;
Her hair has lost its gold;
Her once firm voice now falters—
My mother's growing old.

Her days of strength are over,
Her earthly joys depart;
But peace and holy beauty
Are shining in her heart.
The links that bind her spirit
Relax their trembling hold;
She soon will be an angel—
Sweet mother's growing old.

My thoughts flow back to childhood,
When fondled on her knee,
I poured out all my sorrows,
Or lisped my songs of glee;
But now upon me leaning
So wearily and cold,
With trembling lips she murmers,
"Dear child, I'm growing old."

I think of all her counsels,
So precious to my youth;
How sacredly she taught me
God's sacred words of truth;
How tenderly she led me
To Jesus' blessed fold,
Where she will soon be welcomed,
No longer bowed or old.

The path of daily duty
Was ever her delight;
She walked by faith and patience,
And trusted God for sight,
Her hands with useful labor
Each day their mission told;
Her deeds, like heavenly roses,
Still bloom, though she is old.

Alas! those hands so skillful,
Which toiled with loving grace
To make me blessed with comforts,
And home a happy place,
Those dear hands, pale and wrinkled,
Are now by time controlled,
They rest in prayerful quiet—
Dear mother's growing old.

Yet, though her earthly temple
Fast faileth day by day,
Her soul, with faith increasing,
Pursues its homeward way:
And when the mists of jordan
Shall from her sight be rolled,
She'll shine in youth and beauty
Where spirits ne'er grow old.

O mother, fond and faithful,
Thou truest earthly friend,
May I be near to soothe thee
Till all thy struggles end.
And while with sad heart yearning
Thy form my arms enfold,
I pray in peace to meet thee
Where saints no more grow old.

"WHAT WILL YOU DO?"

Little boys are often heard to speak of what they would like to be and like to do when they are "men." Perhaps one little boy thinks he will be a farmer, and have plenty of land, to keep horses, cows and sheep, and to raise grain, fruit, and vegetables.

Another may fancy he would like to be a merchant, and live in a large city or town.

Still another chooses to be a doctor, and visit the sick so that the people will be glad to see him if they are ill, and remember him with gratitude when they are well.

All these are very good plans, for all these persuits are necessary to the wellfare of society. We could not do without the farmer, who provides us food, the merchant who sells us clothing, or the physician who is always welcome in the sick room.

But your greatest object should be to do good and tell men about the Savior, that they may believe on him and be saved.

True benevolence leads us to desire the highest happiness of others. And the religion of Jesus Christ is fitted more than all other things to make men happy in this world.

Therefore it is easy to see that people who are benevolent will wish that all mankind may be taught how to gain the favor of God, and how to prepare for eternity. All men know they must soon die, and if they see no brighter world beyond the grave they will shrink from death as from a dreadful foe, and die in hopeless despair. Did you ever my young friend, see a Christian die? Perhaps your own father or mother may have left you, and gone home to Heaven. Perhaps you stood by the bedside and "saw the last struggle, and heard the last groan." It may be your friend died rejoicing in the thought of being so soon with Jesus in that world where there is no sin. How different the scene when a Christian dies from that which is witnessed when the unforgiven sinner resigns his breath.

It is a solemn thing to teach men the way to Heaven, but it is also a great privilege. And if God has forgiven your sins for Jesus' sake, ought you not to show your gratitude to Him by devoting your time, talents, and everything you may possess or acquire to His service? "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Cynosure.

LOAFING.

BY R. M. WOODIN.

In the present generation, many of our young men appear to think a finishing touch to their manners and polish as gentleman can only be attained by frequenting a store or some other public place.

If interrogatated as to their reasons for spending their evenings at stores, they will tell you that such nightly gatherings are planned on the same principle as societies are—a sort of mutual benefit organization.

If the conversation at all times were of a good moral tone, there might be some opportunity for improvement, but the little I have heard of "store talk" has convinced me that the less of it the better, and in my opinion the young man who spends his evenings in stores and bar rooms thinking to be benefitted thereby, is making a great mistake.

A few dollars judiciously invested in good books and papers would furnish any young man with means for pleasant and profitable enjoyment every evening in the year.

There has been and always will be a demand for "brains" and young men possessing good character with plenty of sound and healthful brains, will have a better chance in the world than those young men whose intellect are muddled with the fumes of beer and tobacco.

Loafing is sinful because it is a waste of precious time. Our life is short at the utmost and we can do but little, yet we should "work while the day lasts." It is a poor way to "bury the one talent" in a barroom. Loafing becomes a fixed habit in a short time, and this habit becomes stronger and stronger until people say,—"That fellow is a confirmed loafer."

Look at this subject in whatever light we may, there can be but one conclusion in regard to it in this enlightened age of the world: Loafing is positively disgraceful.—Young Folk's Rural.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

"My brother is as polite to me as any one else, when I go out with him," said a girl proudly to a companion. What a reflection on his manners at home! A sister will, perhaps, accidentally knock over some of the tools with which her brother is busy. An apology involentairly rises to her lips, but she stifles it on considering that it is only Jack; and all the satisfaction he is offered for disordered plans is a blunt "oh!" Angry reproaches are sure to follow. "You are real ugly, Jack, to talk so about a thing, you know I didn't mean it," is the equally angry rejoinder. Why did she say so? Two words would have saved all the trouble. Want of politeness is the cause of more quareling between brothers and sisters than anything else. In their play, children are constantly meeting with little accidents for which they should be taught to apologize. I have seen the cheeks of a child flush with anger, his eyes flash, and a little hand raised to strike the unfortunate breaker of the toy, when, as if by magic, the blow was arrested with these words, 'excuse me, I did not mean to."—Sel.

A BLESSING ON CARD-PLAYING.—The Rev. William Romaine was one evening invited to a friend's house to tea, and after the tea things were removed, the lady of the house asked him to play at cards, to which he made no objection. The cards were produced, and when all were ready to commence play, the venerable minister said, "Let us ask the blessing of God."

"Ask the blessing of God!" said the lady, in great surprise; "I never heard of such a thing at a game of cards."

Mr. Romaine then inquired, "O't we to engage in anything on which we cannot ask his blessing?" This gentle reproof put an end to the card-playing.

MANNOR HILL MEETING.

According to arrangement, we left our home on Saturday morning Oct. 18, to attend a Communion meeting to be held at Mannor Hill, Huntingdon Co. At Huntingdon we expected to meet Eld. J. Spanogle who was to be one of the laborers on the occasion but we were disappointed as we found him not—during the meeting we learned he was unwell, hope he was as time would form a justifiable excuse. We do not wish anybody to be sick, but, we would rather have our brother sick on duty, than to be well and off duty. At Petersburg we were told we would meet brother J. A. Sell of the Duncansville charge but here again we were disappointed, and began to feel as if the laborers would be few in number and in this we were not disappointed, as ourself and Bro. Archy Vandyke were the only ministers present, outside the district in which the meeting was held. The resident ministers were Eld. J. R. Hamawalt and Geo. S. Swigart. At Petersburg we were met with conveyances by brother Budd Harshberger and in company with Bro. A. Vandyke, his wife and daughter and several others, were taken to his home, where our wants were amply cared for. The first appointment was made for Saturday evening, when brother Vandyke addressed an attentive congregation from, "Man giveth up the Ghost, and where is he?" The subject was well chosen and proved to be instructive and we hope beneficial to the congregation. For the night, we with a number of others, were kindly cared for, by friend Kocher, of Mannor Hill. On Sunday A. M., we again met in the same house for public preaching, with quite a respectable congregation, after which we with quite a number of others, enjoyed the hospitality of friend Snyder of the same place. In the evening we met for the purpose of participating in the ordinances of the Lord's house, and we truely had a pleasant waiting before Him. The congregation was unusually large, for the place, and the interest manifested, showed that many were anxious to learn of the way that is everywhere spoken against. During the evening it commenced raining, and by the time the exercises closed, the weather was very unfavorable, especially to those who had a long distance home, and it was very wet and exceedingly dark. We were among the favored and felt thankful for it. On Monday A. M., was the last appointment. Though it continued to rain, there was a nice little assembly came together, when brother Samuel Powel, who was chosen the day before, was installed to the office of deacon, after which there was public preaching until 1 o'clock, when the meeting closed and the parting hand was given, and from the general expression, many were loath to leave the place where they had been so richly fed with the bread of Heaven, but so it is. With our sweetest enjoyments of earth, the bitter is mixed. We then with a number of brethren and sisters, were taken to the home of brother Hersheberger, where we received all the care that kind hearts could suggest or hands perform. As the weather continued to be too disagreeable to drive out, we were all prevailed upon to sojourn until the next morning. This was not according to our program, but there was so much liberality manifest, and the company so good, we consented with a right good grace, and believe, lost nothing by it as the afternoon and evening was spent very pleasantly. On Tuesday morning we were taken to Petersburg and in a short time, were at Huntingdon where we remained till evening, arrived safe at home about 7 o'clock.

This meeting was held in an old Presbyterian Church in Mannor Hill, a small village situated in Stone Valley. The people are sober, enterprising and charitable, and are religiously inclined and largely of Quaker descent. The members are considerably scattered, about 24 in number, and are under the Spring Run charge. They now have two deacons, Budd Hershberger and Samuel Powell, but no minister as yet. It is expected that Bro. Archy Vandyke will move among them again Spring, when it will probably organize, which would seem advisable under present circumstances, as the Spring Run brethren have a long road to travel to fill the appointments.

We had intended to give a short sketch of how the Brethren first started in this valley, but our space will not admit it. From the general impression we think the field to be one of promise, and that by a well directed effort, considerable may be expected of Stone Valley.

OUR APPEAL.

Those of our agents and readers who have heeded our call by sending us our dues will please accept our thanks. Those who have not yet responded will much oblige us by doing so at at their earliest convenience, as the time will soon be here to renew for 1874, and all old accounts should be settled before entering your name for the next volume. Those who live a distance from their agent may send it at our risk if enclosed in a plain yellow envelope and properly directed.

OUR ALMANAC & PROSPECTUS.

Next week, we expect to send to all those who have been acting agent for us, the Pilgrim Almanac for 1874 and Prospectus, and we hope our agents will get to work at once, and not cease until they have doubled their last years list. Take the Almanac with you and if it gets soiled we will send you another. Remember every subscriber gets one FREE.

☞ If any who have not heretofore been agents for us and wish now to accept it, they will please inform us and we will send an Almanac and prospectus free.

NEXT WEEK.

For next week we have some interesting correspondence which was crowded out of this No. With the arrangement we are now trying to make, we hope to make the Pilgrim for 1874 more interesting and instructive than any previous volume. Do not forget that it is to be enlarged without raising the price. We are prepared to hold out greater inducements than ever before

CHURCH NEWS.

Fayette Co. W. Va. Oct. 14, '73.

Dear Pilgrim;—My time has been so occupied I have failed to give you any jottings of late. Will now at this midnight hour pen you a few items. Sept. the 13th, attended a Lovefeast with the Brethren in Raleigh Co. The weather was somewhat unfavorable, but we had a happy meeting. The congregation in Raleigh is prospering finely. There has been a number of additions lately, and all seems to be in union. One pleasing feature, we noticed, a good number of the communicants were quite young, and their peaceful happy countenances, gave evidence, they were not ashamed of Jesus or the Gospel order of the church,—all being in order. Sunday morning I had to leave the place of meeting to attend a funeral. Learned there was a good attendance, at 11 a. m., and an unusual good meeting. A few days after, some more were added to the Church by baptism. The afternoon of the 26th of Sept. I went aboard the cars, and speeded my way to Alderson station, in Greenbrier Co. where I was met with a conveyance by Bro. Wm. Probst, and taken to his home. Passing the Blue Sulphur Springs about 9 o'clock at night, a campmeeting was in progress. We called, we saw, and then left next day. Had preaching at a school house, and at night, with the brethren and sisters had quite a blessed communion season, at the home of Bro. Probst. The attendance of spectators was small, owing to the campmeeting near by. "Where the carcass is, the eagles will be gathered together." Next day at 11 a.m., meeting again at the school house, good congregation, one applicant for baptism At 4 p. m., meeting again at Bro. Propst's which was our last appointment, We had expected to meet at the communion meeting, some other laboring brethren, but was disappointed, so we had only one of our colaborers, Bro. C. H. Masters, to assist us. Brethren don't neglect that point, much good might be done there. At night, with others, we walked down to the camp meeting ground. The sermon in the main was good enough, but the disorder that followed was "Confusion worse confounded." The mesmeric influence was of a spasmodic type. From such religion may we ever be delivered. Monday morning Bro. Wm. Probst kindly took me to the station, and at noon arrived at home. Following Friday, Oct. 3d, we had a Communion meeting at Bro. Harrison Comer's near Mt. Cove, this county, had a refreshing season of love with the dear ones of the household of Faith. Preaching next day at 11 a. m., at same place.

Oct. the 11, our Lovefeast came off at our meeting house. There was a large attendance of members present and a crowded house of spectators. Bro. Jas. M. Hutchison from Monroe, Bro. Wm. Baily from Raleigh and Bro. C. H. Masters, were our ministerial help, outside our immediate congregation. We had a feast of good things indeed. Next morning at 9 o'clock the church met in prayer and devotional exercises when a choice was held for more laborers in the Lord's harvest field. Bro. G. W. Crouse and Bro. Samuel Riner were called and regularly installed into the the ministry. Bro. Henry Sanger to the deacons office and Bro. C. H. Masters and Bro. Joseph Hutchison were advanced to the second degree in the ministry. Public preaching then followed to a large congregation. The exercises were impressive. To many it was the parting hour from us, and we from them, not knowing whether we shall ever meet again on earth, but the hope of meeting on the other shore sweetens the moments of sadness and sorrow. At our meeting two precious souls were added to the number by baptism, and four came out expressing a desire to unite with the church, and others gave evidence they are going to leave the ways of sin and folly, and turn to God hoping for mercy. We shall long remember those meetings as green spots in the desert through which we are passing, traveling to a country where all is peace, love and bliss.

Blessed be God for his goodness.
Truly yours in love
J. S. FLORY.

HOTEL LONDRES, PARIS. }
Sept. 22, 1873. }

My dear father and Sarah:—I have written you but two weeks ago, but I did not then know our address in London, I will now enclose an envelope with our address. I am so anxious to hear from you, having received but one letter from you since we are in Europe. We are all very well and have been all Summer, which we have great reason to be thankful for.

The boys do not seem to learn French as fast as they did the German, they like the German much better. Olive is the only one that speaks French. We like the French people very much, they are very polite, and very neat and clean. We were up on the gate called the Arch of Triumph, where we had a view of the city. There is no use in my trying to describe this immense city. It looks perfectly wonderful to me. I do not know how many miles Paris covers. I used to think Philadelphia was large to look over, but it seemed to me the other day it could be put in Paris and it would not make much impression. We have visited a great many places of interest here. We visited Napoleon's first tomb, and have stood on the spot where Marie Antoinett was beheaded and her husband, Louis XVI, and thousands of others. France has a sad and bloody history. We also visited two suburban towns. Versailles is one hours ride by cars, and is a very interesting place. There is a beautiful Palace there, and the grounds and fountains are very fine. It was the home of Marie Antoinett, Napoleon the first, and many others we take an interest in. We also saw Napoleon's firsts carriage, and Josiphene's and Napoleon III, and many others. We also visited St. Cloud, forty minutes ride by cars. This place was occupied by the Prussians in the late war, and was fired into by the French and destroyed, and afterwards the Prussians set fire to the town and burnt it. We saw the finest water works that we ever saw; it is said to be the finest in the world. We have been in some very fine churches here, and have seen a great deal in Paris. I do not know how long we will stay in Paris yet, but expect to go to London in about two weeks. I do not know how long we may remain in London, but I hope to hear from you while we are there. We have not decided what time we will leave for home, but expect to get home some time in December if our lives are spared.

We have had a good many rainy days since we are in this city, it seems very Fall like, the leaves on the trees have turned quite yellow. The air feels like October weather, but it is cool and very pleasant. As Fall weather comes on I feel that I would like to be at home. I think we are all beginning to feel as if we wish we were there. I do dread crossing the ocean, we were so sea sick coming over and I fear it may be worse late in the Fall. Give my love to Yoder's family and friends. I never had a letter from Gander, I wrote to him. Lots of love for yourself and Sarah, and hope you are both well.

From your daughter.

PYRMONT, IND., }
Oct. 15, 1873. }

Dear Pilgrim:—On last Saturday the 10th, we went to a Communion Meeting in the Monticello Church, White Co., Ind., in a buggy, started before day, took breakfast at Delphi, then proceeded on to the meeting.

The Brethren had already assembled and had commenced the service. Eld. Isaac Bilhimer spoke first, followed by ———Freeman, brother S. Ulery of our District, Fairview, closed. After the close of the meeting it was announced that there were two applicants for baptism. Then it was announced that arrangement had been made by the members to feed the multitude. A sumptuous repast was then partaken of by all present. After dinner went to the water where the holy ordinance of baptism was administered to the two applicants mentioned, one the wife of a young brother lately put to the ministery, and the other a daughter of Eld. Miller of the Palestine District. O the tears of joy that were shed by those brethren! Truly there is more joy over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons. Bro. Joseph Amich administered the ordinance. In the evening the holy ordinances of the Lord's house were observed; everything went off in good order, and nothing occurred to mar the feelings of any one. On the following morning we listened to farewell discourses by the brethren. Then the time came to part. We were almost led to exclaim,

"O could we stay with friends so kind,
How would it cheer my troubled mind."

I shall not soon forget the friendly associations formed with the Brethren of White Co. Started home about noon in company with Eld. Isaac Bilheimer, arrived there safely at 5 p. m., found my family well for which I feel thankful.

During our brief visit one of our brethren in the North Fork District was consigned to the narrow limits of the tomb, speaking to us in tones that cannot be misunderstood that "we have no continuing city here," but oh, let us seek one to come, eternal in the heavens, where we can ever be with the loved ones that have gone before, that have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." This is the desire of your unworthy brother.

JOSEPH ZAHN.

Dear Pilgrim:—It may be interesting for you to know that on Sabbath, the 5th day of October, the members of the Mexico Church Ind., met at their commodious church-house, near Mexico, to once more celebrate the sufferings and death of our Lord and Savior, which he endured on that momorable hill of Calvary.

The attendance was large, the whole country was out, besides numbers of members from the adjoining churches. And what made the crowd doubly large, was the running of two excursion trains on the Eel River Valley R. R., which brought in hundreds from other counties that otherwise would not have been there. We cannot say how many were in attendance, but we do know that they numbered in the thousands considerably, neither do we know how many members were in attendance, but think there were over 400 that communed. The meeting commenced promptly at 9 o'clock on Sabbath morning at two places. The sermon in the house was delivered by Eld. A. Shepler from Pipe Creek Church; and out doors by Elder A. Miller, from White Co. The ministers present were Elders Jacob Metzgar, Abram Shepler, ——Mohler, Abram Miller, Myers, Bowser and others.

The preaching was effective, so that one soul was constrained to turn to the Lord and was baptized, and from appearance we should think that others were favorably impressed, so much so that we trust before the lapse of many more such seasons, they will show by their upright walk and holy conversation that it was good for them to be there.

On Monday morning after the multitude had taken breakfast, prayer &c., being offered, the brethren began their farewell addresses. Indeed some were feelingly addressed, and all were made to feel the solemnity of parting, after being together on so solemn an occasion. Some old ones that never expect perhaps to meet again with their brethren and friends on such occasions, while some younger ones have already been called to a country too far distant that they will never meet their friends again in this world.

May God add his blessing to all that has been done and is being done, according to His will, is the prayer of your weak brother. J. B. LAIR.

BEILER.—In the Union District, Marshall county Ind., Oct. 1st '73, our much respected friend and brother John H. L., son of our beloved brother Samuel and Mary Beiler, aged 25 years, 5 mos. and 3 days.

He leaves father, mother, and two brothers and two sisters to mourn their loss. During his affliction his mind was heavenward, and he made the necessary arrangements for death. He desired baptism which was done in the name of the Father and Son and Holy Ghost, in which he rejoiced in the Lord and was very happy; he asked those present to sing for him, and then he would sing: "O come angel band." Then called father and mother to his bedside and bade them farewell, also his brothers and sisters, and told them to meet him in heaven He also called his comrades and preached to them that they could hardly endure it. Such a time has never been witnessed by those present. Thus he died, in full assurance of a home in heaven. May we meet him in that blissful land is our prayer. Funeral preached by brother Jesse Calvert, to a very large concourse of people. A. APPELMAN.

Plain Educational Talks with teachers and parents. By A. N. Raub, A. M., (Claxton; Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, Pa.) This book though not entirely new is still as interesting, valuable and no doubt will prove as fresh to many who should have read it, as though it had just issued from the press. Prof. Raub is a practical teacher and one of our most esteemed educators. Being a "Normal Schoolmate" of ours we had the opportunity, and learned to know his worth, and can appreciate his book, as the production of one who "knows whereof he speaks." There is so much to learn in relation to the training and teaching of children, that has not been learned and that by those who are much concerned, that we advise every parent and teacher to embrace every opportunity to obtain good ideas on this important subject, and such will find this book worthy of careful reading. Price $1.50. For sale at this office.

POETRY.

YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

BY WESLEY.

The light that disperses the gloom,
That sin has cast over the land;
Believing the shades of the tomb,
No power can its progress withstand

The radiance that spans the wide seas,
To gather the erring ones in,
That power sufficient displays,
To crush the dark armies of sin.

The light whose effulgence shall bear,
On its wings, the glad tidings of peace,
Till every nation shall hear
And share in its rapturous bliss.

Oh, Zion! thou light of the world,
Illumine the mountain and plain,
Till satan in fury is hurled
From the throne of his infamous reign.

Thy pillars so massive and strong,
Are founded on Infinite love,
To thee all the graces belong,
That center in Zion above.

Oh! glorious light of the cross,
From Calvary's summit sent forth;
Consume from our hearts all the dross,
And purge every sin from the earth.

Go forth then all-conquering light,
No shade can thy fleetness oppose,
Till thou hast thy mantle of white,
Thrown over the last of thy foes.

Then earth shall rejoice in thy peace,
And hushed be the voices that weep;
And righteousness cover her face,
As the waves do the face of the deep.

The lion shall cease to devour,
And dwell with the lamb of the fold;
When light in meridian power,
Assumes her eternal control.

Then over the dark realms of night,
From heaven's high dome shall be hurled,
The message, LO THIS IS THE LIGHT,
MY CHURCH IS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

From the New York Observer.

GATHERING LILIES.

BY MRS. E. H. J. CLEAVELAND.

"My beloved has gone down into his garden to gather lilies."—Solomon's Song 6: 2.

The Lord went down to his garden, one day,
To gather lilies, the Scriptures say,
And set them again in the borders green
That blossom the heavenly hills between

And just as he came in the sweet old song,
Year after year he has passed along,
Seeking the bowers of the 'sons of men,'
Gathering now as he gathered then.

A miser sat by his bag of gold;
Hundreds of times were its contents told.
'I've gathered the fragments, Lord,' said he,
'All for myself, and none for Thee.'

'Go, scatter it all, your shining store.
To feed the hungry and clothe the poor;'
These were the words that the dear Lord said;
'I'll gather you, then, for my royal bed'

And as he went on his shining way
He came where another had toiled all day
In the winter's cold and the summer's heat,
Was he for the heavenly garden meet?

'I have builded churches, great and small,
For all persuasions, and given them all
For the worship of Thee,' he pleading cried.
Then the gentle voice of the Lord replied:

'But you have not offered a single prayer,
Nor bowed your head in those temples fair;'
And there stood a tear in his pitying eye
As he looked on the man, but passed him by.

Still looking for lilies, he came again
Where another strayed from the haunts of men;
Trembling, he stood before the Lord,
And made this plea, says the holy word.

'I had one talent, but I was afraid,
And safe in this napkin it is laid;
There now thou canst take what is just thine own.'
Then the eye of the Master turned to stone,

And he moved his lips these words to say:
'Coward! thy talent I'll take away;
No leaf can bud and no flower can bloom
On thy naked stem in my heavenly home.'

Then he stood where a pure and simple child
Sat humbly down by a savage wild,
And was telling him o'er and o'er again,
How the Lord came down to ransom men;

And a radiant light from his Christ-eyes fell
As he heard her warning of death and hell.
'Lo! here is a flower in my home to set,'
Said he, and his cheeks with tears were wet

'Since thou hast told with thy feeble breath
The way that a soul can be saved from death,
Thy sins, so many, I'll freely hide,'
The Lord, in his loving-kindness, cried.
"And I'll gather you now, O lily fair;
Come up to my garden and blossom there."

CAN A MAN COME TO CHRIST IF HE WILL?

Dear Brethren: I am a reader of the PILGRIM, and though not a member of your Church, I advocate the principles set forth in the columns of your paper. I will venture a few thoughts upon the question, Can a man come to Christ if he will?

The work of the Holy Spirit, in the regeneration and sanctification of sinners, is described as giving life to the soul. Every faculty of the soul is operated upon, and the understanding is illuminated; the will is subdued, and the affections rectified. In this machine there are several wheels. Some think that there is a propelling power to every wheel; one to the understanding, another to the will, and another to the affection; and that every faculty of the soul will be turned some time before it is launched into Eternity. This view of the subject has puzzled the brains of many, and caused them to make a dilligent search, whether the Spirit of God operates first on the understanding or the will. All the wheels in the machinery of human redemption are cog-wheels; they all turn together, and it is impossible for one to turn without the other. That knowledge which is immediately connected with eternal life, is not merely a speculative, but a feeling, an experimental knowledge of the soul in all its faculties. An unconverted man may have sufficient knowledge to write a good body of divinity, but this sort of knowledge will avail him nothing in the day of judgment. It is not connected with life eternal, for it produces neither peace of mind nor holiness of conduct. There are others who cannot compile a penny catechism; but they know the truth and the truth has made them free.

Without due consideration of this view of the subject, a man may ride his horse against the fence all the days of his life. He may say that the chief difficulty, in the way of a sinner coming to Christ, is in the understanding, but if his head were as light as the head of an angel, while his will is contrary to the will of God—while the carnal mind is enmity against God—the difficulty still remains.

But the moment the bars of the lock of the will are drawn back, to his great astonishment he finds himself in the bosom of his dear Redeemer, clasped in the arms of him whose bowels of compassion yearn over him. If any man, under the sound of the Gospel, is so ignorant as not to know God, and the way of salvation through Jesus Christ, it is because he will not come to a knowledge of the truth. The fact is, all the wheels are turning the wrong way, on the pivot of enmity against God. It is true the understanding is darkened: darkness has covered the whole earth and gross darkness the people; but the understanding may say to the will, there would have been more light in the garret had it not been for the smoke that ascended from the furnace of (loving) darkness more than light. It is the steam below that darkens the windows above. Here lies the mischief. Here is the mother of all the evil. The sun shines as bright as ever; the windows of the house are neither few nor small; but who can see in the smoke of unwillingness? The house of our first parents in Paradise was almost as light as heaven itself, until it was darkened by the infernal smoke arising from the furnace of unwillingness, heated by hell-fire in their wills and affections.

Can a man come to Christ if he will? Most certainly. Who is to hinder him? But who can subdue his stubborn will? The Holy Spirit of God.

Now I imagine I see four men endeavoring to raise Lazarus from the grave. The first is rubbing him well with the salt of duties, under the consideration that he can if he will; but there is no hope of accomplishing the object. Well, said the second; I will whip him with the scorpions of threatenings of hell and damnation. I think I will make him feel; but still there was neither life nor feeling. I have a band of music, said the third, that has made many to dance before now. He tries it, but still there is no life. The fourth said, I will go to Jesus, the God of means; He has promised the Holy Spirit to those who ask him; if Jesus, the resurrection and the life, will undertake the work, he will live. I have heard that He raised Jarius's daughter from the dead,—the power of the resurrection dwelleth in him. Let this consideration encourage every minister of the Gospel. Nothing less than the operation of the Holy Spirit of God can truly convert the most moral individual; and that agency is able to convert the chief of sinners.

O! that all the ministers of the Gospel would believe this, and turn their faces towards the heavenly wind, —the gale which blows from the New Jerusalem,—the glorious promise in the prophecy of Joel—and pray, O breath! breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

Respectfully submitted.

He who rejoices in God will never be confounded or ashamed, world without end. It is an abiding joy If I rejoice in the sun it sets; if in the earth it shall be burned; if in myself, I shall die; but to triumph in One who never fails and never changes, but lasts forever—this is a lasting joy.—Spurgeon.

LET BROTHERLY LOVE CONTINUE.

Heb. 13: 1.

Every organization of whatever name design, has some distinguishing or badge or word whereby the members are known to each other. And the inference may be deduced, that so the Church has a mark. That mark is stamped on all the teachings of Christ and the apostles, and is quoted by one of the ancient writers, as proof that those who were called Christians were indeed such. That mark I conclude is love, for the heathen word in beholding the dealings of Christains with one another said "See how these Christians love." the theme of the beloved disciple, was love. "Love, says he, is of God" He also says, "God is love." And again, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." Love then we conclude, is to be the ruling spirit of the Christain, for the first fruit mentioned of the spirit is Love.

In reading over the Epistles, we find, one church particularly commended, "The Thessalonians." Paul writes to them, "As touching brotherly love, "Ye need not that I write unto you, for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." This church, in all the purity of its actions, became "Ensamples of all that believed in Macedonia and Achia." And when he wrote his second Epistle to them, he said, "We are bound to thank God always for you brethren, as it is meet, that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the love of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth." Here then we have an instance that human nature is capable of this high attribute of God. This church, composed of members redeemed from idolatry, laid firm hold on the principles of Christianity and practiced them daily. What a lesson for us who have had these truths sounded in our ears from our earliest existence, but who alas! practice more in the letter, than in the spirit. Much is said of love, union &c., by professing Christians all over the land, but do we always remember that "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." The apostle John, in his 1st epistle, 3d chapter, latter half, clearly defines the position of brethren. Let us then turn to the concluding part of the 12th and whole of the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, and following Paul's course of argument and see how he makes brotherly love paramount to all other gifts and graces. The most distinctive feature of the Apostolic church was its possession of supernatural gifts. There was the gift of healing, a particular branch of the gift of miracles. The gift of tongues, sometimes supposed to be the knowledge of foreign languages, but we never read of its exercise for the conversion of foreign nations nor indeed foreigners, except on the days of Pentecost. It would seem from the 14th chapter that the individual from some cause, was in such an ecstatic state perhaps, that he uttered words unintelligible to the bystanders, and it would seem indeed, that his own understanding was suspended. This gift must have been highly esteemed on account of its being strange and wonderful, for Paul speaks at some length on it, but concludes that the gift of propheey, reveals God's will to us more particularly than foretelling future events, more to be desired than that. But he sums up all the spiritual gifts and comparing them with love, says they are as nothing if that essential be lacking, and in conclusion of his argument says, "If any man think himslf to be a prophet or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." And again he said, "Now abideth Faith, Hope, Love, but the greatest of these is Love."

It is not only essential for new converts, for he says Let brotherly love continue." The promise in every case is to him that overcometh. And in the Revelation which John wrote to the Church at Ephesus, occur these words: "I have somewhat against thee because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen and repent and do thy first works or else I will come unto the quickly and remove thy candlestick out of his place except thou repent. And to him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God.

JESUS WEPT.

John 11: 35.

As I was made to weep a few days ago over a departed sister, I have had some serious thoughts. To day I was by the bedside of one that had perhaps made but little preparation for the future and as she breathed her last, I was made to weep. The thought struck me, why do we weep? The answer was, because Jesus wept. But this is not fully answering the question.—Then I will first notice that Jesus was not the first to weep, and secondly why he wept.

The prophets also wept. We find Isaiah weeping over the spoilings of his people. Isaiah 22: 4. Jeremiah wept over his people. He says, they are foolish; they are wise to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge." Then he complains that he cannot weep enough and says, "Oh, that my head were water, and mine eyes a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night." And he tells his people to "give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness. But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride, and mine eyes shall weep sore and run down with tears." Jer. 4: 22; 9; 1, 13, 15, 19, 17. When we sum it all up, we see that the prophet wept for the downfall and pride of his people.

Then why did he weep? It seems he wept on his way to the grave of Lazarus. Why did he weep? Did he weep because Lazarus had died?—No, for he knew he was going to raise him again. Did he weep because he was not present when he died? No, for he heard of his sickness, but he looked around and saw the stubborn Jews weeping, and he remembered the many miracles he had done to show that he was the Son of God, and now I am even going to raise the dead from the dusty bed, and with all this they still will not believe. This is the reason I believe, why Jesus wept. Then the question comes, why do we weep? Do we weep because our friends die? Of course we feel sad, but when we have a hope and remember that it is the Lord's doings, we should not weep so much.

But there is something else to weep for, when we remember the provisions the Lord has made for us, and bids us come to him. He calls us in many ways. He comes and takes from our midst one who has been engaged in his service, telling us. "Be ye also ready." Next he calls a sinner showing that God is no respetor of persons, and also our mortality, but with all this, we see some heedless sinners standing as unconcerned as the stubborn Jews, just as if there will be no hereafter. This causes us to weep.

Brethren and sisters, let us weep a little more for them and ourselves; let us pray a little more, let us pray with a little more zeal, and let our light shine a little brighter that they may see our good works.

Sinners let me say to you, you have no assurance of your life; you are traveling on a dangerous road, you are as it were standing upon slippery rocks while fiery billows roll beneath. All the tears that are shed for you, all the prayers that are offered for you, will not save you unless you render your service to God; your abode will be in everlasting torment. God only wants your obedience. Then dear sinner, think before you die.

The time to insure the great reward"

VALEDIOTORY.

J. S. Flory.

This day my ministerial labors in W. Va., close, for awhile at least, and it may be forever, that is in a personal capacity. I preached my farewell discourse to a crowded house of brethren, sisters and friends; text, last chapter 2 Cor. 11th verse, after which four more precious souls were united to the church by baptism.

I had for a long time considered the propriety or impropriety of severing my personal connection from this field of labor. A peculiar chain of circumstances seemed to force me to the decision I made, and impressions from a higher source than earthly considerations prompted me to this decision. May the Lord's will be done.

I anticipated a severe trial would be my lot, but the realities of that trial was unforeseen in a great measure, for when the time drew near for my departure, I then and then only began to feel what it was to leave the dear ones of the household of faith, and when the hour of separation came it was indeed an hour of sorrow. It was a sad thought to me to leave the congregation where I first was led to know the Lord in the pardon of my sins, as I hope; where I was nurtured with spiritual food; where I was first called to the labor of the holy ministry, and to leave those who imposed such confidence in poor me as to set me with others to feed the flock of Jesus. All these and more were the thoughts that came to my mind, and to this was added the thought what sorrow seems to pervade the souls of those that are to me brothers, sisters, fathers, mothers and children in the faith, and I the cause of that sorrow. O brethren, forgive me for thus leaving you in sorrow, they that sow in tears shall reap in joy. The Lord's ways are not our ways, and if I am recreant in my calling or duty, I hope the Lord will forgive me.

The hope of meeting again, did indeed sweeten the cup of bitterness. In God I put my trust and am willing to do His biddiog. If the God of peace remaineth with you, you must prosper. O may the strong arm of His love be around and about you, and though the floods of opposition surge around you, God will comfort you, help you and bless you. May you and my God forgive all my past follies and shortcomings. We will meet again near the grave, nearer eternity, or perchance at the judgment. How shall we meet? Nearer, oh yes, nearer our God, I hope more perfect, more happy, more like Christ, so may it be. Amen.

Let us be Patient.—Let us be patient. As the years wear on towards the deep sunset we are weary at making no near approaches to a reconciliation and real intimacy with God. But do we long for that rest religiouly enough to wait for it? stillness is our needed sacrifice. Baffled and broken, the soul must often be, before its immortal strength comes. Humiliation of pride—an utter consciousness of infirmity—to be kept painfully out of our inheritance—all these are the price of conquest. Do not pray for exemption from them but victory by them.—Huntington.

A MEMORIAL.

For the encouragement and consolation of the husband, children, friends, and members in general, of the church of Jesus Christ, who feel themselves bereft through the sudden and unexpected departure of sister N D. from our midst.

It is true, we all know this, that this world is not our home; it is not our permanent abiding place, yet we are placed, by our Creator, into this mundane sphere a little season for our mutual benefit, and attachment to one another as probationers for eternity. And if we live in obedience to God's law, we form lovely and peaceful association together: such ties and natural relationship that nothing in this world is able to dissolve. But God, who is the Governor of the Universe, interposes, and for reasons unknown to us, does sometimes very suddenly, by the icy hand of death, snatch asunder the closest, the loveliest and nearest relationship that can be formed; and where is the creature that can resist or even may demand of God to know why dost thou thus deal with me? Hence, submission to his will, and willing resignation to his Divine providence in all cases, is acceptable in the sight of God. But we are human, and in consequence our sympathies excite our feelings, and we cannot refrain from weeping, and it is certainly not wrong to do so; for Jesus in his humanity, wept at the grave of Lazarus. "Weep with those that weep," is an apostolic command.

Dear brother, you feel bereft of a devoted wife whom but a few days ago you accompanied to a large meeting; your unworthy Bro. saw her there, cheerful, in reasonable health, appareotly bidding fair for a long life. Little did we expect that her mortal remains would be laid beneath the clods of the valley in so short a time; but now she hath left us, we shall see her no more; her sweet voice will be no more heard amongst us here in this vale of tears; the the children's call, the dear and lovely appellation, MOTHER, will receive no response; Silence shall take the room of her ready answers, gloom and solitude occupies her place in your fireside. O, we can compassionate your feeling. Grief, undoubtedly, has stricken your heart and when the unexpected fell-destroyer came, sorrow penetrated your soul, and trouble overwhelmed your feelings and disturbed your mind, we may well imagine. But amidst all these trials, there is a hope that reaches beyond this time. Be of good cheer, persevere in your calling, be faithful unto death; we believe that you can meet her in a better world, for we have a hope that your loss is her eternal gain. If so, you have a gem in heaven, a star added to the constellation of the celestial world. A happy welcome to expect in the church triumphant in heaven, where joy will extinguish sorrow, and gladness shall root up gloom and solitude, death lose its sting, and the grave be swallowed up in victory; faith end in vision, and hope in reality.

And you dear children, you as the tender off-spring of your departed mother, you are now deprived of the further instruction and admonitions of a tender-hearted mother. Let her voice be heeded and become fruitful; though she sleepeth, yet she can be heard and obeyed in order to conduce happiness to your undying souls, and minister an entrance into the everlasting kingdom, to meet your dear mother in the embrace of Jesus, with all the redeemed, who are singing the new song of redeeming love; gladness and everlasting joy will be upon your head; sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Come to Jesus, unite with your young sister in the service of the Lord. Sustain dear father in his trials, assist him in his devotions, where possible, fill the place of your mother at the family altar, around your fireside, and in the church. By so doing glory will redound upon your head, honor to your name and exaltation to heaven shall be the consequence; and the pleasure of a happy re-union with your mother in the regions of bliss, the final result.

Mother you feel the loss of a daughter, you were loathe to part, but soon, SOON your race is run, your journey will be ended; be thou faithful unto death, hope in God, confide in His promises, you shall meet your daughter, happy in eternity. Brothers and sisters, hold fast to that which you have, that no one may rob you of your crown.

"A few more rolling days and years,
Shall bring a period to your tears.
Soon you shall reach that blissful shore,
Where parting will be known no more."

Finally, my brethren, my sisters, let us be of one mind, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints, that we may all meet in heaven, never more to part.

A MEMORIAL.

SICKNESS AND DEATH OF ELDER JOSEPH F. ROHRER.

On the 3rd of October, in company with his oldest daughter, he repaired toward Marsh Creek, Adams Co., Pa., to attend a Communion meeting to take place, the day following. They remained over night with Elder Joseph Sherfy and family near Gettysburg. The meeting convened next day according to appointment, at 1 P. M, and our dear brother was among the number, enjoying himself in meeting with the Marsh Creek brethren. Meeting was opened and our brother Joseph, consented to address the congregation from the second chapter of Philippians and fifth verse. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." He, in the exposition of this Scripture made some very good and close applications; some soul-stirring appeals in warning the sinner, and also encouraging the faithful on the way to Zion. At the close of his remarks he felt an acute pain in his left arm, to which he was subject, and which seemed to increase in severity, drawing toward his chest and body. After the afternoon service, he went to the house of Bro. J. D. Pfoutz near by. He was deprived from enjoying any further services with us that evening and night. The best medical service was rendered, but notwithstanding he suffered much pain. His wife and son arrived on Monday morning, and remained until Wednesday; he feeling better, and worse by times. On Wednesday, the 8th, they brought him home. He seemed to stand the ride well, only tired. On Thursday the indication of disease seemed to promise a speedy recovery; he rested well. In the afternoon he called for some nourishment, afterward he told his wife and family, he thought he could sleep. The family left the room for some minutes, when his wife returned to see whether he was resting well, when behold! he was just about expiring. He breathed his last apparently without a struggle. The feelings of the bereaved and sorrow-stricken family may be imagined.

On Sabbath, the 11th, his remains were conveyed to their last resting place, at Welty's Meetinghouse, amid a large and sorrowing concourse of friends and people. The funeral cortege consisted of some two hundred carriages, &c.

Thus another of our faithful veterans and standard bearers of the cross, have passed over, while the community has lost one of its worthy and exemplary citizens; and the church one of its devoted members, an Elder and counsellor in Israel, and the family a kind and affectionate husband and father.

To the dear family I would say, we deeply sympathize with you, and may your and our loss be his great gain, and may God who is rich in mercy, grant you grace for the day of trials, and a rich effusion of his spirit for the enjoyment of the Eternal.

THE LATTER RAIN.

It is very usual in the life of grace for the soul to receive, in after years, a second very remarkable visitation of the Holy Spirit, which may be compared to the latter rain. The latter rain was sent to plump out the wheat, and make it full, mature, ready for the after harvest ripening. So there is a time of special grace granted saints, to prepare them for the glory, to make them completely meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

To some this is given in the form of what is very commonly called a second conversion. "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren," was Christs remark to Peter, who was even then a converted man. My brethren, there is a point in grace as much above the ordinary Christian, as the ordinary Christian is above the world ing. Believe me the life of grace is no dead level; it is not a fen country— a vast flat. There are mountains, and there are valleys. There are tribes of Christians who live in the vallys, like the poor Swiss of the Valoise, who live in the midst of the miasma, where fever has its lair, and the frame is languid and enfeebled. Such dwellers in the lowlands of unbelief are forever doubting, fearing, troubled about their interest in Christ, and tossed to and fro, but there are other believers who, by God's grace, have climbed the mountain of full assurance and near communion. Their place is with the eagle in his eyrie, high aloft.

They are like the strong mountaineer, who has trodden the virgin snow, who has breathed the fresh, free air of the Alpine regions, and therefore his sinews are braced, and limbs are vigorous; these are they who do great exploits, being mighty men— men of renown. The saints who dwell on high in the clear atmosphere of faith are rejoicing Christians—holy and devout men, doing service for the Master all over the world, and everywhere conquerers through him that loved them. And I desire, Oh! how earnestly I desire you to be such men. My craving is that all of you, my beloved, who have been watered by the former rain, may also be refreshed by a more than ordinary latter rain, which shall make you more than ordinary Christians, bringing you beyond the blade period and the ear period, into the full corn in the ear.—Spurgeon.

SMALL means often accomplish great things. Each of us may do something for others, and true sympathy and loving ministry are never lost.

THE knowledge of evil may help to do good, and assist us to measure its value; every new idea should be to us a new feather in wings that bear upward.

A MUDDY stream, flowing into one clear and sparkling, for a time rolls along by itself. A little further down they unite, and the whole is impure. So youth, untouched by sin, may, for a time, keep its purity in foul company; but a little later, and they mingle.

IT was a saying of Aristotle, that virtue is necessary to the young, comfortable to the aged, serviceable to the poor, ornamental to the rich, honorable to the fortunate, successful to the unfortunate, ennobling to the slave, and elevating to the noble.

THE SHEPHERD'S VOICE.

There are many voices in these last, perilous times clamoring to be heard, yet there is but one which it is safe to follow, and that is the voice of the Good Shepherd, who said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."—John x: 27. Let us notice some of these voices, and contrast them with the voice of the Good Shepherd, that we who are looking for his immediate coming may learn to distinguish between his voice and that of a stranger, for in these days, if it were possible, the very elect will be deceived.

Spiritualism is lifting up its voice, saying, "Here is the mighty power of God." Beware. "The thief cometh not but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy." "My sheep know not the voice of strangers," said Jesus.

Again we hear his voice (Matt. vi: 19) saying, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth;" but who is giving heed to it? There are a few, we trust, but the greater mass are listening to another voice, and grasping the world as never before—heaping up treasures for the last days although the true Voice says, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God!" Let us make to ourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness by using it for God and the poor, that when we fail, they may receive us into everlasting habitations. This voice may seem as an idle tale to many, but it proceeds from Him who will judge the world by the word which he has spoken. xii: 48. Who will hear it? "My sheep hear my voice."

Listen again: "How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" John v: 44. It would seem that many are out of the hearing of this voice, and are listening to the voice of a stranger. While indulging in the vain fashions of the world, bowing at its shrine, seeking its pleasures, and adorning themselves with all the superfluities the wicked one can invent, they do not heed the direction, "Let your adorning be the hidden man of the heart, not the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, or of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel, but that of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Pet. iii: 3. 4. "My sheep hear my voice—they know not the voice of strangers."

When we see the church amalgamate with the world—in "church fairs," "sociables," etc., etc., forgetful of God and mindful of mirth, the attentive ear can hear above the murmur of the throng the voice of the Shepherd, saying: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you." 2 Cor. vi: 17. "My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me."

When those who profess to be looking for the return of the true Shepherd, habitually absent themselves from the meetings, and yet tax themselves more to attend worldly visits and parties of pleasure than it would be necessary for them to do in order to attend religious services, have we not reason to fear that they have forgotten the Voice which is saying to us; "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching?" Heb. x: 25. "My sheep hear my voice."

Again, if we join with the vain in foolish talking and jesting, are we not listening to the voice of a stranger more than to the voice of Him who said: "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Once more hear the voice of the Good Shepherd: "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Matt. xviii: 15. "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear."

To hear this voice effectually, there must be inward stillness and quietness, with full consecration and faith. May the Lord help us to listen to the Shepherd's voice now, that we may be found ready to hear him say in the last day, "Well done."—Advent Herald.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The trial of Edward S. Stokes, for the murder of James Fisk, Jr., in New York City, began October 15. Several days were consumed in getting a jury. The evidence produced thus far is about the same as that given at the other trials. Considerable speculation is had as to the result, and but few expect a verdict of murder in the first degree.

A terrible prairie fire swept over twenty-five miles of country, near the Omaha and South-western railroad, in Saline and Jefferson counties, Nebraska, on Tuesday of last week. Many houses and large quantities of grain were destroyed. At Wilbur ten children were caught in the flames. Three perished on the spot, three others were fatally burned, and the rest terribly scorched. A woman in trying to rescue them received fatal injuries.

The August Gale.—The losses caused by the terrible storm in August are summed up thus: One thousand and thirty-two vessels, of which 435 were small fishing schooners, are known to have been destroyed during the 24th and 25th in the neighborhood of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic shores of Novia Scotia, Cape Breton, and New-Foundland. In addition to this large number, over ninety vessels were destroyed by the same storm in its course before reaching Novia Scotia, making a grand total of at least 1, 122 vessels destroyed within a few days. Two hundred and twenty-three lives are definitely reported as lost, and the most moderate estimate of the numerous cases in which whole crews are stated to have been lost, swells this number to nearly 500; while if to this be added the loss of life on land and in the earlier history of the cyclone, the grand total amounts to about 600 lives. The records also show that about 900 buildings were injured or totally destroyed in the same dates by this storm.

Religion Defined.—A new definition of "Religion" is given by the Rev. J. W. Chadwick in the "Free Religion" Convention last week: he said that the best definition of religion was "Man's sense of of the relations to the powers behind phenomena"

This is something new indeed, and exhibits some of the material of which that convention was composed. If you wish to know whether a man has religion and interrogate him as to whether he has "a sense of his relations to the powers behind phenomena," if he be a man of good judgment, he will tell you you are a lunatic, and it would really strongly indicate it.

Union Communion.—Referring to the communion service at Dr. Adams church, in which members of the Alliance of all denominations participated, the Baptist Union says: "We saw several Baptist ministers present who took the bread and cup with the saints, and gave a good testimony for Christian communion High Churchism received a tremendous blow by this union service. What can proscriptive Episcopalians say in defense of their dogmas when the Dean of Canterbury unites with a Presbyterian ministering the Sacred Supper? How can close communion Baptists persist in exclusiveness when their leading men participate in such a service as this? Surely the Spirit of Christ is dissolving the fetters of sectarianism, and making us all better Christians, whatever may be the fate of customs which have divided us into sects. The influence of that blessed hour in Dr. Adam's church will be most salutary, wide-spread and lasting."

This act on the part of some of the leading men in the Baptist Church shows that either they have no principle at all, or are willing to sacrifice it for the sake of popularity. How any man can claim that immersion only is baptism, and then go and commune with those who are not baptized at all, according to his view, is a question we cannot solve But "how can close communion Baptists persist in exclusiveness when their head men participate in such service as this?" This is a wonder indeed. It is altogether likely that some of the close communion Baptists are a little more closely allied to Jesus and his word, than to their head men and this solves the mystery as to how they can persist in exclusiveness. They have learned from Him that the Communion is intended only for the Lord's people, and they are those who follow Him in the way. That pedobaptists follow Christ in the way is an admission that no true Baptist can make, and when he participates with them in the Communion, he destroys the power of the doctrine that immersion only is Christian baptism. It may seem strange to those who are born of men that Baptists will persist in exclusiveness when some of their leading men have launched out on the sea of popular delusion, but to those who are born of God, it is no strange thing. They do not look to poor, weak, fallible men as a guide. If the spirit of Christ is at work in that convention and its dictates followed, then indeed will the fetters of sectarianism be dissolved. Its office saith Jesus, is to lead us into truth, but whether this spirit is really at work, and whether that grand union Communion will have a salutary and wide spread influence for good is another question.

Destruction of Works of Art in Jerusalem.—During the recent disgraceful squabble and riot of the monks around Jerusalem there was one incident that should especially pain all lovers of art. This was the destruction of the two pictures by Murillo in the Bethlehem church that fell a victim to ecclesiastical fury. They were true Murillos, and masterpieces; and, what is worse, having been dispatched to the church immediately on their execution, and there retained, it is believed that they have never been ingraved. They were unusually well preserved, too, for, on being placed in the oratory of La Creche, both canvases had been covered with glass to protect them from candlesmoke. One of the subjects was the Nativity, the other the adoration of the Magi. In reading with involuntary indignation and disgust of this barbarious instance of iconoclasm, one is reminded of what Thackeray wrote on the same scene and topic nearly thirty years ago. In his Journey from Cornhill to Cairo, speaking of the leading Christian sects in and around Jerusalem, he says, "These three main sects hate each other; their quarrels are interminable; each bribes and intrigues with the heathen lords of the soil to the prejudice of his neighbor. Now it is the Latins that interfere, and allow the common church to go to ruin, because the Greeks purpose to roof it; now the Greeks demolish a monastery on Mount Olivet, and leave the ground to the Turks, rather than allow the Armenians to possess it.—On another occasion, the Greeks having mended the Armenian steps which lead to the (socalled) Cave of the Nativity at Bethlehem, the latter asked for permission to destroy the work of the Greeks, and did so. And so round this sacred spot, the center of Christendom, the representatives of the three great sects worship under one roof, and hate each other!" The church of La Creche is, as its name implies, the church of "The Manger" (i. e., the reputed place of the nativity of Christ); and to this spot, and the furious wrangles of which it has been the scene, we may therefore apply the exclamation which Thackeray makes regarding the tomb of Christ: What a place to choose for imposture, good God!—to sully with brutal struggles for self-aggrandizemen or shameful schemes of gain!" The Germans had the grace to try to spare with their bombs the spire of Strawsburg cathedral. Religious fanaticism in the Middle Ages directed itself to the destruction of "pagan art, no matter how beautiful; but in these enlightened days for ecclesiastical fury to take up the barbarious role of destruction, which even savage war discards, is pitiable indeed.—Lippincotts Magazine

SCHOOL DAYS.

I suppose my little readers are beginning to think that uncle Henry is sick or has forgotten his young charge. I wish to tell you that neither is the case, but there has been so many good things in the PILGRIM of late that I thought I might as well wait awhile, but as the evenings are getting long, my class is doubtless getting larger and therefore will want more good things to read and talk about. School days are now here and my young readers all have the opportunity of going to school and learning to read and write and a great many other things, some perhaps that you should never know or learn. But what I intended to tell you about is the great privilege which you now enjoy over those who were boys and girls thirty or forty years ago. Things were quite different then to what they are now, especially schools. Uncle Henry can well remember when he went to a school house built of round logs and an old fashioned fire place in it something like some of our old wash houses of the present day. Into that a number of large logs were laid and around the poor little shivering scholars gathered, with one side burning and the other freezing. As uncomfortable as the schools were, they lasted only three months, and it was a favored boy that could attend more than half the term.

You may wonder why this was, but you will understand when I tell you that there has been changes in other things beside schools. In those days the farmers had no threshing machines and large separators to thrash out their crops in a few days like they now have but had to tramp it out with horses. To do this, it took nearly all Winter and while this kind of thrashing was going on, it generally took two boys to ride the horses. Uncle Henry was always fond of riding, but this was too much of a good thing and when he got an opportunity of going to school, he capered off with a light heart. So you need not wonder that some of the old uncles do not know so much about Grammar and Geography as some of the young people now do. In those days the young people did not have the many good and pretty books and papers that they now have. You also have many other advantages now that they did not have. I speak of these things to remind you of the great privileges you enjoy, and hope you all will make the best possible use of them. You may not now see all the advantages of a good education, but if you live to become men and women, you will deeply feel the loss of it if you neglect to obtain it. Only a short time ago I heard a man say that he would give two thousand dollars, if he could now have a good education. He was an old man and a minister of the Gospel. He felt that his lack of a good education was a great hindrance in his holy calling.

I just now, think of several young men who when boys, thought it was no use to go to school, but they are now in callings that greatly demand a good education and they now sorely regret that they were so foolish as to waste their golden opportunities. So it may be with you if you neglect the many advantages that you now enjoy.

In conclusion, uncle Henry advises you as one who knows, make good use of your time, go to school every day that you can, and strive to learn as much as possible. You will never, never regret it. Remember golden opportunites always run forward, and unless you catch them as they come along they will be forever lost.

UNCLE HENRY.

GRANDMOTHER.

BY ELSIE G——.

For a long time I did not understand it at all. I thought that because grandmothers often were feeble and old-fashioned, they could never really feel as we children do; they needed no particular notice or enjoyment, for it was their nature to sit in rocking-chairs and knit. They seemed quite different from the rest of the world, and not to be especially that about: that is, by girls who were as full of merry plans as we were.

Grandmother lived with us, as father was her only son. We had a vague idea that she helped mother mend the clothes and knitted all fathers winter stockings, besides some pairs for the church society. We were supposed to love her, of course, and we were never openly rude, for indeed we had been taught to be polite to all aged persons. As for grandmother, she was one of those peaceful souls who never make any trouble, but just go on in their own way so quietly that you hardly know they are in the house. Mother sat with her sometimes, but we girls, in our gay, busy pursuits, rarely thought of such a thing. She seemed to have no part in our existence.

It went on so for some time, till one day I happened at sundown to go into the sitting-room, and there sat grandmother, alone. She had fallen asleep in her chair by the window. The sun was just sinking out of sight, leaving a glory of light as he went, and in this glory I saw grandmother—saw her really for the first time in my life!

She had been reading her Bible, and then, as if there had been no need of reading more, since its treasure already lay shining in her soul, she had turned the book over upon her lap and leaned back to enjoy the evening.

I saw it all in a moment,—her gentleness, her patience, her holiness. Then, while her love and beautiful dignity seemed to fold about me like a bright cloud, the sweet every day lines in her face told me a secret, that even then in the wonderful sunset of life she was, O, how human! So human that she missed old faces and old scenes; so human that she needed a share of what God was giving us,—friends, home interests, little surprises and expectations, loving offices, and, above all, a recognition in the details of our fresh young lives.

Girls! when grandmother woke up, she found us all three stealing into the room; for God had helped me, when I went to tell my sisters about it. Mary only kissed her and asked if she had had a good nap; Susie picked her ball of yarn off the carpet, where it had rolled, and began to wind it, all the while telling her a pleasant bit of news about one of the school-girls; and I—well, I knelt down at grandmother's feet and just as I was going to cry, I gave her knees a good hard hug, and told her she was a darling.

That's all, girls. But it's been different ever since from what it was before.—From St. Nicholas for November.

PROFANITY.

TO THE BOYS OF AMERICA.

DEAR BOYS:—Did You ever see a lovely plant overshadowed and choked by great ungainly weeds, till it had no strength to bud or bloom? Just so the noxious weeds of Profanity shadow your character and choke from your heart every sweet blossom of purity and refinement.

I hope there are many among you who never use bad language of any kind, but I want to warn you all against profanity. First it is exceedingly sinful to take the name of God in vain, and how often do we hear the name of our blessed JESUS CHRIST—who died for us—profaned. Any boy has some influence, be it more or less; and if he indulges himself in the use of profane language he places a very bad example before his acquaintances. Besides, this ensnaring practice would surely bring you into bad company and evil companions would lead you to many vices. Vicious boys would soon trace you and flock around you, while the good could find no pleasure in your society. If you have a friend on earth—one who seeks your best interests, you may rest assured that that friend would suffer deep sorrow and humiliation if you were to entangle yourself either with bad associates, or the disgraceful fault of which I have warned you. Every boy should have a certian independence to enable him to stand up for what he knows to be right, no matter who or what resists him. The lack of independence, is the stumbling-block over which very many fall into temptation. Do not be led through the world boys, by a set of loafers, unworthy to be your leaders. Be independent; have a mind of your own; find where the right is, and uphold it; then you can respect yourself and be respected by others, even by those who desire to lead you astray; while on the other hand, they could not despise you in their hearts, for demeaning yourself in what all know to be wrong.

Putting aside the wickedness of profanity, you cannot be a gentleman in a worldly sense, and use rough or profane language; for this vulgar habit would transform you into an ill bred unmannerly boor, and stamp the unmistakable mark of a nobody upon you, and thus you would be excluded from refined, intelligent society. Who desires to be a nobody? Think of this boys, when you are tempted to swear! Avoid all slang expressions. They are often the prelude to this vile evil. To those, young or old, who have already formed the habit, I say—"It is never too late to mend." Resolve, at once, that you will prove yourself stronger than the habit. If in a moment of anger or forgetfulness, you fail, do not be discouraged, but try again, and yet again, if need be. Do not despair, I entreat you; but persevere until the hidious monster is trampled under your feet!—New York Observer

As travelers in a foreign country make every sight a lesson, so ought we in this our pilgrimage.—Hall.

THE PANIC.

Of late the great theme of conversation is, the panic, the panic, and we are commanded to weep with those who weep, and mourn with those that mourn, but at this time, we scarcely know whether to weep or to thank God and take courage. It would be well, just now, to bear in remembrance the sayings of the good old prophet, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth but the righteous are as bold as a lion" and again; "I was young but now I am old, yet have I not seen the the righteous forsaken nor their seed begging for bread"

That the American people had become terribly extravagant is admitted by all, and the more the Lord prospered us as a nation, the more profligate and sinful we became. The goddess of fashion has become the god of the world and millions strew their all at her feet without a sigh of regret, and if a Paul takes the courage to speak against it, the long and deafening cry is; Great is the god of the Ephesians (Fashion). But, says one, what has this to do with the panic? Much in different ways. God works by means and this may be one of the ways of stripping many of the fashionable world of the curse which tempted them into this whirlpool of destruction and give them an opportunity of becoming more sober and reflecting. Desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and if men and women will persist in worshiping gods made with hands, the only remedy is to bereave them by destroying their idols. If extravagance was the cause, the remedy is very evident. Let us cease to be extravagant, and the panic will vanish as the dew before a morning sun. To day, there is more money spent in one month, in sinful extravaganee than it would take to feed and clothe all our poor until spring. But Ephraim is joined to his idol and we will be to let him alone, and examine our own situation. The question for us to solve is, what effect will the panic have upon us?

There is a class that, no doubt, will be necessitated to experience some inconveniences during the coming winter. We mean those who were laboring along public lines and public works. But even these, if willing to labor and economize, may be cared for, as, where there is a will, there generally is a way.

Railroad building and manufacturing is a blessing to a country when kept in bounds, but all extremes are dangerous, as these things proved to be. They not only robbed the country of its surplus money but they took from it the motive power. In other words, they monopolized all other kinds of labor. Such inducements were held out by them for labor that farmers and local mechanics could not compete, and as a result they suffered loss, so much so that many of the producers ceased to produce, and became consumers, the fact is, farming did not pay any more especially if it had to be done by hired labor.

The present panic will revolutionize the labor system. The old adage runs: "Ill is the wind that blows nobody any good." We do not make large pretentions in prophesy, but our humble opinion is that, at least, a little of this good will be blown towards farming and local industries, and that eventually, will flow towards all other honest occupations of life. Elevate the producer and we elevate the nation. Starve the mother and the children must suffer. This has been the late policy and the result is before us. Our future policy must be, increase the producers by decreasing the consumers, or feed the mother that the children may grow fat.

There is no necessity for us becoming alarmed, as the panic, to the mass, is more imaginary than real, and what little there is of it, we are helping to make by hoarding up what we should circulate. If all those who have a little surplus money will persist in wrapping it up in a napkin, the result will and must be, hard times. The money is in the country and all we need, is to have it circulated. There never was a better time to invest money in improvemeots than just now. Produce is plenty and labor and material will be cheap. Such a course will not only benefit the inventor, but will give employment to the laboring class, and thus drive the wolf from their doors during the winter that is now upon us. Our population must be provided for, people will not starve in sight of steaming tables and full storehouses, therefore it will be much better to make arrangements for people to earn their living than to encourage idleness by bestowing to them that for which they can have no opportunities to labor. The circulation of our money, is the only possible remedy for a panic, even, if the government was to issue millions and every one that would receive it would lay it away, the country would be none the better for it. Then let us cease talking panic and go to work. God will help those who help themselves. The one that gained five talents received five more as a bonus, while the one that hid his, had even that taken from him. There is no call for desponding. God is not dead, neither is he sleeping, every storm is followed by a calm and every panic, by its years of prosperity. The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous will God hold in everlasting remembrance and their seed shall not be found begging bread.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Under the above head we have been noticing such books &c., as are sent us for that purpose. To this, a few good meaning and well disposed brethren take exception, and fearing that there may be others of the same kind, we make an explanation. We have become a reading people, and perhaps, read more good substantial books than any other class of people. On this account we have repeated and numerous queries in regard to books. Our opinion is wanted of certain works, others wish to know where good books can be had, and still others, what kind of books they should read.

Editors are expected to know anything and everything that people are pleased to ask them, and if they fail to give satisfaction, the verdict is, "they have mistaken their calling." Hence, to meet our wants and those of our readers, we have opened a literary column in which we notice and review such books as are sent us by a few of the leading publishing houses. These books are generally of the highest type of morality, and many of them contain just such information as we all should know, the fact is, we do not notice any books that we would hesitate to place before our children. We have been raised among books and therefore claim that our judgment, after examining a book, should have, at least, as much respect as that of those who judge from the titles only. We are aware of the dangerous influence of bad books, and there are none that are more zealous in excluding from our homes and children, books of erroneous or irreligious tendencies than ourself. We are too closely wedded to the sacred cause which we have espoused and the "ancient landmarks," to admit favorable notices of books calculated to lead the enquirer after truth astray..

While a few object to these notices, many commend and consider it quite a favor to be informed of the new and interesting publications. Many of our ministering brethren have went all the way to Philadelphia in order to purchase their books of J. B. Lippincott & Co. Those same books we can furnish, postpaid, as cheaply as they can be purchased in the city unless taken in large quantities. We can also supply books from other publishers at their published prices.

These facts in connection with our notices, afford our readers privileges which should not be ignored even by those who do not care to read books. But to avoid every possible excuse for objection, we have determined to enlarge the Pilgrim, thus enabling us to give so much good reading that those who object to book notices will have no time to read them unless they do like it was said of those who objected to the report of A. M., read them first. Brethren, do not be too hard with us. The eighth page we claim for our own use and if, by it we can make a little money to meet the many losses we sustain by careless brethren not paying us our dues, you will not complain.—Please don't.

Prospectus.—Our Almanacs are now ready, and this week we send one containing a prospectus, to each of our agents so far as known to us. We neglected to mark all our agents so that in many cases we could not tell who they were. In such cases we generally sent it to the first one on the list. If we have made mistakes and sent to the wrong ones, we hope they will be kind enough to hand over to the proper person. If any of our agents fail to receive one we hope they will inform us of it immediately and we will send at once. All others who may feel like working for us will be supplied with Almanac and prospectus on application.

Nancy Crouse, The money you sent for your sister's Pilgrim is received, but we cannot remember her name. If you will send her name we will give her credit for the amount sent.

MARRIED.

KAGARICE—OTTO.—At the residence of John S. Brumbaugh, Oct. 23d., 1873, by the undersigned, David E. Kagarice to Miss Mary Otto, all of Bedford Co., Pa.
S. A. Moore.

MOURER—SINGER.—At my residence Oct. 7, 1873. Peter Mourer, near Upton, Franklin Co., Pa., and Sarah E. Singer, near Waynesboro, same county.

BONEBRAKE—WOODS.—Also by the undersigned, at the residence of the bride's son-in-law. Baltimore, Md., Henry Bonebrake, near Waynesboro, Pa., and Mary A. Woods, of Baltimore. All were members of the Church. J. F. Oller.

DIED.

DOOLY.—In the Yellow Creek Congregation, near New Enterprise, Bedford Co., Pa., Oct. 20, 1873, sister Nancy, wife of Thomas Dooly, daughter of Bro. Daniel Replogle, dec'd., and sister Nancy Replogle, aged 45 years, 7 mos. and 27 days. Her mortal remains were committed to the earth witnessed by a large concourse of people. Occasion improved by the brethren from Thess. 1: 4, latter part.

The subject of this notice was an amiable sister, much attached to the Church, as her seat was never found vacant in the meetings, unless unavoidable reasons. Sudden and unexpected was her departure from the devoted husband and her dear children, of whom 5 are living, one belonging to the Church. May the deep wound struck into their fireside be the means of doubling the seats left vacant in God's church.

Correspondence.

Brother Brumbaugh: —Having closed our Communion Meeting on the Merced River, we thought some brethren in the Atlantic States would like to hear from us and our Communion Meetings in California, therefore if these lines will be favored with an insertion in the PILGRIM, the opportunity is offered.

Three meetings were held in a beautiful grove on the bank of the Merced River, five miles from Cressies' Station, on a branch road of the Western Pacific R. R., in Merced Co., Cal., in the San Joaquin Valley. The brethren and friends met on the ground previous to holding the meeting, cleared the ground of the brush and weeds, prepared or erected seats, a stand for preaching, and tent for sleeping for the women, children and aged, the more unincumbered went to barns and houses close by. In preparing the place, the brethren and friends showed a zeal for the blessed cause we profess, worthy of imitation.

Preaching commenced on Friday evening, October third, Saturday 11 o'clock, public preaching, in the afternoon, church council till evening, then preaching, every morning at half past seven, morning worship. Up to this time, Sunday, our labor in preaching the Word was on general principles. Sunday at 11, Trine Immersion was the theme dwelt on, and as the evening drew on, those solemn ordinances were attended to, according to our Lord's direction. At 4 o'clock, public preaching again, on the great theme of the christian passover, from the bondage of sin to the liberty in Christ Jesus, from law to Gospel. That this was not a Jewish institution, for Jesus Christ Himself had instituted it at least 24 hours in advance of the true Jewish time,—that He Himself, as the Lamb of God would expire on a Roman cross for the sin of the world, at the true Jewish time of slaying the lamb.

At five o'clock, Sunday evening, commenced the lecture of self-examination, from 11th chapter of 1st Cor., this done, the supper was all placed on the table, and the members took their seats around it, 7 o'clock Feet-washing commenced. At the reading of the 4th verse of the 13th chapter of St. John, the administrator rose from supper, laid aside his garments and took a towel and girded himself, then poured water into a basin and washed the brothers feet next to him and wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded. The brother that had his feet washed, washed his next brother's feet, and so on till the last brother at the end of the table had his feet washed, he then washed the feet of the administrator, so every brother washed and wiped his brother's feet and had his feet washed and wiped by his brother. The sisters proceeded in like manner; the salutation accompanied Feet-washing. Then we ate the supper, and as Jesus commanded, so did we, while some were yet eating, the administrator arose, took the unleavened bread, emblematical of Christ's broken body, blessed and brake it, then the brethren brake with one another; in like manner we proceeded with the cup, or emblem of Christ's shed blood,—a hymn was sung and our Communion season closed. The brethren and sisters were made to rejoice, our spiritual life refreshed and strengthened. The very best attention was given by the spectators, who watched every move with profound silence. At the close, some of the spectators were heard to say; "That fills the bill the best of anything we ever saw."

Monday morning, the sun rose beautiful and fair, shining on our little camp ground like it always does in the Summer season in Cal. I thought of Israel's camping at Elim where there were twelve wells and seventy Palm trees; Israel had the type and we the substance.

After morning worship on Monday, 6th of October, the church considered some matters pertaining to the church till 11 o'clock, then public preaching. Between one and two o'clock we went to the river-side where prayer was wont to be made, and baptized one. After dinner we convened again in council, considering the necessity of calling an active, clear-minded, zealous brother to the field of the Gospel, to labor in the different places in California as the church might direct. We have seen the weakness of our present system of preaching the Word, and desire to put forth more Gospel-like effort to send the glad tidings of God's love to a perishing world. Arrangements were made and decided upon for the maintenance of the missionary and family, if he had one. The plan was new to us and was talked over with a good degree of caution, for pride and self-will sometimes clings very closely to those who are called the servants of Jesus Christ. Monday evening was to be our farewell discourse, but at the hour of preaching there came up a shower of rain and disconcerted us for the evening, (an early rain for California.) Tuesday morning we met early on the ground, the sun shone bright, the winds still, the clouds all gone; after singing and prayer to God, thanking Him for His mercy to us, we ate our breakfast together and started for our homes, rejoicing in God and sorry to part with one another.

The cost of the meeting and amount of provision was as follows: 200 lb bread. 230 lb beef, 100 lb pork 440 lb cabbage and sweet potatoes, 100 lb Irish potatoes, 20 lb coffee & tea, 20 of butter, 20 of honey and sugar, pepper and salt to answer the demand, and a cook three days. The contributions by the brethren and friends over reached the cost of the provision $13, which was voted to the preachers to pay their traveling expenses.

I have attended many Communion seasons, but have never witnessed one of more love and zeal on the part of the brethren and friends.

ELD. GEO. WOLF.

Dear Editor of Pilgrim: It was my privilege once in my life to visit your district, and formed during my brief sojourn, the acquaintance of some of the beloved brethren which I shall ever cherish. I first met brother George Brumbaugh at Cross Roads, preaching in the morning, heard a sermon by old brother Geo. Brumbaugh in German. At same place in the afternoon we attended a funeral, the subject a young girl of ten or eleven summers; the bud just nipped as it began to blossom in the parents view, and here I cannot refrain from using a stanza of the poet:

"E'er sin could blight or sorrow fade
Death came with friendly care;
The opening bud to Heaven conveyed,
And bade it blossom there."

On Tuesday morning was solicited by brethren Brumbaugh and Maddocks to attend a Lovefeast in brother James A. Sell's congregation. Bro. Sell, though very young, stands at the head. He much needs the prayers of the church. O that the brethren were more watchful, prayerful and faithful. Stayed over night with brother John H. Stiffler whose house consists of six interesting daughters, and what a pity it is that but one has consented to follow Jesus, the way, the truth and the life, while the rest perhaps, have made excuse either to bury their father, or give them 'good-by which are at home. And he also has six sons, and two have left the ancient landmarks, and have gone in the way of Balaam, the son of Boser, and after Balak for a reward.

Wednesday we returned to Martinsburg where we had an evening meeting. It is written the Lord can shut and no man can open the door of utterance. Here I made the acquaintance of N. B. Blough, the author of the religious dialogue. Was glad to form his acquaintance, as well as our sister E. R. S, who also contributes to the columns of the PILGRIM. May they consider what they say and the Lord be with them.

Thursday evening we took leave of our dear friends and boarded the cars for Altoona, where we remained over night, next morning, Friday, we took the train for Harrisburg, then changed cars for Hagerstown, tarried all night with our cousin A. Leckrider. Saturday morning we took the train for Brownsville, home, on W. Co. B. R. R.

Our visit was short and hurried, although very pleasant, owing to the contemplated Lovefeast at home, which was appointed on the 14th inst at Brownsville, Washington Co., Md. The weather being very fine, there was a good attendance both of the members and friends generally. The ministers of other congregations present were D. P. Sayler, Hanson Senseny, David Long, Jacob Trostle, David Rinehart and Jeremiah Brown. The preaching was good and was well received, if strict attention and good order are fair indications.

About eighteen months ago Bro. Geo. D. Bear died, who was for many years the elder of this congregation, and since that time the congregation has been without an elder, but at the recent Lovefeast it was agreed with great unanimity to have Bro. Eman'l Slifer ordained to be elder. His colaborers are Cornelius W. Castle and Eli Yourter. The members of this congregation reside in the southern part of Middletown Valley, Frederick Co., and Pleasant Valley, Washington Co., Md. The principal place of worship of this congregation is Brownsville, within three hundred yards of the Washington Co. branch of the B. & O. Railroad, and about 7 miles east of Harper's Ferry, W. Va. The regular appointment for preaching at Brownsville will be on the 25th of this month, and every two weeks from that time on. We would be pleased to have ministering brethren stop with us when they pass this way. Yours in love.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

J. S. FLORY.

October 20. The day set for our departure has come, and we are on our way with our family, which consists of wife and eight children, for Colorado. The morning was indeed a stormy one, something like 6 inches of snow fell during the night, fruit trees are badly broken, the forest trees are bent near the ground and roads blocked up by fallen trees. Through the snow, we had to make our way seven miles to the Railroad Station. At 12: 20 m., we were off all right, aboard the train,—arrived at Huntington at 5: 50 p. m Boat at the wharf awaiting the train, all was bustle and confusion for a time, however, in a little while we were "at home" around a hot stove in the cabin of the Steamer "Exchange," which immediately rounded out and set her head down the beautiful Ohio, for Cincinati. Owing to the extreme low tide of water and dark and rainy night, she struck ground several times and then lay up.

Oct. 21. At daylight the boat was again on her way, the shores are white with snow and it has been snowing all forenoon, the atmosphere is indeed "winterish." As usual, we have a variety of characters on board. A very talkative M. E. minister makes himself agreeable to us. We have aboard a Roman Catholic Priest who looks and acts just like other people. Then we have a fair representation of fashion, folly, and bombastic conceit and selfishness. In their actions, these butterflies of fashion would seem to say, "Wish we could live in a world where we would not necessarily come in contact with plain, humble, modest people" They will get the privilege doubtless by and by, for there is such a world,—to come, however. Also we have to wonder if they were ever children, or just born into the world with full grown noses to turn up at every childish wish or whim! One right we have, and that is to smile in "our sleeve" at their peculiar sensitiveness.

Oct. 22. Arrived at Cincinati. Last night at 1 o'clock, at the landing, met with brother and cousin Noah Flory and brother Daniel Cline, both of Rockingham Co., Va., who were just on their return from Colorado, were well pleased with their trip, and made a purchase in the town of Beaver, Col. Also met with brother J. K. Halsberry of Barbour Co., W. Va., who is going to accompany us to Col. To-day is pleasant, we are lying over here until this eve. at 5: 50, when we expect to leave by the Ohio and Mississippi R. R. for St. Louis. All are well, thank the Lord.

LITERATURE.

J. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

"GREAT TRUTHS BY GREAT AUTHORS."—A Dictionary of Aids to Reflection, &c., from writers of all ages and both Hemispheres, (Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, Philad'a.) This work purports to be a collection of "Illustrations of Truths or Things new and Old," and it certainly forms a mine of finest thought of great value to any one. The extracts are remarkable passages from the writings of all the great authors of standard literature, and an arrangement in alphabetical order, with the author's name attached. Such a book must be of special value to speakers who desire to refer to the thoughts upon a particular subject, of the great and good who have preceded them, without being obliged to spend days and even weeks in weary search through their separate works; and to the young, as furnishing the means of storing their minds with a fund of exalted and ennobling thoughts, by which they can shape their destinies, and lead them to nobler deeds and purer lives. Price $2.00 in fine cloth bevelled boards. Sent from this office.

ONE of the great dangers attending the use of the various sedatives employed in the nursery is that they tend to produce the Opium-habit. These quack medicines owe their soothing and quieting effects to the action of opium, and the infant is by them given a morbid appetite for narcotic stimulants. The offering for sale of such nostrums should be prohibited, as tending to the physical and moral deterioration of the race. In India mothers give to their infants sugar pills containing opium, and the result is a languid, sensual race of hopeless debauchers. In the United States the poisonous dose is administered under another name; but the consequences will probably be the same. Popular Science Monthly for October.

OLD AND NEW, for November, is before us, and is the first visit of this interesting monthly. It is conducted by Edward E. Hale, and is now completing its 8th volume. The premiums and inducements for new subscribers are truly wonderful. 1st. A Chromo- lithograph—"Confidence." 2d. A new book by Mr. Hale, worth $1.50. 3rd. Three numbers free, next before the year begins, or 4th, two handsome engravings instead of Chromo. Besides all the magazine itself is excellent. Will send it with PILGRIM, both for $4.75 including premiums. F. B. Perkins, Business Agent, Boston, Mass.

Literary Intelligence.

THE initial chapter of a new serial entitled "A Daughter of Bohemia," by "Christian Reid" (Miss Fisher) contained in Appleton's Journal of October 25th. It depicts life in a Southern city, and exhibits all the peculiar poems, and constructive talent which have marked the previous works of this author.

THE best photographs of Tennyson, Darwin and Carlyle are taken on the work of a Mrs. Cameron an amateur artist in photography living in the Isle of Night.

THE readers of Harper's Magazine for November have the opportunity of welcoming back to the Easy Chair Mr. George William Curtis. Prof. Jas. De Mille commences a new serial—"The Living Link" in the same number.

IN the November Scribner, Mr. Froude begins his "Annals of an English Abbey," (illustrated). "Old and New Louisiana," the second paper of "The Great South," is superbly illustrated. A paper on Steadman, with portrait, by A. R. Macdonough, and a paper by Steadman, on Mrs. Browning, doubly celebrates the name of that popular critic and poet

THERE seems to be no limit to the editions of Dickens' works. A "New Household Edition" in fifty-six elegant volumes and with 550 illustrations by F. O. C. Darley and John Gilbert, &c., on steel, is announced from the "Riverside Press" of Hurd & Houghton.

WE notice by the announcement in the Phrenological Journal for November that the second volume of the "New American Cyclopædia" revised edition, now in course of publication by D. APPLETON & Co., New York, is now ready. This is a great work, and a large library in itself. It will consist of 16 bi-monthly volumes, and is an immense undertaking; but just such an one as will be satisfactorily accomplished by the enterprising house having charge of the project. We predict for it an immense circulation and expect to arrange to supply our patrons with the work as issued.

POETRY.

THE MODEL CHURCH.

SELECTED BY HATTIE F. MILLER.

Well wife, I've found the model church! I worshiped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times, before my hairs were gray.
The meetin'-house was fixed up more than they were years ago;
But then I felt, when I went in, it wasn't built for show.

The sexton didn't seat me 'way back by the door:
He knew I was old and deaf, as well as old and poor,
He must have been a Christian, for he led me boldly through
The long aisle of that crowded church, to find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd heard the singin'; it had the old time ring,
The preacher said with a trumpet voice,
"Let all the people sing!"
The tune was Coronation, and the music upward rolled,
Till I thought I heard the angels striking all their harps of gold.

My deafness seemed to melt away, my spirit caught the fire;
I joined my feeble, trembling voice with that melodious choir,
And sang as in my youthful days, "Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem, and crown him Lord of all."

I tell you wife, it did me good to sing that hymn once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner who gets a glimpse of shore,
I almost want to lay aside this weather-
beaten form,
And anchor in the blessed port forever
from the storm.

The preachin'? Well, I can't just tell all that the preacher said;
I know it wasn't written, I know it wasn't read.
He hadn't time to read it, for the lightnin' of his eye
Went passing 'long from pew to pew, nor passed a sinner by.

The sermon wasn't flowery, 'twas simple
Gospel truth:
It fitted poor old men like me; it fitted hopeful youth.
'Twas full of compensation for weary hearts that bleed;
'Twas full of invitations to Christ, and not to creed.

The preacher made sin hideous, in Gentiles and in Jews,
He shot the golden sentences down on the finest pews,
And—though I can't see very well—I saw the falling tear,
That told me hell was some ways off, and heaven very near.

How swift the golden moments fled within that holy place!
How brightly beamed the light of heaven from every happy face!
Again I longed for that sweet time when friend shall meet with friend;
When congregations ne'er break up, and
Sabbaths have no end.

I hope to meet that minister—the congregation too—
In the dear home beyond the skies that shine from heaven's blue.
I doubt not I'll remember, beyond life's evening gray,
The happy hour of worship in that model church to-day.

Dear wife, the fight will soon be fought—
the victory be won;
The shinin' goal is just ahead, the race is nearly run.
O'er the river we are nearin' they are throngin' to the shore—
To shout our safe arrival where the weary weep no more.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A WONDERFUL QUEEN.

Many kings and queens have lived, reigned and died in this world. In worldly honor and glory they shone for awhile, then passed away. Nations bowed to the will of some whose influence was great indeed. And now Victoria wears the coveted crown of England, and that too with merited praise, for none had a more virtuous and peaceful reign than she, but the queen we now propose to write about is one of quieter power, yields her scepter over a large territory and has more subjects than any that ever lived. Her influence is such as to cause the masses in her domain to bow to her will, and yield to her peculiar whims, whether for good or ill. Some of her edicts are full of absurdities and abominations yet she is obeyed. Her subjects, are led by the winning smile she ever wears as the master leads the galley-slave to do his bidding by his frowns. Her tax levy is the most oppressive ever imposed by king, queen, or government, yet it is paid, though often to the sacrifice of comfort, food and drink. The honest gains of the labor are poured in her lap while the children go hungry and naked. The rich lavish out the thousands to her bidding while the beggar is turned hungry from the door, old and young, rich and poor, pay her tribute and in return for their earnest devotion to her desires, she gives torture the most severe, and chastisements the most cutting. The Chinese torture their children by compressing the feet of their children in small wooden shoes, but this queen has ingenious contrivances of springs and cords that torture and compress the human body of her subjects out of its natural shape, thus driving many to immature death, by other inventions, after her bidding, her subjects are forced into the streets, highways, and public places in indecent apparel, as if in mockery of God's work in shaping the "human form divine." Her code of laws is a medley of inconsistencies, full of torture, deprivations, poison, rapine and murder. She sends her subjects to her schools of folly and learns them to dance to her music, full of deceit as it is. Crowns them with a crown of ballast doubtless for the purpose of equalizing the power of sense wanting within! The world is ransacked for the benefit of her subjects, her command covers the seas, factories are ever humming in busy work to supply her demands, even the silent dead are not free from her disturbance, their silken tresses and golden curls are wanted, and they are shorn of their locks to please her living subjects. She has no special or fixed laws of policy, but politically is subservient to the wills, wishes and inventions of her agents, of whom she has some in every court and mart in the civilized world. In religion she is wonderfully liberal and full of eccentricities, an open enemy to the religion of Jesus Christ because he dared to reprove her of her sins, consequently she frowns upon those that would follow Him, however often smiles upon them that she might thus gain them to herself, and her ways are so winning that often after they had left her she wins them back to to her "bed and board," and leads them through her dazzling halls and deceitful bowers. She seems to take special delight in thus bringing the story of the cross into disrepute and defiling the profession of those that claim to belong to another kingdom. Oh how many has she thus led to cross the threshold of hell! To live for a while under her favor and drink of the cup of her fornication even to the bitter dregs and then pass to her last reward—an empty title—Christless, lifeless, and wanting in everything but the fruits of condemnation. Yea, the reward of those that die under her reign is such as devils get and fiends endure. Her subjects are often warned, and invited to rebel against her iron rule, but nay, they love too well; her smiles and her winning ways keep them in allegiance to her will. Tis true, a few forsake her and when they go, she sends forth after them a flood of scoffs and jeers by which means others that would go are constrained to remain with her.

Whence cometh this great and wonderful Queen? Where doth she dwell and where are her dominions? She cometh from a low country, born of a dragon, rocked in the cradle of gross darkness, brought up into this world a pampered child of pride, full of rebellion and a heart steeped in iniquity, clothed in "purple and fine linen," she reigns over the world which is her territory. The bounds of her domain are from sea to sea and from pole to pole. Her temple and dwelling place is as large as her dominons. Her name, by the world, is extolled above every name, none so poor but they look up with admiration to her dazzling royalty, none so high but they stoop to her in willing obeisance. Her name is "FASHION." To that name the world sings songs of praise, to that name busy feet dance, and to that name the world bows the knee. To that name devils fasten their chains of allurement; around that name abominations cluster weighty enough to sink a world, and at the sound of that name hell is moved and darkness stirred up. Jesus, the meek and lowly, has declared war against the Queen, and His soldiers fighting for to have those delivered that have been led captive by her. The war is one of fierce contest because of superior numbers offered, and because she too often has her dwelling place in the camp of Israel. Oh for the sake of a perishing world let us put her out! Jesus, our captain, has given orders to do so, and shall we not obey him? The forces of Jesus are few in number, but the God of hosts is with them, and eventually Queen Fashion must be overcome and her subjects destroyed. Like Korah and all that pertained to him, though claiming a place in Israel—in the church—all the votaries of pride and fashion must go down into the pit. Lord save us from the abominations of pride, fashion and folly!

J. S. FLORY.

GRIM care, anxiety, moroseness, all this rust of life, ought to be scoured off by the oil of mirth. It is better than emery. Every man ought to rub himself with it. A man without mirth is like a wagon without springs, in which every one is jarred disagreeably to jolt by every pebble over which it runs.

THE LOVE OF NATURE.

There are many persons who go through the world with their eyes closed to the beauties of nature. This should not be so. We should cultivate a love of the beautiful in nature. How beautiful is the earth with its oceans, its continents, its stupendous mountains, and its variegated scenery! What a vast field of thought does it present to the minds of men in its mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms; and when we look abroad at the illimitable worlds which present themselves to us in every direction, we can truly exclaim, in the language of the pious Psalmist, "Day after day uttereth speech, and night after night sheweth forth knowledge." Everything that we can take cognizance of through our senses is teeming with life, and reminds us of our Divine Author. As we behold Him manifested in the beautiful forms of vegetable life, we feel that to know more of His power would be a blessing unto us. We see Him manifested in the animal kingdom, and we are lost in wonder, while our thoughts ascend unto Him to know more of His power. Flowers speak to us of His tenderness and love. The birds warble forth His praises, and all nature proclaims in language that cannot be mistaken, "The hand that made us is Divine." Nature teaches us lessons of utility, beauty, progression and love. Let us call your attention to the seasons, in the irannual changes, commencing with Spring.

When the sun starts on his northern tour, the icy chains that have bound the laughing rivulet, the skipping brook, and the leaping cascade, begin to relax, and they go dancing on their joyous glee to fulfill their grand destiny. The crocuses and hyacinths begin to bloom, the buds to swell and burst, the birds to choose their mates and build their nests, and, at last, amid blooming flowers, bursting buds, and singing birds, old gray-haired winter progressively glides into the flowery lap of Spring.

Here, certainly, is progress, use, and beauty all combined. But these infallible signs indicate to the husbandman that the proper time has arrived when he must prepare the soil and sow the seed for the coming crop. Mark, now, how strictly in accordance with the progressive law does the work of growth go on. First the tender blade comes peeping out of the warm bosom of mother earth, and day by day increases in stature. Then see how gracefully the growing corn bows its leaves of green; how majestically it rears its tasseled head on high, and how beautifully, from its girdle, hang out the silken cords! There are many people in the world that are such perfect utilitarians that they see no beauty in all this. They only see so many bushels at harvest time, and so many dollars for their money-bags. But behold with what luxuriousness of beauty nature bedecks herself beneath the strong and fructifying rains of the Summer sun; notice the white and red roses, the blushing peonies, the delicately formed china asters, the crimped-leaved poppies, the majestic tiger lilies; nor would we forget the morning-glories, from whose beauty lingers but an hour; nor would we be unmindful of the tiny flowers whose bright eyes and smiling faces fill our souls with beauty; nor of the sunflower, the hollyhock, and all those of a statelier class; all bloom in beauty and loveliness, covering the earth with delight and making the air redolent with fragrance. How beautiful are all the flowers, and how I love them! It seems, sometimes, as though they were only so many footsteps of angels scattered over our pathway here to lure us to fairer worlds above, where immortal flowers bloom and never fade.

But Summer grows weary, at last, with the burden of her fruitfulness, and pours the result of all her toil in the gorgeous lap of Autumn. The fields, that all Summer long were green with growing grain, are covered all over with a ripening crown of glory; then again, the woods—

"O, I love to gaze on the grand old woods,
Dressed in their russet, gold and brown,
And one by one to see their tinted leaves
Softly, gently, come falling down.
They seem like glittering rubies bright,
Plucked from some lofty, regal crown,
To richly grace the solemn marriage rite
Of Summer green with Autumn brown!"

Who does not love the Autumn? Those beautiful October days, so dream-like, as though they were especially made for meditation! Everything so still, and the bright rays of the sun are softened by the haze of the atmosphere. The Autumn oftentimes, in its brightness, reminds me of some toil-worn pilgrim, drawing near the end of life's journey after an active life well spent. Just as his steps begin to descend the valley, the radiance of the brighter world breaks around, and a smile lights up his countenance with immortal beauty delightful to behold, ere death draws his curtain over the scene.

In conclusion let me recommend to all to cultivate a love of the beauties of nature, and to study the great book of nature and learn from its mystic pages. Its pages glisten with beautiful extracts from a still grander work, the universe of God. Its poetry is in time with the music of the spheres, and its well-rounded periods and brilliant metaphors are the impulses of that great First Cause. Nature's book was written by God, and its leaves glisten with the choicest treasures of His infinite mind. * * *

—Phrenological Journal.

A LEARNED divine one day accosted a simple-hearted Christian busy in his daily toil:

"Well, John, it is a long and hard way to heaven, is it not?"

"O, no, sir," was the ready answer; "it is only three steps."

"Three steps! How is that John?"

"Why sir, nothing is plainer. First, step out of yourselves; second step into Christ; third, step into heaved."

The astonished minister, years afterwards, acknowledged his indebtedness to that poor rustic for one of his profoundest and most comprehensive lessons in experimental theology.

'SILENCE IS GOLD."—The Arabs, have a proverb which says, "Speech is of silver, but silence is of gold." There is no question concerning the terribly mischievious effects of an evil tongue, and the truth of this proverb can that be questioned; but when silence is too great it leaves one like King Midas, dreary amid all his gold. We can have too much of a good thing. Silence may reign in selfishness or stupidity, as well as in wisdom.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE

THE Indiana Quakers have yielded to a very sensible change in their discipline. All restrictions in relation to marrying out of the society have been swept away, and Friends in Indiana are not now liable to discipline for doing so.

The following is from an exchange and is an exampple of how those who do not believe in the true Messiah are constantly being deceived by false Messiahs:

The New Free Press of Vienna has just published from the pen of the eastern traveler, Baron de Maltzen, an account of a pretended Messiah who has appeared in Arabia; He "is a Jew of Sana, in Yemen, with fascinating exterior having remarkable brilliant eyes and a melodious voice. After studying the mysteries of the great cabalistic work, the Zoha, he withdrew from men, eventually retired to a desert where he submitted to bodily mortification and self-denial. He soon became distinguished as a worker of miracles, and, as such, attracted the attention of the superstitious, brought various kinds of food, and were pleased that he condescended to accept their offerings. The increase of their flocks and of their households, and even their success in the attack upon hostile troops, were attributed to the power peculiar to this worker of marvelous doings. His reputation has spread far and wide among the Arabian population, and many incredulous stories are circulated about him.

The following is a description by the Rev. Dr. Duff, of Scotland of the relics which the Catholic church claim to have preserved and are now exhibiting to those whom they have succeeded in duping:

Some of the bones of Abraham Isaac, and Jacob! The stone on which the father of the faithful offered his only son! Chips of the brazen serpent! Preserved specimens of the manna in the wilderness! and of the blossoms of Aarons rod!

Descending to gospel times, we have the axe, saw, and hammer of Joseph, the espoused husband of Mary! The camel's hair garment of John the baptist and the linen on which he was beheaded; and the forefinger wanting the nail, the identical forefinger with which he pointed to the blessed Savior, saying "Behold the Lamb of God!" the Holy coat of the redeemer himself; spikes of his thorny crown; and fragments of his cross! a piece of Peters staff and chain, his sword somewhat rusty, the stone on which the cock crew and rags of the sail of his boat when a fisherman on the Lake of Gallilee! part of the Virgin Mary's hair, and girdle, one of her combs and shoes, her sponsal ring, and a considerable quantity of her milk! Of other apostles and holy martyrs, we have endless and countless fragments and memorials, in the diversified form of hair heads and skulls, tongues teeth and beards, jaw-bones and shoulder-blades ribs and livers and hearts, legs and toes and slippers, yea, and portions of the very breath of some carefully enclosed in stoppered vials, with one feather out of the wings of the Archangel Gabriel.

MEMPHIS AND THE YELLOW FEVER.—Reports from Memphis to the 28th represent the fever to be slowly abating. On Sunday not more than a dozen new cases were reported. The majority of the cases lately have been of a milder type, and yield more readily to prompt treatment. Drs. White and Blount died on the 26th inst., making eight physicians who have fallen victims to the disease. The colored people are taking the fever and about fifty of them are reported sick. Help will be needed for some time to come for the convellescents and the poorer classes, as the stagnation of all kinds of business will prevent many from supporting themselves who are able and willing to work. The Young Men's Christan Association of this city has received the following telegram from Vincent Coyler, at Memphis: "Out of a population of 2, 509 in the first and second wards, and Chelsea in the city, there have been over 1,000 deaths from the fever. Neighborhoods are deserted. Funerals and sickness on every side. The solemnity is awful—worse than on the battlefields of the war. The enemy is unseen and more fatal. The people are greatly united. Christian and Hebrew, Catholic and Protestant, black and white work together in perfect harmony." The Association has forwarded about $1,500 to the Memphis Relief Committee, and aid has been sent from many quarters Boston, Washington, New York and other cities have subscribed liberally.

Youth's Department.

TO OUR YOUNG PATRONS.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The PILGRIM has been coming to some of you, on his weekly visits, for nearly four years and to others not more than ten months. All of you have been receiving his visits frequently and long enough to be acquainted by this time, and we do hope that the acquaintance may be pleasant and profitable to you. The PILGRIM will have to cease making his visits to you unless you give him another invitation. If you have intimate and good friends you never forget to invite them back when they come to visit you, no matter how frequent those visits may be. Now the PILGRIM looks for an invitation only once a year, and as the year is nearly at a close and the time is here that this invitation is looked for, we hope his visits may have been so pleasant and agreeable that all the boys and girls will not forget to invite him back the coming year. We know that some of you like to read the PILGRIM, for your papa's in writing to us have told us so. Not very long ago a father said that he was very well pleased with the PILGRIM, and that his little boy asked him to read the Youth's Department to him, as soon as he received it, and sometimes he could hardly wait until it would come. This little boy will not forget to have the PILGRIM invited back to his home next year, and we hope this will be the feeling of you all. Don't let papa forget to send the invitation. We love to visit your homes and bring along something good for boys and girls to read, and we will feel pretty badly if we do not get an invitation to come back again.

The coming year we will try to make the Youth's Department more interesting than heretofore. Our boys and girls must not be neglected, and we are now prepared to make such selections that will interest and instruct you, and in addition to this we expect to have a larger number of contributors to your department. There are those who delight to talk to boys and girls and from such, we may expect to have occasional talks that will interest you May we not then come to you another year? Nothing will delight us more than to receive another free invitation, for it is our highest purpose to do you good. PUBLISHER.

WHERE IS YOUR INFLUENCE?

The young readers of the Pilgrim may think that Uncle Henry has a great deal to talk about, but after all he does not say half as much as he thinks.

When I look around and see how fast the world is getting to be, especially our young folks, I cannot refrain from feeling concerned. I have of late, given the young considerable attention or thought, because on you and the moulding of your character, depends the welfare of the church. A few years more, and the old fathers who now so earnestly labor and pray for you, will be no more, and you will grow up to take their place, and the great question with me is, will you do it? When I look over a crowd of our young, the query is, who, fifteen or twenty years from this, will be our ministers? It is from among you, dear young friends we expect them to come. Do you ever think of the high and holy calling you may be made to fill? There is much said and written about the glory of high sounding titles, and perhaps some of you may be aspiring after a great name, or position in life. If you are, you may and must be disappointed in the end. Even if you were to be successful and gain a great name, it will bring sorrow and disappointment in the end as it is all vanity and vexation of spirit. A high position in the church is much more to be desired.

The good old apostle Paul says that all things are but as filth compared with the glory and honor that is to be found in the Kingdom of Christ. Then, commence now to seek after those riches and that glory. Do not think you are too young. Our blessed King's orders are, "first seek the Kingdom and its righteousness." You have an influence even before you may think of it. Let that be for Jesus and in favor of the church. It often pains me to see some of our young devoting their first years and best part of their life in favor of the devil, and thus help him build up his kingdom and work out their own destruction by inches. Do not think you are without influence and it is your liberty to give it where you will. Where shall it be? Will you give it in favor for Jesus who died to save you, or to satan who seeks to drag you into hell, a place only prepared for himself and his angels? Do not be so unthoughtful, so unjust and so unreasonable as to give your young and best days to the enemy of your soul, and then in your dying hours, throw your wreck, your span of useless life on God's mercy and saving grace. He has no need of you, especially after you have spent the vigor of your life in fighting against him. It is you that needs him. You need him every day, every hour, every moment—every breath you draw is from him. You cannot afford to have such a God angry with you, yet you dare to make him angry, because it is said that God is angry with the sinner every day. Every moment of time you spend, and every influence you give in favor of satan, puts you lower and farther away from God. Then think to whom you are giving your influence. Let it be in favor of God, of the church and of yourself, and you will be happy in time, and in eternity receive everlasting life.

UNCLE HENRY.

THE BEST BOOK IN THE BEST PLACE.

There are many great libraries in the world. Some contain nearly a million books. Some of these books have been great blessings to the world; but there is one book which claims to be before all others, and above them all. It is the Holy Bible. This is truly the best book. As its name means, it is "the Book"—the book of books—God's book. It came from God, and leads to God. It is his gift to all people of every age. It has done more good in the world than all other books that have ever been written.

In the Bible are declared the character, ways and purposes of the God of Providence and grace, and in what relations man stands to his Creator, and to his fellow-man. It answers the questions, Whence came I? What am I? Whither am I going? It is a book of the purest doctrines and the wisest precepts. It is full of light and truth and love. It relates facts, and teaches by examples. It makes known the best way of living, the most comfortable way of dying, and tells of eternal rest in Heaven.

But the principal glory of the Bible is that it reveals the person and work of Christ, and the only way of salvation by faith in him. It is the "word of Christ." The great truth it makes known is, that God so loved the world as to send his son to be the Savior of men.

"This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his son." Whosoever believes in him shall be saved. In its invitations and promises Christ is "commended" to sinners as their only hope and refuge. It points to his life as their best example, and to his Cross as the only way to their reconciliation with God and to Heaven: and promises to us the help of the Holy Spirit.

Should not the best book be put into the best place? The Psalmest tells where that is: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart." Psalms cxix. 11. It is well to have the Bible in our housas, and to see it on our tables. It is better still to have it stored in our memories. But best of all to have its truths in our hearts. "I have lived a lonely life," said the shepherd of Salisbury Plain, "and have often had little to eat; but my Bible has been meat, drink, and company to me; and when trouble has come upon me, I do not know what I should have done if I had not had the promises of the Bible for my stay and comfort."

In a time of persecution a Bible was taken from a boy, and burnt before his eyes. "I have got the seven chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel in my heart," said he: "you cannot burn them out." That was a safe place for the truths of the Bible, was it not?

The best book should be in the best place for the best purpose. "That I might not sin against thee." It is the Holy Bible. It shows us that sin is an evil and bitter thing; that it is defiling, deceitful and disgraceful; that God sees and remembers it; that we should confess it, repent of it, and forsake it; and that we should look to our Lord Jesus Christ, whose blood cleanseth from it, and by whose grace alone we can conquer it, and live a life of holiness. Young reader, read your Bible, cherish its truths in your hearts—obey it.—Little Messengers.

KISS ME, MAMMA.

"Kiss me, mamma, before I sleep." How simple a boon, yet how soothing to the little supplicant is that soft gentle kiss. The little head sinks contentedly on the pillow, for its peace and happiness within. The bright eyes close, and the rosy lips are revealed in the bright and sunny dreams of innocence.

Yes, kiss it, mamma, for that good-night kiss will linger in memory when the giver lies mouldering in the grave. The memory of a gentle mother's kiss has cheered many a lonely wanderer's pilgrimage and has been the beacon-light to illuminate his desolate heart; for remember, life has many stormy billows to cross, many a rugged path to climb, with thorns to pierce; and we know not what is in store for the little one so sweetly slumbering with no annoying care to disturb its peaceful dreams. The parched and fevered lip will become dewy again, as recollections bear to the sufferer's couch a mother's love—a mother's kiss. Then kiss your little ones ere they sleep; there is a magic power in that kiss which will endure to the end of life.—Western Recorder.

Why not strew the path of life with flowers? It requires no stronger efforts than to plant thorns and briers. Is it not strange that we bend all our efforts in cultivating those plants which afford no pleasure, but on the contrary, abridge our happiness, while we suffer to spring up spontaneously, the few stray flowers that occasionally throw a smile along our way? It need not be thus. The few happy men around us should teach us an important lesson. There is no reason in the world why we should not be as happy as they. If we would look on the path of life as a road, we must cultivate ourselves, and go diligently about it. Less frequently would we have cause to mourn over the bitter past, or the dark and cloudy present. If our years have run thus far to waste, let us with care, influence the future and with all care and attention cultivate those fruits and flowers that will yield a harvest of agreeable pleasure.

No summer but it has a winter; he never reaped comfort in his adversity, that sowed it not in his prosperity.

Good management is the secret of success.

WE MEAN BUSINESS.

A brother in writing to us says: "I am glad to hear that you are going to enlarge the Pilgrim, not that it is too small as it is, but this shows prosperity and zeal for the good work of the Lord." Just so, dear brother, we mean to prosper in our business. First we are about our Lord's business, and in this more especially do we mean to prosper. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business," was the open rebuke of Jesus when his parents sought him and found him so busily engaged in the great work for which his Father sent him. We have a work to do, and does not every one know that we should be about it? We are to work out our soul's salvation, and labor for that of others. This is our business, and if ever we felt in earnest, if ever we felt like "push," it is just now. We are stirred to a more strenuous effort from a consideration of the nature of this work. It is great because it requires self-denial, a continual warfare with the adversary of souls, a race in which the whole structure of the inner man must be brought into exercise. It is important because our eternal interests depend upon it. It is time to work because surrounding circumstances teach us that we are nearing the Jordan of death, soon our Father will call us over, our work will be ended, and then our reward according to our work. If we do not work we have not the promise of a reward; we cannot expect to have part in the unsearchable riches of Christ, and participate in the things that God has prepared for those that love him.

Again we are to labor for the salvation of others, and as the soul is of more value than the whole world, does it not seem important that we be interested in this work? Our object when we embarked in our present vocation, was to open up an avenue through which the souls of men might be reached, and thus enable all the laborers in Christ's Vineyard to perform a work for the Lord; and as we see that our object is, in a degree, being met, we feel encouraged. Ah, yes, we mean business, and we hope that every brother and sister will wake up to the importance of this work. It is altogether like that we are not wide awake to the interests of our heavenly Father, or there would be greater efforts made for the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom: our Journals would be filled with thrilling appeals to the sinner, and the prevailing evils now extant in the world, would receive many a thrust from the great spiritual sword "which is mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." It is time, my brethren and sisters, that we take hold of this sword and fight, for the enemy is approaching us on every side, and is assuming such an appearance that, if we are not careful, we may not distinguish him from a friend. Then let us be wide awake, live, active, business men, so that the interests of our Lord do not suffer, and when the great day of reckoning comes, we be not found wanting.

Again we mean business of a pecuniary nature. It is right that we should follow our callings in life with a fixed purpose, and a determination that at least, opens the way to success; and our contemplated enlargement, and improvements do indicate that we are bent on making our business a success. In this, our readers can feel assured there is no deception. We mean business. Is this not right? Did not the apostle tell the Roman brethren to not be slothful in business? Yes. It is right, and this we think the brother had in view when he commended our proposed enlargement. The paper is really large enough for the price, but we are determined to make it "look like business," hoping that all right thinking brethren and sisters will appreciate our efforts, and in the end we may be paid for it. Shall we be disappointed? Is not our calling a laudable one, and since we are all dependent, to a certain extent, on one another, in whatever vocation we may pursue, is it not our duty to help each other? This mutual dependence should not be overlooked, and as we are determined to do our part, we hope our patrons will do theirs, and then indeed may we expect to be successful. In addition to the enlargement, we give every subscriber an Almanac free. The printing of these Almanacs alone, cost no small sum, say nothing of the labor they cost in getting them ready for the press. Then our rates to agents in addition to all this, surely presents the appearance of business, and the idea of prosperity. We hope then that our patrons will get to work immediately and in earnest. Our list in order to have a proper pecuniary remuneration, should be doubled, and this can easily be done, and from present indications will be done. Wake up. The time is here to be at work. We mean business.

J. B. B.

OUR ALMANAC.

Our Almanac is now completed and we suppose that before this, all our known agents have received a copy containing a prospectus, and are ready to go to work. As to the merits of our work, we shall not say anything more about it being the best &c., as others may take a notion to say the same thing, which will necessitate one of our statements to be incorrect. To have the best of anything is a laudable ambition, but perhaps it will be most prudent to let others make the decision. All that we shall say about it at present is, that we did the very best we could in putting out a first class Family Almanac, containing all the information about the signs and seasons that we are expected to know. It also contains an interesting table calculated to show the Solar Cycle, Dominical Letter, Golden Number, Epact New year, Shrovetide, Easter, Ascension, Whitsuntide, 1st Sunday in Advent and Christmas, from the year 1816 to 1899 inclusive, and the Centennial Almanac, for 1874. This old prognosticator tells us that Saturn is the ruling planet for 1874. We shall not tell you what it says about the weather, crops &c., but it does say all about them, and is much more convenient to farmers and people generally than barometers, as it gives us the information so much farther ahead, that we have time to prepare things as they come. In addition to this, it contains some very interesting religious and biographical reading, and quite an extensive Ministerial List in alphabetical order, giving the post office and county. Notwithstanding all our exertion and care to have as complete a list as possible, we notice a number of mistakes generally typographical. This happened because we could not read the proof, and the parties failed to decipher our chirography. These errors are of such a character as to produce no inconveniences, but there are others for which we feel more sorry. We notice a few names omitted that we had and should be on the list. Among these we just now remember the name of Christian Custer 475 Franklin street Philadelppia. These are errors over which we had no control as they were not seen until it was too late to correct them.

TAKE ONE FREE.

As an extra inducement for our brethren and friends to take the Pilgrim, we have gone to considerable trouble and expense in publishing a first class family Almanac for 1874. They are now ready for distribution and we offer one Free to every subscriber to the Pilgrim for 1874. They will be sent to subscribers postpaid, as soon as the names are received. Now is the time to subscribe. The Pilgrim for 1874 promises to be better than ever before—will be enlarged and otherwise improved and a Pilgrim Almanac Free, all for the small sum of $1.50. All new names sent in before the 1st of Dec. will get the remaining Nos. free. Don't delay but send in your names at once, old and new, and get your Almanacs before the New Year commences.

TO OUR SINGLE SUBSCRIBERS.

We have, on our list, between 500 and 600 single subscribers. Out of this number, we ought to get many agents who would be able to send us good lists for the coming year. On account of the large number, we did not send prospectus to all as we did on former occasions, therefore, we now say to any or as many as think they could get us some subscribers, let us know, and we will send you an Almanac and prospectus forthwith. Send along, brethren, sisters and friends, and see how much can be accomplished by a little effort.

HOW A SISTER PAID FOR THE PILGRIM.

Dear Brethren:—I have now been reading the Pilgrim for two years, and it seems to me I cannot get along without it. Enclosed find $1.50 which I have now saved by laying by the littles that I succeeded in earning in my spare hours. At one time I thought I would be to give up my faithful weekly friend, but when I tho't of the many good messages it brought me and the pleasant hours spent in perusing its pages, I determined that I would have it even at a sacrifice of some of the things that now fill my scanty board, but it is said that necessity is the mother of invention, and it was so in my case, as I earned this money by sewing for my neighbors while they were cozily sleeping in their beds. Though it was earned by hard work at late hours, I never gave that much money with a better will. May the Lord bless and prosper you in the good work.

The above is from a sister in W. Va, and speaks for itself. Brethren and sisters, you that are blessed with plenty, take knowledge from this poor sister. Where the love of Jesus reigns supreme in the soul, hard times and poverty will not be a hindrance in subscribing for the Pilgrim.

MARRIED.

MILLER—HOOVER.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Henrietta, by the undersigned, Nov. 2, 1873, Mr. John W. Miller, of Pattonville, Pa., to Miss Nancy Hoover of Henrietta, Pa.

S. A. Moore.

DIED.

SANGER.—In the Beaver Creek Congregation, Rockingham Co., Va., October 18, 1873, of typhoid billious fever, after a short illness, our much beloved sister Rebecca F. consort of Bro. Samuel F. Sanger and daughter of Eld. Daniel Thomas, dec'd, aged 26 years and 1 day. She leaves a sorrowing husband, 1 child, mother, brothers and sisters and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss, which we hope is her great gain. She bore her affliction with patience and christian fortitude, and spoke of her home and said the separation would not be long. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. Solomon Garber and others, from Rev 14: 12, 13.

S. N. Wine

SKILES.—In the Middlefork Congregation, Clinton Co., Ind., Sept 18, 1873, our much beloved sister Lydia, wife of

Bro. John Skiles, formerly of Augusta Co., Va., aged 65 years, 8 months and 13 days.

She lived with her husband 47 years, less 4 days, and had been a faithful member of the church 45 years, and 25 days, had 8 children, 6 living; 40 grand children, 35 living; and 2 great-grand children, living. The loss of our departed sister is sensibly felt by all who knew her. Her seat has hardly ever been vacant in the meetings. She was truly a mother in Israel, always ready and willing to administer to the needy; to say the least in her death the church has lost a faithful and lively member, the afflicted neighbors and friends an often visitor, the children a cheerful mother, and the husband an affectionate wife. Funeral services by Elders Isaac Billheimer and Isaac Cripe.

JOHN N. CRIPE.

EVANS.—In the limits of Lower Cumberland Church, York Co., Pa., Oct. 22, '73, of old age sister Catharine Evans, aged 80 years and 3 days.

An only daughter with whom she lived, remained to mourn her loss. She survived her husband twenty years, and lived and died a faithful sister. Religious exercises by the Brethren. Text, "I go to prepare a place for you."

Please refer to second obituary No. 41, for further information.

A. BEELMAN.

ZELLERS. - In the Clarion Congregation, Clarion Co., Pa., Oct. 23, '73, our beloved brother John Zellers. He was born in Switzerland, July 18, 1775, making him, at the time of his death, 98 years, 3 months and 14 days. Funeral occasion improved by the writer from Romans 4 : 7-8, to a very large and attentive congregation.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

J. S. FLORY.

GREELY, Colorado, Oct. 26, 1873.

I first wrote from Cincinnati, Ohio, which city we left on the 22nd at 6 p. m., arrived at St. Louis next morning at 9 o'clock, crossed the Mississippi river, waited about an hour and a half and then set out for Omaha on the north Mo. St. Jo and Council Bluff R. R., where we arrived next day, the 24th, at ten o'clock. The bustle and confusion at Omaha is greater on the arrival and departure of trains than any point we have ever been in our travels. All baggage is transferred from the east side of the river to the west by the Transfer Company. No baggage is checked farther than to Omaha, so it has all to be reached at that point. The baggage collected by the arrival of some four to six trains, is all transferred at once. When the unloading commences, it is a busy time of hunting baggage of all descriptions out of the heavy laden cars, others taking it up and crying out at the top of their voices the number of the check. Along, a long counter or banister is a crowd of eager watchers with checks in hand, when their number is called, they cry out, "here" or "yes," then, others re-check it, and it is loaded on the waiting train. I was necessarily compelled to stand at the bar for over one hour before I got sight of my baggage. Policemen have a busy time keeping order amid such a hubbub of confusion. Finally the last piece of baggage comes out and soon we hear "All aboard." We then enter a car where we are lucky in getting seats for our party soon after the arrival. There are some peculiarities connected with traveling by rail across the plains not to be found elsewhere. One is the laying in of provisions for the trip, owing to the exorbitant charges for the necessaries of life at the eating stations. The cars were crowded and it seemed as if every one, like ourselves, had their children with them. Boxes and baskets of provisions, rolls of blankets, pots, cups, and other things too tedious to mention were crowded under the seats over head and in the aisle so that it was difficult to pass. At meal time there was a general picnic in the car, making of coffee and tea, running to and fro for water, crying of children, scolding by somebody, and a general hubbub was the order, and never the exception. Taking all in all, we got along remarkably well. At night several inches of snow fell, next day the 25th was a cold day. At 1 p. m., we arrived at Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, left at 2 : 25 on the Denver Road for this place, where we arrived at 5 : 30 p. m. In the waiting room of the depot found a good warm stove where we left our family, and sallied out in quest of quarters, found a house to suit us for rent, took it, ordered a cook stove from a hardware store to be put up immediately, thence to the coal yard and ordered a load of coal, had our baggage taken to our house soon, and in one hour and a half had our family around our own stove and the cooks at work, and by the time supper was announced, had laid in a supply of commissary stores, furniture &c., &c. All could do ample justice to the meal prepared for all were in excellent health and fine spirits. A good night's rest followed and here we are to day settled down in this beautiful town in this far off territory. Thus in less than a week we have come from amid the mountains of the Alleghaney, traveled through six states, one territory, and landed here near the base of the Rocky mountains. Truly this is a fast age. Our journey was indeed a favorable one, all having good health and no loss of anything, having brought all our goods, 1200 pounds through safely, and at a trifling cost. Never did we feel more thankful to God for his kindness and abundant mercies shown to us than now. Truly He has in His long kindness and tender mercy blessed us far beyond our deserving.

Bro. James K. Holsberry whom I mentioned fell in with us at Cincinati, is still with us, is well and hearty and pleased so far with Colorado.

To-day I attended services at the Baptist Church, the discourse was a good one. In a day or two, I shall, no preventing Providence, go down the Platt to Beaver of which more anon. It is a beautiful day, the snow is nearly all gone, except on the mountains, where it is said it lies "eternally."

Direct the Pilgrim and all that write to me, direct to Greely, Weld Co. Colorado.

EPISTOLARY.

A letter to my afflicted sister and all the dear brethren and sisters at a distance. I feel this morning like giving you, through my great weakness, some church news, as I think the church news is always interesting.

In the first place, our Communion meeting was held here on the 11th and 12th of October, in the Brethren's new meetinghouse. We had quite a feast of love together. A number of brethren and sisters from a distance were with us. Our hearts were made to rejoice in the Lord, to see sinners returning and giving their hearts to God while young. Four souls came forward, out of a large crowd, and gave their hands to the minister and their hearts to God. On the Sunday of our communion, they were all baptized but one. One old brother was baptized with the rest of the young ones, aged about 70 years or upwards. In all 6 were baptized, one on the evening of our Lovefeast, and one on Sunday after. Among them was my daughter and her husband, I. C. Joseph Ranger and his wife. Oh, dear brethren and sisters, my heart was made to rejoice to see some of my dear children come and go with me. But then sad to think, some of them stay back while time is so precious and life so uncertain; but dear sisters, we will pray on, and hold out faithful, and I hope the Lord will hear us, and answer our feeble petisions by and by.

Our ministering brethren from a distance were Bros. James Hutchison from Monroe Co., and Wm. Bailey from Raleigh Co. Oh dear brethren and sisters, let us continue in prayer for our laboring brethren who are going forth and discharging their duty so faithfully, in proclaiming the Gospel to a sinful world. My dear afflicted sister, I must tell you how we all felt after our good meeting was over. We had to bid farewell to our much beloved brother J. S. Flory. Yes he preached his farewell sermon last Sabbath, immersed four precious souls, and bade us all farewell for Colorado. He started yesterday, the 20th, with his family. His last words were finally Brethren farewell, farewell sisters, farewell unconverted friends, I hope to meet you all above. He preached a wonderful sermon, the house was crowded and running over, for all could not get in. Yes my dear afflicted sister, I thought of you often and many others of my dear sister, at our good meeting, who are deprived of those privileges that we now enjoy. I thought if only you could be with me at our communion meeting. You know how much we talked of the goodness of God when I was to see you. But pray on sister, I hope the Lord will be with you in all your afflictions, for we know if we are faithful to endure our sufferings and afflictions here, it is for our own good. Then dear sister let us be faithful and soon we shall be released from our trials, troubles, and afflictions here, and hear that welcome voice, "come up higher."

A little more about our good meeting, but not perhaps, exactly in place. There was an election held for a minister and a deacon. We cast our lots and the lot for minister fell on Bro. Samuel Riner and my companion George W. Crouse, and for deacon Bro. Henry Ranger.

My dear brethren and sisters don't forget to pray for us all that the dear brethren may go forth in the discharge of their duty, in tearing down the strongholds of satan, and building up Zion, and that we, the sisters, may be faithful in attending to our duties as the Lord may give us strength; and in trying to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. From your unworthy sister

MAPLE GROVE COMMUNION

This meeting was held on the 1st day of October, at the Meeting-house for the first time. Public preaching commenced near 10 o'clock, to a large congregation. The following ministers were present: J. P. Ebersole, Jacob Garver, Joseph Rittenhouse, J. B. Shoemaker, George Irvin, Gideon Bollinger, bro. Pittinger, Wm. Murray, George Fleck, D. M. Witmer, Henry Killhefner, David Workman, James McMullen, Israel Roop, Bro. Ross, J. B. Mishler, Moses Weaver, Bro. Ellis, John Nicholson, Samuel Garver and a few more.

There was present quite a large number of members and seemed to enjoy themselves well, and better order in the house could not be expected. The good spirit appeared to rule. May the Lord bless all for their good attention.

OWL CREEK COMMUNION.

Was held on the 24th of Oct. Public preaching at 10 o'clock, good congregation and good attention. Evening exercises were well attended and good order in the house, preaching next day at 10 o'clock and in the evening, and the next day, (Sabbath) and evening. Meetings all well attended, except the last, (rained.). Had three meetings in the congregation six miles distant while those at the meeting-house were going on, —in all eight sermons, besides the Communion evening. The following ministers were present: C. Wise, Jos. McMullen, Gideon Bollinger, Wm. Murray, Wm. Sadler, Eli Stoner, James Workman, David Workman, David Ross and four of their own,—had a pleasant time. Some of the Adventist's were present trying to make converts, but so far as we know they failed. They are very strenuous about a fixed day for the Sabbath different from the one recognized throughout the world almost claiming that the mass of the world cannot count seven. They profess to hold to the law but drop the penalty (stoning to death) and when called upon to give thus saith the Lord for their day, they cannot or do not do it. They are a body that claim their existence since 1844, a branch of Millerism. Men generally labor before they rest, and while they claim that we rest first, which cannot be, one must become weary before they can rest, or else they are always in rest. May the Brethren stand fast 'till the Lord gives them their crown, and may a blessing rest upon all that showed respect to God's word and his people.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

THE eloquent and able paper on "Modern Infidelity" by Prof. Christlieb, read before the Evangelical Alliance, is to be published immediately, in a separate volume, by the Harper's, and will contain a portrait and memoir of the author.

JAS. R. OSGOOD & Co., will immediately publish a little book entitled "Sex in Education; or a Fair Chance for the Girls," which will likely make a stir among the advocates of co-education of the sexes. We have never been able to call the attention of our readers to the publications of this old, established publishing house, and their many valuable publications, but we expect to continue to do so in the future. Their editions of the Poets are the finest in the country. The poems of Longfellow, Saxe, Whittier, Lonells, Proctor, &c., &c., we believe are published exclusively by this house. Their Red Line editions of the Poets would form excellent holiday gifts. Those of Longfellow, Saxe, Burns and Proctor have been issued recently. They had issued "Child-life in Poetry" and now as a companion to it give us "Child-life in Prose," by John G. Whittier. They have just issued poems by Edmund Clarence Stedman, the "poet whom poets love." We expect next week to give a notice of Whittier's Pennsylvania Pilgrim, which refers to our people it is said, complimentarily, being from a "friend's" stand-point.

THOSE desirous of forming an acquaintance with the Darwinian Theory can do so best by reading the works of Darwin, and not by the newspaper reports, which are more likely to be a reflection of views taken on the subject by the writer. His works in 6 volumes, published by the Appleton's would be read by a great deal of pleasure and profit by those having a taste for scientific investigation.

WE have "Good News for the Children" this week. "St. Nicholas" the beautiful illustrated magazine for boys and girls has come; and it is brim full of instruction, entertainment and delight for all, from grandpa to the baby. We predict that the 30,000 copies issued will "not go half round," for it is so fine, so beautiful, and the publishers will send this, first, and any succeeding No. for 25 cents. The pictures are beautiful, representing incidents in boy and girl life, natural scenery, animals, birds, &c. We could not tell you all it contains, you must see it. See advertisement.

THE publishers of Scribner's Monthly say, "We intend to publish a Christian Magazine in which there shall be free thought and full expression of the ablest minds. We mean to make Scribner's Monthly the best magazine in the world, and to this end no pains or expense will be spared," and judging from the past, we believe they will make good their promise. The new volume commences with the November number.

OUTLINES OF MEN, WOMEN AND THINGS, by Mrs. Mary Clemmer Ames. (Hurd & Houghton, Pubs.) This book is characterized by the fresh, breezy, agreeable style of its gifted author; and the varied and personal character of its topics will give it special interest to every reader. And from the little bitterness of utterance when anything reminds the author of the late war, we like the tone of the book. We will quote the closing passage of "Indian Summer in Virginia." "After speaking of the scenes on the Antietam battle-field and the dead who sleep in the long trenches there, she says: "Since that September evening what superlative days have trailed their splendors along these mountain sides! They linger still. As I see the great pines on the mountain tops, dip their needles in the ascending sun, I say, 'Another matchless morning! It must be the last!' And when the sun drops down the valley, and its sentinel mountains change from amethyst to amber, and vale and river are flushed with unimagined hues, "Italy cannot more than mate this sunset! But there cannot be another!' Yet the prefect days have merged into weeks, and still the miracle goes on. It is as if Summer—not the impassioned queen whose ensanguined death we watched upon the mountains yonder; but another Summer, serener, softer than the first—smiled in the very face of Winter, brightning the world ere she leaves it forever."

WE are in receipt of some of the finest and best subscription books in the country, from the NATIONAL PUBLISHING Co., Philadelphia, Pa. and we advise all those who are desirous of engaging in a business wherein they can benefit others while they benefit themselves, to write to this company for canvassing books and terms for their "New Family Bible" which is the best and most perfect in the market; Dr. Wm. POETRY.

The Son of Man Came to Seek that which Was Lost.

BY WESLEY.

Oh wonderful love, by Messiah displayed,
In leaving a throne whose effulgence ne'er fades,
But through the long lapse of eternity's years.
Will shine in full grandeur as time disappears.

Foregoing the homage of angels above,
The pure, blest oblation of unsullied love,
Foregoing the worship of all heaven's host,
He came down to seek and save that which was lost.

Oh! words of blest import, they shed a bright ray,
O'er the wanderer's path as he plods his lone way,
Transmitting the light to his weary sad heart,
Inviting him from folly's ways to depart.

Estranged from the circle where prayer's soothing balm,
E'er brought to the turbulent soul a sweet calm;
For down the rough channel of dark unbelief,
He's swept 'till he feels the mad fires of grief.

Now seeking repose from the weight of despair,
Which on his sad heart doth incessantly bear;
He turns his wan gaze to the light that is poured,
Upon the deep gloom by the life-giving word:

And battling with satan through mazes obscure,
He hears the glad message of mercy and power,
Though hell's fiendish legions their fury exhaust,
The Son of Man came to save that which was lost.

Now prone on the ground, and with tear-suffused eyes,
His earnest petition ascends to the skies;
And brings the response from the crimson-stained cross,
The Son of Man come to save that which was lost.

From Calvary's crest issues forth the deep tide,
'Twas oped by the spear penetrating his side;
The vilest by faith in its merit may share,
The exquisite glory of heaven's pure air.

And when on the pinions of faith we behold,
The unrivaled beauties of Zion unfold
We'll praise the high power that purged away our dross,
And brought to His Kingdom the souls that were lost.

UNREST AND REST.

A life very full of God's blessing;
A faith only heaven could keep;
A hope well illuming my daytime;
A love keeping watch while I sleep.

So blessed, yet so tired and weary!
The "many things careful about"—
The toiling and spinning of lilies,
The grasshopper burdens without.

So blessed, yet so hardened to blessings!
So troubled, and anxious and tired,
So grieved at the griefs that have hurt me,
I hasten, dear Lord, to thy side.

A bird tired out with its flying,
Yet longing for higher up sky;
A child wearied out with its crying,
Would yet go to its father and cry.

O Father! thou knowest my weakness,
Thou knowest my sins great and small,
Thou knowest for all of the worry,
The child is worth nothing at all.

I bring thee the tangle; I made it,
The tangle of life, Father, see—
It is knotted and twisted and broken,
Oh, straighten it all out for me!

It has grown far too dark here to fix it,
My poor eyes but ache with the strain;
But perhaps up in glory 'tis lighter,
Oh, straighten it, Father, again!

I know that the night is for resting,
The darkness shows heaven above,
That the "soul that is full loatheth honey,'
The hungry soul bitterness loves.

So help me to rest in the night time,
Though clouds hide my heaven and thee,
And when I can't help it "dear Father,
Dear Father," come help it for me.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

A THRILLING APPEAL TO THE UNCONVERTED.

Prepare to meet thy God. Amos. 4:12.

The words under consideration in the connection they stand, appear to us in the form of a challenge that the Lord God made to the children of Israel. He brought them up under His fostering care, and selected them from out of all other nations and He gave them special privileges by committing to them His Oracles, upheld them and brought them out of bondage from a powerful Kingdom by a high and uplifted hand, in order that they should be a peculiar people to serve Him as the only true and living God. But alas! ALAS! they departed from their Lord and worshipped idols, and done all the abominations the nations have wrought whom the Lord has driven from them. Hence He punished them in various ways in order that they should turn to Him and live, but they proved to be a rebellious stubborn people at that time, wholly given to idolatry, and would not hear the voice of the Lord. He saith, "I have overthrown some of you as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrow, and ye were as a firebrand plucked from the burning, yet have ye not returned unto me." "Therefore this will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." Be ready to withstand judgments and fight against me, if the gods you serve are stronger than I, and let them deliver you when I meet you for destruction. Now let us apply the text, in this sense, to our present time and see in what a sad condition the sinner, I mean the impertinent sinner, stands, while living in disobedience, and rebellion against God. O may the Holy Spirit guide my pen, and indite matter sufficiently important to awaken the unwary, arouse the careless, penetrate the hearts of the unconverted and strike terror into the camp of the wicked, in order to solemnize their every hearts, bring them to conviction that may result in a complete conversion.

My dear friends, consider your condition, the glorious privilege you have. The blessing of the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, is freely offered to you; you are invited to come. The spirit says come. You have an inward monitor, an innate principle received from your Creator, endowed with intelligence and sound reasoning on which the Spirit of God operates. The bride saith come. The Church of God through her faithful ministers, continually calls you to come. And why will you not come? The door of mercy stands open night and day, to welcome a free admittance into the Church of the living God. But notwithstanding all these favors, all this invitation to partake of the inestimable blessings held out before you, you stand in bold defiance and virtually say: I will not come. I appeal to you; bring forth your reasons. Produce your strong arguments. Dare you impeach God with partiality by saying I have not the power? Do you not know that He is no respector of persons? For it is the will of God that all should come to repentance and live. TURN! O turn, for why will you die! Think what the Savior hath done for you. Can it not soften your flinty heart when your thoughts are directed to Gethsemane? The bloody sweat, the agonizing groans, the exceeding sorrow that overwhelmed his pure soul. If that is not enough to pervade your heart to commiseration; then look forward a little to Mount Calvary. See Him there accused as a malefactor, as a disturber of nations, as a violator of the law of God. Scourged, mocked, smitten in the face, spit upon, crowned with thorns, betrayed by His friend, forsaken of His God, raised between heaven and earth in order to die a cursed death. Behold Him crying, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And all these He suffered, to save you and me. O how can you refrain from coming to Jesus. Have you ever, my dear dying friend, seriously reflected on these things? If not, I pray you as a lover of your souls, do so now, remember, I try to impress this important matter upon your minds, when I make this thrilling appeal. Can I make you to understand that every conviction you stifle, and every call you refuse, every invitation you slight, and every opportunity you spurn is adding to your guilt, is signifying that you stand in rebellion to God's laws, defy His holy word, reject His gracious promises and disesteem His Almighty power, and make light of the summons in the words of our text by which He challenges you to meet him. "Prepare to meet thy God." Will you refuse, and from time to time persist in refusing to comply with the condition of salvation, when there is nothing to hinder you? Do you not know that you add daily to your own condemnation and your consequent punishment will be an aggravated one? Stand in awe, O sinner, blush in your disobedience; terror will overwhelm your soul, "when the Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven with all His mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance upon all them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ." Will you be able to stand? Are ye prepared to endure His vengeance? Let this text be heeded in the form of a command. "Prepare to meet thy God."

LEONARD FERRY.

NARROW-MINDED men, who have not a thought beyond the sphere of their own outlook, remind one of the Hindoo maxim. "The snail sees nothing but its own shell, and thinks it the grandest palace in the universe."

WHAT I HAVE BEEN THINKING.

It has been said that society is composed of two classes of persons, the active and the passive. The active are the energetic and enterprising, who work and keep the wheels of progress moving onward, while the passive sit idly by and enjoy the fruit of their labors. If there are any improvements to make or expenses to bear, they either have not the means, or do not seem to feel interested enough to lend a helping hand. Such persons could be very well dispensed with. I think it is the duty of every member of society to cast in their mite and show a good will. If they cannot do much, they can, at least, encourage others and try to prove that they appreciate the benefits that flow from their labors.

In society of a worldly or temporal nature, it does not make so much difference, but when it comes to a society of a spiritual nature, the church, we cannot find room for the passive class. This is a hive that cannot afford to keep drones, we want all workers. If we are not pressing forward, we are going backward,—we cannot stand still. These things have been very forcibly brought to my mind of late, and I determined to take up my pen and write a few of my thoughts on the subject. If we would see the Church thrive and prosper, we must be up and doing, there is no time to sit down and fold our hands. It is true, we cannot all preach, neither would it be profitable, there are many other ways in which we can be doing good and helping to spread the Gospel and enlarge the borders of Christ's Kingdom. There is no true and sincere member of the Church but what desires to see others brought to the knowledge of the truth, and it is their bounden duty, by example and precept, to encourage others to join in with the overtures of mercy, not for the mere purpose of enlarging the church, but from a desire that others may enjoy that future happiness which is promised to those who love and serve God. A hearty love to God and man will create such a desire in the heart of every Christian.

The Brethren are very zealous in teaching and observing the Church ordinances, which I believe is all right, but may we not neglect some command about as plain, and equally as binding as the Church ordinances, for instance the command "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" When the Savior says go, does He not mean it? Are the Brethren as strenuous about that command and as zealous in obeying it as they are some others? We believe there is but one true Church, and that it has been in existence ever since Christ founded it, but there is only a very small part of the world that hears the Gospel preached in its primitive purity.

Let us look at other denominations and see what they are doing. They are very zealous in spreading their doctrines far and wide, they spare no pains and make use of all the means they can command, and compass land and sea to make proselytes to their faith. Let us notice the Roman Catholics. They are to be seen in every land and country, their churches, schools and colleges can be seen in almost every city and town. Many of our brethren can remember well when and where the Mormans first took their rise, what an insignificant little band, and how hated and despised they were when they left the East and took up their abode in the far West, but now they are sending missionaries to foreign lands and making converts even in the islands of the ocean.

In looking at other denominations, we condemn their pomp, fashion and style of architecture as not in accordance with the humble teachings of the Savior, and rightly too, but ought we not to feel condemned when we see them spend so much money for show, and we do not spend more for the spreading of the Gospel? Have the Brethren ever sent a missionary to foreign lands? But some will say, charity should commence at home, we have many living in heathen darkness in our own land and country which is all very true, but is there as much as could and should be done at home? There are many calls but few responding to those calls, what will be the excuse in the day of judgment for not more fully obeying this command? It cannot be poverty. I am not much acquainted with the Brethren outside of the bounds of the church I live in, and was not brought up in the faith, but I learn there are many wealthy brethren, and as they are so zealous in contending for the faith, ought they not spend a little more of this world's goods to help to propogate the true doctrines of the Scripture? We know we have no abiding city here, then why should we lay up treasure here? As we do not spend money in adorning ourselves and following the vain amusements of this world, it gives us a chance to lay up wealth which may be a temptation to make an idol of. Complaints are coming from almost every quarter that pride is creeping into the Church, that our young members do not conform to the order of the Brethren, which is lamentable enough as pride is an abomination in the sight of the Lord, but may it not be possible that some of our older ones who have lived all their lives in conformity to the order of the Church as far as dress is concerned, and in consequence of not spending unnecessarily, have become wealthy. I say might it not be possible for them gradually to set their hearts and affections on their property and thus make an idol of it, which is as much abhorred in the sight of the Lord as pride? There is danger of their forgetting that it is the Lord's and that he has lent it to them and will expect it back again with usury, not in the form of dollars and cents, but in the form of souls, redeemed from sin and misery.

I have said that the Brethren condemn the style of architecture displayed in the building of churches by other denominations, if we build our churches plain ought we not to build the more of them? I have sometimes been led to believe from the actions of some brethren when they have met to arrange such matters as the building of a church, that they look at it from a temporal standpoint of view a little too much, they seem to forget that it is giving to the Lord, and their conversation on that subject sounds more like some worldly enterprise which they are rather forced into against their will, than like humble Christians, building a house for the worship of God.

I have noticed that the Brethren will contend very earnestly for the faith, in the way of argument, both publicly and in private conversation, and sometimes I have noticed when it became necessary to contribute a few cents or dollars for the upbuilding of that faith, some of those same brethren were not quite so ready to aid the cause. For instance, when brethren will say their chief aim and whole desire is for the honor and glory of God and the prosperity of Zion, and when they are solicited to assist in building a church or holding a communion, they are not able to give a cent towards the former and very little to the latter, or sometimes when ministering brethren go on a mission of labor and love to other churches and labor with them in word and doctrine, helping to build them up in the most holy faith, and some of the active members knowing their pecuniary circumstances, and that they have families to support, feel it their duty to bear their traveling expenses or allow them some slight remuneration for their time, then it is that the passive ones do not feel that their services are needed nor that they have any duty to perform. A few dollars spent that way will often do a great deal of good, and it is one of the ways of spending money for Jesus. I believe there are many ministering brethren who are fully able and willing to declare the whole council of God, who could do much good by travelling and preaching if their families did not need the labor of their hands.

I notice that when a minister comes from a distance and is noted for being a good speaker, how the brethren and sisters all turn out to hear him, and some who are not very often seen at our regular appointments come then. Then would it not be wisdom in us, and is it not our duty to God and our fellow-creatures to keep them at the work the church has set them apart for, and can we spend our surplus money in any better or nobler cause than sending missionaries out in all the world, scattering the pure seeds of the Gospel, and building churches for the worship of that God whom we believe we are the true worshipers of.

One more thought and I will close. When I read the reports of communions from the different churches, I learn that some of those communions are attended by a greater number of ministers than is necessary to hold the meeting, and I always read that they had a good meeting and all enjoyed themselves well, why should they not? It is about as near Heaven as we can get on earth when Christians meet to worship God and practice the ordinances of his house, it is a foretaste of Heaven and it is no wonder they like to be together, but we are not promised Heaven upon earth, we are to bear trials, crosses and separations here, besides there is a great deal of work to do when we look around and see the broad fields that are ready for the laborer and know that they are few. We feel as though some of those ministers could do more good by scattering out and preaching the Word to many who have never had an opportunity to hear the truth, and who would gladly accept of it if it was presented to them.

And now, brother Brumbaugh, if these few thoughts are worthy of a place in the PILGRIM, please insert them, if not, throw them in your waste basket and you will oblige me.

From your sister,

THE PAST COMPARED WITH THE PRESENT.

In the primitive days of Christianity, so great was the persecution of believers that none but those who were real disciples of Christ, or sincere inquirers, came often to their assemblies, and it was easy to distinguish between those that served God, and those who served Him not. But after Constantine embraced Christianity, and it became popular, worldly-minded men took upon them the name of Christians, and became rulers in the Church; and the abomination that maketh desolate was set up, the true humble disciples of Christ were then under the necessity to take the apostles advice; and come out from among them and be separate, in order to be the sons and daughters of the Almighty. And said the Apostle, "What fellowship hath light with darkness, or Christ with Belial?" But these faithful ones were despised and persecuted, and considered as enemies to the cause and church of God, by the body of professing Christians, yet they were the remoant spoken of in Rev. 12: 17; who kept the commandments of God and had the faith of Jesus Christ. The offerings and services of unrenewed and worldly men are not acceptable unto God as may be seen in the case of Cain and the Israelites in the time of Isaiah the prophet. Read Isaiah 1: 11: "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: When ye come to appear before me; who hath required this at your hand to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well."

The apostle who recommended to his brethren not to forsake the assembling of themselves together, also besought them by the mercies of God to present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God which was their reasonable service. The state of the Pharisees, notwithstanding their zeal for God, and their regular sacrifices, fasting, and prayers, our Savior declared to be worse than the publicans and harlots. And whenever a religion becomes fashionable, and is no longer a cross to put it on, the proud, the covetous, and the worldly will embrace it, attend meetings and conform to its precepts and regulations, for it is a reputable thing, and adds to their respectability. Oh there is the danger.

May the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ open the eyes of His dear children to see the necessity of looking to Him continually, and keeping an eye single that their bodies may be full of light.

Our Lord has said, "Ye shall know the tree by its fruits: men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles." And all those who go under a high profession of religion attend meetings, and draw near to the Lord, with their mouth, and honor Him with their lips, while their hearts are far from Him, and filled with covetousness, will find themselves rejected in that day, for Christ will say to them: "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." But to those who endeavor with a sincere heart, to serve the Lord and watch against every evil thought, words, and action, praying for daily bread, that their souls may be nourished up unto eternal life He will say "come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. But professors in this day, it would seem, believe that they can serve God and mammon, love the world and follow their own wills, and be accepted of God, by going to meeting and attending to some of the outward services of religion. Our blessed Redeemer said, "I come not to my own will, but the will of Him that sent me." "And unless a man deny himself, take up his cross and follow me, he cannot be my disciple." And said the apostle, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." The Lord has always had a few faithful ones in every age. When our Savior appeared among men, there was a Simeon, an Anna, a Nathaniel, with others, no doubt, but these few did not save the Jewish people from that destruction, which their wickedness and hardness of heart so justly merited. I often said, O that their calamities and destruction might prove a warning to professors of religion, to the end of time, and lead them to cleave to the ways of true righteousness, that they may escape the miseries that come upon them. O that people would see the necessity there is to turn from blind guides, who will neither enter the true kingdom, nor let others enter, and go to the Lord to be taught of Him, whose inviting language is "son or daughter give me thy heart;" and if we are so truly wise as to give our hearts to Him, He will sit as a refiner of silver and purify them as gold. And then, and not till then will the offerings of Judah be pleasant unto the Lord.

A PILGRIM.

HOW THE CHURCH SHOULD SPEND HER MONEY.

Dear brethren of the Pilgrim: As I notice that you request an article on the proper expenditure of money, I will now try to say something on that subject. That there are many ways in which money can be spent to the honor and glory of God is evident. It is so spent when it is bestowed upon the needy, in order that their physical wants may be supplied. This every true child of God knows, and therefore needs no comment. But there are other ways that seem not to be trodden by the brethren, that ought to enlist our serious attention, and if well considered may be found that money can be spent to the further extension of the Gospel.

Now brethren, I am going to tople over on the missionary subject. That it is both proper and right that the Gospel should be preached to every creature, I only need to refer to the commission as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew, Mark, and Luke. We notice that the command was given by the Lord Jesus, that his Gospel should be preached to every creature. But those whom he had chosen was unlearned and ignorant, and hence they were to tarry at Jerusalem until they were imbued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49. And when the day of pentecost was fully come they were with one accord in one place.—Acts 2d chapter. Then follows the miraculous gift of the Holy Ghost and the imparting of tongues, and then unlearned as they formerly were, they were now properly qualified to do what the Lord commanded them. The epithet was formerly applied of being poor unlearned fisherman, but God chose this little band of unlearned men to confound the things that was mighty, and so complete was their education that three thousand men of the nations of the earth, were added to Christ's mystical body, the Church, in one day.

Now brethren, we notice that the gift of tongues was essentially necessary to the furtherance of the Gospel while in its infancy, and being thus necessary, it was incorporated by the Lord Jesus Himself. I contend that the Church should not lose any of her qualifying principles, or those things which the Lord gave her, as means to be used for her extension. Jesus said, "Of those which thou gavest to me, I have lost none save the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled," the Master lost nothing that was gived to him, but everything answered its end to the fulfilling of the Scripture. Jesus is our exemple, hence it follows that we should not lose anything that was given us. The gift of tongues is not the son of perdition, but the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost is the comforter that is to lead us into all truth. It leads us into the gift of tongues. The injunction of the apostle is that we lose none of these things; hence if everything must be preserved, the gift of tongues should be retained. But when we look around, we discover that the Church, to a certain extent, has lost this power, and the consequence is, she is losing her power that God gave unto her for successfully preaching the Gospel to every creature. The church is hemmed within the shores of America. Over eighteen hundred years have passed away; the gift of tongues annihilated, and most of the nations are sitting in darkness. The apostle would say, "Beloved these things ought not so to be." Right here, brethren, is a chance to spend your money with profit. The command was to tarry until they were imbued with power. There was a house at Jerusalem that was built and dedicated unto the Lord, and the people worshipped there and also received instruction, and I think that it was at this house that the unlearned fishermen were educated and received a proper knowledge of the oriental languages in order that they might preach the Gospel to every creature. Let the church build houses and employ teachers in order that she may again restore that which is lost. Let the church select brethren that are young and full of faith, and let them remain at these places long enough to obtain a proper knowledge of the nations to whom they are to go. Then let them go and preach, saying, "Repent and believe the Gospel." Let us hold up to the nations Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Let them teach them the observance of all things, and this might be done by sending a few to every nation, and then we can have the assurance that we are doing what the Lord commanded us to do.

JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

OUR BARKS ARE SAILING

We are taught in divine truth, that this earth is not our home, and that we are destined for another clime. Our barks are launched upon the waters of time, and in order to become sailors, it is necessary that we should have a good captain, or one who is amply qualified, to instruct us, for when we enter the cooling stream, it is then we covenant with our captain to be true and faithful to the end. There it is that we commence to sail, and Christian sailors, remember that the waves of temptation, may round us roll; grasp firmly the rudder, and keep your little ship in the true channel, lest she be dashed against the rocks. Fervent prayer, is requisite to our becoming proficient, in the cause we espouse, keeping in remembrance that each of us must steer our own barks, and also, see that we give a helping hand to those who have not yet set sail, under the banner of King Jesus.

Vain world, under whose banner are you sailing? I fear some are holding to the rudder of worldly fame, whilst others are holding to the root of evil, (money), and others to pride, &c. And, behold, you are all under the banner of the devil, for Christ saith, "They that are not for me, are against me." So you can plainly see that there are but two ways to sail, to misery, or to eternal happiness. Then in the name of Jesus, I beseech you, sail in His bark.

THURMAN ON THE PASSOVER REVIEWED: ERROR EXPOSED.

But Thurman says, "If they had not intended to eat the passover before the following night, this their reason for not going into the judgment hall, was no reason at all; for one thus defiled had only to be unclean until evening, for he could wash his flesh with water, and when the sun is down he shall be clean, and shall afterwards eat of the holy things." Now we admit the correctness of this law; but we object to his mode of reasoning from it. The Jews were unavoidably liable to become unclean, no difference how careful they might be. To touch a dead body, or even to touch anything that was unclean, caused uncleanness; and for this reason there was a provision in the law, whereby persons thus defiled might become clean again. But had the Jews gone into the judgment hall in the case referred to, their uncleanness would have been willful and without excuse, and not through weakness or accident, and consequently we do not believe their uncleanness could have been removed by the conditions of this law. He also says: "If our Lord came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill, he must have necessarily ate of that passover as enjoined by the law; and if the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do, he could have instituted no new passover of his own." Now did he not institute Feet-washing and the Communion at the same time he instituted this supper? They certainly were something new, and if he had power to institute these ordinances, why, with the same power, could he not institute the Lord's Supper? As to Christ's fulfilling the law, we believe he had fulfilled this part of the law three times since his baptism; and if three times fulfilling the law was not sufficient we would like to know how many more times would have been sufficient. Concerning the day of the week on which Christ was crucified, and the time he was to remain in the grave, he says, "We are then compelled either to admit that the crucifixion was on Thursday or deny the word of Christ—'So shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth?'" The seeming difference between our Lord's prediction of the time he was to be in the grave, and the time during which his body was interred, is very easily obviated, by considering that it was the custom of the orientals to reckon any part of a day of twenty-four hours for a whole day; and to say a thing happened after three days and three nights, was the same as to say that it happened after three days, or on the third day. Compare Esther 4: 19 with 5: 1. Christ being entombed in the closing of Friday, this was counted a day and a night; and Saturday was another day and night; and he rose from the grave on Sunday morning, which was counted another day and night, which, according to the oriental mode of reckoning time, would be three days and three nights. In this, our ex-brother betrays a very limited knowledge of the oriental customs, for the great pretentions he has made to science and literature; but, according to his own words, he is not one of the wise prophets. Speaking concerning the time of Christ's second coming, to judge the world in righteousness, he says, "The wise shall understand," and we all know that he did not understand, for Christ failed to come when he said he would, therefore with his own words he condemns himself as a foolish prophet.

He also says, in speaking concerning the time when the Lord's Supper should be kept, "Those who observe it at any other time than that upon which the passover was to be kept, do appear to charge the apostles with having been remiss in their duty, and then assume the authority to supply their omission." Now, if Christ, the great head of the Church, did not keep this supper on the night the Jews were to eat the passover, as we have clearly shown, why should his followers be restricted to that night in keeping this ordinance? He does not say, "Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season from year to year, like the passover was to be kept;" but he says, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. 11: 26. Hence there is no restriction concerning the time of keeping this supper, but as often as it is done in order, it certainly will be acceptable.

With a few words to those brethren who have been giving ear to this false prophet, and have ceased to celebrate the sufferings and death of their adorable Redeemer, I will bring my article to a close. Under the law of Moses any person that was clean, and was not on a journey, and forbare to keep the passover, was to be cut off from among his people, Num. 9: 13; and Christ said; "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." John 6: 23. Now "If every transgression and disobedience" under the law, "received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape," says Paul, "if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. 2: 2-3. We will therefore say with Paul, "Brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses, contrary to the doctrine which ye have received, and avoid them." Some may think this is taking advantage of Thurman, since he has been excluded from the Brethren, but remember his works have not been excluded, and it is to them we are replying.

ATTENDING MEETINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

It was on a very warm Saturday evening in June, when I arrived, in company with my brother and a cousin, in the great secondary metropolis of America.

I knew there were brethren living in the city, and I knew where some of them lived, but there were some doubtful apprehensions in my mind in regard to the propriety of forcing ourselves upon their hospitalities, having had no customary notices sent ahead—negleetful and behind the "times" in that, so my cousin and I decided to lodge at the "Merchants Hotel." My brother promised to meet us there in the morning and accompany us attending meetings during the day. Upon arriving at the hotel we were apparently very kindly received,—no brethren could have appeared more courteous to us. We soon made a bargain to lodge with them at $3.00 per day apiece. During the evening several finely dressed-to-bacco chewing gentleman talked a good deal of Quakerism to us. They asked us a great many questions. We finally told them that our school teachers used to tell us to be careful not to ask strangers too many questions, and they finally told us they were clothing, boot, shoe &c., merchants, that it was their way of getting acquainted with merchants when they stopped at the "Hotel," and that they always regarded the Quakers as an honest, upright people.

The next morning we went to Crown St. to the Brethren's Sunday School and preaching. There were quite a number of ministering brethren present, had a good meeting I thought,—did not see any of the brethren asleep. In the afternoon my brother told me there was an appointment made for the people to gather to worship God in another street at 2 o'clock, where the celebrated Dr. Chambers would preach, so we went. The house was substantial, large and grand. The preacher was young and adorned with shining, costly attire. The sermon was stiff and cold, I thought. After he was through with his vanity it was announced by the sexton that Chambers was improving in health, and expected to be with his flock in October—that he had sent a letter to be read to his congregation, which was done. In it he made some very touching appeals to his congregation, imploring them to do their duty to one another and to God. I thought the reading of the letter was the best part of the exercise. It was well seasoned with very appropriate Scripture. There was good order, I did not hear any noise except that of the speakers and the musicians during the whole time of the exercises, neither did I see anybody asleep. My brother had often told me if I would go with him to meeting in the city he would give me five dollars for every person I saw asleep during the exercises, also five dollars for every male resident of the city who kept his hat on at any time in the house. As sleeping in meeting in the Brotherhood is indulged in at some places to an alarming extent, I made it part of my business to ascertain the cause of it by going to assemblies called saints and kept awake, and then try to reduce it or banish it altogether from among the Brethren—at least where I am called to preach. I have however, since concluded to make some allowance to those of my brethren who indulge which I would not make to those Philadelphians, and will allow each one that indulges to discover the reason of that allowance himself. If he can't find it let him wake up and keep awake during meeting. In the evening my brother told us there was another place where it was said the Gospel would be preached by a man eighty years of age, named Dr. Wadsworth. I wondered whether, by reason of age his memory and other abilities (if ever he had any) had not become very much impaired. I felt as curious to see and hear the strange (to me) new old famous, so considered preacher as Zaccheus was to see Jesus. We soon found our way to the place appointed. The door-keeper asked us whether we wished to go in. We answered yes, then he bade us follow him. After going half lengthwise through the aisle he opened a door that led to one of the pews under the gallery, the ceiling of which we nearly touched, or rather our heads nearly reached the ceiling while standing upright. After being seated I ventured a half suspicious, half fearful glance at the grand and spacious apartment and at the congregation. The seats were already nearly all comfortably filled, though it was full half an hour before the appointed hour to commence the exercises. I was surprised to see nobody staring at me or anybody else. There seemed to be a solemn silence except an occasional touch of a fan against a fancy ribbon. Feeling myself at least out of imminent danger, I began to scrutinize things nearer at home. In front of me were some Hymn Books in a shelf made for the porpose. I picked up one of the books and looking at the title page saw the words "The Reformed Dutch Church of North America." I read some of the "preface" and found that the compiler complained of their predecessors quite similarly to the manner in which brother Quinter complained of the predecessors of our present Hymn Book. I wondered whether ever our Brotherhood would in all ages of time to come, reform to such an extent and in the same direction as the one I was looking at must have done. I wondered whether reform and pride really and necessarily always had to go together. While my mind was still busily engaged upon these things, the celebrated pastor made his appearance in the dazzling pulpit. His outer garments were coarse and loosely thrown around his body and hanging on his arms, giving him air and appearance much like the pictures of the ancient prophets as we see them in the Bible. His manner seemed to me both natural and simple throughout. His prayer was warm and plaintive as that of a little child, though it seemed to me he asked God to do more than I had ever heard any man ask of Him at one time in so many words. The subject of his discourse to the congregation was the conviction and conversion of sinners to God. He handled it with such a spirit of power that I could not see how any person under the sound of his voice could continue in the indulgence of known sin, until I remembered the passage "Not all that say unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but they that do the will of my Father which is in heaven." The sermon was so well jointed, so well composed and seasoned with warmth and many other things essentially necessary to accomplish the work for which it was designed that no one could help but say, "Lord, Lord."

I receded from the threshold of this great modern semi-heathenish temple full of gods, with convictions and apprehensions of the awful judgments of God against spiritual wickedness in high places and against whosoever "maketh a lie." But thanks be to God the only wise and beneficient preserver of all that is worthy, there is a way to escape the wrath of an offended God. There is an avenue that leads to eternal bliss at His right hand. J. B. GARVER.

LIVING SPRINGS.

Go among the mountains, and you will see that it is the living spring that flows away down through the vale. And where it flows, the grass is green, and the flowers bloom, and the cattle drink, and the children linger to dip the foot, and hear the sweet song of the little rills. Yet the spring itself is in no way exhausted by all this. Exhausted? It never will be. It is fed by the drawing sun, by the condensing mountains, by the bountiful clouds, by the great and wide sea. When the sea is emty, and the heavens are dry, the little fountains of the earth will yield no more. Well up without stint, ye springs sent into valleys which run among the hills. Give to every beast of the field, let even the wild asses quench their thirst. Go murmuring into rills of laughter, and rolling into rivers of song, and never be afraid or give one backward look. You have the sun above you, and the hills around you, and the great oceans of the earth behind you, all holding themselves bound and ready to serve you, if you continue to serve others by your flow. Christians let your inner life fed and nourished by the indwelling word of Christ, have not ostentatious, or self-confident, or noisy, but yet natural, continuous outflow and expression.—The Christian

"CHRIST LIVETH IN ME."

This no doubt, seems a strange assertion to those unacquainted with the faith and experience of the Christian. Strange and bold as it may seem, it is confirmed by the life of every real Christain, who no longer lives the old life of sin, but the new life of holiness. In Christ, there was undecried inexhaustive intensive life, which he had the power to impart.

Christ lives in the Christian as the origin of his life. Apart from Him there can be no spiritual life. In Him as believers we live and move and have our being. Only a semblance of life and that for a brief period, can be maintianed apart from Christ. "As the branch cannot bear fruit except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except it abide in me" I have seen the pruner go forth in the spring-time to cut off the crooked and useless branches. For a time they seemed to maintain their life, the buds opened into blossoms, and leaves began to appear; but, long before the heat of summer was over, they had withered completely. They had no continueing life when severed from the tree.

Christ lives in the Christian as the result of his faith. The life I live in the flesh, says the apostle, I live by faith in the Son of God. Christ lives in us as we reflect His image. Often the child bears the likeness of a parent. So the Christian bears about the marks of the Lord Jesus. Christ lives in us as the father lives in the child who carries on the business and executes the plans of his father. Christ lives in us as the teacher lives in his pupil. The teacher has a moulding influence, and the pupil reflects the life of his master. Christ lives in us, when we do his will and execute his plans, truly and grandas he lived in the apostles. We can see how he lived in their preaching and in their work in the churches they established, upon and in the great missionary enterprises upon which they embarked. He lives in us by the abiding Comforter, the Holy Spirit; for if a man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. If Christ live not in you, you have no life that is abiding. If He does, let the glory of your life be manifested. "Herein is my father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

Youth's Department.

GREAT MEN.

Do you want to be a great man? many boys think they would like to be great men when grown up, and sometimes they amuse themselves by fancying all the wonderful things they will do some day. But perhaps it would be better to think how you can become a great man, than what you would do if you were one.

If you want to be a very tall man and perhaps sometimes you wish that too, how can it be? You will not all at once spring into a tall man. You can only be a tall man if now, while you are a boy, you grow a little every day. So small indeed the difference each day between the growth if you become a tall man, and that of the boy who becomes only a short man that we cannot see you grow any more than the other; yet it is only by this little difference each day and each year that you can become tall instead of short.

In the same way, if you want to be a great and good man, do not expect that something will, by and by, come upon you all at once and make you so. There are instances no doubt in which some unexpected event has changed the whole course of a man's life, or so wrought upon his mind as to bring out powers and feelings which had been hidden and unused before. But for the most part, great men grow out of great boys, and if you wish to be one, you will be much more likely to attain it by being a great and good boy, than by dreaming of great men, and neglecting what you can do now. I do not mean that you must do wonderful things, for such may not come in your path, but do every thing, great or small in a great and noble spirit; not great in pride but great in humility, great in love great in faith and hope.

Shall I tell you what the greatest man I ever knew did, when he was a boy? He was at school with his eldest brother; and this brother had done something wrong, and the master was going to flog him. Charles did not beg that his brother might be forgiven, for he knew that the charge was just and the punishment certain. He went up to the master and said: Give me the flogging instead, I am stronger than my brother and can bear it better." Do you wonder that such a noble boy became a noble man? You will easily believe me when I tell You that when he was a man he was ever ready to sympathize with every one in distress, and to help them, whether by adding to his hard work or by taking from his earnings more largely than he could well spare. All who knew him loved him, and all who even looked at him seemed to catch something of his happiness if not of his benevolence.

When I said if you want to be a tall man you must grow every day, did not you think to yourself, "But I cannot grow by trying, I cannot make myself grow?" Do not forget that this is just as true of becoming a great man in any sense in which it is worth while to be great. You cannot begin to be a good boy of yourself, as you will find if you try. But then, though you cannot be sure of being tall, for you do not know whether it is God's will to make you so, you can be quite sure of being the best sort of great man, that is a good man, if you really wish it; for God has promised to give the Holy Spirit to those that ask him.

God's Holy Spirit within you will make you good and great. How? By making you like Christ. What is it that most touches our hearts in the anecdote of the little boy I have told you about? Is it not that his love to his brother was something like Christ's love. Christ loved us so much that he died on our behalf. The more by God's Spirit's help we see Christ's wonderful love, the more we shall love him, and the more we shall become like him.—New York Observer.

CULTIVATE A PURE EXPRESSION

Every word that falls from the lips, of mothers and sisters especially, should be pure and concise, and simple; not pearls, such as fall from the lips of a princess, but sweet, good words, that little children can gather without fears of soil or after shame, or blame, or any regrets to pain thro' all their life.

Children should be taught the use of good, strong, expressive words—words that mean exactly what they should express in their proper places.

If a child, or young person, has a loose or flung-together way of stringing words when endeavoring to say something, he should be made to try again and see if he can do no better.

It is painful to listen to many girls talk. They begin with "my goodnes!" and interlard it with "oh!" and "sakes alive!" and "so sweet!" and "so queenly!" and so many phrases, that one is tempted to believe that they have no training at all, or else their mothers were very foolish women. There is nothing more disgusting than the twaddle of ill-bred girls; one is prvoked often into taking a paper and reading, and letting them ripple and gurgle on like brooks that flow, they know not whither.

My heart warms with love for sensible girls and pure boys; and after all, if your girls and boys are not thus, I fear that it is not our fault that this great truth rests in the hands of the women of our land, If we have a noble, useful purpose of life we shall infuse the right spirit in those around us.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

THE DEDICATION.

While living in the world it seems so natural to take after its ways, especially in calling things after their names. When we were yet a boy we remember quite distinctly of church dedications (not among the Brethren) but cannot so well remember of what the ceremony consisted. Dedications are still rife in the world but have undergone many modifications, so much so, that the original definition has become almost obsolete and a new one given, which means to beg enough money to cancel the debt.

Some time ago, we attended the dedication of a very stylish Presbyterian Church and according to the nature of things, we expected to see considerable ceremony and hear largely about dedicating the wooden temple to the worship of God, but in this we were disappointed, as there was as little as possible said about these things, and not a word said about money. This we thought to be one of the "new departures." The exercises were commenced as on ordinary occasions when an invited minister or lecturer entertined the audience from the following text: "John Knox." We shall not now tell our readers where this text stands, hoping that you have read your Bible sufficiently to know that it is not in it. He labored much harder to show that John Knox was the Lion of the Reformation, than that Jesus was the Christ, and we have no doubt that some, after the discourse, thought he was the greater of the two. We were pleased with the dedication but tho't the "Knox" a grand fizzle. But this is not what we intended to talk about. We only introduced this to show that our dedication was after a different style. Eld. Grabill Myers opened the discourse and instead of taking for his text "Alexander Mack" he took the "Commission." We confess we thought it a little odd for the occasion but he insisted upon it that he was right, and before he was through showed that building church houses formed quite a prominent part in the "Go ye." Our good brother always was full of the "commission" and we suppose it will "go" with him to the grave, as even now, limping along with a crutch on each side the holy fire burns within, as bright'y as ever. He that endureth unto the end shall obtain the crown.

To be a little more explicit, the brethren of James Creek thought it prudent to build a Church house at Coffee Run, and accordingly got to work and by the first of November it was completed. The house was intended for ordinary meetings and we suppose, for that purpose, will be large enough, although it proved too small on last Sabbath. It is substantially, plainly, and neatly built, and will answer the purpose of worshiping God in very well. Friday Nov. 7, was the time made choice of to hold the first meeting. The following ministers were present during the meeting: Grabill Myers, G. W. Brumbaugh, J. R. Lane, J. L. Wineland, and S. A Moore. Bro. Jno. Wise was to be with us, but for some cause, failed to come. The weather part of the time was unfavorable and the nights quite dark, yet the attendance was on an average, good, and we feel that we had a very good meeting and brethren who labored so faithfully for us, deserve and have our thanks.

SHALL THEY BE REPORTED.?

During our late meeting, a number of subjects were discussed in our private "sociables." Among others, was, "Is a brother justifiable in allowing an othes brother or sister to defraud him designedly, of his just dues without reporting him to the Church?" There is a principle connected with this question that is worthy of the consideration of every brother and sister. On this subject we have two positive precepts which are sufficiently broad to cover every case. "Thou shalt not defraud." "Thou shalt owe no man." Every debt, no matter how small, voluntarily made, must be met, and every one that refuses to do so is an open violator of both the moral and divine law. Through a false charity, we sometimes forgive debts rather than go to any trouble or cause hard feelings even where the debtor refuses to ask forgivness and is able to pay. This may seem good on the part of the creditor but how is it with the debtor, and is it right so to do.?

To illustrate the idea more clearly our "chief speaker" related a case Some years ago he sold a brother an ax. In a year after, the brother moved west and took the ax along but never paid for it. "Now says he, I did not care for the loss but did I do my brother justice by allowing him to take the unpaid ax without reproving him of defrauding, and may I not have laid in his way a temptation which may lead him to greater violations?" * This fairly illustrates the moral of the case. By such charity we not only allow him to commit sin but to remain in sin, as no brother or any body else can stand justified in the sight of God when he is a defrauder or refuses to pay his honest debts. There is possibly, only one way that a debt can remain unpaid and the debtor be justified. That is when the creditor is willing to forgive at the request of the debtor. This annuls the obligation, and both parties may be justified. Of course, inability is an exception always understood.

We are under moral and religious obligations to our brethren and if we cover over their obligations by forgiving debts unasked for and uninformed of it, we become partakers of their sins.

Therefore we very justly conclude that all claiming to be Christians are under sacred obligations to pay their honest debts if it is in their power to do so.

If any neglect or refuse to do so, it is the creditors duty to inform them of their faults, and if they refuse to render satisfaction, they should then be reported to the church.

If this rule was rigidly carried out, it might save the good reputation the Brethren once had, but is now measurably being lost. Brethren and sisters, think of these things and do not allow our good name to come into disrepute by neglecting that which is your duty to do. Remember, it was the small foxes that spoiled the vines, and small sins may destroy your reputation and finally lead to ruin.

* If this comes to the notice of a brother who has been, for a long time, chopping wood with an unpaid ax, it will be well for him to reflect and turn from the evil of his way, lest he might be tempted to commit a similar sin by not paying for the Pilgrim.

MINISTERIAL VISIT.

During our Coffee Run meetings we had the pleasure of welcoming into our Sanctum our genial brother and colaborer S. A. Moore. After passing the usual greetings looking around and transacting a little business it was moved to get aboard the train and run down to Huntingdon to see how the new Pilgrim Office was getting along. But on being informed that the train was an hour behind time we agreed to feel disappointed and return to the office again. On entering we were agreeably surprised in meeting our esteemed brother J. F. Oller of Waynesboro' Pa. After this meeting our disappointment vanished and were made to feel that all things work together for good. After spending a short but pleasant season together we supped and again started for the train to attend the appointment at Coffee Run. We tried to prevail on Bro. Oller to stop off with us but he said "I go a fishing" and a fishing he did go. Bro. Oller during his stay told us some good things and some that were strange very strange. The good fills our souls with gladness, the strange makes us weep.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

Our brethren and sisters will please not give their names and money for the Pilgrim, to agents of doubtful reputation and who are known, not to pay their debts. Through this neglect, we have lost seriously and have a few agents for the present year who have sent us large lists, but as yet paid nothing. We hope however, they will still be in time and pay us before the year closes. If not, we shall report to the church to which they belong and demand an investigation. If any of our agents have gathered names from different churches and it is inconvenient for them to collect it, let us know, giving the names and addres and we will try and have it collected ourselves, or still better, those who have not yet paid and it is inconvenient to pay the agent, enclose it in a letter and send it to us.

NOTICE.

All those who have subscribed for the Pilgrim under brother George Mourer and have not yet paid, will please hand it to brother Daniel Miller or send it directly to us and much oblige.

Isaac Ulery. All righs, names marked paid as reported.

Bro. Samuel Ream, of Yankton, Decotah Territory, says they have been living there for four years and did not hear a sermon preached until two weeks ago. After all this fast, he got a good dose of spirit, but water baptism had nothing to do with being born again. The subject was the "new birth." He also informs us that since last Spring, about 2,000 Germans from Russia settled in their neighborhood.

The Altoona Church Again.—We had thought this enterprise a failure, but from report of Committee in present issue it will be seen that the prospects are getting better and looks towards success. We hope that the appeal made to Middle District of Pa., will not be in vain.

In the obituary of Eld J. F. Robrer by a wrong figure, his age was made 93 instead of 63 as it should have been.

OUR CONDITIONS.

We are being asked whether our conditions for the coming year will be the same as the present year. In the main, we expect them to be the same, but would say to those who have the means, pay us at the time of subscribing or at the first part of the year. If all that can, will do this, it will enable us to meet our obligations and give a little more time to those who cannot pay cash or at the beginning of the year. All those who have not paid for the present year will be expected to pay before the beginning of the new year. 3t.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want a good active agent, to solicit subscribers for the Pilgrim, in every Church in the brotherhood. If there are any that feel to labor for us and are not supplied with prospectus and Almanac will please write us and we will send by return mail. Remember, the Pilgrim for the coming year will be enlarged and every subscriber will receive the Pilgrim Almanac, handsomely gotten up, containing a "Ministerial List," giving post-office, county and State, with other valuable information FREE. 5t.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

REPORT.

TO THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PA.

We the undersigned Committee appointed by said District to view sites for a Church house in the City of Altoona, having this day viewed a number of sites, have found several lots, that we think quite suitable for the erecting of a house for worship, and have made a disposition as follows: The Brethren of Altoona not being able to ascertain what could be raised in consequence of no definite site, we have appointed a purchasing and Building Committee with instructions to make the effort to raise sufficient funds in connection with that subscribed by the District, to purchase one of the sites and build. But if they fail to raise the amount or a sufficient portion to make it safe, to hold the note over until next District meeting. This committee is to report to Bro. Geo. Brumbaugh, Grafton, Huntingdon Co., Pa., who will give publicity and specify a time when the donations shall be paid.

Committee. { SAMUEL COX. CONRAD IMLER. R. MCFARLAND.

In our investigations we made it a point to learn the condition of this flourishing city and the feelings of the Brethren residing there, and also the feelings of a number of the citizens, and there seems to be a very great anxiety to have a house built for the worship of God. In connection with this feeling and the solemn injunction, "Go ye into all the world, teach all nations, &c," we make a strong appeal to this District to come to the aid of the churches here so that they may be able to build a house suitable for the worship of God, and that souls may be taught the knowledge of the Lord as revealed in His word. In so doing, you will meet the approbation of God, and discharge a duty that is obligatory on us all. We believe that the Lord has a people here. The sympathies for the Brethren are strong by those who have a slight knowledge of the humble doctrines of Jesus, and the cry from Macedonia (Altoona) is, come and help us. May the God of all grace move upon the hearts of all His dear children to give of abundance to this noble work which may be made effectual in saving perishing souls.

Committee: { JOHN W. BRUMBAUGH JOHN SPANOGLE, PETER S. MYERS.

Dear Brother:—I notice in the PILGRIM that you solicit church news from all parts of the Brotherhood. I thought I would give a little from this part of God's moral vineyard, if you think it worthy of room in your valuable paper.

Our Communion meeting came off according to appointment, which was on the 4th and 5th of October. We had a very pleasant time, good preaching and good order all through the meeting. The ministering brethren from a distance were Bros. John Beuchly, from Marshall Co., Iowa, Benjamin Ellis, Butler Co., Iowa, Wm. Robey, Pierce Co., Wisconsin, and brother Whetstone from Winona Co., of this State. They all held forth the truth with power, as it is recorded by Christ and his holy apostles, and we cannot help but believe that there was some good impressions made on quite a number and we hope lasty ones too, at least I for one was made to rejoice that the Lord still was with his people, for I believe that he was there with us, for he has promised where two or three are gathered together in his name, that he will be in their midst. What better promise do we want? So brethren and sisters, let us all try to hold out faithful unto the end, for if we do, we have the promise of everlasting life, a palm of victory in our hands and a crown of glory on our heads. Glorious promise.

OUR VISIT TO ALTOONA.

Took train at McVeytown, Friday evening for Altoona City. Arrived there about 8 o'clock, met brethren John W. Brumbaugh, John Spanogle and others at the depot awaiting our arrival, when we were soon taken in charge by the brethren. Bro. Spanogle and myself were taken by brother Robert McFarland, where we were kindly cared for. Next morning, met, brother Imler joining us. We were then conducted to the various sites for a meeting-house, found one at each end of the city that would be well suited for that purpose, on the south side of the P. R R; the west part of the city being the business part principally, consulted with several parties relative to the matter, but in consequence of the city and vicinity not having done anything, there could be nothing definite done. We then returned to Bro. McFarland's, held a consultation and decided as per report. Bro. Spanogle took 2 o'clock train for home. In the evening there was an appointment at the Winebrenarian Church, congregation small but very attentive. Lodged with brother McFarland. Sabbath morning, met in the Methodist Church. Bro. Brumbaugh addressed a very attentive audience. Also met there in the evening—house by this time filled, and some outside. After services closed, one came forward requesting to be taken into the church by baptism. Lodged with sister Cauffman, lately from Spring Run.

Now brethren, from present indications, there is every prospect for doing much good at that place, and no means should be left untried nor effort slackened until the end is accomplished, viz. that the Brethren may stand on their own soil where they may be unfettered to proclaim the word of the Lord. Shall the people of Altoona stand up in the judgment and condemn us, not for want of doctrine nor of dollars, but for want of a will to give them? Nay, but shall say, "Blessed is the cheerful giver." P. S. MYERS.

McVeytown, Pa,

FROM THE MAPLE GROVE CONGREGATION, OHIO.

Inasmuch as I have not seen any report or news from our arm of the church, Maple Grove, Ashland Co., Ohio, and as you still solicit news from the churches, I will try to write a few lines for your valuable paper.

We are still trying to labor for the advancement of the good cause. We built an addition to our meeting-house so as to make it convenient for holding Lovefeasts in, and held the first Lovefeast in it on the first of October which was very interesting, quite a number of speakers and members from the neighboring churches, and also from a distance were with us. Very good order during the exercises and good attention to the preaching. It was a feast of love long to be remembered.

I have taken the PILGRIM for the last two years, and have again subscribed for 1874, still feel to give it our support and welcome it to our home. May God's choicest blessings rest upon it that it may be the means of doing much good is the prayer of your brother in the Lord.

ISAAC L. RUDY.

Nankin, Ohio.

Dear Editor:—Will you please say to the Iowa brethren, there is a call for them to preach in Deleware Co. Iowa. I think that there might be much good done here. The people are anxious to hear the Brethren preach. I have heard some of them say "if they live up to the Bible we will join in with them."

This is as peacable a neighorhood as I ever lived in. I live one and a quarter miles west of Davenport on the St Paul R. Road. Delhi is my station. There is a good school house near by that can be had to hold preaching in. Delhi is my post office. Please brethren come and preach for us. ELMIRA ARMSTRONG.

Delhi, Iowa.

NOTICE.—There will be a series of meetings held in the Maple Grove Meeting-house, Ashland Co., Ohio, commencing January 3, '74, and perhaps will close on the evening of the 11th. A general invitation is extended to ministering brethren and others to be with us. By order of the church. WM. SADLER.

Explanation Wanted.

Some brother will please give an explanation through the PILGRIM, on the 9th verse 3d chapter of the first Epistle General of John. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin because he is born of God," more particularly on the phrase, "for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin." J. H. F.

MARRIED.

HAGERMAN—LONG.—By Eld. David Long, Nov. 5, '73, at the residence of Bro. A. Shafer, near St. James' College, Washington Co., Md., Wm. Hagerman and sister Susan Long.

DIED.

EARLY.—In the Honey Creek branch, Allen Co., Ohio, Oct. 22nd, 1873. our esteemed brother Jacob Early, Jr., leaving many friends, an affectionate companion, a sister, and five children to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate father.

The subject of this notice was only sick 7 days and shortly before his departure he called for the Elders who anointed him according to the instruction of the apostle James. Funeral sermon by the brethren, from 2 Kings 20: 1 to a large collection of brethren and friends. DANIEL BROWEN

KEEVER.—In the Monticello Church, White Co., Ind., Oct. 29, 1873, sister Sarah, wife of of brother Thomas Keever, and daughter of Bro. John D. and sister Nancy Dilling, aged 24 years, 9 mos. and 21 days.

She left a sorrowing husband, a deacon, and two little daughters, with many friends and relatives to mourn her, as we would feel untimely death, yet knowing that our Father is all-wise and knows what is for our good and His glory, we say His will be done, having this assurance that we need not sorrow as those that have no hope, for our dear sister, though young in years gave evidence in all her department, that the love of Christ was shed abroad in her heart, and that her life was hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear, she will also appear with Him in glory. Having this assurance given us by her christian example, we all feel to comfort ourselves with these words. Her mortal remains were laid in the silent grave on the 31st, in the grave-yard at our Meetinghouse according to her desire, when the occasion was improved by the brethren from John 14: 19.

PRICE.—Also in same neighborhood, Ellen Price, wife of Joseph Price, a member of the Methodist church, after a long seige of suffering, on the 4th day of November, 1873.

On the 9th her funeral was largely attended, and the congregation addressed by Rev. Neal, pastor in charge of that order, assisted by one of his brethren Rodger, and the writer J. S SNOWBERGER.

SHIVELY.—Okaw Church, Piatt Co., Ill., Sept. 1873, Elisabeth Ann wife of Bro. David D. Shively, and daughter of Bro. Martin and sister Susannah Neher, aged 31 years, 4 mos. and 18 days.

She was received into the Church at the age of 16 years, kept house with her now bereaved husband 11 years, 10 mos. and 28 days. Had four children 3 sons and 1 daughter, all living. Funeral services by the brethren. ISAAC ULERY.

MILLER.—Near South English, in the English River Church District, Keokuk Co., Iowa, Nov. 5th, 1873, sister Polly consort of Bro. George Miller, aged 67 years, 1 mo. and 12 days. Funeral services improved by the brethren from the latter part of the 15th chapter of 1st Cor.

The subject of the above was a member of the Church for forty-five years, the mother of 15 children some of whom are members of the Church of the Brethren. Others have gone before their mother to try the realities of the other world. She was not confined to her bed long and bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. And we hope she will reap the reward of all faithful in the mansions of eternal bliss. And may God in mercy enable the old brother, husband of the deceased, (who is a cripple, not being able to walk without a crutch), to hold out faithful in the good cause of serving Christ, and all the children come into the fold of the Lord, so that all might meet in that better land. B. F. F,

(Companion and Visitor please copy.)

MILLER.—In the Manor Church, near Funkstown, Md., Oct. 31, Catharine, wife of Bro. J. G. Miller, aged 64 years, 10 mos. and 4 days.

Her remains were followed to the place of burial, at Beaver Creek, by a large number of sympathizing friends. The occasion was improved from Rev. 4: 13, by Eld. D. Long and Andrew Cost.

BYRD.—In Fighlmantown, Washington Co., Md., Oct. 30, Sarah, wife of Samuel Byrd, and daughter of sister E. Palmer, aged 23 years and 5 mos. Funeral services by Bro. Daniel Stouffer, from Gal. 11: 7. D. E. W.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

We have, for several weeks past, in this department of the Pilgrim, regularly announced the forthcoming and recent books of the publishing house of J. B. Lippincott, & Co., of Philadelphia, with their assurance that we would be permitted to give our readers a more extended notice of the books as published and received. We have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of their first favor, a pamphlet of 74 pages, 8 vo. containing three stories—"Kitty's Choice a story of Berrytime," "Leonard Heath's Fortune" and Ballacchi Brothers," by Rebecca Harding Davis. As we do not devote our time to this kind of reading, and do not advise our readers to do so, we leave the details of the merits of this pamphlet if it has any, to those who have the time and the disposition so to do.

We promised last week to give a notice of "Whittier's Pennsylvania Pilgrim." We have received a handsomely bound copy of the book from the publishers Jno. R. Osgood & Co., Boston, and have read it with much pleasure. Whittier's Poems are never dull, but this story of "Pastinas" the founder of the "Friends" in Pennsylvania has many gems of beauty and truth. This appropriate to the season:—

"And when the miracle of Autumn came,
And all the woods with many colored flame
Of splendor, making Summer's greenness tame,

"Burned, unconsumed, a voice without a sound
Spake to him from each kindled bush around,
And made the strange, new landscape holy ground."

As of truth we quote:—

Enough to know that through the winter's frost
And Summer's heat, no seed of truth is lost,
And every duty pays at last its cost."

The book contains several poems besides. In "The Robin" we read:

"Prayers of love like rain-drops fall,
Tears of pity are cooling dew,
And dear to the heart of our Lord are all
Who suffer like Him in the good they do."

We will supply our patrons with the work at the retail price $1.50. For sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa.

"The Light in the East," is the title of a very valuable religious work just published by the National Publishing Co., of Philadelphia. It issued for the purpose of meeting the want so often expressed in all parts of the country, of a comprehensive religious work suited to all classes and free from sectarian bias. This book supplies that want, and will be found especially valuable to parents and others wishing to instruct the young in the truths of religion, and in this age of skepticism and materialism, it is fortunate that a book so popular in its character, should be devoted, so thoroughly, to the plain, old-fashioned truths of Christianity. The work comprises one large volume of 850 pages, illustrated with over 200 fine engravings. Starting out with the Life of Christ, the work of Rev. John Fleetwood, the book covers an extent of ground, and a range of subjects which make it a valuable history of Christianity from the earliest times Then follows Lives of the Apostles and Holy Women; Old Testament Characters, Patriarchs and Reformers; a history of the Jews from the earliest times to the beginning of the present century; a comprehensive account of the various religious sects, and a chronological table; the whole containing a vast amount of entertaining and instructive reading which will be eagerly read by all.

The book is sold only by subscription and agents are wanted in every county.

We will interest ourselves in securing agencies for any of our friends or patrons for this work, for Dr. William Smith's Bible History, or one of the best Family Bibles we have ever met with; all published by the National Publishing Company. Their Bible contains many valuable features not found in other Bibles. It is illustrated with over 500 fine engravings, many of them by the celebrated artist Dore. It contains a History of all the existing Religious Denominations. And a valuable feature is its containing the complete Dictionary of the Bible of Dr. Wm. Smith, conceded to be the most comprehensive and valuable ever published. The illustrations show accurately the manners and customs of the period. Biblical Antiquities and Scenery, Natural History, &c. Everything usually contained in first-class family Bibles is contained in this with the addition of the above and many other valuable features besides. It is the cheapest and most finely executed Bible in the market. It is sold by subscription and we are very sure that no one could engage in a better business than selling this book. So let some one in every Church, secure the agency and go to work.

Trine Immersion

TRACED

TO THE APOSTLES.

The Second Edition is now ready for delivery. The work has been carefully revised, corrected and enlarged.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, postpaid, from this office on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00. 25 copies, $4.50; 50 copies, $8.50; 100 copies, $16.00.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $1.00; Four copies, $3.25. Sent post paid. Address, J. H. Moore. Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill.

CHOOSE YE.

BY WESLEY.

What will ye, that Heaven imparting,
Misfortune's dark purposes thwarting,
Adversity's presence averting,
May life's azure firmament gild?
Shall gold overburden thy coffers
With all it enchantingly offers—
The transient delight it discovers,
On which, fondest hopes, men may build?

Shall fame lift her canopy o'er thee,
And bear her proud banner before thee,
Whilst millions, in wonder adore thee,
And hail the triumphant approach,
Or power thy progress attending
Whilst low at her shrine thou art bending,
And wide thy dominions extending,
Illumine thy path by her touch?

Shall wisdom pour out all her treasures
And strive to redouble thy pleasures,
As time by his hasty step, measures
The years that roll joyously round?
Now pending thy weak indecision,
Awaiting thy earnest petition,
Behold the great Moral Physician
Whose power confesses no bound.

Shall earth's potent glories combining,
To thee their professions assigning,
Disperse every shade of repining
That e'er may thy happiness mar?
Or wilt thou, earth's riches ignoring,
Thy manifold frailties deploring,
Is Him all thy homage restoring,
Return from thy wandring afar?

Oh choose ye the way of salvation
And dwell in blest anticipation
Of joining the great congregation,
Who bow at the feet of the King,
Then sit by the cross of thy Savior
Enjoying the bliss of His favor,
Assured that thy soul shall forever,
The triumphs of Calvary sing.

Oh then shalt thou joyfully sever,
All sinful attachments forever,
And sit by the banks of the river,
Awaiting thy final release.
And when the loud trumpet is sounding,
The unrenewed millions confounding
Thy soul shall, with ecstacy bounding,
Enjoy the sweet solace of peace.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE LUST OF THE EYE.

Paul says truthfully, "I had not known lust except the law had said thou shalt not covet. The law came to him, and in it he discovered his true condition, and through it he was enabled to escape from the consequences of that condition. When telling what lust is, he says "Lust, when it is conceived, bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Therefore in order to obtain (not a genuine conception of lust), but a genuine knowledge of it, the mind must commence its investigations at a correct idea of the death to which the apostle refers, and thus by a deductive method of reasoning comes to the knowledge which Paul had of lust. The first indistinct, unfinished or mystified conception anybody can or ever could have of law, is the circumstance of God saying unto Adam, thou shalt not eat thereof. "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," together with Adam's proceedings and the result to whatever extent it may be developed in the mind.

It is clearly understood that a mere physical death does not embrace the whole province of that result. Furthermore it is clear that a natural or physical death is only a symbol of the real, only a visible or conceivable sign of the invisible and inconceivable. This signature remains stamped upon all flesh, upon those who are under the promise and upon those who are not; but on the former it has no power, while it remains in full force upon the latter. It is therefore an eternal death which the sinner suffers, an eternal destruction which the word death, in a significant sense, bridges or overleaps. In commencing the proposed destruction we soon discover that sin is the cause of death, that lust is the cause of sin, and that the devil is, as he always has been, and always will be, the cause of lust, and consequently the primary cause of all evil.

Sin commences to exist at the conception of lust, and at death—the commencement of eternal misery—it is finished. Sin is a perverted consciousness of disobedience, a condition of the soul which defies the members of the body to work righteousness, a condition which insists upon, and prevails in the transgression of known wholesome laws. All the relations and manifestations which surround it have been briefly summed up in the sentence, "Sin is the transgression of law." It is produced or bro't forth by lust which is a perversion of the senses. The apostle embraces all lust in the language, "lust of the eye and the lust of the flesh." It covers all the ground infected with the dreadful poison. The "lust of the eye" is an unrestrained or ungoverned, injudicious use of the sense of sight. It commences where the appropriate use of this very delicate yet powerful organ ends. This organ is an important avenue leading to the very center of the soul. It is by or through it that much of truth and error, of light and darkness, of sin and righteousness, etc., is forever stamped upon the soul. God has created it for a wise purpose as is the case with all that He has made; a judicious use of it answers that purpose, but a perversion of it thwarts God's design respecting it. Eyes were made to see with, but not to see everything that comes before them in an ungoverned or unrestrained manner. They are very delicate,—they take on physical and spiritual disease readily, when exposed to violations of the laws concerning them, but they are pure and powerful when directed into wholesome paths. As wine, or the elements of which it is composed, was made to make man's face to shine and his heart glad, though if he abuses it a disastrous effect is produced, so God has created light to assist his creatures in coming unto Him. Through the eye which he has created, by the help of light, which he has also created, impressions of material objects are made upon the mind, and thro' these, by the help of other physical organs, impressions are made on the soul which result in the birth of a new creature in Christ Jesus. A correct and practical knowledge of experience is providence in mortals, though man is not the inventor or founder of that providence or God, but he becomes a son of God by permission, by redemption at the first dawn of the knowledge of God in him.

It is by such experience thus a healthy condition of the whole physical organization is suggested and preserved, or injured and destroyed temporally; and likewise the immaterial nature—structure or soul eternally destroyed or saved. When "lust of the eye" is conceived then sin is brought forth in some form. Lust of the eye is an inordinate desire to see anything. This foul affection prevails to an alarming degree at the present day in the world, at two principle points—namely, in short, at the two extremes which hold a position close on either side of the mean which is righteousness, a proper desire to see the things that God designed to be seen. There can be no particular or general rules given to govern the use of the eye, other than those given in the Gospel. Different circumstances must determine or fix different points at which lust begins. Therefore "let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." Let every man have not "a mind of his own" but the "mind of Christ," and so use the sense of sight to glorify God.

Mt. Union, Pa.

ONLY TWO.

Only two ways. One broad, the other narrow; one leads to destruction, the other to life; many go by the one, few by the other. Which is your way?

Only two sorts of people. Many sorts in man's opinion,—many societies, classes, sects, and denominations. Only two in God's sight,—the righteous and the wicked, the wheat and the chaff, the living and the dead. Which are you?

Only two deaths—the death of the righteous, and the death of the wicked. Which do you think you will die? Which do you wish to die? Which would it be if you were to die this moment?

Only two sides at the day of judgment—the right hand and the left. Only these two. Those on the right hand will be blessed—"Come, ye blessed of my Father," Those on the left will be cursed—"Depart ye cursed." All must appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, to receive the things done in the body, whether good or bad. What word shall be spoken to you? On which side of the throne will you stand?—Selected.

Love of freedom is a prison flower and we do not learn the full value of liberty until we are imprisoned. The true nature of spring is not appreciated until winter is upon us, and the best May songs are written by the fireside.

Witty sayings are as easily lost as the pearls slipping off a broken string but a word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

THE ADVENT OF CHRIST.

Glory and excellency characterizes itself in the mind of Jehovah when the sublime decree sounded through his self-existant word, "Let us make man in our own image." Beautiful indeed was man as he came from the heart of God, endowed with power and dominion to subdue the earth and rule over every other creature, the Lord God had made upon the earth. Noble as the work of creation is, wonderful is the construction of the earth, the foundation thereof is unfathomable, the corner stone thereof is incomprehensible. It caused the morning stars to sing together, and all the sons of God to shout for joy. If the formation of the earth caused the heavens to sing with joy and shouting, the existence of man, "fearfully and wonderfully made," whom God has pronounced "very good," are called marvelous works, both events highly significant, and nobly displayed the wisdom and power of God. But the incarnation of God's only Son, through whom the world was made, with His redemptive power to restore fallen humanity, far exceeds those events, and compared with them, almost sink into insignificance. Hence then, what appellations shall we use? Where will we find adjectives to describe the greatness, the sublimity and the wondrous mystery in the appearing of "God manifest in the flesh?" Did God really appear incarnate? If the word of Inspiration is to be credited, we can answer this question, if not our efforts are useless, and man's existence is deplorable.

The angel Gabriel, when he visited Mary, the virgin espoused to Joseph, said, "Fear not, for thou hast found favor with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus, He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest." Mary said, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" The angel replied, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God." More than seven centuries previous, Isaiah propheisied, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and his government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called 'Wonderful Counselor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Titles alone belonging to Divinity. Inexpressibly wonderful and unexpectedly lowly did the King of glory appear in this world. The people were not prepared for the reception of such a potent personage, whose appearance caused devils to tremble and wicked men to fear. But holy men and women rejoiced that a celestial inhabitant was called down from Heaven, bringing the gladsome news to the humble shepherds, followed suddenly by a multitude of the heavenly host's, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the Highest, and on earth, peace, good will to men." Prodigies, astonishing even the heathens, bespeaks the greatness of Him who finally is to subdue the world and establish an everlasting Kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and to whom all the angels of God pay homage. Yet He came as a little babe in the poor despised little town of Bethlehem. Behold Him, the Son of God, there wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger, "because there was no room for them in the inn." Oh what wondrous condescension! No space for the convenience of such a crisis. That world spoken into existence by that word now made flesh has not the attention that the least of his creatures have. And why so little noticed by man? So little honored, and yet according to the flesh, descended from the royal house and lineage of David. O, the wonderful works of God! The depths of his wisdom! Who can fathom it? "For he shall grow up as a tender plant, and a root out of dry ground."

The objects of His appearance magnify the event exceedingly. As there are many, we hardly know where to begin in noting the most important to do justice to His Divine attributes. Man, through the magnitude, wisdom, and foreknowledge of God, was made good, and for the purpose that he, as his Creator, should receive honor and worship from him, and that man on his part should enjoy him forever. But alas, alas! Man fell, through the deception of an opposite power then in existence. He forfeited his right to the tree of life, and lost his divine image and near relationship to his Maker; death was written on his brow, corruption on his body, estrangement upon his soul, enmity on his mind, and eternal punishment on his existence. But God, who is rich in mercy and boundless in love, and whose breath brought life and a living soul into his inanimate body, interposed in behalf of poor fallen man. Hence the Triune God sends his Son, the second person of the Trinity. He willingly disrobed himself of his divine glory, left the enjoyments of the angels, the personal presence of his Father, assumed mortality, came down to this mundane sphere, the theatre of his sufferings, the scene of his trials, and the drama of his death. And for what? Surely to ransom fallible man. O, wondrous love! Amazing condescension! Depth of mercy, exceeding greatness of sympathetic benevolence!

"Amazing pity brought him down.
Redeeming love secures his crown;
In meekness he obedience wrought,
That rose him to the throne of God."

Great was the work of God in the creation of man, but greater in the redemption. And the greatest will be in the general restoration, when the babe of Bethlehem, the wonderful God-man, Jesus Christ, shall have put down all rule, subdued all authority unto himself, and shall have destroyed the last enemy, death, and then shall deliver his Kingdom unto his Father, that God may be all in all.

The wonderful appearance of Jesus Christ manifest in the flesh, is an event highly important, because he was the only efficient sacrifice to atone for the sins of the world. He was selected and slain in the mind of Jehovah before the foundation of the world. Yea, "through the determinate council and foreknowledge of God," he was chosen as the expiatory sacrifice to fully atone Adam's sin transmitted to the children of men for four thousand years. Truly an event fraught with many important objects. The fulfillment of many prophecies was necessarily one grand design in order to establish the Bible as a truth and a revelation from God, also vindicate God in his purposes, and fully demonstrate his veracity. Eve, the mother and progenitress of all the human race, looked for the fulfillment of this promise in her first born son, though she was dreadfully disappointed. Abraham, the father of all the faithful, saw his day, spiritually, and rejoiced in it. Patriarchs and pious kings anticipated his coming with gladness, yet died without the sight. Generations were born and died, and others succeeded them and also passed away without seeing their long expected Messiah. Holy men saw glorious visions of the beauty and the blessings of the Great Redeemer's Kingdom. Daniel was favored with the time of his advent, Micah with the place of his birth, but holy Simeon, who long waited for the consolation of Israel, in his old age was permitted to see the Holy Child in its infancy. O, the old man's soul was filled with gladness, and his heart with overflowing joy. "Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." O, imagine his greatness; the excitement produced! Elizabeth's son, the forerunner of Jesus, leaped with joy, being filled with the Holy Ghost before he was born. The humble shepherds in the plains of Bethlehem, left their flocks to the mercy of the wild beasts, to behold the wonderful sight. Angels winged their flight through the immensity of space to mingle in the joys of earth, crying, "Glory to God in the Highest, upon earth, peace and good will to men." A peculiar star, prognosticating his birth, drew wise men from the far off East to worship the King of the Jews, and bring precious spices as presents, in order to make their worship more effectual. This noble event is the precursor of many noble objects already accomplished; but the most important are yet to come. The revelation of the will of God to man,—the means of grace therein contained, the glad tidings of man's salvation, in which life and immortality is brought to light, the sufferings of the Son of God and the atonement through his death, the deliverance of the captives from the regions of the dead, the glorious and triumphant resorrection of his body from the grave, by which he secures man's resurrection, and changes from corruption to incorruption, and from mortality to immortality; whereby the grave is swallowed up in victory, and death hath lost its sting. In his prophetic office, he became the leader of his people and the commander of all nations, in humility he exemplified the way to Heaven; mercy, benevolence, goodness, forbearance, holiness, justice, submission, obedience, and love to God and man characterized his life while tabernacling here in the flesh. In his high priestly office, he became himself the victim for the expiation of guilt, not his own, but for the human family, and by his own blood entered into the (sanctum sanctorum) holiest of all once into Heaven itself, to appear in the presence of God for us. He ascended up to Heaven, led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. He is sitting now upon his mediatorial throne at the right hand of God as a merciful, compassionate High Priest, as an advocate in order to intercede for saints and sinners.

But Oh, what is yet to be accomplished! Behold he shall come again, not as a babe rocked in a manger, but as a mighty conqueror in the power of his magesty; crowned as King of Kings and Lord of Lord's. The resurrection of the saints, the destruction of his enemies, the conversion of the Jews, the reign with the saints a thousand years here upon the earth, the final destruction of the devil and his emissaries, the general resurrection and subsequent judgment, the casting of the wicked into the lake of fire, and the reception of the blessed into his Kingdom, are things yet to be accomplished, and truly worthy of a God. Hence we see him humble in his birth, derided in his humanity, rejected in his teachings, mocked in his sufferings, rejoiced in his death, denied in his resurrection, discredited in his ascension, opposed in his second coming, and finally, when he shall reign as King in his royal camp, and to the Holy City with his saints, he will be surrounded by an army of eoemies, "the number of whom is as the sand of the sea." ALAS, alas! Fire shall fall down from God out of Heaven to devour them. To sum up the whole matter in referenee to the importance, magnitude and sublimity of the Savior's advent into this world, we humbly acknowledge it to be inexpressible, and beyond human comprehension.

Brethren and sisters, and all God-fearing friends, let us appreciate the exalted scene and profit thereby, in order that we may become fit subjects to reign with our exalted Savior in his everlasting Kingdom. May God prepare us for that glorious reign is the prayer of your weak servant. Amen, yea, Amen.

THE TEST OF DISCIPLESHIP.

Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock.—Matt. 7: 34.

These words occur in that ever memorable sermon which our Savior delivered upon the Mount. From what we read in the latter part of the 4th chapter of Matthew, we can discover why the Savior went to the mountain. It evidently was that he might have some repose, as his fame was so great, caused by the extraordinary power displayed in his preaching, and also in his ability to heal the people, of all manner of diseases, of which they were afflicted. Repose, was what I apprehend he sought.

His disciples followed Him, and when He arrived at the place contemplated by Him, He seated Himself, and His disciples came to Him, "And He opened His mouth and taught them, saying." The question here obtrudes itself upon us. Whom did He address? His disciples only or the multitude, or some, who, no doubt, followed Him? Were it not for the truth taught in the 28th ver. of this 7th chapter of Matt., and several other verses not so plain, I would not hesitate to say that he taught His disciples only.

But this I am constrained to say, He taught His disciples specifically, and the others present incidentally; for I do not think the multitude were present, and I therefore still think His object in repairing to the mountain was to obtain repose. But as His mission to this earth was to do good, both to the souls and bodies of the human family, He could not let this opportunity pass. Hence it is said, "He opened His mouth," from which flowed some of the most sublime truths, to which the human ear was not accustomed to hear. Well may it be said by those present, that they were "astonished at His doctrine."

In this discourse are contained requirements, which none but those who have covenanted with Christ can attend to. To possess the characteristics named by the Savior in this sermon, in the very commencement, presupposes, that the person must have entered into covenant with Him, and thereby possess, himself or herself, with that superabundant amount of grace, which is only attainable after their baptism, at which period they enter into covenant with God.

Now what are those superlative graces indicated in this sermon? "Poverty of Spirit," "Mourning," no doubt on account of sin. "Meekness," "Hungering and thirsting after righteousness," "Merciful dispositions," "Purity of heart," a disposition to be "peace-makers," a willingness to submit to, "Persecution for righteousness." Amidst of all, to rejoice, and be exceeding glad. Why glad? Because, that thereby, you may let "your light so shine, that others seeing your good works may also glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Hence I conclude the language, or precept at the head of this article, was addressed specifically to the disciples then present, and also all other disciples everywhere to be found, and in all ages past, present, and to come.

What then are the tests of discipleship? This sermon is full of tests, and they all revolve in this one grand and comprehensive test: Do the things I require of thee. In the text before us, you will perceive two things to be required of us: "hearing" and "doing," and neither can be done without, "doing" presupposes that we have "heard." The absence of "doing" does not indicate that we have not "heard." Alas, it is but too frequent that we hear but we do not heed. There lies the difficulty, both as respects the child of God, and those who make no profession.

And indeed the latter are most generally more consistent, than the former. I have often heard the latter say, what is the use of my going to preaching, for I know more now than I practice. Whilst that is no excuse for such, yet it reflects upon many who hear continually and do not. We all have a work to do, whether recognized as the children of God, or of those on whom the wrath of God rests. Let every person then see to it, that they attend to their individual case first, and also assist in promoting the interest of other's. I say, first spiritual and then temporal. Also, as much as in us lies, do good to all men. I am much interested, in having all do the works assigned to us. I mean "the works of the Lord, which we are to abound in." I do not mean those works which have no merit. There are works that God commends and others He condemns, even of those that are highly estimated by some people. We must distinguish between those works. There are those compared to "filthy rags," whilst others will have their reward even the giving of a cup of water to a disciple. And even among those of good works, their is danger of doing. One may be substituted for the other, which would be wrong. Suppose a case: say we were at a Communion Meeting, and becoming convicted of sin, wish to attach ourselves to the Church, but do not have the opportunity to be baptized. But being sincere, the Church wishing to secure our membership, say to us, you may have part with us in partaking of the ordinances if you be baptized hereafter. Would that make it right? Not at all. But such is now allowed by liberal Christianity. Yea, they do not care whether they are baptized or not. Let us then hear and afterwards obey in all things, and all things in their proper order. May the Lord be our helper.

EMANUEL SLIFER.

LOOKING TO JESUS.

The bitter storms of adversity may frown upon us, and we may be made to drink out of sorrow's bitter cup; the home of our childhood may be taken from us ruthlessly and without mercy, but that still small voice that on one occasion spoke to the disciples, on the sea, may whisper "Peace be still." Then while leaning on the words of Jesus we may rejoice with exceeding joy, we have a home in Heaven where our joys are not blighted by sorrow.

Looking far down the ages of time, and beholding our ancient fathers' scourgings, oft our hearts are made to exclaim, it is good for us to be afflicted. Who would not wish to suffer for Jesus' sake? These light afflictions will work out for us a far more exceeding amount of glory. Man with the carnal mind cannot believe these things. When his earthly possessions are taken from him, his all is gone; he hath not the Holy Spirit to tell him he will abide with him, even unto the end of the world. Glorious consolation, the time is coming when our mortality will put on immortality, and death will be swallowed up in victory. Then away to serener climes where joys are unspeakable and full of glory.

Dear friends, for the sake of the One who has died the ignominious death, whose sufferings were greater than any man could endure, turn to Jesus, where true consolation is found. Often do we see contritions humble sigh, and even tears of sorrow fall for living in open rebellion against the One who says, "My yoke is easy, and my burden light."

Come to Jesus then, whatever may befall you. You may then look beyond this vale of tears, for there is room in Heaven for all they that will come. C. H. HAWBECKER.

THE STARLESS CROWN.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Sometimes we read of a supposed starless crown, in heaven, worn by some of the redeemed. Are there such crowns there? Perchance there are or will be. Can they be crowns of glory? Our influence in leading souls to Jesus adds stars to the crown laid up for us. Shall we ever see mothers there with starless crowns? Oh what a though! Not one child in Heaven with them, their influence too much of a worldly nature in life, and the result, in Heaven a starless crown! Fathers too much engrossed in business to let their light shine, much care had they to see their sons set up in the world, and now saved—perhaps—but solemn thought, a starless crown. Brother, shall I meet thee there with a starless crown? Dear sister, shall we ever see thee wearing a crown without a star? God forbid! Work for Jesus, gather the outcast in, plead with sinners, live out your religion in such a way that others may be attracted to the illuminating light, and then in Heaven, a starry crown shall be your lot. How ready, and with what joy angel-fingers fix those stars in your waiting crown, when it is announced another sinner free in Jesus' love, led there by your influence. Oh! the reward we shall reap for our labors of love if those labors are seasoned with an earnest devotion for the cause of our blessed Master. Happy moment that, when death shall be swallowed up in victory, and we shall be carried on the wings of love to the gates of eternal glory. But ah! the joy "unspeakable and full of glory" we there shall experience when we meet in those realms of bliss with dazzling crowns of untold treasures, that shall ever shine in the same blaze with the halo of light that surrounds the throne of God and the Lamb. Not a starless but a STARRY crown may we all have. Amen.

A YEAR'S TROUBLE.

Sometimes I confine the troubles we have to undergo in the course of a year, to a great bundle of fagots, far too large for us to lift. But God does not require us to carry the whole at once. He mercifully unties the bundles, and gives us first one stick which we are able to carry to-day, and then another which we are able to carry to morrow, and so on. This we might easily manage if we would only take the burden appointed for us each day; but we choose to increase our trouble by carrying yesterday's stick over again to day and adding to morrow's burden to our load before we are required to bear it.—Newton.

WISDOM is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE English District of the Lutheran Synod of Ohio has had a disruption, owing to its persistent opposition to secret societies.

THE colored Baptists of Kentucky have organized a General Association for themselves. They are to meet in Paris, Ky., August 14.

A GREAT revival has occurred recently in the Baptist Church at Brownsville, Tenn. Over 150 conversions had taken place at last reports, and the work was still going on.

AT the dedication of a house of worship by the Methodists, in New Jersey, recently, a gentleman gave $10,000. It certainly was liberal in these days of financial panic.

THE Annual meeting of the Disciples of California, was held near Stockton, commencing Oct. 3d, and continued ten days. The meeting was held in a grove about two miles from Stockton, and the people accommodated in barracks or tents erected for that purpose.

—A pilgrimage to Jerusalem, says the Christian Standard is the latest project in this line. The Bishop of Paris is organizing it, and the pilgrims were to leave Marseills about the middle of this month for Alexandria, and thence, via of the Isthsmus of Suez, to the Holy City. From there, excursions are to be made to Bethlehem, Jordan, Jericho, and the Dead Sea, etc, and on the return Samaria, Athens, Sicily and other points will be visited. The duration of the whole will not be far from two months and a half.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE is by many prominent religious periodicals pronounced a great success. It may be by bringing about a moral sociability among professing christians, but further than this we cannot see it. There is but one way that a union of God's people can be effected and that is by building upon the platform of the Gospel. Just so soon as sects are willing to bury their creeds and accept the truths of the Bible, a spiritual union can be brought about and no sooner. Worldly unions may be effected by agreeing to disagree and call each other brethren, but God will not sanction such unions, as it is declared that there is but one Lord, one faith, and one baptism.

A NEW DEPARTURE.—Rev. Robt. Reitzel formerly of the German Reformed Church of New York, was expelled from that body on account of low and immoral habits. A large number of the Congregation went with him when they formed a new order and styled themselves "German Protestants." They then went to work and built a house, which was scarcely finished notil the new reformer began to preach an exceedingly liberal doctrine, some of his sermons being in direct opposition to the teachings of the Bible, and finally, boldly asserted that he did not believe in the existence of God or Jesus Christ, as the Son of God. His congregation then informed him that he must change his manner of preaching or resign.

"On Sunday morning last, during the course of his sermon, he announced that his views had undergone a change, and not believing in Christianity, he did not desire longer to be known as a Christian minister and his connection with the congregation must terminate.

He then joined in with a german element in harmony with his views, organized a Free Thinkers Club and is now their preacher or rather lecturer.

THE Christian Church has had a marvelous success. In a little over a half century it has grown to a membership of nearly six hundred thousand. This success has been largely owing to the diffusion of papers and books. From the beginning, these people have believed in the potency of the press. They have been earnest and aggressive. Already the Christian church supports more than a half-dozen weekly newspapers, perhaps twice as many magazines, juvenile periodicals, etc., beside a first-class Quarterly Review. They have several well endowed colleges, and a half-score of seminaries and schools.

This shows what the Christian church can do in the way of supporting periodicals, and we think if the church of the Brethren had the zeal they ought to have, there would not be so much talk about too many periodicals. We need them all to propagate our doctrine, and we think it is high time that we cease to complain about the cost, and go to work and endeavor to augment their power to accomplish this end. This may be done by a more general diffusion of them among the people. The power of the press should not be overlooked, and surely a church as wealthy as ours, should not complain of two $1.50 weeklies. The idea is preposterous.

A SCHISM.—The Old School Baptists have been having trouble recently on account of some of their prominent men belonging to secret societies. Some time ago a man who belonged to the Odd Fellows died, and the Rev. Mr. Rose, a minister of some prominence in the Church was called upon to perform the funeral services, and at the grave it was discovered that he belonged to the society himself. The brethren would not then allow him to preach the funeral sermon, and the Rev. Correll, who was also present, took his place. This caused considerable trouble, as the Rev. Rose still continued to preach, and a number of the brethren sided with him. Recently they held their association in the country, known as Pigeon Cove this State, and here the matter came up for settlement. After some discussion it was found that the matter could not be satisfactorily adjusted, and the Rev. Rose and two other ministers with those of the laiety who sympathized with them, making in all about thirty, withdrew, and went to Neadmore, some seven miles distant, and there held their Association. Thus, the matter ended with a division in the Church.

—A remarkable Jew, claiming to be the Messiah, has recently made his appearance in Arabia, where his fame has spread far and wide. He came forth from the desert, where he spent many years mortifying the flesh, and he pretends to work wonders, perform miracles, and give the evidence of his divine mission. He has a melodious voice, remarkable brilliant eyes, and a fascinating appearance. The Bedouins take his offerings, and many of them have already accepted him. Another claimant of Mesiahship appeared last year in Australia; met with poor success among the people, and we have not heard of him for some time. We now learn that a female Savior, who claims to be the daughter of God, chosen to suffer for the redemption of her sex, is creating a prodigious sensation in Southern Russia. Her name is Gabacrewicz. She pretends to perform miracles, to raise the dead, make the blind see, and the lame walk. The Government lately shut her up in prison, but they find she cannot thus be crushed out; for the prison has become a place of pilgrimage to multitudes, who declare that she can perform miracles even when incarcerated.—Commercial

—The heathen authorities of Duke Towo, Old Calabar, have issued a proclamation, commanding a recognition of the Christian Sabbath, as follows: "Henceforth on God's day no market is to be held in any part of Duke Town teritory; no sales of strong drink, either native or imported, indoors or verandahs; no work; no play; no devil making; no Egbo processions or palavers, etc. etc. Any person violating the provisions of this proclamation will be subject to heavy Egbo penalties." If the heathen can enforce such laws, Christians may take courage.—N. Y. Observer

A DEPARTURE FROM ROME.—The following is taken from the Italian News:

An extraordinary scene was witnessed at the Baptist meeting rooms, in the Via Laurina, it being no less than the recantation of Rev Father Paola Cav Grassi, one of the Cantons of the Patriarchal Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. At the morning service Father Grassi, a man of great erudition, advanced in age, and of benignant and commanding presence, delivered an address in which he said his convictions had led him to leave the church of Rome and join a sect of Christians who worshipped God, not according to the dogmas and superstitions invented by men, but in accordance with the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as set forth in the Holy Scriptures, and taught by the divinely inspired apostles. Rev Jas. Wall delivered an eloquent address on the solemn step taken by Rev. Paola Grassi, and then baptized him by immersion, in the presence of a crowded audience who appeared deeply moved by the impressive ceremony. At the evning service Rev. Paola Grassi read his recantation, which is in the form of a letter addressed to His Eminence Cardinal Patrizi, the Vicar General of the Diocese of Rome.

THE NEW NIAGARA BRIDGE.—The bridge across the Niagara River from Buffalo to Fort Erie is finished the last of the immense trusses being placed in position only a few days ago. These spans or trusses are from 197 to 540 feet in length, are made of iron, and of the pattern known as the pratt truss; these rest on eight piers and two abutments, all built of solid masonry the piers being incased in an armor of half-inch iron plate to protect them from the ice, which forms in great quantities in the river, and with re-enforcements from the lake, makes a very formidable destructive agency. The bridge has two draws, one of which is said to be the largest in the country, it having, an opening of 160 feet. The funds for the building of the bridge, are furnished by a stock company of Canadian and American capitalists and is leased to the Grand Trunk, Great Western Air Line, the Canada Southern and the New York West Shore and Chicago Railroads. There is only one track on the bridge, as when the contract was made, three of the roads now using it, were not thought of in time to alter the plans. —N. Y. Observer.

EXTRAORDINARY DARKNESS.

The London News of Oct 24th says: "Early yesterday, Woolwich experienced a sudden and almost unexampled visitation of darkness. The morning had been wet and gloomy throughout, but at 1 p. m., the sky was overcast by a dark pall, which seemed to obscure every vestige of light from above. The darkness was not that of a London fog, for vistas of lighted windows could be seen for a long distance. It was rather the darkness of midnight, but there was a reddish tint in the sky like that occasioned by a great fire. The atmosphere was very heavy and opressive, the rain had ceased, and the wind which had been blowing from the south east, entirely abated. The effect was dismal in the extreme. Nervous people encouraged the most dread forebodings: more reasonable ones attributed it to an eclipse of the sun, but found no confirmation of it in the almanac. Fowls went to roost, pigeons and other birds stopped in their flight to seek the nearest shelter, and every living thing seemed impressed by the scene. The period of intense gloom lasted about five minutes, when light gradually broke in from the west and in an hour afterwards there was brilliant sunshine"

THE CHANGES.

Well, here we meet again—did I say, meet again? Yes, some of us, but not all. There are a number of parents and little brothers and sisters weeping around little chairs that now sit in the corner unfilled. There is not only a vacancy in little chairs and around the firesides, but in the fond parent's hearts there is a void left that cannot be filled, and before we meet again, some of my young readers that are now so full of life and vigor, and whose cheeks glow with health, may be among those who have made the vacant seats. What changes a short week brings! Only a short time ago, the trees were green with their waving foliage, a week later, and the pretty leaves have changed into scores of the most beautiful shades and tints,—so pretty, so beautiful that we could almost wish that they would remain thus always. But ah, those beautiful colors are signs of decay and betoken an early death—passing away—so much like the change that happens those who die, that it makes us feel sad. In health, we see the ruddy, rosy cheeks, but when sickness comes, they change to a more delicate hue, and in death, to the beautiful lily white.

A few weeks more, and all nature is stripped of its robes of beauty, all looks cold, stern and dead. But still we do not feel so sad after all, because nature has laid aside its old and tattered garments that it may prepare or make ready for prettier ones when spring-time comes again, and the little brothers and sisters that are no more, have only passed over to the evergreen shore, where they are happy, happy evermore, and are awaiting the time that we too shall put upon us our beautiful robes and steer for the other shore.

But why all this, dear children? Because Jesus has come, and because he came to save us from the power of the grave and raise us up from the dead. He loves us all, but he loved children first, I suppose, because he too was a child first. Therefore the Bible tells us that he took them up in his arms and blessed them. But his love continues. When they get old enough to talk and understand the wishes and wants of their parents, he says to them, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right,"—and again: "Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord."

When you get older and grow in knowledge so that you can comprehend what God requires of you, he says: "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God." If you neglect this, you commence to grow in sin, and he then tells you to "repent and believe the Gospel." If you still refuse all these calls, he concludes by saying: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not, shall be damned." All these conditions he gives us with the expectation that we will accept them, and it is because of this expectation that we look forward with so much confidence and joy.

The hope that we shall live again, dispels the gloom of winter and makes December as pleasant as May. Hoping then, dear young readers, that you have noticed and have taken instruction from the late changes in nature, I leave you with the expectation of having another talk with you before Christmas comes.

UNCLE HENRY.

THE VALUE OF A GOOD NAME.

That very wise man Solomon, says, that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, but perhaps some of our young readers cannot fully understand how this is. All good boys and girls like to have others speak well of them, and this alone affords great pleasure. There is nothing that will make boys and girls who have a proper regard for themselves, more unhappy than to be assured that their friends do not appreciate them,—that they have done something, which exhibits a trait of character that renders them repulsive to their friends. On the other hand, what an amount of pleasure it gives to be assured that you are loved and respected by your friends. Boys and girls all appreciate money but it is doubtful if any are more pleased on receiving a nice sum, than when they hear some one speak well of them. Not long ago I attended a Sabbath School and on the seat in front of me there were a number of boys ranging, perhaps, from 12 to 14 years old. They recited very creditably and their conduct was admirable. When the exercises were over the usual collection was taken, and one of the boys said he had nothing less than a 15 cent piece, it is most too much for once, but says he, it is for a good cause, I will give it all, and then Mr. M. will think I am liberal. Now this boy had some idea of the value of a good name, and seemingly valued it higher than money. How many of our young friends would give money in order to be thought liberal by their friends? Money is a very good thing, and all boys and girls should be taught its value, but then it is not to be compared with that of a good name. No difference how rich you may be, if you have not a good name you cannot enjoy life. Every feeling of pleasure that we experience in this life arises from good of some kind, and in this consists our happiness. Money alone cannot give us this feeling; it is only when we use it in such a way as to command the respect of others, that it can afford us any pleasure at all.

I hope then all our young readers, will understand that riches alone cannot give enjoyment, while a good name will. You may not have any money, yet your good name may afford you the highest enjoyment this life can afford. The boy that gave his 15 cents to the good cause that he might have the name of being liberal, felt happier than if some one had given him that sum, and so it is, happiness is the most precious boon in this life. This is obtained by doing good, and if we do good then we will have a good name. This is so valuable that money cannot buy it.

YOUNG PILGRIM.

IS YOUR NOTE GOOD?

A Boston lawyer was called on a short time ago by a boy who inquired if he had any waste paper to sell. The lawyer, pulling out a large drawer, exhibited his stock of waste paper.

"Will you give me twenty-five cents for that?"

The boy looked at the paper doubtingly a moment, and offered fifteen.

"Done," said the lawyer, and the paper was quickly transferred to the bag by the boy, whose eyes sparkled as he lifted the weighty mass.

Not till it was safely stowed away did he announce that he had no money.

"No money! How do you expect to buy paper without money?"

Not prepared to state exactly his plan of operations, the boy made no reply.

"Do you consider your note good?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes, sir."

"Very well; if you say your note's good, I'd just as soon have it as the money; but if it isn't good I don't want it."

The boy affirmed that he considered it good; whereupon the lawyer wrote a note for fifteen cents, which the boy signed legibly, and lifting the bag of papers, trudged off.

Soon after dinner the little fellow reappeared, and producing the money, announced that he had come to pay his note.

"Well," said the lawyer, "this is the first time I ever knew a note to be taken up the day it was given. A boy who will do that is entitled to note and money too;" and giving him both, sent him on his way with a smiling face and a happy heart.—Selected.

SELF-SACRIFICING DEVOTION OF WOMEN.

Men too often quietly accept a woman's sacrifices as the proper and to-be-expected thing, and scarcely pause to consider their extent and cost. The wife exhausts strength to promote the husband's comfort, and it may be that sometimes he pities her toil and weakness; but it does not occur to him to forego a part of his usual gratification in order to save her health, or to provide her with additional assistance, or to send her away on a vacation tour for needed recruiting of body and mind. It is not that the man is penurious, or cruel; but he does not think about his wife as he expects her to think of him. He is so accustomed to the idea that a wife should be an example of self-sacrificing devotion, that he accepts the fact as a matter of course.

A woman should have the sense and firmness to protect her own health and happiness, and to train her family, husband included, to deny themselves for her, as she is ever ready on fit occasions to deny herself for them. This may be done in a way so quiet and gentle, by little words and methods which, from the first, assume that such is the family spirit, that all will accept the theory, and be gradually perfected in the practice. Wives and mothers often make a great mistake on this point. They take upon themselves all the self-denial of the family, and indulge and pamper the husband and children, until they become selfish and exacting, and require to be deferred to and waited upon to a most unreasonable extent. No woman has a right thus to spoil the other members of the family, and to sacrifice herself. They are not as noble in character, or as happy in their minds, or as well fitted to bless others in their various spheres of life as if they were taught to give as freely as they receive. The husband who does the most for his wife will love her the most, and no children will be so affectionate and pleasant as those who are accustomed to deny themselves in order to assist and please their mother. On the other hand, many a wife has sacrificed her own comfort, for years, to gratify a self-indulgent husband, only to find that she was little appreciated, and that he was increasingly exacting and petulant; while many a mother, also, has slaved for her children, to save them work which would have benefitted them in soul and body, only to be treated, in the end, as a convenient drudge to promote their pleasures. We therefore warn all selfishly inclined men, not to be so ready to avail themselves of woman's devotion, as if it was their birthright; and we warn enthusiastic, warm-hearted women not to allow a virtue to degenerate into a vice.—Selected.

ARE WE ON DUTY?

Placed as we are, in a position which gives us access to almost every channel of religious information, and seeing the unremitting efforts that are being made to convert the world to the prevailing doctrines, dogmas, that are now afloat in the land, the question comes up with all seriousness and force, are we as the church, making the effort that we should to convert it to the religion of Jesus? This question is full of importance and upon its issues, hang the destiny of precious souls. It is a question that involves us all according to our several abilities. There are none exempt, not one. Every living member of the body of Christ forms a part of the grand whole, hence every member has a place to fill and a duty to perform, and just so soon as we can get every member to realize this great truth, so soon will the church be in perfect working order, and ready to put on her strength—for in her is vested all power—and go forth to christianize the world.

When we look around us and see what the professing world is doing, our eyes are greeted with a zeal that should command our highest admiration, but when we consider that that zeal is spent in a wrong direction, it should excite our fears and elicit our sympathies. Brethren and sisters, can we feel at ease, can we rest upon our rusting blades, while countless thousands are being led down the broad road to ruin? Can we remain unmoved while numbers untold, are crying for the living waters? We may, but it is because we feel not the worth of perishing souls weighing upon us. Ah, could we feel as did our blessed Master, when the whole burden of our sins sank so heavily upon Him. Could we fathom that love that constrained Him to drink the cup of our sorrows and feel the pangs of our sins, we would then be able to feel a brother's woe and make haste to deliver him from the way that leadeth to destruction. He had but one object for which he labored while in the world, that sinners might be saved. His, was a life of love, labor, and every opportunity was embraced to do a good deed or convey an important lesson, even when weary, hungry, and thirsty, He could not enjoy the enticing privilege, until He first supplied the children with bread. The burning prostitute finds grace in His presence and is comforted with the touching mercy, "Go sin no more." The Apostles forsook homes, land and people, in order that they might be properly inducted into the great work before them, and Paul, in view of the excellency of the great work, by the space of three years, ceased not to warn every one, night and day, with tears. If such were their zeal may it not well be a question with us, in view of the effort and sacrifices that we are now making, whether we are doing our duty? The question may be, how can we do our duty? We answer, by making use of the means that God has so graciously given us. There is no use of praying for means, as we now have more than we put to good use. There are many ways by which we may enter upon this important work, but in every case it requires a personal effort either directly or indirectly. Every man and woman too, must work out their own salvation, and that is done by aiding some one else to work out theirs. This we can do directly or indirectly owing to in what position God has placed us. If we are not called to preach, we may, by using the means which God has given us, aid some one else to preach. The object of the Church should be, to have the Gospel preached, or the plan of salvation made known. We are not all called to preach, but we are all called into the vineyard, and all are expected to work and help to bear each other's burdens. If the minister's burden is too heavy, let some of the lay members take part and thus fulfill the law of Christ. Again, we can all preach, and sometimes loudly too, by our walk and conduct. These things wield a power that should not be overlooked, as there is nothing gained by preaching on Sunday, if the members are engaged all week in tearing down, what they tried to build up.

Another very prominent means of accomplishing good is through the medium of the press. This is an acknowledged power by the Church, and we are glad that the brethren are so fully availing themselves of its advantages. Take from us our Church papers and we, to a very great extent, would become lost to each other. It brings us together, and those that are afar off are made near, not only in distance, but also in a spiritual relationship. Those growing cold and indifferent are warmed up, the hopeful are strengthened, the isolated are visited, to the poor the gospel is preached, and the sinner is invited to a banquet of mercy that is large and free.

Brethren and sisters, these facts have been made evident to you all, and if so, you should not be unmindful of the great privileges thus afforded. Perhaps there is no other way in which you can accomplish more good with so small an amount of money as by sending the Pilgrim to your friends and to the poor. Such gifts are highly appreciated, as we know, by the many grateful acknowledgments that have been made, some asserting that through it they obtained their first convictions, and were thus lead to an investigation of the Bible which resulted in their return to God. There are thousands that might be reached in this way, that cannot be by any other means. In conclusion, we would suggest to those that are full of love for Jesus and are waiting for an opportunity to manifest that love, to think of the propriety of sending the Pilgrim to the hungry and the poor, and thus feed them with the bread of life. The poor both in goods and in spirit, are always with us, and are acceptable subjects for our charities.

THE WEEKLY PILGRIM FOR 1874.

The present year is rapidly drawing to a close and the time has come for us to make preparations for the coming volume. This we have been doing and are now prepared to state our inducements for 1874. Our object has been to improve a little every year. How far we have succeeded in the past, our readers can judge. We have now before us a letter containing $1.50 for 1874. He says: "This will be my fifth year that I have subscribed for the Pilgrim. I am well pleased with it, and think it is getting better and more interesting every year."—We do not suppose that all think as does this brother, but there are many that do think the Pilgrim has improved.

The first thing we present for your consideration is our enlargement which will be an extra addition of reading surface weekly, of between 70 and 80 square inches.—This will add considerably to our expenses and labor and the advantage will all be in favor of our readers, but if our agents all get to work and send us a corresponding increase of subscribers, we may still hold our own.

The second is, our Pilgrim Almanac. This, of course, is no very great inducement but it is certainly worthy of a consideration, as we gave its compilation a large amount of labor and care and we do not hesitate in saying that it is as good an Almanac as ever was published by the church. Each subscriber for 1874 gets one free.—They are now ready for delivering, and will be sent as soon as the new lists come in. Therefore all should have their names sent in as soon as possible so that the Almanacs may be delivered. Agents that prefer to deliver the Almanacs to their subscribers themselves can do so by ordering from us, the number they think they can make use of.

Another inducement is, we expect more contributors for our pages. We give just now the name of sister Mattie A. Lear. We hope to give our readers the productions of her pen quite frequently. Eld. D. P. Sayler also informs us that he will write, for the coming year and has already sent us a contribution for the first number. We are glad to make this announcement as he was, in our infancy, one of our chief standbys, and we have learned to look up to him as one among our chief men. We also expect all our old contributors to labor for us and also many more new ones.

Our new location will also give us advantages that we did not have heretofore. Our mail facilities will be much better than at our present location, in fact as good as can be had anywhere, enabling us to send our mail, in safety and with dispatch, in every direction. When all these advantages are duly considered we do not see how more could be expected, especially when the low price asked for our paper, $1.50, is taken into consideration. The fact is, unless our present list is largely increased we will probably lose by the enterprise. We therefore make a strong appeal to every brother and sister, and all others that appreciate our labor, to give us your aid and influence. Do not be satisfied with subscribing for yourself, but try and have every body else to take and read the Pilgrim. Our success will depend largely upon the efforts that our agents may make. You, dear brethren and sisters, have it within your power to double our list. Will you not do it? Go to work at once and present your strong arguments. The cause is a good one, and God will bless the effort. Every family should take one or more religious papers. It will be worth much more to them than fashionable dresses and other follies that destroy both body and soul. Do not let the panic scare anybody as that has now touched bottom and money will soon be as flush as ever. Those that do not have it when subscribing, and are industrious and honest, can pay it at some future time or during the year as heretofore. The Pilgrim is the poor man's friend and never refuses to call at his door when invited. Come one, come all. Send in your names at once and with it do not forget that of your neighbor.

SHALL WE HAVE DISCUSSIONS?

This seems to be the query on the minds of a number of our brethren. While some are favorable to it, others strongly oppose, and a few we are told, think of not taking the Pilgrim any more on account of the Sunday School agitation we had some time ago, but we hope that after duly weighing the matter they will change their minds and not forsake us because they cannot fully agree with all we said and did. We are sorry if we have, in any way, offended our dear brethren whom we love, because we certainly had no such intention. Whatever may be for the good and prosperity of the Church, we desire to do, and wherever we come short of this we wish to have it attributed to our short-sightedness and not to a wilful disposition to deviate from the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Some of our brethren may think, if they were in our position they would do everything just right. There may be some that would have done better, but even they would have found it a very difficult matter to please all. Our first and chief object is to please God and if we are successful in doing this, we hope to be able to please our brethren. In trying to do this we do not always please ourselves but sometimes submit our own judgment and accept that of those who have greater age and experience in the divine life. As to discussions, we are opposed to them, believing that they have not a tendency of sanctifying the Lord in the eyes of the people, especially when conducted in the manner and spirit that has been done heretofore, in our periodicals. We only once indulged our contributors in admitting a personal agitation, and hope we may have no occasion to do so again. By this, we do not wish to be understood as closing our columns to a fair, free, and open investigation of the truth, when done in the proper spirit and with a design of coming nearer the "ancient land marks," as set forth in the Law and Testimony, but our design shall be as ever, "forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forward to the things which are before." With the ability that God may give we shall endeavor to labor for those things which will work for peace in the Church, as well as for the comforting of the saints and the saving of the sinner. If we all have that mind within us that was in Christ Jesus, we hope there will be no offence taken or given and that there will be no necessity for a single one to forsake us for the coming year, but that all may invite us back again for 1874.

OUR CONDITIONS.

We are being asked whether our conditions for the coming year will be the same as the present year. In the main, we expect them to be the same, but would say to those who have the means, pay us at the time of subscribing or at the first part of the year. If all that can, will do this, it will enable us to meet our obligations and give a little more time to those who cannot pay cash or at the beginning of the year. All those who have not paid for the present year will be expected to pay before the beginning of the new year. 3t.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want a good active agent, to solicit subscribers for the PILGRIM, in every Church in the brotherhood. If there are any that feel to labor for us and are not supplied with prospectus and Almanac will please write us and we will send by return mail. Remember, the PILGRIM for the coming year will be enlarged and every subscriber will receive the Pilgrim Almanac, handsomely gotten up, containing a "Ministerial List," giving post-office, county and State, with other valuable information FREE. 5t

THIS week some correspondence, obituaries, &c., is unavoidably crowded out. We are sorry for this, and next week will arange the make up of our form so as to admit all. We intend to make the giving of church news a specialty the coming year, and earnestly solicit our brethren and sisters to send the news.

ABRAHAM FLORA, your name is marked paid on our book.

ABRAHAM GOOD. The book is sent.

Items of Travel and Notes by the Wayside.

J. S. FLORY.

GREELY, Weld Co., Col., Nov. 8, '73.

Dear Pilgrim:—By request, I will continue to give, briefly, such items as may be of interest, to at least, a portion of your readers.

Having housed my family in a comfortable habitation in this town, and provided them with present necessities, I set out, the 28th of October, on a trip down the South Platte River. My associates were a gentleman of this town, who took his team, Bro. Holsberry, and a man of the legal profession from Michigan, who was the most eager person to get a shot at a Buffalo I ever saw. After a pleasant ride of 28 miles over fine roads, we put up for the night at Greene City. Next day, in the afternoon, we suddenly and unexpectedly came across a herd of buffalo coming up a ravine from the river. Our legal companion seized his rifle, jumped out of the wagon and gave them chase, but he soon gave up that sport, owing to the fact, he was left far in the rear in a few minutes. We had a hearty laugh at his expense. A few miles farther on, we came to old Fort Morgan, (now abandoned), from which point we could see numerous herds of buffalo ruminating along the distant bluffs. At night we camped at a Stockman's Ranch, having taken with us our own provision and bedding. Next day, about 4 o'clock, we arrived at the site of the proposed town of Beaver. Were just in time to save our claim from being "jumped" a game that certain parties were engaged in. I found a few houses had been put up since my visit in July, our irrigating canal progressing, there being 4 miles of it partially constructed, and steps being taken to push it through to completion as soon as possible. The money panic has delayed the lying of the track of the railroad, so it may be some months yet before the road will be in running order.

Being in the heart of the buffalo range, I had the ambition to try my hand in a hunt. If the Prince of Wales could leave his home in Europe, and come to the far western region to get a shot at one of those huge animals, and the papers of the two Continents should teem with an account of the preparations for the occasion, no marvel if I should have a thought in that direction. Therefore, next morning without much ado other than providing myself with a rifle, and wading the river barefooted through the ice, I found myself in the valley where it was expected herds of buffalo would soon make their appearance coming to the river for water. I did not have to wait long, until they could be seen coming over the bluffs, and slowly wending their way towards the river. I got under cover of the bank of the stream and hurried down that I might get in the immediate front of the nearest herd, which contained about 50 head. On they came, I awaiting their approach with considerable interest. As they came near, so that their ponderous forms could be measured with the eye, their piercing eyes be seen, and heavy tread be heard, I confess I felt a little "feverish." The idea of coming face to face with 50 wild buffalo, was duly considered. By the by, just before they arrived at the bank, they made a slight turn, and went plunging over the banks into the river. I selected out a fine fat one, pulled trigger and down came buffalo, shot through and through. The next moment I leveled on a fine cow, but not so lucky this time. She was badly wounded, but went off on a double quick with the rest of the herd. That was my first and last hunt, and I have no reason to complain. Thousands of buffalo are being killed almost daily. Some of these animals will weigh, live weight, near or quite two thousand pounds. Those that are not too old, make as fine beef as I ever ate. The meat can be had in that region, by the ton, at one cent a pound, or hunters will kill them for one dollar apiece. Hundreds of wagon loads of buffalo beef are bro't up into this section and sold at 4 cents per pound, and many car loads of the meat is sent East. After making some little improvement on my claim, I returned home with a good supply of buffalo and antelope meat. The antelope is something smaller than the common deer, they are numerous thro'out this country.

There is yet much choice land open for pre-emption or homestead in the Platt Valley, but it is being taken up very fast. In July when I was down, I was one among the first that took claims in the neighborhood of Beaver, now about all is entered above that point, and for 20 miles below, on the side of the river that the rail-road runs. But on the opposite side, there are fine bodies of bottom land yet untaken, and further down on the line of R. R., there are sections very desirable for settlement.

Since my arrival here, we have had the most delightful weather I ever experienced anywhere. True, it is cold at night, but through the day it is moderate and pleasant, the thermometer often being up to 60 degrees in the shade. I almost daily come across persons who come here invalids, and now are hale and hearty, able to work hard and enjoy the fruits of their labor.

There is a wide field here for labor in the ministry, to the building up of Zion. I can see no reason why a true Gospel preached will not find adherents here as elsewhere. More anon.

A CALL FOR HELP.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—Please give this room in the PILGRIM, so that its readers may have a chance to contribute in the good cause.

We, the members of the Montgomery Congregation, Indiana Co., Pa., are but few in number and generally poor. But I will first give you a sketch of our troubles before the war. We made an attempt to build a meetinghouse, and had received some help from other congregations, but the war coming, and some of our brethren being drafted, we felt it our duty to pay for them to save them from going to war, which soon exhausted us, so that we were not able to build. We then refunded back the help we had received, thinking to build some time when we would become more able. In the year 1862, we commenced it again. The school houses were closed against us, and we had no suitable place to hold meeting. We thought by getting some help we might build a house 40x60 with basement half size. We have it now so that we hold our meetings in it, but not finished, and are in debt between $300 or $400. We have appealed to the Brotherhood at large, through the Companion but it appears while some have given liberally, others have not heeded our call at all. We borrowed money the second time in order to come up to promise. We now have it for three months. We have received between $30 and $40 since we made the call in the C. F. C.

Now dear brethren and sisters, I deem it not necessary to remind you of charity or its promises, as I feel satisfied that you have all been taught this lesson by our Lord and Savior, and that we all know our duty in this respect, if we are only willing to do it. I would just say this, if all the brethren that may chance to read this appeal, I mean all that have plenty and to spare, would come to our relief by sending us $1.00, others that are not so well blessed with this world's goods 50 cents, and others 25 cents, and others again 10 cents would it not more than relieve us? Now who is the brother that would not relieve the congregation of the brethren in a cause like this, by paying so small an amount?

Dear brethren this begging is in no wise pleasant to me, or any of us, and were we able within ourselves, to pay this debt, I think we would much prefer to pay it ourselves than to ask for help. Any one that may have pity on us, and feel like helping us to pay the above named sum, can do so by sending it by letter to H. Spicher, Hills Dale Indiana Co., Pa.

The above is written by permit of the Church. I will keep a record of all that will be sent and report through the PILGRIM or C. F. C. just as you may desire, at the end of 3 months. This we will do if the Lord will. H. SPICHER.

Visitor please copy.

HURRICANE, Mo., Nov, 12, 1873.

Dear brother Editor:—Having seen a solicitation in the PILGRIM for a reporter in every church district, I thought it might be interesting to some to hear of our little district. The brethren were organized about six months before I came to this place, about two and a half years ago, with eight members. We received since, fourteen by letter, and eight by baptism.

We had our Lovefeast on the 8th of Nov. at the house of Bro. Michael. The congregation was not very large because we could accommodate but few spectators, the house being small, but we had very good attention. Next day and evening we had preaching in a school house close by. Our meetings were all very good, and during our meetings we received one dear young sister by baptism, and two more made application to be received next Sunday. Brethren C. C. Root and John S. Hays were the ministers from other districts.

As I have many acquaintances, I will say to them that I still preach nearly every Sunday, and sometimes during the week.

Yours in love.

ELI METZ.

NOTICE.—There will be a series of meetings held in the Maple Grove Meeting-house, Ashland Co., Ohio, commencing January 3, '74, and perhaps will close on the evening of the 11th. A general invitation is extended to ministering brethren and others to be with us. By order of the church. WM SADLER.

MARRIED.

SNIDER—EBERSOLE.—By the undersigned, at his residence, November 16, 1873, Mr. David R. Snider, of Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa., to Miss Rosan Ebersole, of Bedford Co., Pa.
S. A. MOORE.

McBRAYER—MURREL.—On Oct. 9, by George Witwer, at his residence in Hamilton, Mo., Mr. Francis M. McBrayer and Miss Dela Jane Murrel, all of Daviess Co., Mo.

WALKER—McCREARY.—On Oct. 30th by the same at his residence, Mr. Rellis Walker and Miss Caroline McCreary all of Daviess Co., Mo. GEO. WITWER.

DIED.

HOSLER.—In Solomon's Creek Church, Oct. 19, 1873, Bro. David Hosler, of typhoid fever, aged 53 yrs., 9 mos. and 6 days.

He died in the triumph of a living faith, said he was ready to go, exhorted his friends all to meet him in heaven, and gave a special farewell to each of his family, and asked those of them who belong to the church, to be faithful, and those who did not promised him they would soon. We trust those dear children will not forget what they promised a dying father. He had been a member of the church for a number of years and was very faithful, was much loved by all who knew him and especially by the Church. Funeral by Yontz, D. Shively and the writer from Job. 14: 10 JESSE CALVERT

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

THE prospects of success, of the "INTERNATIONAL REVIEW," are so favorable that the publishers, A. S. BARNES & Co., of New York, have decided to issue it every two months instead of "quarterly" as we previously announced to our readers. The first number will appear in December.

ROSWELL G. SMITH, the publisher of Scribner's Monthly and St. Nicholas possesses a remarkable genius for 'pushing things' as may be seen from the premium list of St. Nicholas which offers all sorts of attractions up to an education or a trip to Europe. There has been but one voice on the new monthly—that it is a thorough success, in which verdict old and young critics, alike, join.—Publisher's Weekly.

WE are in receipt of a beautifully gotten up little book of poems from the press of J. R. DUNNORNOW & Co., Huntingdon, Pa., printed from large clear type on heavy tinted paper. The title of the book—"THE CROWNING GIFT OF HEAVEN" alludes to God's greatest and best gift to man—His Spotless Son, Man's Redeemer and Savior. The book comprises different poems, the thoughts of each suggested by prominent scenes in the life of Christ—"The Birth of Christ," "Disputing with the Doctors," "At the Tomb of Lazarus," "On Mount Tabor," "His Entry into Jerusalem," "In Gethsemane," "His Arrest," "His Trial," "His Crucifixion," "His Resurrection," "His Ascension." The author J. W. Welch of Alexandria, Pa., is the same whose poems for several weeks past, in the PILGRIM, under the name of Wesley, have been so much admired. Paper 50 cts.; sent postage paid from this office.

THE YOUNG FOLKS' RURAL for November is, we believe, the very best number of this unique journal yet published. No wonder that this periodical is achieving so remarkable a success. It would be a timely and valuable addition to the regular reading matter of every family that does not already receive it, and we would advise an examination of it before making up your list of papers for the coming year. It is $1.50 per year, with two lovely American Landscape chromos "thrown in." Dialogues and declamations are furnished for school and social uses, and cash prizes are given for best "compositions." Sample numbers sent post-paid for ten cents. Address H. N. F. LEWIS, Publisher, Chicago.

"THE LAST POEMS OF ALICE AND PHOEBE CARY," have been gathered by Mrs. Mary Clemmer Ames, and issued in a handsome volume by Hurd & Houghton of New York. This book contains all the literary remains of the Cary sisters, save a volume of poems for children, which we announced a week or two ago and which will soon appear. In the thousands of homes where these poet sisters were known this book will be sure to find appreciative readers. They were the people's favorites, like Burns and Whittier, they loved Nature and delighted in the lessons she taught; they were pure and good, and their songs have been accepted, and have taken deep hold upon the public mind. Thanksgiving day is near at hand, and we have "The Chopper's Child: a story for Thanksgiving Day" opening with this pretty verse:

"The smoke of the Indian Summer
Darkened and drui bed the rills,
And the ripe corn like a sunset,
Shimmered along the hills;
Like a gracious, glowing sunset,
Inlaced with the rainbow light
Of vanishing wings a-trailing
And trembling out of sight."

Delicately drawn pictures of nature, and poetic gems sparkle all through this volume. For sale by Wm. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa., or sent from this office. Price $2.00.

HURD & HOUGHTON have also published recently, a collection of poems entitled "Songs from the Old Dramatists" edited by Mrs Abbe Sage Richardson, in a beautiful volume on tinted paper, morocco cloth, gilt edges, making a very handsome gift book. Price $3.00 for sale as above.

VOLGARISMS AND OTHER ERRORS OF SPEECH—is a title of a most useful little book, containing a large amount of very valuable and useful information in a comparatively small compass. Our thought is, that if many of those who have not enjoyed the advantages of early education, or those whose early habits have established inaccuracies in speech, were to read and carefully consult this little volume they would soon be able to avoid those errors and vulgarisms now entirely too common even among ministers. It ought to be found in every family as a daily companion for learners. Published by Claxton, Remson & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia. Sent from this office, beautifully bound, for $1.25.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the ORIGIN of Single Immersion. The most interesting, reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. POETRY.

THE ANGEL SINGERS.

Oh! to my mind comes a fancy,
Of a lovely spot far away,
Blooming in beauty immortal;
Fanned by breezes wafting gently,
Onward bearing the sweet perfume
Of leaves and flowers eternal;
A sweet, fair spot, untouched by gloom,
Where love and joy, forever bloom.

There two angels kneeling gently,
Amid the breeze that's wafting by,
'Neath the pure, softly beaming light,
With hands uplifted fervently;
Mild and beautiful, side by side,
With eyes so sweet and forms so slight,
Pure, Oh pure as the land they've trod,
Are singing anthems to their God.

Pure and gentle as the zephyr,
Floating on that Heavenly shore;
Soft as the amber tinted skies,
More sweet than falls on mortal ear,
The songs of childhood's happy days,
The soul-breathed anthem thrills and dies,
In love, devotion, joy and praise,
To the source from which all blessing flows.

The pure breezes wait on gently,
Bearing the balmy fragrance by;
The mellow light glows softly still,
'Mong bright green leaves that lowly sigh,
In beauty 'round the landscape lies,
And still there with heavenly thrill,
Those soft, pure strains of music rise
And charm that quiet Paradise.

Oh, sing on, ye angels, ever!
Away o'er death's gloomy river
Where love and beauty never dies—
Sing on, when thou will—together,
Kneeling 'mid the pure light gently;
Oh soft as the glance of thine eyes!
Sweet as the flowers around thee!
Chant, O chant, thy heavenly lay!

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

"WITH MY SOUL HAVE I DESIRED THEE IN THE NIGHT."

ISAIAH 26: 9.

From my bed of repose during the night watches when all around seems wrapped in stillness, I can look up through the window and see the shining stars in martial array, and oft the silver moon pours down her lunar light upon my bed. Oft have I thus spent wakeful moments in looking up to the vaulted star specked heavens, and by faith peered beyond where God resides. At such a time when the body is seeking rest from the toils of the day, the mind no longer is harassed by the noise and confusion incident to daylight, but freed from all visible surroundings, it can sweetly or silently commune with God. To me such moments are full of solemn reflection, and often to my mind recurs that passage of Scripture, "Great art thou, O God! great in thy works. When I consider the heavens the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the Son of Man that thou visitest him?" And quite recently in one of those silent conversations of the mind, the language of the prophet came to me: "With my soul have I desired thee in the night." Then followed a train of thought in substance something like, the following: Why should my soul desire the Lord in the night? Because it is the time of darkness, and the time we desire light, and God is light. The prophet was a servant of God,—he loved God; with his soul he desired him in the night.

The beloved of God are the children of God,—the servants of God. In the noon-day of their religious life and experience, they enjoy the sweet comforts of a Savior's love, having come by faith unto the "perfect day" of illuminating light; but ah! where is the one that does not at times experience a night of spiritual darkness, not death, but only darkness? That darkness is brought about in various ways: sometimes when all seems prosperous, and we move along in the blaze of prosperity, a sudden turn in the road, we come to the reverse of fortune, and soon darkness broods over our spirits. In our prosperity we may have almost forgotten God, our desires were earthly, carnally, but now seeing our dependence in God, faith moves our heart and we cry, "My soul desireth thee in the night.

Often when we are living in a happy, joyful, family circle, mother, father, brothers, sisters, children dear, all, all here! We fail to appreciate the goodness of God in thus lighting up our home world with all the stars of a family association. But alas! Death stalks that way, a shining one is cut down. A father, or a mother, or perchance the idolized child of the happy group. The sun of joy goes down, then, oh, then, will not the heart then turn to God for comfort? Then will the soul desire thee, O God, in the night. Again we may pass from the full illuminating glare of God's loving countenance to a state of spiritual darkness, owing to many trials, troubles, and temptations, and the deceitfulness of sin. In those dark hours of distress, the trembling soul, yet believing in God, yet loving Jesus will cry out, "With my soul have I desired thee in the night." It is for our good that we have those trials, those seasons of gloom. The child that looks to its parent for shelter and protection may wander away some distance, when the day is bright, but when night comes it draws near, and in midnight darkness it feels only secure while nestling in that bosom where its trust is. So with the child of God, when gloom broods over the soul, then it feels to draw nearer to that bosom, that can shelter from any storm. It is needful our souls desire the Lord in the night, because it is the time of dangers. When natural night spreads her mantle over the city, the robbers come from their lurking places to kill and to steal. And when spiritual darkness broods over our souls, then satan comes with his hosts to try us, bids us murmur at God's dealing with us, or perchance will tell us "curse God and die," or pursuade us we are not a child of God, and tell us a "thousand frightful things." But the soul that desires God in the night, shall be safe. Look up, desponding ones, and know daylight will come in all its beauty. Because you have to pass through many a fiery trial, and the smoke of God's chastening rod hide from view the light and joy you once seen and felt, don't suppose God has cast you off. By no means; he careth for you and would have you purified, fit for his use in heaven.

We notice some stars shine brighter than others, and all are brighter, the darker the night. So we cannot all expect to experience the religion of Jesus just in the same measure or degree, and the darker the gloom that pervades the aerial heavens of the soul, the nearer we will cling to the cross; the more our souls will desire God in the night, and brighter to his eye will we appear. We rejoice to see the beloved of God living in the joy and consolation of the light and liberty of a free Gospel, that seems to illumine their pathway with the very fires of heavenly love, and would they might thus go on ever basking in the sunshine of the Holy light; but while we love to see such, we by no means, despise those who have to pass through great tribulation, seasons of gloom and sorrow. Oh may we with our souls desire the Lord in the night, that when the morning cometh,—the bright morning—the glorious morning, we shall be with our God, our Savior, and our all.

A DRUNKARD'S WARNING

Bro. Brumbaugh, I select from the Baltimore Daily American, for the PILGRIM, that it may have the widest possible circulation.

A young man entered the bar-room of a village tavern, and called for a drink. No, said the landlord, you have too much already. You have had delirium tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more. He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited upon them very politely. The other had stood by silent and sullen, and when they had finished, he walked up to the landlord, and addressed him: "Six years ago, at their age, I stood where these young men now are. I was a man with fair prospects. Now at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck, body and mind. You led me to drink. In this room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now, sell me a few glasses more, and your work will be done: I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved; they may be men again. Do not sell it to them. Sell it to me, and let me die, and the world will be rid of me; but for heaven's sake sell no more to them!" The landlord listened, pale and trembling. Setting down his decanter, he exclaimed! "God helping me, that is the last drop I will ever sell to any one." And he kept his word.

Dear readers of the PILGRIM, take notice, and be timely warned. Is it not a fact known to all, that drunkards are made of small beginnings? Then never take the first sip, but you, venders and retailers, tremble at the thought of selling or giving the unthinking youth the first drink. Remember it is declared by the Lord's prophet, "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look upon their nakedness: Thou art filled with shame for glory: drink then also, and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the cup of the LORD'S right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory."—Hab. 2: 15, 16.

A REPLY.

In Pilgrim No. 40, page 314, appears an article from the pen of Bro. D. C. Moomaw, entitled, "The Cap Controversy." In the above named article the brother gives us what he calls a paraphrase of several texts of Scripture. To some of these paraphrases we seriously object.

We have no particular liking for controversy, neither do we often engage in it, but as the subject under consideration particularly interests us, we will try, by the help of God, to present a few thoughts upon it.

In paragraph 2d, the brother qualifies head, by the word spiritual, telling us what kind of head. Now brother Paul places no qualifying adjective before head, but simply says, "The head," leaving us to learn from other portions of Scripture what kind of head he means. That he does not mean, as brother M. would have us believe, a spiritual head, we would infer from what he says in Colossians 1:18 "And he is the head of the body, the church." The apostle here does not limit this headship of Christ to a portion of the body, which we think he certainly would if brother M.'s explanation was correct. If it read, "And he is the head of the male portion of the body, the church," then it would harmonize with the brother's views.

But this subject is still made plainer in verse 19 of chapter 2. "And not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." Here the apostle defines body more clearly he says: "ALL the body." All the body has the same head. All draw nourishment from the same source.

If Paul had said from which all the male members of the body, etc., then we would conclude that the female had some other spiritual head, and drew spiritual nourishment from some other source, we should then be very glad for brother M's explanation, as it would clearly point out whence we must look for spiritual nourishment, and to whom we must go for spiritual supplies.

Does the brother mean to tell us that man occupies the position of Christ's vicegerent toward woman? We had always thought there was but one man at a time who claims this splendid prerogative over his fellow creatures, and that he resides at Rome. Surely we are not at present prepared to accept of such a species of subordination, but if the brother can prove to us from the sacred oracles, such a heaven's decree, then we will submit, for with Abraham, we know that the Judge of all the earth doeth right. But it is too painful a doctrine to accept upon a mere assertion.

That God has ordained that man is our head in some respects, and to some extent, we freely admit. We are not ignorant of the fact that a part of the sentence which God pronounced against Eve as a punishment for her sins, was that her husband should "rule over her," but we have no more reason to think that punishment extends to spiritual things, than we have to think that man's punishment extends to spiritual things. See Genesis 3:17, 18, 19.

The word head occurs often thro'out the sacred Scriptures, and it has several significations besides its natural one. We must judge of its meaning, not only from its connections, but from other portions of Scripture.

We do not know the exact state of things in the Corinthian Church at the time the apostle wrote, but it would seem that there existed considerable confusion at that time, and that the different members did not know their proper sphere of action, or at least, did not act in their proper sphere. Hence we have the language of Paul contained in the 11th chapter of his epistle to that church, "But I would have you KNOW." From this language it seems they did not know what he was about to tell them. But in what sense, or to what extent each of these prerogatives of headship is exercised, Paul does not here say, but by reading carefully all he says on this subject, we may perhaps learn his meaning. In verse 8 and 9 he gives reasons for man's priority; then in verse 10, he says, "For this cause," or because of this priority, "ought the woman to have the [token of] power on her head because of the angels."

We understand the apostle's meaning to be something like this: though man does, for certain reasons, occupy a superior position in this world, yet God has bestowed upon woman, or upon those who receive Him, the power to become the daughters of God, even to them that believe on His name. He has given her the power to become spiritually equal with man, and with him to receive the spirit of adoption whereby she too may cry, "Abba Father." He hath also given her power to receive the witness of the spirit with her spirit that she is a child of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs of Jesus Christ. Yes blessed be God, if so be that we suffer with Him, we may all be glorified together, for it is written, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for all are one in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3:28. Here upon our King's highway all temporal distinctions are annihilated. The vallies are filled, and the mountains must be brought down.

The apostle would say, let the woman wear upon her head a token or sign of this great power. Let her show that she appreciates the great privilege which God has bestowed upon her. By this sign she also shows her respect and deference to man whom God has constituted her head in some things.

But what shall this sign be? Paul says it shall be a covering. Some, however, seem to understand from verse 15, that Paul means that the hair shall be this covering. We will try to look at this matter a little. In verse 6, the apostle says, "For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered." "Let her ALSO be shorn." Let her likewise, or in like manner be shorn. Surely if language means any thing, we must understand Paul to say that if she will not submit to wear the artificial covering, let her also, or in like manner have her natural covering taken from her. But if this be a shame, a disgrace, "let her be covered," let her wear the artificial covering.

No greater indignity could have been offered to a virtuous lady in Paul's day than to deprive her of her hair, which was at once her glory and her pride, and which she nourished with great fondness. Paul would then say, if she feels it to be such a shame, or disgrace to be deprived of her natural covering, let her wear this artificial covering, for it is just as much out of place for a Christian lady to be without this covering when she prays or prophesies, as it would be for a modest lady of the world to have her hair cut short. See verse 5.

Again if Paul had meant that the hair was the covering which he had so earnestly urged the sisters to wear, he would have said in verse 15, for her hair is given her for THE covering. He would have placed the definite article THE before covering, instead of the indefinite A, showing that the hair was the specific covering to which he had referred. But since he says a covering, his meaning is evident. The hair is certainly a covering, but not that particular covering which Christian women are required to wear as a sign to distinguish them from the women of the world, and also to show that they are betrothed to Christ. Oh my dear sisters, this is indeed a badge of honor! Why then should we be ashamed to wear it? What if the world does look upon it as a silly whim, that does not destroy its importance.

When we look upon those nations upon whom the blessed light of the Gospel has never shone, and contrast the condition of the women of those nations with the condition of the women who bask in the sunlight and liberty of our dear Jesus, then, oh then, we can appreciate what Christianity has done for us! Oh! how our hearts bleed in sympathy for our poor down-trodden sex, when we read of the cruelty and injustice that is done them among barbarious nations, how they are made to bear a double burden, not only their own punishment, (see Genesis 3:16,) but also the burden of manual labor which God designed that man should bear. Gen. 3:19.

However much our modern reformers may boast of what they are doing to elevate our sex, we are content to cling to the dear old Bible. Let its spirit be fully carried out, and it will elevate us to that high position which God designed for us to fill. If Christianity fails to elevate the race, the fault is not in this heaven-born system, but in those who teach and practice it. The scheme is perfect, but sometimes the medium through which it is brought to the children of men, is very imperfect. Oh, let us seek knowledge right from the fountain-head, where truth gushes forth clear as crystal from the throne of God and of the Lamb.

But what kind of covering shall be worn? The apostle does not specify what kind, but simply says a covering. We think we can discover wisdom in this. Paul wrote not merely for the instruction of the Corinthian Church, but for the instruction of all Christians, in all nations, and all ages. Customs are necessarily different among different people and in different ages of the world. Had the apostle designated the kind of covering, there would have been no latitude for adaptation to times and circumstances. In this case it would have been a much greater burden than it now is, for instance had he said, let her wear a veil, instead of saying, let her be covered, for the veil was probably the kind of covering worn by females in his day, and would, no doubt, have been the kind he would have specified had he pointed out the particular kind. Now this would only have increased the difficulty. The next question would be, what is meant by a veil? The veils that are worn in this country at this time are nothing like the veils that were worn in ancient times, and are still worn by the ladies in the Levant. Veils are of different kinds and of different patterns. Some of them not only covered the head, but the face, and the entire person. But Paul only requires that this covering which he speaks of shall cover the head.

The veils that were, and are still worn in the East have a different design from this covering. To a married lady, the veil is the badge which distinguishes and dignifies her in that character, and betokens her alliance to her husband, and her interest in his affections; therefore to deprive her of this is one of the greatest indignities that she can receive.

The covering which is here spoken of, is the badge which distinguishes and dignifies the Christian woman in that character, and betokens her alliance to Christ, and her interest in his affections. Shall we say that she ought to feel it as much of an indignity, as much of a shame to be without this covering, as an Eastern lady would to be deprived of her veil? Paul made no difference between the married and the virgin, for this covering is to be worn because of the angels, of which we shall try to speak presently.

As the Holy Spirit has not pointed out what kind of covering shall be worn, it is the province of the Church, the next highest authority, to specify the kind. The Church of the present age, in this country has adopted the cap. We admire her wisdom and her judgment, we don't see that she could have chosen anything that would answer the purpose better, that would be more becoming and appropriate. This is a covering for the head, and that is what is required. It is neat, plain and convenient. However if she, in her wisdom, shall ever see that some other covering will answer the purpose better, let her adopt it, and we will cheerfully acquiesce. The Church does not claim infallibility, but as we are required to "hear the Church," and to be subject one to another, will not our refusal to adopt this covering, be an act of disobedience to our dear Lord? And then is it modest for an individual member to prefer their own wisdom to the wisdom of the Church? "Where no counsel is, the people fall; but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety."—Prov. 11: 14. We do think then that we ought, as obedient and Christ-loving children, wear the covering which he Church has adopted.

When shall it be worn? In verse 5, we read, "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head." And in verse 10, we read, "For this cause ought the woman to have (the token of) power on her head because of the angels." From the above we understand that this covering has two significations, first, to show her respect to man, therefore when she worships with him she should wear the token of her respect. Secondly, because of the angels; and we understand that the word angel includes the Angel Jehovah That holy Being who led the ranks of Israel through the wilderness, and of whom God gave them this promise, "Behold I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, for my name is in him."—Exodus 23: 20, 21, and of whom Isaiah says that, "He led them through the deep as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble." The Prophet here seems to allude to the dexterity of some of the Eastern nations, and particularly the Arabs in the management of even bad horses. Such is their skill with this animal if one of them be mounted upon a good charger, he can with a wonderful tact, carry, as it were, another horse, (though he may be stiff, feeble, and foundered) along with him. No matter how rough the road, or how beset with dangers, if one of these admirable horsemen have firm hold of the bridle, he will gallantly conduct him through in perfect safety.

The Prophet's figure is natural and grand, showing how gallantly Jehovah led the children of Israel through the Red Sea Though they were weak and feeble, yet he by his Almighty arm, and with an inexpressible vigor, conducted them safely through all the inequalities in the bed of the sea, caused in some instances, by deep cavities, and in others by abrupt intervening rocks.

This beautiful figure will also apply to us. If we but yield up the bridle of our wills into the hands of Jesus, and reign ourselves completely to his guidance, he will bear us safely over all the pitfalls, inequalities and impediments that may intersect our pathway, and will land us upon the mount of deliverance. Though we are all ignorance and weakness, yet he is all wisdom, and strength, and if we place ourselves under his protection, we are safe, no matter how dangerous the road over which we must travel, and no matter how feeble and helpless we are. Paul said, "he took pleasure in infirmities, for when he was weak, then was he strong."—2 Cor. 12: 10. And why? Because these things kept him very dependent upon Jesus, and that dependence kept him very near his precious Savior, therefore he took pleasure in them, because they hedged him in from the world and kept him in in the society of that one in whom he so much delighted.

If then this covering is to be worn as a sign that we are under the conduct and protection of the great God-man, the answer to the question, when shall it be worn? would be whenever we need his guidance and protection. And when do we not need it? Who of us could sustain ourselves for an hour without his help? Who of us could resist the smallest temptation, or bear patiently the slightest insult? Oh how wretched would we be, should this dear Friend, who is a very present help in trouble, withdraw his face from us? We lately received a letter from one who is laboring to build up the Master's cause in the West, the writer said, "I must find a Savior in everything of my life's experience or I have no Savior at all. Oh! I must find him in disappointments in life, in calculations purely secular. I must find him in sorrows and afflictions, in poverty, in all outward conditions, as well as in the services of his house." How perfectly do these words breathe the sentiments of a soul whose dependence is in Jesus, and who has learned that there is no strength in the arm of flesh.

What glorious privileges have we! Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, is also our leader and protector through life's journey. Now we see him through a glass darkly, or as viewing him through a semi-transparent glass, or through a glass that is cloudy and dull as the ancient glassware; but then we shall see him face to face. O, let us then be faithful a little longer. Every commandment has a deep signification; if we cannot comprehend their full import now, yet if we obey in the letter and try to understand the best we can, the time will soon come when we will no longer know in part, but shall know even as also we are known.

HOW TO SPEND MONEY FOR THE LORD.

After seeing the invitation under the above heading, and observing the seeming reluctant respond to the call, I have deliberated upon a plan, and decided to transmit it upon paper. It will no doubt be handed to the readers of the PILGRIM, and must meet their general approval in order to be of any service to them, or the unborn thousands of human beings that must soon fill their places in the duties of this world.

I have only one consolation in the matter of its approval or disapproval and I need no other. Whatever it may merit it will receive. To give a plan with such illustrations showing its practicability and necessity as would be essentially necessary to deeply impress the people to whom it is addressed would occupy more time and space than I am now prepared to fill. Perhaps at some future time I will write more on this subject.

Early in our contemplated plan of using money for Christian benefit, we meet an obstacle that must in some practical way be disposed of. How shall the Church obtain the money, which it must obtain before it can properly discuss the question of its most prudent use. Has any of the brethren money that they would loan. The answer would be, yes, if we are to be safely secured and get our interest. The plan comprehends all these conditions, and will give satisfactory surties for the use of money should it become necessary to borrow.

But some say there is no use of drawing plans for the benefit of Christian influence, for it is progressing, and if each one will do his part, as an individual, all will go well. This is about the view that it is taken by very many persons whose intentions are good, but let us illustrate this proposition: A great military officer moves his army to the field of battle and orders a halt, and addresses his men, here is the enemy in sight. Now if each of you will do your duty, you will surely win, but I am not going to plan this battle or command; you are expected to fight as individuals and take care of yourselves. The fortunes of such a battle would be lost for want of a leader, a plan of battle, &c And so is much of that which is given for Church purposes lost for the want of a well matured plan upon which to devote it.

Our plan comprehends first the necessity of a state council at which each Church within, should be represented. That council to divide the state into as many districts as may be necessary, and each district furnished with one minister, and after assigning each minister to his work, we must ask how is this man to get his living and provide a support for a family? The answer has been already given, work for it. But this proposition is not in perfect keeping with a minister's stern duties. Can a commander of a large army perform all the duties of a common soldier, and command his army successfully? Certainly not, neither can any man devote his time to preaching and find sufficient time to perform the amount of labor necessary for his entire support.

Neither is it in perfect keeping with the principles of Christian duty that a preacher live entirely upon the assessments made upon the Church, and be thus provided with a strong inducement to rear his family in idleness, a vice into which some churches have run to an alarming extent. It then becomes our next object to provide for the common wants of each Minister, the first of which we will call a home, or station, to consist of not more than 30 acres of good land as favorably located as possible with sufficient improvements to render comfortable its inmates. To obtain this let as much of the purchase money be obtained by contribution as possible, and if no part can be thus obtained, let some one who has money to loan make the purchase for the church, in whose interest the property should be used, and to whom it must in all cases belong; they being required to work a gradual reduction of debt until the property should become an absolute accession to the Church. It would be a prudent use of Church money. The amount thus given would provide the Church with a station from which the Gospel could be preached all over a district without incurring any considerable travelling expenses. When a minister becomes restless or unworthy let his place be filled by another. Let the various districts meet once each year and hold a State communion, where a good effort should be made to kindle an interest in the cause of Christian duty. It would only be necessary to send a small amount of help to a minister in time of great urgency of his work, to enable him to live comfortable, and he would be thus freed, in mind, of some of the perplexities connected with getting a living, which often hinder ministers in preaching the Gospel. The duty of improving by the cultivation of trees and plants, those little homes, would afford the family a healthful and useful employment, and afford them part of a living. I might very appropriately add some comment upon the necessity of such a plan here in California, but suffice it to say that within a few miles of us there are people that do not know there is such a Church as the Brethren.

ABOMINATIONS.

For that which is highly esteemed among men, is an abomination in the sight of God. —Luke 16: 15.

A round colorless lapelled coat, a plain unfashionable print calico garment, or a plain coarse unbleached muslin cap, are things that are not an abomination to God except when they are highly esteemed among men. "There is nothing unclean of itself, but to him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." If the apostle meant inordinate affection, which I believe he does, then everything that can be known or mentioned except God himself, is an abomination with God when it is highly esteemed among men.

Big humps, big lumps and wildernesses of crimps and frills worn as raiment by women, and enormous, hideous masses of hair or bark piled on their heads surmounted by little platts, ornamented with lace ribbon, bird's tails &c., are abominations in the sight of God according to the degree at which they are esteemed or overestimated or "highly esteemed" among men. To be sure, the care and attention that men bestow upon them, and more particularly the manner of that care and attention shows that degree of estimation. Therefore let no one think himself to be somebody because of gay or vile raiment, else he is one who justifies himself before men, but God knows his heart, and his raiment, no matter whether vile or gay is abomination in the sight of God. As it is with raiment, so it is with food, and as it is with food so it is with all that is earthly, transitory, passing away. All these things are meant, by the apostle when he says, "But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, thou walkest not charitably, that is, if thou continuest to eat it while thy brother continues to be grieved, and of course if thou art aware of such grievance. J. B. GARVER.

GOD'S POWER.

Every great work of art tells of the toil of the artist. From bottom to top of the temple there is evidence of the labor of workmen. The hammer, saw, plane, and other implements are in constant use, even to construct the smallest buildings, nor is any work without the use of means. He commanded, and it stood fast. "His power sets fast the mountains," not by daily, yearly or continued labor, but by a word. And while it is good for us to speak of his love, mercy, goodness, it is equally good to "talk of his power."

He that loses his conscience has nothing left that is worth keeping.

LIBERTY.

If there is one thing that is especially dear to mankind generally, it is liberty, the fact is, it seems to be the great basis of all our actions in life. For it, the world is kept in a continual commotion, and to obtain and enjoy it, there is no sacrifice too great to be withheld. The great watchword is, "Give me liberty or give me death." There may be and is an undue desire for worldly or national liberty, and our zeal may carry us beyond the limit of christian obligation, but there is a liberty that we are justified in obtaining even at a sacrifice of our own life. We mean the liberty that is obtainable through Jesus Christ.

This liberty was purchased for us by an exceeding great price, so great that there was found but one that was able to cancel the great debt, and is free to all, on complying with the conditions on which it is promised. These conditions are faith, repentance, and baptism.

By an intelligent and voluntary compliance with these, we receive an heirship and become the adopted sons and daughters of God. These are rightly considered the primary conditions, and in regard to them there should be no diversity of opinions. But there is a code of secondary conditions that are necessary for our growth and perfection in the divine life, upon which we may slightly differ without afflicting our christian character or prospects of reward. That there are no advantages in this, we all readily admit, as the one-mindedness that was to characterize the disciples of Jesus is greatly to be desired, but it is the unavoidable outgrowth of the admixture of the carnal or fleshy, and the spiritual. Notwithstanding we have passed through the regeneration and received the power to become the children of God, yet we are in the flesh, and have its cravings to contend with. Even the apostle Paul, in all his holy zeal, could not be delivered, hence, his judgment, in regard to the minor points of doctrine, was sometimes tainted with this mixture of flesh and spirit as well as some of the other disciples. The circumcision, the eating of flesh, and the keeping of fast days, were things upon which slight differences of opinion were obtained, yet they did not excommunicate each other, nor cease to be disciples. The spirit of nonforbearance was largely developed in the minds of the twelve When they came across disciples who did not exactly walk with them, they were quite ready to pronounce the ban, but their Master teaches them somewhat different "He that is not against me is for me." We desire to impress this idea with power, upon the minds of every brother and sister. We are so apt to undervalue, and even ignore, the zeal of our brethren who slightly differ from us, even if they have as much divine sanction in their favor as have we. Here is where charity and christian forbearance ought to come in. Our established order will not save us, neither will it justify us in ignoring those of our brethren and sisters who may conscientiously differ from us, if they are in the faith, and are laboring for Jesus. The Bible is our order, it is the Brethren's order, and we acknowledge no other, neither is it our purpose to defend any other. The ancient landmarks which we wish to defend are not those set by men but by God as delivered through His Son and established by the Apostles. This is what our brethren preach, and what they expect us to publish. Then let us hear nothing more about "old order" nor "new order" but Christ and Him crucified. If our brethren do not see things exactly as we do, let us not rob them of their liberties, or judge them by any order or creed, as in our public preaching we deny in toto of having any such thing. We should extend the widest liberties to those who have become the heirs of this great salvation, and not refuse to fellowship them as long they consistently contend for sound doctrine. We should ever remember that ten may be right, and ten thousand wrong, or that ten may differ from ten thousand, and yet, all meet the approbation of God. I may eat flesh and enjoy a full liberty of conscience, my brother may abstain and enjoy equal liberties, but because we differ, we should not rob each other of our liberties. The Kingdom of God does not consist in meats and drinks, neither in the technical points in the observing of the ordinances of the Lord's House, but in the spiritual import. Every ordinance has its special design. This design is what we should seek after, that we may realize it, and not lose its power in seeking after the letter. We are not contending for liberalism nor radicalism, but Christianism. With the apostle Paul, let us determine to judge one another no more, but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way. Let us exercise forbearance one towards another, and if any of us think we are strong, let us bear the infirmities of the weak, thus following after things which make for peace, and may the God of peace and liberty abide with us all.

SET STAKES.

Some years ago we worked on the farm, and while at that vocation it fell to our lot occasionally to prepare the seed ground ready for the sower. This is done by making furrows a certain distance apart so as to form a gauge to the sower, that the seed may be evenly distributed over the surface. In order that these furrows may be straight, and an equal distance apart, it is necessary to have something to go by as a guide, and this guide consisted in a stake being set at a certain distance from the point from which we started. This stake is removed on every return to the point at which it stood, and placed at a certain distance from the last made furrow, and by this means we are enabled to make straight furrows, and the field is marked or gauged ready to sow.

The stake is set for a point at which to aim in order to make straight furrows, and thi principle may be applied in everything we do in life. If we wish to attain success in any undertaking, we must set our stake and keep our eye on it. No matter what our calling may be, this is the principle upon which we must necessarily act. If we wish to enter the calling of a farmer, our purpose generally is to procure a piece of land, provide it with the necessary buildings and raise it to the highest state of cultivation. This in many instances places the stake far ahead of us, so far that we are scarcely able to see it. But then, as we have done when making furrows, if the stake was to far ahead, we would sight to some object in range with it, in order to make the furrow straight, so we may do in this calling, or any other. We can set our stake far ahead, and then sight to something in range with it. For example, we may aim first to have our land paid for, and when we have reached this point, then we may aim to improve it, so as to make it produce bountifully, and then we may aim to put on it the necessary buildings &c., and then we have arrived at the stake we first set. If our labors are not yet ended on earth, we may set another stake and thus keep on until the whole field is marked, or until our time in which to labor is ended.

So it should be in obtaining an education. We should have some object in view for which our knowledge is to be acquired. We should set our stake, and I believe we should set it as far ahead as possible, and then direct all our energies towards the reaching of that point. By this I do not mean that we should aspire to have the name of being educated, or the praise of men; we should set our stake higher than this. God has given us talents that are to be used, and our aim should be to employ these so that when He comes to reckon with us, He may receive His own with usury. This is the point at which we should aim, and if we ever keep our eye firmly fixed upon this point, and strive to reach it until the close of our earthly career, then may we hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make the ruler over many things; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." The tho't of receiving such an approval from our Divine Master is surely the greatest incentive that can be presented. What is the praise of men, compared with the approval of our blessed Master? Then dear reader, when you are striving to obtain knowledge, be sure that you set your stake above the honor of this world.

We should make straight furrows. What crooked unsightly furrows some persons make in this world! They appear to set no stake at which to aim, and thus they ramble up and down through life without accomplishing anything. God has placed us in this world in order that we may honor and glorify Him. It is through us that He expects to sow and reap, and unless we set a stake, unless we have some purpose in view, our furrows will be crooked and unsighily, and thus the design of God, in us will be frustrated.

In our various callings and pursuits in this life if we pursue them with proper motives, we glorify God. All that we do should be done with an eye single to the honor and glory of God, and hence the pursuing of our various callings in life, with the proper object in view, may be as by marks in range with the great central point at which we should all aim—the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus. This point, dear reader, is in the distance so far that we cannot fully realize the blessedness of our condition when we arrive there. It is said, "Eye hath not seen, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the joys that God hath prepared for them that love Him." Of these unseen and unheard of joys we shall all partake when we reach that point. Let us then, endeavor to set our stakes in range with that great central object, and though it may apparently be far off, if we shrink from no duty, and falter at no difficulty, ever keeping our eye on the stake, put our trust in God, our efforts will surely, finally, be crowned with success. May God help us all to set our stakes aright.

WHAT SHALL BE THE SUBJECT?

Some of our contributors, who are interested in the great cause which we are laboring to advocate, and who desire to aid us, by writing for our columns, are asking us for subjects. This, we suppose is because they desire that their labors shall be as acceptable as possible. Some time ago, we gave a few general subjects for the consideration of our writers and we believe they all received some attention, but were by no means exhausted, as we thought them sufficiently important to command the attention of a greater number of our contributors, but we have concluded that our brethren and sisters, in this respect, are like ourselves, prefer to choose their own subjects. This we think is altogether right, as we have different gifts and our minds, through the influence of different circumstances are forced into different channels. But we wish to suggest a few ideas in regard to what should be our subject matter.

First we wish it understood that the PILGRIM is gaining a very respectable circulation outside of the membership. For this we have been laboring, and we are glad to know that our expectations are not in vain, not only in this fact, but we have the full assurance that it has been the means of accomplishing good, and of presenting the truth acceptably to the minds of some that could not otherwise be reached. Therefore we wish our writers to bear these facts in mind, and when writing, let the consideration be, how will this appear to the mind of the stranger, and what kind of an influence will it have upon the mind of the honest inquirer after truth? We wish to send the PILGRIM out into the world as a Missionary and want it to carry nothing but sound doctrine.

A second design is that it shall be a medium through which the Church can investigate the truth by the comparing of our different views with the Bible, and thus come to that sameness of mind so desirable in the body of Christ. To do this profitably and acceptably, requires much wisdom and christian charity. If these elements are not freely exercised, our investigations will lead to strife, envy and vain debatings. These things brethren and sisters, ought not so to be.

Another very prominent feature in the PILGRIM, is to preach the Gospel, especially to the poor and isolated. In this we have been doing a great and good work as many homes in the distant west and south who have not the privilege of attending meeting, are made to rejoice on the reception of the good news it brings to their doors every week. If our work is made the subject of fervent prayer by any, we believe it is by this class. Truly, to the poor the Gospel is preached, if by no other way, the PILGRIM does it.

Church news has become a great desideratum in the Church, so much so that we would scarcely know how to get along without it. In Paul's time he thought it necessary to go around to all the churches he had established "to see how they do." This information, we can now, to a very great extent, get through our periodicals, hence they have become a medium through which we learn of each other's welfare and the general prosperity of the Church.

Having thus set forth some of the designs of our work, it occurs to us that our readers should have a pretty general idea of what should be our subject matter. In short, brethren and sisters, whatsoever worketh for the peace and prosperity of the Church and the salvation of sinners, think of and write as the spirit may move.

A FEW WORDS TO OUR AGENTS.

The time has now come that our agents are getting to work and are asking for information as to how they shall proceed, &c. This is right, as every man should fully understand his business before he undertakes it. We shall always be happy to give our agents any information which may tend to their advantage or convenience.

Our first suggestion is, go to work and gather all the names you possibly can. Those that are prepared, let them pay at the time of subscribing. As many as can, let them pay by the beginning of the New Year. Those who cannot pay by that time, let them pay as soon as they can, or during the year. Do not refuse any that you have good reason to believe will pay during the year. To the worthy poor, members or no members, give it for whatever they feel able to pay. We cannot think of refusing any such who desire to read it, and we believe there are but few but what can pay a little. It is really the duty of the church to see that such are supplied with the PILGRIM and ought to contribute at least, part of it, but if the Church will not do it and there are those who desire to have it, try our liberality and we will do the best we can, but do not send us the name of such as you know to be doubtful pay.

As fast as you gather the names, send them on so that we may get them booked and send them their Almanacs. The money can be sent when you get a sufficient amount collected. At present we would prefer not to receive checks on doubtful banks. Wherever you can get postal orders, send them, if you cannot do this, send it in a registered letter. When agents do this, we allow them to deduct from the amount, the expenses of remitting. All amounts of $1.50 and under, may be sent at our risk if carefully put up and properly addressed.

As a remuneration to agents, we give the eleventh copy free, that is, any person sending us ten subscribers and $15,00 will get the eleventh copy for his trouble. For all names sent over this number, ten per cent off. For the percentage we will give any book or books noticed in our pages or the agents can divide it among themselves or deduct it from the whole amount.

All agents who prefer to distribute the Almanacs themselves can do so by letting us know the number they need. We however, wish it understood that we do not wish our agents to sell any Almanacs or give them to any but actual subscribers.

If you wish special information in regard to special cases, please write us and we will cheerfully give it. In soliciting subscribers, do not forget to inform them that the PILGRIM is to be enlarged and otherwise improved.

Now brethren and sisters, we are trying to do our duty by enlarging and improving our work, and we hope you will all make an effort to give us a corresponding increase of circulation so that we may be remunerated, in part, at least, for the extra labor and cost that will be necessary in order to publish the PILGRIM for the coming year.

SEND FOR ONE FREE.

Don't forget it, every subscriber gets a Pilgrim Almanac FREE. We have now commenced their distribution and are sending them out by scores. Now is the time, send in your names at once and get the best family Almanac ever published. It is the only complete Family Almanac ever published by the Church containing all the signs, the weather, prognostications, the "Hundred year Almanac" and everything else that is needful for a christian family to learn from an Almanac. It also contains a complete ministerial list, giving the name of the county to each address. This is an original feature with us and adds greatly to the value and interest of the list. All that have renewed their subscription, and all new subscribers will receive their Almanacs in a few days, as we are now sending them out as fast as we can get our lists in order.

OUR REMOVAL.

For several weeks we have been busily engaged in getting our building completed at Huntingdon where we expect to move as soon as it is ready. Our calculation was to have it ready by the first of November, but on account of unfavorable weather in the after part of the season and the early snap of cold, the work was delayed beyond our expectations. The house is now nearly completed and as soon as it gets sufficiently dry to make it safe, we expect to change locations. It will be noticed in the Almanac that our address is Huntingdon. This we done in order to avoid trouble after our removal. Our contributors and agents will please continue our present address until ordered to have it changed.

SHALL WE HAVE A REPORT OF A. M.

Some of our readers are already anxious to know whether we intend to give a report of A. M. Those who are aware of the course we pursued at last A. M., can feel assured that there will nothing be left undone on our part. The demand is so great for a full report that we cannot see how we could meet the expectation of our readers without giving it, and if A. M. does not take an absolute stand against it our readers need have no fears about not getting the report.

CHANGE OF MAKE UP.—This week our readers will notice a change in the make up of our form. The present arrangement will leave two whole pages for correspondence, obituaries, &c. We hope now our brethren and sisters will send us enough news every week to fill out these two pages. If there is not enough correspondence to fill them, we will put Youth's Department on the last page, but would prefer to have this department some where else, and fill the two last pages entirely with correspondence &c. We have made this arrangement so as to admit all the correspondence that may reach us each week, and that none be crowded out. Now brethren and sisters, please send along the news, and make our PILGRIM more and more interesting.

OUR CONDITIONS.

We are being asked whether our conditions for the coming year will be the same as the present year. In the main, we expect them to be the same, but would say to those who have the means, pay us at the time of subscribing or at the first part of the year. If all that can, will do this, it will enable us to meet our obligations and give a little more time to those who cannot pay cash or at the beginning of the year. All those who have not paid for the present year will be expected to pay before the beginning of the new year. 3t

AGENTS WANTED.

We want a good active agent, to solicit subscribers for the PILGRIM, in every Church in the brotherhood. If there are any that feel to labor for us and are not supplied with prospectus and Almanac will please write us and we will send by return mail. Remember, the PILGRIM for the coming year will be enlarged and every subscriber will receive the Pilgrim Almanac, handsomely gotten up, containing a "Ministerial List," giving post-office, county and State, with other valuable information FREE. 3t.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

THE BETHEL MISSION SCHOOL.

Perhaps some of your readers would be interested in a short sketch of this Sunday school, located in Cincinnati. The building in which the school meets, is situated quite a distance down town, even at the water's edge, where the proud steams come and go, bearing their burdens from city to city. We followed the crowd as strangers do when attending Beecher's church in Brooklyn. After climbing a fatigning flight of stairs, we found ourselves in what by the hum, might have been mistaken for a bee hive, so busy was each worker. We found seats where we could command a good view of the room—and such a sight as was there presented. Imagine if you can, fourteen hundred children, ranging in age from mere babes to fathers and mothers. The school is composed of the poor of the City, news boys, ragmuffins, &c, regular "Street Arabs" who are induced from various motives to come. At the close of the session, each one receives a ticket, by presenting, which they can obtain food and clothes. A penny collection is also lifted, to defray incidental expenses—if their poverty they cast in their mite, far outweighing the costly offerings of the rich. Rewards are given to each one who induces any of their companions to attend the school, thus making missionaries of every one, and giving them a field of labor. Teachers being absent, I was prevailed on to teach a class of five interesting little girls, and during the brief hours of our intercourse, I became really attached to them, the attachment of sympathy for their forlorn condition. The children are taught to sing God's praises, each one receiving a song paper at the entrance. It does one good to hear with what hearty good will each and every one enters into the service. Their many happy voices in unity with the Organ and the Superintendent's voice, produced a pleasing effect. After the singing came the reading and oral lessons, then more singing and the final prayer, in which the whole school stands, with folded arms and bowed, and repeat "Our Father who art in Heaven" and "Now I lay me" &c.

The main room, side rooms, and galleries, were so densely packed, it seemed almost impossible for another person to find sitting room, and yet I am told that there are as many as twenty five hundred present at times. It is indeed a good and great work; the many can be reached by Gospel influence in this way, that would never be in any other. A good word dropped, may, after many days, bring forth an abundant reward. I came away feeling thankful for the lesson I learned in humanity's needs, and ready to speak a good word for the earnest advocates of truth. May God speed his work. L. H. MILLER.

ANSWER TO QUERY BY J. H. F.

NO 46 PAGE 367.

The scripture referred to, will be found in the 3rd chapter and 9th verse of the first Epistle general of John. By the ability God may give, I will present my views. "Whoever is born of God doth not commit sin." To be brief, there never was a birth, without a conception, but there are different conceptions and different births, John 1: 13. We can be born of blood, of the will of man, of the flesh, or of God. The last birth is the one that we now have under consideration. Now the word of God is the seed that causes the conception, and it abideth not alone but dieth. "The letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive." The body is dead because of sin, the former things which he loved he now hateth. The seed, the word of God, has now become the spirit and life. He is now secured as was Noe. See Gen. 7: 16. God closed the door and they were all saved from the destruction of the flood. This favor Noe obtained by obeying God, and when he had complied with all the requirements, God closed the door. So if we abide in the doctrine of Christ, we have both the Father and the Son, and that seed that remains within us is like a consuming fire. If we build on that foundation, wood, hay, or stubble, we shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved yet so as by fire. So then if we are the Sons of God, the spirit of God is within us, and the body is dead because of sin, so that if we come short of our duty toward God, it is no longer I that do it but the evil that is within the flesh. When God closes the door and we are within, we are of that number of which the apostle writes: "Blessed is the man whose sins are forgiven, and whose iniquities are covered.

But there is another feature to be considered. In the first Epistle of John 1st chapter and 8th verse, it is said: "If we say we have no sin, we disceive ourselves and the truth is not in us." So that as long as we are at home in the body, sin is within us, for there is no man that sinneth not. Kings 8: 6. But the seed cannot sin because it is of God, and he has closed the door. He will not forget your labors of love that you have shown towards his name.

I might go on talking about many things, but will let this suffice for the present, knowing that if this will be inserted in the PILGRIM it will appear before my dear brethren, whom I hope if they see any thing wrong, will correct and make it right. Such are some of the things that ought to be taken into consideration in our periodicals. JACOB STEEL.

Dear Pilgrim:—As you are still soliciting Church news, I wil give you some from this part of God's moral vineyard. Our communion season is over, and I will endeavor to give a report of the same, but will commence first with the meeting at Knob Creek Church. Quite a number of members participated in the communion exercises, and good order prevailed throughout the entire congregation. Some were added to the Church by baptism on Saturday. This Church, I am informed, has been in a prosperous condition during the summer that is now passed.

On the second Sunday of Sept. we had a call meeting here in the Limestone Church, and two young persons were added to the Church by baptism. According to arrangement, our Communion meeting was on the fourth Saturday and Sunday of September. There was a pretty large attendance of members, and one soul was added to the Church of the faithful on Saturday. There was good order during the entire meeting.

On the second Saturday of October, mother and I went to a Communion meeting in the Cherokee Church. At this place three persons were added to the Church, two of them husband and wife, and it was said they were nearly 90 years of age. A large crowd was present and good order. There was also preaching on Sabbath.

The Pleasant Valley meeting was on the third Saturday and Sunday of October. There was a large attendance, good order, and some added to the Church. On the fourth Sunday brother Joseph Long, of Md., preached to us at Limestone to a very attentive congregation. We were sorry that he made such a short stay. He came in the morning and left again in the evening. We hope that other brethren in the East will remember us and give us a call, as we will be very glad to have them visit us oftener.

On Thursday morning, Oct. 30th, I started alone, on horseback, for Laurel, Washington Co., Va. I stopped at uncle and brother Christian Wine's for dinner and then on to brother Joseph Wine's, Sullivan Co., Tenn., where I remained all night. I was kindly received and cared for, although his family were unwell. His wife had recently a spell of sickness, and has yet a severe cough and cold. The rest are also severely afflicted with cold and cough. I had expected to have brother Wine accompany me, but as his family was unwell, he could not leave home. On Friday morning I started very early knowing I would have to ride all day alone. I went on through Blountville, the county seat of Sullivan to Bristol where the East Tenn., Va. & Ga., & Atlantic Miss. & Ohio R. Rs. connect. The State line runs through this town. I then went on to Abingdon, the county town of Washington county, Va. As I passed along through this section I saw some very nice farms. From Abingdon I went on to Laurel river, 13 miles distant. Arrived at friend Daniel Rosenbalm's in the evening. Same evening went to Laurel school house to meeting. Here I met with brother Solomon G. Arnold, from Limestone who was on his way back from a Communion meeting in Ashe Co., N. C., and brother Prater from N. C., and the brethren of Laurel. After services had commenced, brother Jesse Crosswhite of Cherokee, and Joseph Ellit of Stony Creek were added to our company. Preaching by brother Prater to an attentive congregation. On Saturday, Nov. 1st, at 11 a. m. preaching again. At 4 p. m. the subject of self-examination was treated by brother Crosswhite. In the evening the members present performed the ordinances as the Savior has commanded. Had a crowded house and good order with a few exceptions. On Sunday the 2nd, at 11 a. m. preaching again by brother Crosswhite to an attentive congregation. At 4 p. m. brother Crosswhite conducted a singing, and after singing we went to friend Henry Mock's, to the funeral of sister Emeline Wright, consort of brother Wm. Wright, of Johnson Co., Tenn. She died from the breaking of an internal abscess. She was a member of the Church over six years. The funeral occasion was improved by brother Crosswhite, from the 23rd Psalm, to a large and attentive audience. From here we went to friend Rosenbalm's, where we remained all night. On the morning of the 3rd I started for home and soon got in company with brother Arnold. We rode together until we got across the Watauga river, Washinton Co., Tenn. Here we separated and I went to brother and cousin John Sherfy's where I met with a kind reception, and was well cared for during the night. In the morning I started on my way home and arrived there in the afternoon. Found all well. Thanks be to God for the manifestation of his goodness in permitting me to meet with my brethren and sisters who came from far and near to commemorate the death and sufferings of our blessed Redeemer, who bled and died on the cross for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world.

Yours truly,
HENRY M. SHERFY.

CRAIG, Holt Co., Mo., Nov. 9, '73.

Dear Pilgrim:—By your permission I will, through your columns, give my opinion of this part of Missouri. From what I have seen of Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and the far West in general, I have come to the conclusion that persons can do as well here in Holt Co., Mo., in a temporal point of view as anywhere else in the far western States. It is true, it is very cold in the winter, and rather warm in the summer. It does not, however, become so extremely warm in the summer. At present the weather is beautiful, almost like in May. The climate is healthful. The health of the people for the last three years has been remarkably good. Myself and family have never enjoyed better health than we have since we came to this part of Missouri. Taking all into consideration, I have come to the conclusion that a person cannot make a living as easily, and live as pleasantly anywhere in the far west as here. To the brethren and friends who want to move west, I would say, come here, and judge for yourselves. You can get homes here improved or unimproved, at low figures. Tracts of land can be had containing from 40 acres up to as large as any man would want. Brethren and friends, you who have a hard way of making an honest living in the East, come to Missouri. I can assure you it does not take half of the labor to raise a crop here that it does in places in the East. I have hitherto said but little about the country, and the reason was I wanted to become acquainted with it first. I am now satisfied that this is the place for all working people to come.

A CALL FOR HELP.

I will now change the subject, by telling you our want. We want a house in which to worship the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and our God in spirit and in truth. Now dear brethren, if there is a house needed anywhere it is here, and as we are few in number and in rather limited circumstances, we are not able to build one ourselves. As the building material is all bought in our cities, and brought from other States, it is high in price. Lumber sells from 3 to 5 dollars per hundred. We only want a small and plain house, but still it will cost more than we are able to pay ourselves. Now brethren and sisters, we do not want to beg money for anything but a good purpose, and will simply ask all who are willing and able to give us $1.00 or 50 cents apiece. If all will do this, I believe the house will be built. Now this is a very small amount that we ask of you, and then only those who are able and willing. Who among us is not able and willing to give this very small amount towards the building of a house for the worship of God? Who is he? Time will tell. I have helped to build and repair seven meeting-houses in my time, and have paid towards the same 175 dollars. Now I am again where there is no meeting house, and am a very poor man as respects this world's goods, but thanks be to God, I am rich in Christ, and humble in spirit. May the blessing of God attend us, and the Holy Spirit rule and overrule our words and actions, so that all we do may be to the honor and glory of His great Name. The will of the Lord be done is the prayer of your weak Bro.

A. J. CORRELL.

P. S. All that wish to send us their mite can do so between this and the 1st of January 1874. We will give the amount received by that time or soon after. If we receive enough so that we can risk to build, we want to commence in the Spring as soon as possible. Money may be sent to any of the following brethren: A. J. Correll and Isaac Zeigler, Craig, Holt Co., Mo.; Joseph Glick, Joel Glick, and John Miller, Mound City, Holt Co., Mo.; Isaac Wampler, Samuel Glick and Jacob Silvoise, Forest City, Holt Co., Mo. A. J. CHURCH NEWS.

On the 7th of November, I was conveyed, by my wife and son to Huntington, and and there took the train for Ft. Wayne. Here I changed roads and went on the Grand Rapids road to Louden Station, where brother James Harvey met me and conveyed me to his home where I had some rest and refreshment. Then he took me to a Methodist meetinghouse for preaching. A small congregation in consequence of bad roads and a dark rainy evening. After preaching I was again conveyed to brother Harvey's for a night's rest which I needed very much.

On Saturday the 8th, I was conveyed to brother Henry Smith's where the members of the Cedar Creek District met for church council. Elders John Brown, Shatt, and Christ Weaver, were with us in council. The meeting was opened in order. Then came up the business for the day, which was the dividing of the aforesaid district. As the territory of the district was very large, and meeting places rather inconvenient, after a careful consideration and a good deal of counseling, some in favor of making two, some three, and some four districts, the vote was taken, whether three or four. It carried for four by a large majority. There are four ministers in the district, and they so located that it suits well, and gives territory plenty to each one to make large churches. Brethren Jeremiah and Jacob Gump are both Elders, and the other two are not. So brother Jacob Gump was chosen and appointed to take the oversight of those two districts that have no one in the full ministry. Brother Jeremiah Gump has also charge of two districts besides the one in which he lives. The name of Jacob Gump's district is Cedar Creek; Jeremiah Gump's, White Oak Grove; James Barton's, Cedar Lake, and Harrison Ellson's, Little St. Jo. The meeting closed by singing and prayer. After partaking of a meal, Bro. Ellson conveyed me to a Winebrenerian meetinghouse for preaching. A very comfortable house, where we preached Saturday evening, Sunday and Sunday evening. Notwithstanding the nights were dark, roads bad, and the weather unfavorable, we had large congregations, and good attention, except a few individuals. May the Lord pity them. The other ministers divided and preached in other neighborhoods. We don't believe in a half dozen ministers at one meeting, and at other places people almost starving for the want of preaching.

On Monday morning Brother Jacob Gump took me in his carriage some nine miles to his house, where we had some rest and dinner. Then he took me to the station, and the trains having changed time, I missed all connection, so he took me to Bro. George Gump's. Bro. George took me to Ft. Wayne, a distance of ten miles, where I took the train for Huntington. Here I was met by my son and conveyed home a distance of seven miles. Got home after night. I found all well, thank the Lord. May the Lord bless the brethren and sisters for their kindness shown toward me. My prayer is that they may live in peace, and be a light to the world, so that the Church may prosper and be powerful. SAMUEL MURRAY.

HUTCHISON, Kansas, Nov. 16, 1873.

Dear Brethren:—As I have moved to Kansas, I wish my paper changed to the above address. There are only three members living here in this part of the state that we know of. We hope that some of the Brethren as they pass this way, will stop and preach for us. We have a beautiful country and the climate very favorable, as there is, at this date, some green grass to be seen three or four inches long. We enjoy good health and think the land is as good as in Ill. There is plenty of land here yet for homesteads and preemption rail road lands, at very low rates on 16 years time. There is a good opening here for to build up a church. Our neighbors all say, write for some preachers to come and preach for us. We all want preaching. I hope some of the brethren will, at least, come and look at the country for themselves. The town of Hutchison is only two years old and now has about 600 inhabitants, a court house, a school house and a settlement 18 miles west of it. Now dear brethren I am not capable of doing much writing, but I love to read the columns of your excellent paper. M. V. WAMPLER.

CLARENCE, Mich. Nov. 24th, '73.

Kind Brethren:—I have seated myself to drop you a few lines. It is different with me to what it is with most of our brethren. We have not the opportunity to assemble with our people in public worship or in private conversation. We are too far away from where there are any other brethren, but we are happy to say that we had three visits from Brother F. P. Leohr last winter, and had very good meetings, and three obeyed the Gospel and are enrolled with the believers to live and to die. We would be very thankful for more such visits from our ministering brethren. Bro. Leohr has promised to visit us frequently, if his health would permit, but the last he wrote me, it was very poor, but I hope he has regained it, and will come to see us soon. Brethren count my name for the PILGRIM for the coming year. We are will pleased with its visits and would be very lonely without it.

MOSES MOIST.

Dear brother:—It has been a query in my mind, why it is, that the Gospel is so little preached in the German language at the present day, while there are still, connected with the Church, quite a number of persons that have their education in the German language, and who could better understand a discourse delivered in the German than in the English language. JOHN BETHKE

This may be a query of some importance to others. If so, we would be glad to hear their views on the above. [ED.]

EXPLANATION ON 1ST JOHN 3: 9.

If a man is thoroughly changed or converted to God, God dwelleth in him, or in other words, God through the influence of His holy spirit, His seed, takes possession of the heart, consequently he cannot commit sin, because God lives in him and he in God—he is born of God.

A PILGRIM.

ROBISON'S ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

This Work is now entirely out of print, and copies cannot be purchased from the publishers. I therefore adopt this method of getting the work to examine. If any brother has a copy and will sell it, he will please inform me immediately. The book is very valuable and hence parties owning the work, may not be willing to sell. If they are willing to loan it, they will give me notice to that effect and I will then inform them how to send the work. I will pay for transportation both ways, and also for the use of the book if demanded. Many of those old books are now entirely out of print, and the only way left to get them is to borrow. J. H. MOORE.

Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill.

NOTICE—There will be a series of meetings held in the Maple Grove Meeting-house, Ashland Co., Ohio, commencing January 3, '74, and perhaps will close on the evening of the 11th. A general invitation is extended to ministering brethren and others to be with us. By order of the church. WM. SADLER.

DIED.

SMALL—In the Falling Spring Congregation, Sister Elizabeth Small, aged 24 yrs, 6 months and 14 days. She departed this life rejoicing in the Lord. J. ZUCK.

SHOWALTER—Near Crooked Creek, Mcpherson Co., Kansas, Susan F., daughter of friend Amos Showalter, and granddaughter of David and Sarah Moore, aged 4 years, 10 months,—days. She came to her death, July 19, '73, from the bite of a rattle-snake.

Alas how changed that lovely flower,
Which bloomed and cheered my heart;
Fair fleeting comforts of an hour,
How soon we're called to part.

SARAH MOORE.

CROILL.—November 2, '73, in Snake Spring Valley Church, Bedford Co., Pa., sister Sarah Croill, aged 25 years, and 11 days. Funeral service by the Brethren from 1st Cor. 15: 51 52.

Our dear sister, though young in years, has been a bright example in the church, and in her death has been bereft of a kind sister, and the husband of a kind and affectionate wife. Her last request was that the brethren should pray for her husband, that he too should make preparations to follow her. May those words sink deep in her husband's heart and enable him to enter the fold of Jesus, and follow his dear wife.

About a year ago sister Croill, with her husband and uncle, Simon Mixel, moved to Covington, Miami Co., Ohio,—enjoyed the kindness of the brethren and sisters very much at that place, but during the Summer season her health was not so good, and some cholera raging there, they made up their minds to return to the mountains, but sickness and death rages there too. They were only here about two months when our sister took sick and died very suddenly with neuralgia in the stomach

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

In the December Magazines we are introduced to a rich feast of good things. It seems to us a marvel that there are still those who seldom taste the palatable, and wholesome food here spread out, monthly, for their enjoyment and profit

The Atlantic for December completes the 32d. volume and is filled with its usual variety of valuable articles. This periodical for 1874 promises to be quite as varied and attractive as ever before. Many of the best writers in the land are employed on the Atlantic, and it discusses with ability the leading questions of the day. To miss a number is to miss a treat..

Old and New is a new but welcome visitor to our table. The December number closes the 8th volume, and judging from its table of contents, for the volume, we should say its readers must have been well entertained. Here is its motto:

"Gently and without grief the Old shall glide
Into the new; the eternal fear of things,
Like a bright river of the fields of heaven,
Shall journey onward in perpetual peace.

Popular Science Monthly has already taken a high place among the leading periodicals of the age. We are all greatly interested in the scientific subjects which it discusses from the stand-points of the leading scientists of the age and time. We confess that we had no idea of the value of this monthly until we had the privilege of perusing its numbers. Herbert Spencer's articles are intensely interesting. Prof. Perrier's researches and experiments are of vast importance. Every author is a master of his subject. Illustrated.

Scribner's for December is we think the best number yet issued of that favorite magazine. The second article on Louisiana, profusely illustrated, opens the number; this is followed by a paper on "Savage Man" with striking illustrations. An interesting sketch, with portrait of Proctor the young English astronomer now in this country.—A poem—"Luke"—A poem by Bret Harte, besides an abundance of interesting matter

Lippincott's for December is an unusually attractive number. It opens with a continuation of "A New Hyperion" illustrated by Dore's characteristic sketches; which is followed by "Sketches of Eastern Travel," "Life at the National Capitol," "The History of the Crisis," a timely and able article on our present financial difficulties. Several poems of merit, and several entertaining articles complete the number and year.—The January number begins a new volume and rare attractions are promised.

Harper's. This is the opening number of a new volume—the 48th—of this well established and sterling periodical. There are several profusely illustrated articles—"The Water Ways of New York" "Around Lake Leman" &c. &c. Then we have "A Golden Wedding" a poem by H. R. Hudson, illustrated, which will doubtless awaken pleasing memories in the minds of many who are on the declivities of life. It is a capital number. The Harpers' periodicals Magazine, Weekly and Bazar together give an amount of finely illustrated reading matter in a year that is surprising, and which could not be purchased in books for four times the cost.

St. Nicholas, for December, the second number of Scribner's new Magazine for the young, is as bright and full of good things as the first issue. There are 40 pictures this month. It is a perfect success. Its monthly visits cannot fail to delight and please the children.

The Nursery is the name of a monthly magazine for youngest readers published by John L. Shorey, Boston Mass., at $1.50 per year, fully illustrated. This little magazine is worth 25 dollars of tuition at school to a child. With Pilgrim $2.50.

In Wood's Household Magazine for November, the table of contents seem to have been spread for a Thanksgiving feast, and gives evidence of unabated efforts to add to its excellence. It contains an article from the pen of Rev. Robert Colyer of Chicago which is well worth a year's subscription. It is a marvel of cheapness, the price being only $1 00 per year and with the chromo of "Yosemite," 14x20 inches only $1.50. Mag. Chromo & Pilgrim $2.50.

The Phrenological Journal, for November, confirms the oft-repeated opinion of the Press at large, that no one can read that publication without deriving some practical good. It is full of meat for the mind, well served and savory. Witness articles like these: Rev. Dr. Blanchard, Pres. of Wheaton University; The Briton, the Inspirational Race; Our Immortality; Growth in Character and Heart; Conversations about faces, with numerous illustrations; Money, Its Functions and Requirements, which our Capitalist should all Read; Application of Art to Dress; Wives who henpeck; Address to Young Men; The Late Panic; Failures in Business; Intemperance. Price 30 cents. $3.00 a year. Write at once to the Publisher, and secure the volumes for 1874, (S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York,)or we will send,the Pilgrim and Journal one year to any address at $3.50 per year. Sample copies of the Phrenological Journal sent from this office on receipt of 3 cent stamp to pay postage.

The first number of the International Review will have contributions from several of the ablest minds in America and Europe. Let every one who wishes to obtain the freshest views on all subjects, commence with the first number and continue.

THE STRAIT GATE.

BY WESLEY.

Strait the gate that leads to glory,
Dimly seen by mortal eye,
Heralds tell a pleasing story
As the sinner passes by.

Enter in 'tis sweetly ringing,
Life and power He will impart,
Sighing will be turned to singing,
If thou yield to Him thy heart.

Enter in, O, why thus standing
Idly all the sunny day?
See around the threshold bending,
Lovely forms in bright array.

Prostrate now his grace imploring,
Seek the narrow way of life;
Thy unworthiness deploring
Leave the path of sin and strife.

Persevere till faith's keen vision
Penetrate impending night,—
Strengthened by a firm decision,
Thou shalt hail celestial light.

Prayer will soon reveal the beauty
That o'erhangs the pilgrim's way;
'Tis the path of faithful duty
Ending in eternal day.

Lions fierce thy soul to frighten,
By the way may hoarsely roar,
But thy hope again shall brighten,
They are chained by Jesus' power.

Haste thee then, no longer tarry,
Leave the thorny path of sin;
To the gate thy burden carry,
And with praises enter in.

Walk the narrow way to Heaven,
Firm the cross and banners bear,
And when flesh and soul are riven
Thou shalt sing with Him in air.

Then the golden gate shall open
To admit thy happy soul;
Then shall culminate thy hoping
In fruition's joyous roll.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

NO. III.

"Woman, behold thy son." "Behold thy mother."—John 19 : 26-27.

I. THE MOTHER'S CARE FOR HER SON.

1. His physical culture. Nothing should be of more vital importance to the mother in the care for her son than his culture. The true mother carefully watches his physical development. The food that is best adapted to such a development is cautiously selected for him. Strong meat is kept from him until he arrives at a proper age to receive it, at first he is only permitted to receive the sincere milk. The mother's delight is in her son's hale and hearty appearance, the rosy cheek, the bright eye, and the strong full muscle. To secure his proper physical culture, he is clad with proper raiment, such as will protect him from the heat in Summer, and the cold in Winter. He is not permitted to walk first, lest he become deformed, thus her never tiring vigilance enables her to successfully care for his physical culture.

2. His mental culture. The child is a great learner. The mind is constantly engaged in finding out something. It is a great imitator. The mother knowing this, she directs her son's attention to many different acts performed by her, and to various objects of size and color. The mother is the greatest and most successful, as well as the most persevering of all teachers. Therefore her words should be well chosen of correct language, for she has the foundation of all the arts and sciences to lay. Hence if the child is incorrectly instructed in his first years, he will require much remodeling, and perhaps never be completely exempt from the errors of early instruction. What is put into the first of life, is put into the whole of life. It is more expensive to pull down and rebuild the mental faculties, than the physical structure.

3. His moral culture. The mother should be strictly moral in her habits. The son should always be taught by word and example to speak the truth, and to act the truth. He should have no examples of deception to learn from. The virtue of honesty should be highly prized, seeing the great want of it among men and nations. He should be taught to be just—to do that which is fair and right, and that will bear inspection. Many children, as well as many men, do not like to have their word or work examined on account of their improper moral culture.

4. His spiritual culture. This division of the subject is of paramount importance. Timothy had the advantage of this early pious culture, from his mother Eunice. Paul says of him, "And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Tim. 3 : 15. This spiritual culture he received from his mother and grandmother. Paul says, "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also."=2 Tim. 1 : 5. Just here I will remark to all mothers, in your great care for your sons, sow early and continually those spiritual seeds which will grow into a holy and pious life. The garden of the heart is yours to till. How easy cultivated before the thorns and noxious weeds of sin and folly take root therein. Your influence for good in shaping your son's spiritual life, and securing for him a happy end in glory, is of more value than the influence of many preachers in after years. Many pious and good men can testify that the teachings of a pious mother had more influence upon them in bringing them to Christ, than all advice or instruction received elsewhere. Mothers, your care stands first, stands last, and stands high above all others in moulding character and in christianizing the world. "Woman, behold thy son!" Yes, behold him and see what you can make of him by proper care, or suffer him to become by neglect and indifference. "Woman, behold thy son!" is the Lord's command, and is full of weight and power.

5. Spiritual application. The elder should care for the younger in the household of faith. The Church is the mother of all her servants—preachers. They have been brought forth (born of her) by her, and it is her highest duty to care for their physical, mental and spiritual wants. It is by her we are led to pastures rich and fair. She gently leads us along step by step, until finally, we shall become perfect men and women in the Kingdom of our Father in glory.

II. THE SON'S CARE FOR HIS MOTHER.

1. Her physical comforts. Jesus said unto the disciples whom he loved, "Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home."—John 19 : 27 As the mother's first care is to provide for her son, so also it is the son's first duty to supply his mother with the necessaries of life. But how could Jesus with propriety say, "Behold thy mother!"? It is because we are all one family in Christ. Having become the sons and daughters of God by adoption, Jesus said unto his disciples on one occasion, "Behold My mother and My brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of My Father in Heaven, the same is My brother, and sister and mother."—Matt. 12 : 49-50. No doubt the mother of Jesus had all the benefits that disciple's home could command, fed, clothed and protected by loving and well directed hands, "own home" means much.

2. Her spiritual enjoyments. The advantage of religious society cannot be over estimated. The Son of God upon the cross knew well by experience what it was to be homeless, and without a place where to lay his head, and also the enjoyment it afforded to be with those that love us. The son's sympathies are such for his mother, as to rejoice when she rejoices, and to weep when she weeps. Around the family altar of that beloved son, this mother could have her spiritual wants daily supplied, such enjoyments as pious and God-fearing mothers delight in.

3. Spiritual application. The younger should reverence and respect the elder as well as be in subjection unto them. It teaches us how careful we should be in taking care of those widows who are left and bereaved in this cold and unsympathizing world. "Honor widows that are widows indeed."—1 Tim. 5 : 3. The elders also are worthy of our care, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in word and doctrine."—1 Tim. 5 : 17.

III. JESUS' CARE AND PROVISION FOR ALL HIS PEOPLE.

1. In time. Jesus is that good and faithful shepherd that provides well for the lambs of the flock. He ever taught His disciples how they should love one another. In the closing scenes of His life He taught that mutual care that one should have for the other, which is so necessary for the welfare of His much loved kingdom. In calling that disciple's attention to behold his mother, a practical lesson is taught us. He shows us how he wishes us to look upon the needy and administer unto their wants. The widows are to be cared for, not to be sent to the poor-house, as many are of the so-called Christian denominations, but to be received into our own home; there to eat of what we eat, to wear of what we wear, and to share and enjoy of the blessings that God has blessed us with. I fear that the Church is prone to attempt to keep its poor a little too cheap. Remember Jesus' provision. He says as ye do it unto the least of these My brethren ye do it unto Me. Would you select or accept the shabbiest house in the community,—one that nobody else wants and give it to Jesus to live in, and there to subsist upon that which will just and perhaps poorly keep Him warmed and fed? There are many I kindly ask to think of their own home, when making provision for the poor. Remember the rich man had his good things in his life-time, and Lazarus his evil things. But mark the contrast after death, the one is tormented, while the other is blessed. The rich man was not tormented because he was rich, but because he neglected the poor. Jesus made much more provision, and bestowed much more care upon His people, than we can discuss in this article, yet there is another class that we wish to call the attention of the Church to; viz. those who are called and sent to preach the glad tidings of great joy to all people. Jesus had great care for such. When He was with his disciples, He sent them out to preach the Gospel and to heal the sick, saying, "Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor script, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece."—Luke 9: 3. But just before he was crucified He gave them quite different directions. He called His disciples unto Him and said, "When I sent you without purse, and script, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said nothing. Then said He unto them, but now he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his script."—Luke 22: 35 36. Now the Church calls and sends its ministers forth, should it not enquire if they lack anything? I am very sure that there are many willing servants of the Church, who have been called to the ministration of the Word of God, by the Church, who could and would do much more for the good of Zion, and for the good of precious blood-bought souls if they were not so often sent empty away.

We say sent empty, because the Church expects the poor brother to do as much labor and to bear his own expense in doing it, as the rich brother who has abundant means at his command. Now brethren, this is contrary to reason, the love of God, the Gospel and the Lord's provision. "Woman, behold thy son!" Paul says, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we reap your carnal things? Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.—1 Cor. 9: 11, 13, 14. But says one, Paul labored—worked with his own hands, and desired none of these things, &c. True, and so do all of your poor preachers. And upon the same ground you should not call or send any man to preach the Gospel who is not like Paul—unmarried. Yet notwithstanding Paul had no family to provide for, he received aid from the Church to carry on his mission. Says he, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service, for that which was lacking to me the brethren, which came from Macedonia supplied."—2 Cor. 8: 9. I will just here remark what an old and faithful servant of the Lord said to me about a year ago, one who has preached the Gospel for about thirty years, says he, "We have some brethren worse than barbarians." And he gave me the testimony. When Paul was cast on the Island of Melitia it is written, "And the barbarous people showed us no little kindness; who also honored us with many honors, and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary."—Acts 28: 2, 10. For brethren to ask (and many rich brethren ask it by their actions), their preachor who is in limited circumstances, to study the Scriptures, and to "show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," to preach the word, to be instant in season and out of season, to visit the sick and to minister unto their spiritual wants, to attend every funeral that he may be called upon to attend, to provide for his own house that h· be not worse than an infidel, and in addition to all this, to spend more of his own hard earnings to serve the church than the richest brother in his congregation pays into the church treasury, is asking more than they will be able to give a reason for, when they shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ. "Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—1 John 3 17. I am happy however to know, that while the Church as a body, has not been doing as much as it might, there are many brethren in the Church who are very charitable in giving unto their preacher those things that are necessary, and in inquiring if they lack anything. May God forever bless them for their labors of love, for the Lord's cause.

2. In eternity. Jesus said unto His disciples, "I go to prepare a place for you." "In My Father's house are many mansions." Rich are the provisions that Jesus has made for all His people in the world to come. He has made these provisions for all those who do His commandments,—all things whatsoever He has said unto them. Glory unspeakable and pleasures that never cease. Great will be the care that He, the Light of the city of God, will bestow upon the saints in the evening of this world, when He shall have gathered them from the East and the West, the North and the South, and have made them to sit down to that rich repast in His Father's Kingdom, and will gird Himself and come forth and serve them.

In conclusion, "Behold the man!" See how wonderfully His mind was engaged for the human family while He was hanging on the cross. He desired the pardon of those who crucified Him, had mercy on him who believed and repented, and made those wise and necessary provisions for the household of faith. "Woman, behold thy son!" "Behold thy mother!"

TOO LONG.

On this phrase, at the head of this essay, I will make some suggestions, in order to show the importance of the two words, because they may be properly applied to show the imprudence of our conduct, and in this sense, we will now use them. We are so forgetful, hence an occasional reminder may serve as a caution; a word to the wise is sufficient.

When we come to meeting fifteen or twenty minutes after the appointed time we have either slept too long or have not arranged our matters the day previous as we should have done, so that in the morning we had too much to do; hence it took us too long to make an early start, to be in time to hear the introduction and prayer, the most important point, to prepare the mind for the solemn services of God. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, &c. When our exhortation to prayer is prolonged to ten or twenty minutes in our public meetings, and a little sermon preached, we have forgotten the injunction of Paul, "I exhort therefore, that first of all, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men," (I Tim. 5: 1,) and also have violated the instructions of our general council. Hence too long, says the audience, we get tired of it, and is anti-Scriptural.

If we continue our prayers to an unusual length in our public meetings, we are likely using vain repetitions, and are not complying with the words of the Savior, "But when ye pray, use no vain repetitions." Therefore it is not only imprudent, but in opposition to the teachings of Christ. I have frequently noticed in public meeting when long prayers are made, that the hearers become very restless and inattentive. When we come together to teach the people the unsearchable riches of Christ, the intention is not to have a meeting of prayer, but of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ; hence let us not consume half of that time in singing and prayer. We have our family worship, our social meeting, and other occasions that we should avail ourselves of in singing the beautiful songs of Zion, and offering praises to God. Yes, brethren and sisters, how often could we spend our time better to the honor and glory of God in such a way as in useless talk and vain conversation. But do not understand me to mean that we should have no singing and prayer at our public worship. No, no, singing revives the soul and stirreth up the minds of the hearers from drowsiness and lethargy, and fervent prayer is necessary to draw the blessings of God upon us, and secure His presence and help, so much needed in the solemn assemblies. Let your words be few, earnest, and the pure desire of your heart, and for the express purpose then needed; singing, the same way, and depend upon it, God will hear you and grant what ye need without a multiplicity of words, for He knoweth your desires.

Preaching may be too long, when not interesting. A sermon historical if too long, is wearisome, and not calculated to benefit very much. A doctrinal discourse is calculated to instruct and enlighten the mind, and if earnestly and intelligently delivered, may not be so easily too long. Paul at Rome, to the Jews "expounded and testified of the Kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the Law of Moses and out of the prophets from morning until evening."—Acts 28: 23. Exhortations are beneficial, and are mostly calculated to arouse the feelings of the hearer. They are very appropriate after a good doctrinal sermon; but if too many words and repetitions are made they may be too long. Finally if the time has expired, and the one that concludes preaches another sermon before prayer, it is out of place, and makes the services too long, and is extremely tedious and wearisome to the audience. To conclude this part we would add: if the speaker is done, and continues by repeating again and again what he said before, too long, TOO LONG, is the language of the hearer; I am tired, I heard you say that before. And above all, let us avoid repetitions unless it adds strength to the meaning, and guard especially against unnecessary words and meaningless phrases into our discourses.

We will now turn the heading phrase into another direction: For instance when a man or a woman is convinced of their duty they owe to God, and will neglect to do it, we are fearful they are waiting too long. Many of our dear young friends who are now in eternity, have undoubtedly thought of preparing themselves but neglected it until death robbed them of that glorious opportunity. Now it is evident they waited too long. When we see numbers living careless and unconcerned in this world, gay in their life, vicious in their habits, foolish in their conduct, proud in their demeanor, strutting about in the height of fashion, as if they could command God to obey them, we are very much afraid that those are waiting too long to prepare themselves to meet their God, and we are sure that they have already continued too long in idleness and folly. That old man and that old woman that still waits for a better opportunity to turn to God, has waited too long, and offended God too long already. That soul that is now struggling against the iron grasp of death, seeing the terrors of hell before him with the yawning lake of fire to receive him the next moment, sees too late that he has waited too long. Consternation and dreadful disappointment will seize many souls at the day of judgment to see that they have waited too long.

LEONARD FURRY.

BE not stingy of kind words and pleasing acts, for such are fragrant gifts, whose perfume will gladden the heart and sweeten the life of all who hear or receive them.

CHARITY.

Nothing is known except by comparison. If I know that my mother has always had more true regard for me than anybody else; if I am fully pursuaded of the truth that she manifests, in reality, more concern for all her children than anybody else ever will, or ever would, if he could, then my soul is about right so far as maternal affections relate to it. But if I am unable to imagine or allow in my mind that other people's mothers are just as affectionate as mine, then I have not charity and don't know what it is.

The father that feels all that a parent can feel of the real wants of his offspring, and supplies them, discharges his parental duties very well. But if he don't see the wants of anybody else's children, he don't see charity. When he sees the wants of others and a remedy in his power, then he sees charity, and at the very point where he applies the remedy he receives the "charity."

The fact of a man being able to deliver a lecture on the nature and power of money is no guaranty that he has any! Neither is the fact of a man being unable to deliver such a lecture a sure guaranty that he has no money. So it is with charity. Different circumstances alter different and similar cases, according to other different and similar mixed cases, and circumstances. If any person is offended at me, because I eat more of the meat-flesh, words or spirit of Christ than he wants to eat, and am consequently larger in Christ than he is, which if he knows, then his offence comes through his own envy, and I walk uncharitably toward him, if he prevails upon me to stop eating, and charitably, if he don't and can't. It will be seen at last by all who thoroughly purge the floor, that it depends altogether upon the kind of meat we are eating, whether we should stop when we are told to do so by men. The flesh of Christ, the very thing every man ought to eat is itself a heinous offence to some who call themselves our "brethren" and the followers of the Lord Jesus." Now, to eat the flesh of Jesus and thus walk charitably toward such people is to employ any means that we know will accomplish a certain end, namely: their repentance and conversion and final salvation.

Charity is the greatest spiritual pearl that is known by the Christian in this life, but there is something beyond wich is far greater. Something of which we cannot in this life become conscious. It is as much superior to charity as the kernal is superior to the shell. It is that of which charity is only the "bond," namely: perfectness, that which we will not know until we shall say, "when saw we thee an hungered, &c," and the King shall answer, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these" it is only then that we become conscious of what is within, but charity we should know and become conscious of here. J. B. GARVER.

WINTER.

Winter has come with its chilling winds and frosty mornings; the trees are stripped of their beautiful robes of green, and all nature wears a wintry aspect. The flowers that lately decked the earth with beauty, now lies withered and dead, reminding us that another year is rapidly passing away, and with it, how many frail beings have passed to the other shore. Many seats have been made vacant, and many a heart and home has been made sad and gloomy by the entrance of the stern messenger, —death. Many a little cherub has been added to the happy throng in glory. But oh! how fearful to think of the many who have been ushered into the presence of their God unprepared, and are now reaping what they have sown. Sinner, can you not be awakened out of your deep sleep to the reality of things around you? Can you not be induced to make peace with your God? Remember the autumn of your life is drawing on, and soon will come the dark and gloomy winter of everlasting despair, unless you turn your feet Zionward. Then delay not making preparation to meet God. Be obedient unto His commands, that you may have a right to the tree of Life, and enter in through the gates into the city. JOHN LEISTER.

BE NOT FEARFUL.

Go stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life.—Acts 5:20.

I sometimes fear that we fall short of doing our duty in this respect. We, perhaps, feel too timid about speaking all the words of this life. This should not be. We should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, and in this we should surely exhibit boldness. This is what the angel commanded the apostles to do, even after they had been imprisoned on account of their speaking forth the words of life with boldness. Then brethren, let us stand up firmly to our post and labor manfully for Jesus. For this purpose we are placed on the walls of Zion; we are to labor for the benefit of souls and the general interests of the Church of Christ, which is the pillar and ground of the truth. We sometimes hear ministers preach whom we have every reason to believe try to preach to suit the people. This is wrong. Jesus never intended that we should be men-pleasers. We are to speak ALL the words of this life.

Let us then wake up to a sense of our duty, and preach only Christ and Him crucified to a dying world. Let us declare all the doctrine of God freely and boldly.

GO TO THE PURE FOUNTAIN.

If the fountain is impure, the who'e stream becomes impure. Not long ago I received an religious paper with a circular desiring that I should introduce and get subscribers for it. But in looking over the same, I found them not in tenor with the Gospel, did not agree with the Scripture as we understand it. Some pieces were very good, but others would teach us that faith without our works will save us. But the word says, "Faith without works is dead, being alone." I also noticed several articles in regard to playing cards as though some ministers of the Gospel engaged in such games. We would not recognize such as ministers of the Gospel. If they are in their proper place, they will not be found in company with those who engage in such games, and much less engage in it themselves.

This brings to my mind a circumstance related to me by a friend who met a minister at a masked ball. Being somewhat astonished to meet him at such a place, remarked to him, "Well Mr.——we meet at quite a lively place." Well said he "this is the place for a minister of the Gospel to go to get acquainted with human nature." Now if ministers should go to such places, why not private members? and if all would go, it would certainly show a poor light, and how would we be distinguished from the world?

Now in regard to the papers, if we recommend any, we prefer to recommend those that we know originate from the pure fountain head.

SELECTIONS.

SAINT MARTIN'S TEMPTATION.

For forty-and-five long years
I have followed my Master, Christ,
Through frailty and toils and tears,
Through passions that still enticed;
Through station that came unsought,
To dazzle me, snare, betray;
Through the baits the tempter brought
To lure me out of the way:
Through the peril and greed of power
(The bribe that he thought most sure);
Through the name that hath made me cower,
"The holy bishop of Tours!"
Now, tired of life's poor show,
Aweary of soul, and sore,
I am stretching my hands to go
Where nothing can tempt me more.

Ah, none but my Lord hath seen
How often I've swerved aside—
How the word or the look serene
Hath hidden the heart of pride.
When a beggar once crouched in need,
I flung him my priestly stole,
And the people did laud the deed,
Withholding the while their dole:
Then I closed my lips on a curse,
Like a scorpion curled within,
On such cheap charity. Worse
Was even than theirs, my sin!
And once when a royal hand
Brake bread for the Christ's sweet grace
I was proud that a queen should stand
And serve in the henchman's place.

But sorest of all bestead
Was a night in my narrow cell,
As I pondered with low-bowed head
A purpose that pleased me well.
'Twas fond to the sense and fair,
Attuned to the heart and will,
And yet on its face it bare
The look of a duty still;
And I said, as my doubts took wing,
"Where duty and choice accord,
It is even a pleasant thing,
To the flesh, to serve the Lord,"

I turned and saw a sight
Wondrous and strange to see—
A being as marvelous bright
As the visions of angels be:
His vesture was wrought of flame,
And a crown on his forehead shone,
With jewels of nameless name,
Like the glory about the throne.
"Worship thou me," he said;
And I sought, as I sank, to trace,
Through his hands above me spread,
The lineaments of his face.
I pored on each palm to see
The scar of the stigma, where
They had fastened him to the Tree,
But no print of the nails was there.
Then I shuddered, aghast of brow,
As I cried, "Accurst! abhorred!
Get the behind me! for thou
Art Satan, and not my Lord!"
He vanished before the spell
Of the Sacred Name I named,
And I lay in my darkened cell
Smitten, astonied, shamed.
Thenceforth, whatever the dress
That a seeming duty wear,
I knew 'twas a wile, unless
The print of the nail was there!

NEW IN CHRIST JESUS.—The paper manufacturer is not nice in the choice of his materials. All come alike to him. The clean and glancing cloth from the table of the rich, and filthy rags from a beggar's back, are equally welcome. The clean cannot be serviceable without passing thro' the manufacturer's process, and the unclean can be made serviceable with it. He throws both into the same machine, puts both through the same process, and brings out both new creatures. The Pharisees were scandalized on observing that publicans and sinners came in streams to Christ, and were accepted. "This man receiveth sinners," they complained. Yea, receiveth them; sinners are taken between the wheels, at the commencement of this process; but at the end of it saints in white clothing are thrown out, fit for the kingdom of heaven. Christ does not find any pure on earth; he makes them. Those that stand round the throne in white clothing were gathered from the mire.—Arnot.

PRAY AND WAIT.—Pray frequently, and wait quietly, and the Lord will make your way plain. Jesus trains up all his servants to waiting; and if you are called to the ministry, He will exercise your soul beforehand with sharp conflicts. Joseph must be first cast into a pit by his own brethren, then into prison by his master, before he rules the kingdom; and David must be hunted as a flea upon the mountains before he gets the sceptre. How can you tell what others feel unless you have felt the same yourself? Undertake nothing without first seeking direction from the Lord; and when anything offers that is plausible and inviting, beg of God to disappoint you, if it be not according to His mind. You cannot safely rely on your own judgment, after God has told you, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." To sail vice relates to all important changes in life.

MANY a discouraged mother folds her tired hands at night, and feels as if she had, after all, done nothing, although she has not spent an idle moment since she rose. Is it nothing that your little children have had some one to come to with all their childish griefs and joys? Is it nothing that your husband feels "safe" when he is away to his business, because your careful hand directs everything at home? Is it nothing, when his business is over, that he has the blessed refuge of a home, which you have done so much to brighten and refine! O, weary and faithful mother, you little know your power when you say, "I have done nothing." There is a book in which a fairer record than this is written over against your name.

A soul clothed with Christ, stooping to any sinful delight, or any ardent pursuit of anything earthly, though lawful, doth wonderfully degrade itself.

JAMES CREEK, PA., Dec. 9, 1873.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

Notice.—Please do not mix things. If you send us subscribers, obituaries, essays, correspondence and private notes, put each on a separate sheet or slip of paper. By observing this notice you will much oblige us and prevent mistakes that can scarcely be avoided when everything is mixed on the same sheet of paper.

Preserve a List.—We expect all of our agents to keep for your own use and reference, a complete list of all the names you send us. By so doing you can keep everything in a proper shape with the subscribers, and credit each one as he pays.

Our elder brother, George Brumbaugh, is now on a preaching tour among the brethren of Eld, Moses Miller's charge, Lower Cumberland district, Pa. Bro. G. W. Brumbaugh, of Clover Creek, Pa., is his colleague. Eld Grabill Myers also thought of accompanying them. Hope they may have a pleasant time and be successful in winning souls to Christ.

On Saturday morning, brother Henry Hershberger has made arrangements to meet us at Mt. Dallas Station and convey us out to the Clearridge settlement, where several appointments are made for preaching. This is a little more than was bargained for at this time, but as we have given some of our brethren of that place, several promises at different times, we shall try and meet the engagement if well and the weather does not prove too unfavorable.

On last Sabbath we attended our first regular appointment in the new church at Coffee Run. The congregation was pleasantly, and we hope, profitably entertained by a discourse from the "Ten virgins" by G. B. Brumbaugh. We felt that we had a good meeting, and hope we may be permitted to enjoy many more such seasons at that, as well as our other places of holding meetings.

What should be the first prayer of the awakened sinner, seems to be a question among many. This is probably on account of the great abuse to which prayer is now subjected. The abuse is not in praying, but in the subject matter of the prayer. The unregenerated or unborn, are dead and blind, and therefore cannot see. The first desire of the awakened sinner is beautifully set forth in the petition of Bartimeus, "Lord, that I may receive my sight." The first presentiment to the awakened sinner is that of blindness, and the very first desire of a blind man is, to receive sight. Then it follows that the first prayer should be for light, or in other words, "What must I do to be saved?" The terms of salvation should be the first desire, and when they are received, the next should be to comply with them. To pray for the pardon of sins before complying with the terms, is like a laborer asking for the pay before doing the work, and this we all have learned, is extremely bad policy.

Shall we have war? was the great topic of conversation in the large cities for the last few days. Our readers, no doubt have learned, from the secular press long ere this, the cause of this great commotion. The capture of the Virginius and the barbarous butchering of part of its crew, by Spanish desperadoes, has scarcely a parallel in the history of civilized nations, and from all appearance, has set on fire an element which may prove serious, if not fatal to the object which the offending party had in view. At this writing there is a fair prospect of an amicable adjustment of the difficulty between the United States and the Spanish government. But should this be accomplished, it still remains a question whether it will end the Cuban troubles.—The curse of slavery stills reigns there and its advocates seem to be a band of outlaws that live and act independent of reason, government or religion.

ONCE MORE.

Once more! just one number more, we hear our printers say, and we will be through for 1873. Forty-nine times dear brethren, sisters, and kind friends, we have made our pilgrimage to your homes, and once more, and our obligations are fulfilled, and we will cease our visits unless invited to continue them for 1874. If ever we felt concerned and anxious it is just now. Our great wonder is, how many of those whom we have been visiting during the last year, and many, ever since we commenced our pilgrimage, will invite us back again. It is true, and we are conscious of it, in many instances we have failed and come short of our privilege, but who has not? We shall not attempt to justify ourselves by portraying to you, the good we have accomplished as we know it not. We think we did good, we believe we did, but God knoweth best, and we feel assured that He will not be unmindful of it. All we know positively is, that we have been indeavoring to labor for the upbuilding of the Church, and final good of our readers. The question, just now with us, is, have our labors been successful, and have our readers thus accepted it? If we have been able to make all our readers feel, that we have thus been laboring, we have no doubt but that we will be invited to continue our visits. How is it dear readers? How we wish we could make this a personal question with you all. How it would do our souls good to hear our thousands of readers say, God bless you and your labors, or if objections are found against us how glad we would be to have the opportunity of answering those objections. It occurs to us that we could plead our cause with acceptance, and persuade you that "To err is human, but to forgive, divine.

Our relation to each other has been such that it makes us feel sad to think that one of you should be missing on our list for 1874. We cannot well afford to do without you. We need your sympathies, your prayers, and your support, and besides all this, we crave your influence. This often amounts to very much, and, when exerted in our favor may greatly encourage us in our arduous labors.

We have scarcely a brother or sister who is now reading the Pilgrim but what could persuade at least one more to take it. This would double our list, and thus enable us to greatly improve our work, both in appearance and value. Will you not give us your influence? We desire it and we hope for it. Disappoint us not, but go to work with a determination and a will. You have neighbors who would be benefited by reading the Pilgrim. Tell them its character and mission, and then ask them to try it a year. It will not only oblige us, but may be the means of converting them to God. Many of you have children who are heads of families, and who are still out of Christ. You cannot make them a better present than to send them the Pilgrim. Many have made good investments by having it sent to their friends. Such favors have been accepted with grateful hearts, and we have the assurance that the givers shall in no wise lose their reward. Think of these things dear reader, and determine not only to send your own name, but send along with it, as many more as you possibly can.

In order that the present closeness of money matters may not be a hindrance or excuse, we have concluded, as usual, to give all honest and good thinking persons their own time to pay, only so it is done as soon as practicable, or within the year. Of course this offer is intended only for such as have not the means at the time of subscribing. Those who can, should pay as near the beginning of the year as possible, as our business requires a considerable amount of money to carry on, and retain a good character and credit. This we have been enabled to do so far, and hope to continue to do so.

Once more dear reader, and we leave it with you to decide. Make the decision now, and let us have your names as soon as possible, thus enabling us to get our books in condition, and send out the Almanacs before the New Year comes in.

HARD TIMES.

The hardness of the times is now the general topic of conversation, and almost everything is being affected by the great crash in pecuniary affairs. The publishing interests will most likely be crippled by it. Some of our agents fear that it will be in the way of procuring subscribers for 1874. It is very natural to complain of hard times when asked to subscribe for a paper, and now as there are some indications of it, this will no doubt be the general acclamation. The missionary cause will also suffer, and the procuring of funds to build churches in which to worship God will be attended with difficulties. All these things the cry of hard times will affect seriously It is however altogether likely that with many persons the effects are more imaginary than real. Some persons are inclined to become frightened, and even imagine they are hurt, when there is no real danger, and so it is in reference to the late panic, there are those who make a great ado about it, and at the same time may not be affected by it at all. There are certain classes whom it will affect, and are now already realizing what hard times are. In the city of New York there has recently been formed what is called a relief society, and the design is to provide food for young men who are thrown out of employment until they can find work. In order to do this, they have rented a large house in one of the most prominent streets, and it is said that thousands come daily to be fed. Some young men came who were so near exhausted, for want of food, that they fainted at the smell of victuals. Some had nothing to eat for three days, and were without any prospects of obtaining employment. Such persons know what hard times are, and are truthfully realizing the horrors of the financial crisis. But what does farmers and the people generally in the country know about hard times? Have we not all plenty to eat and wear? And does not the Scriptures teach us that when we have this we should be contented? Yes, and when we think of the thousands of men, women and children that would be glad to have the crumbs that fall from our heavy laden tables, should it not close our mouths to any complaint, and call forth our warmest sympathies for those who are in such a fearful dilemma? These are things that we should think of, and just before sitting down to our meals, if our minds could be directed to the many poor, starving men, women and children, would it not cause deeper emotions of gratitude to flow from our hearts for the privilege we enjoy Ah, yes, there would be no cold formal prayers; deep in our hearts the prayer of devotion would arise, pure and warm.

Let us then, dear readers, who are surrounded with plenty, cease to complain; let us endeavor to feel the relation which we sustain to each other, and the obligations we are under to them in consequence of that relation. It is our duty to help and assist each other, and we should embrace every opportunity to relieve those who are in distress. It is true, money is a little scarce just now and this may put us to a little inconvenience, and may frustrate some of our plans for the future. but as long as we have plenty and to spare there is no reason to complain. Then too do not let the cause of Christ suffer for the want of means. Let us rather deny ourselves of some of the luxuries of life. There is money wanted to build churches, and if we have any money to invest at all, we can not make a better investment than in building churches. It is loaning to the Lord, and in the future we will receive our own with a usury unparalled by anything we have ever realized. Then too, our periodicals must be supported for the disseminating of the Gospel. Do not let the hard times so much impede the promotion of the Gospel through this medium. We are willing, dear brethren and sisters, to economize in every possible way and make all the sacrifice we can, but we cannot do all. There are many of our readers who can do more in way of ecoonomizing than we can. Our printing material and paper costs us as much now as any other time, and these things we must have, we cannot do without them, and cannot therefore avoid expenses as persons in other callings can. We hope our readers will think of this, and will help us bear our burdens a little by making a strenuous effort to have all our old subscribers renew their subscription and many more new ones. For this we will hope. J. B. B.

ALMANACS A DEMAND.

Of late we are having quite a number of calls for Almanacs and prospectus for the PILGRIM. These calls are gladly responded to and we hope that those who make them, may be successful in getting up large clubs. Our prospects are quite cheering and the indications are that we will have large accessions of new subscribers. If all our present readers will continue to give us their support we shall have reason to thank God and take courage. Send along your names brethren and sisters. Do not let the cry of hard times cause you to hold back The harder the times the greater need have you of the consolation and encouragement derived from reading the PILGRIM. If there is need of economy, commence somewhere else. There are many things that you can afford to do without much better than the PILGRIM. Commence with your horses, carriages, houses, tables and clothes, and by the time you lop off all the unnecessaries from them you will have plenty to invest for the PILGRIM. But is it not remarkable that complaints about hard-times seldom come from the poor? If there is no other way, they will scrimp their tables, or put in extra labor to obtain the money. They say that they must have the PILGRIM, and that they cannot do without it. This proves the old adage, "Where there is a will there is a way." Then wake up to the work, and where there is a church without an agent, let some one volunteer his service, send for an Almanac and prospectus and get to work. There are hundreds and thousands who would read the PILGRIM had they an opportunity of subscribing for it. Brethren and sisters, give them this opportunity and see what can be done by way of a well directed effort.

ANCIENT BAPTISM.

The following we clip from the Advent Times These Apocryphal books of the Apostles are quite interesting as scraps of ancient history, and their age gives them additional respect. Some of them correspond so nearly with the accepted Scriptures that many of them are thought to be genuine epistles of the Apostles.

That sprinkling is not the accepted mode of baptism, is evident from th apocryphal book of Paul and Thecla, written in the second century, in which it is asserted that in the absence of an opportunity to be baptized by a minister, Thecla "threw herself into the water," while her enemies supposed that the fish would devour her. The point is this: If this had not been the mode practiced, it would have been used as an argument against the genuineness of the book; but this objection was never brought against it and many accepted it as genuine. If the book had realy introduced a new mode of baptism, it would have led to a discussion of that topic, before the book could have been received by any

THE New Constitution of Pennsylvania will be submitted to a vote to its citizens for adoption or rejection on Tuesday, December 16th, 1873. It has been extensively circulated throughout the State, so that all the citizens could have an opportunity of reading it and thus be enabled to vote intelligently on the proposed amendments. As it is a matter of importance to every resident of the Commonwealth, it behooves all those who think it a duty to exercise their privileges to read the new Constitution carefully and not allow themselves to be influenced by designing men, whose object is not to elevate and benefit the government and its people, but to get a grab in the public treasury. For the satisfaction of our readers residing in other States we insert the "preamble" and the four first sections which are as follows:

PREAMBLE.

WE, the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, grateful to Almighty God for the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and humbly invoking His guidance, do ordain and establish this Constitution.

ARTICLE I.

Declaration of Rights.

That the general, great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and unalterably established, we declare that SECTION 1. All men are born equally free and independent, and have certain inherent and indefeasible rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring, possessing and protecting property and reputation, and of pursuing their own happiness.

SEC. 2. All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety and happiness. For the advancement of these ends they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government in such a manner as they may think proper.

SEC. 3. All men have a natural and indefeasable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience, and no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship.

SEC. 4. No person who acknowledges the being of a God and a future state of rewards and punishments shall, on account of his religious sentiments, be disqualified to hold any office or place of trust or profit under this Commonwealth.

Miscellaneous.

THERE are now forty-nine Baptist Churches in Philadelphia.

It is estimated that there are 40,000 people in New York city who are idle, willing to work but can't get it.

AN aged Presbyterian minister died recently in S. C., while in the pulpit. He was commenting on the third chapter of Malacchi, when he beckoned to some one in the congregation to come to him, and died immediately

Something of a sensation in ecclesiastical circles at Rome was created recently by the abandonment of Romanism by a Catholic priest. Having accepted the Baptist faith. his baptism in public, created considerable excitement.

The Evangelical Lutherans of New York have added a new chapter to their Synodical Constitution, making it obligatory upon ministers and congregations to make a regular annual contribution to create a fund from which ministers' worthy widows and orphans are to recive aid.

A BAND of Methodists, in Boston, has been organized under the name of Christian workers. The band now consists of over one hundred persons. Each member is monthly assigned to a particular place where religious meetings are to be held, and there they receive packages of tracts for daily distribution.

The value of three hundred and forty-nine churches in New York is forty-six million dollars, and this does not include the Roman Catholic Cathedral and several other churches in course of erection. It is thought that there are fifty million dollars worth of church property in New York exempt from all taxation.

Quite an excitement has been raised in San Francisco, among the adherents of the Catholic Church in consequence of the Rev. Father Dugun, a Roman Catholic priest, abjuring his old faith and joining the Presbyterians. The recantation and his admission into the Church were made publicly.

The Baltimre Episcopal Methodist does not believe the union of the Methodist Church, North and South, practicable or even desirable. believing that the two denominations in their separate capacitity, can accomplish more in advancing the true mission of the Church, than if they were to act conjointly as one organization.

AN English poet and lecturer gave a lecture recently in New York on "Why God Don't Kill the Devil." He thinks that human ignorance, selfishness and superstition has made all the devil there is, and that God does not destroy this man-made power because he wants us to slay him for ourselves.

THE last news from Memphis, Tenn., is that the fever is subsiding. Some thousand persons have died from its effects in a very small district. It is looked upon as being more destructive than a battle, and yet is looked upon as a visitation for which nobody in particular is responsible.

THE ladies of Huntingdon have organized a relief society, and appointed committees to collect funds, and relieve the wants of the distressed poor, and needy. This is a worthy example, and, in view of the approaching Winter, the scarcity of money and the difficulty of obtaining employment, one which it were well to follow in every community. "He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord." "It is more blessed to give than to receive," then give of your abundance, at least, to God's poor, and He will richly reward you, with abundant blessings.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

GREELY, Weld Co., Col. Nov. 25, '73.

Editor Pilgrim:—By your permission, I will concede to the wishes of a number of brethren, that I give through your columns, some general information relative to this Territory, and such advice as would be thought necesary for those contemplating a move in this direction

First I will say, it is difficult for persons in the east to form a correct idea of this country, owing to the many conflicting reports, because persons do not all see alike. Some have their anticipations too high, expecting when they come here to find a land of fenced farms, ploughed lands with fruit trees growing thereon, and irrigating canals everywhere so that they will have nothing to do. but to take a "pre emption" or "homestead" claim and settle down and enjoy all the comforts of life.

Fine pleasant homes may be found here, but they must be paid for just as the farms of Pa., Ohio or any other Eastern state, must have pay for improvements, so those that have made nice homes here, if they sell, expect to be paid for their labor. Others again, look upon Colorado as a wild uncivilized region, simply because it has only been settled a few years, forgetting that this is a fast age, and where the iron horse pushes his way, civil zation comes up close to the rear. Many express their surprise on arriving here to find large towns, where a few years ago the red man reveled in the war dance. Large wholesale and retail stores and manufactories, and a society as far along in pride, fashion, and all the doings of civilization much like that of eastern cities. Take for instance this town: three years ago, or a little over, the site upon which it is built. was a desert plain, now it is a town of busy streets, extensive houses, hotels, churches, mills and a school house for free schools, that would be an honor to any community, costing over $30.000. Four departments in the public school have been sustained during the year at a cost for teachers of over $3000, the pupils number hundreds, the population of the town and the surrounding country is about 3000. Farming and gardening here is a success, flour of a superior quality is being shipped from here by the car load to the eastern markets, where it commands the top price over all other.—What has been done here and in other communities in the territory, can be done where yet the land is free, and the buffalo by thousands roam over hill and plane. The South Platte valley offer probably the best inducements for new comers of any other in the territory. A new rail road, branch of the great Union Pacific, running from Julesburg up the South Platte valley to Evans, from this place to the mountains and to the capitol of the territory, has been graded and doubtless will be in running order next Summer if not sooner. This valley embraces, it is said the best region in the territory for farming and stock raising. None of these lands have been given to any R. R. company; they are being taken up rapidly, yet there are many good claims to be had, only by preemption or homesteads, or bought of those who have preempted and proven up and paid for them.

Now I will answer a question so often asked me: "How shall I proceed to get a claim?" The law requires the person wanting a claim to select in person, make a sign of improvement, such as laying a sod foundation for a house or ploughing a little, put up a stake with name and date of selecting, then it can not be lawfully "jumped" by another party under three months, but before the three months expire it is necessary to put up a small house, and file a declaratory stat ment, showing which ¼ section has been selected. Then the party should make that his home for six months from the time he commences to improve it, and at the expiration of six months, he can go and "prove up" and get a deed for it by paying $1.25 per acre, or he can remain on it, and pay up at his option any time within thirty months. As soon as it is paid for he can sell it, or do with it what he chooses. If a claim is taken as a homestead, you need not go on it for six months, then it is required that improvements commence on it, and the party must reside on it. After having lived on it for six months if the parties wish, they can can get a deed for it by paying $1.25 per acre, or if they live on it five years, get it free. Soldiers can have homesteads selected, and filed through agents. They also only have to reside on the claim long enough to make up five years, including the time they served in the army, when they can get a deed for it. Every person over 21 years of age, or head of a family, can get a claim of 160 acres. After having "proved up" and paid for a preemption claim (160 acres) they can then go and take a homestead of 160 acres,—can take but one of each. Those claims on the Platte, as soon as paid for and a deed procured, are worth $600 without improvements. I know of none that can be bought for less at this time. These farm lands are all river bottom, and susceptible of irrigation from the river. The bottoms are from one to eight miles wide, the soil, of a sandy, gravelly loam, and very productive. Nearest the river the bottoms have a luxuriant crop yearly, of hay grass, further back a short buffalo grass grows. In places there is an abundance of alkali in the soil: in such grounds the grass is short and vegetation does not do well for several years after cultivation, there being an excess of certain constituents necessary for vegetation. After having been "leached" by irrigation a few years, it is said to be the best land.

Another question is, how do you irrigate? As a general thing, the settlers form themselves into an incorporate company, get a canal surveyed, and then a charter is procured, and all hands go to work, take out a quantity of water from the river by a leading canal that is taken back next to the bluffs, so that all the bottom land will be between the canal and the river; then lateral canals or ditches convey the water from the main canal to the farms or gardens; head ditches convey the water along the head, or higest part of plats of ground in crop. The water is then let into small furrows, between which the crops are growing, soon the whole surface is saturated, when the water is turned off. In sowing wheat, some take out the middle spout (conductor) of the drill and put in a shovel which makes a furrow along these furrows, when the water is turned on; about two wettings are sufficent for wheat or oats, and three or four for hoed crops. Potatoes and some other vegetables often do well without irrigation, and sometimes there is sufficient rain during the season for all crops. By irrigation the crops are insured from drouth. In the dry warm season, the Platte has the most water, as it is supplied by the melting snow in the mountains, where the snow lies all summer.

As to water other than the rain, we have but few springs any distance from the mountains, but good cool healthful water can be had any where on the bottom lands at a depth of 8 to 30 feet, ordinarily metal piped are simply driven into the ground until the lower section enters the stratum of quick sand and water. A cast pump is screwed on the top and water, plentiful and good is at hand. Thus well digging is dispensed with, and pumps can be had in the cellar or kitchen.

There is but little timber in the Platt valley. By rail, fuel, lumber and posts can be had from the mountains at fair prices, and excellent coal in abundance at prices ranging from $3 to $6 per ton. There is some stone in the valley in some localities. For buildings, as a substitute for something better, many of the first settlers use sod in building houses, stables, and stock inclosures. The walls are about 2½ feet thick, plastered inside and covered with boards. Such houses are warm in winter and cool in summer, are durable and cheap. I see old government forts, the walls of which are sod, and yet standing. others use sun dried brick for building houses. They make a good house. Lumber however is the principle building material.

J. S. FLORY.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Dec. 3. 1873.

Beloved Brethren Editors:—I feel like throwing in my mite of church news. On Sunday last, the 30th ult., brethren Elias Landis, from Juniata county, and Isaac Kulp, and Abram Cassell from Montgomery county, were with us on a mission of love. Brethren Jacob Booze and Moses Scholer were also present. During the day, services were held at Bethlehem, and in the evening at Allentown.

At the latter named place, the brethren did not have any preaching for the last two years. The meeting was held in a large school room. On arriving, contrary to all expectations, the large room was full to overflowing of attentive listeners. The word was held forth by Landis and Cassell in German, and Kulp in the English, from 1 Pet. 3: 12. The brethren tried to show who the righteous are, and that in our natural or unborn state, we were aliens and strangers in the sight of God, unreconciled, out of the ark of safety, on the barren hills of folly and misery, consequently the face of the Lord against us.

They also showed how a person in his unconverted state can become so. When a person, unconscious of his sins, unconcerned about his soul's salvation, wakes up from his slumber, feels the weight and dreadfulness of sin, comes weary and heavy laden to the feet of Jesus, asking what he must do to be saved, and becomes willing to take the easy yoke and light burden of Jesus upon him, embraces the overtures of mercy, fulfills the requirements of the Gospel. makes peace with God on the conditions implied in his holy word, he becomes a child of God; a righteous person on whom is the eye of the Lord, and unto whose prayer the Lord's ear is open. From a babe in Christ he is now to grow to the full measure of the stature, as it is in Christ Jesus by denying himself daily of unrighteousness, ungodliness, and live righteously and soberly, unto the perfect day.

Good impressions were made. It was a season of refreshing showers from on high to the brethren and sisters,—a time long to be remembered. We only hope that God may work wonders in these last, dark and perilous days, and cause many to forsake their evil and sinful ways, and thus be saved. Brethren and sisters we can accomplish something too, if we are right earnest and devoted. Let us take new courage, seeing our labor is not in vain, that is in the Lord. We shall be richly rewarded.

Your weak brother in Christ.

H. F. ROSENBERGER.

Dear Editor:—As it is your desire to have correspondence from each church, I will give you a few items from the Cana Church. Last April it numbered 9 lay members, and now it numbers 28, three speakers and three deacons. We had a Communion meeting here in October. It was the first meeting of this kind ever held in Howard Co., and the people manifested a great interest, and good order prevailed. We have a flattering prospect for a large church here, soon.

For the satisfaction of the readers of the PILGRIM who may wish an item of news from Southern Kansas, I will say that we have a good country, a rich and fertile soil, good water and a mild climate. Timber is rather scarce, but good prospects for coal. This country is quite rolling, consequently it is dry and healthy. Land is very cheap, ranging from $1.25 to $10 per acre, owing to improvements. Any one desiring a home in the West would do well to come and see for themselves. The corn crop was an average one, and wheat very good. Vegetables of all kinds do well. There is plenty of rock for building purposes of both lime and sand-stone. For further information, address,

Dear Pilgrim: The Coventry Congregation, has recently been favored with a visit from Bro. Lemuel Hilery of Iowa. He preached three successive evenings and presented to our minds, from the rich treasury of God's word, things new and old; things if rightly applied will tell to our advantage in eternity. Surely Bro. H. must be one of those who were told to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, for he is not ashamed to own his Lord, nor defend his cause. May success crown all his efforts to the remotest extent. May he still be enabled by grace divine, to stand firm in defence of the truth as it is in Jesus, before a guilty and gainsaying people, withersoever he may sojourn, that saints may be edified, and sinners may begin to love who never loved before, is the prayer of a weak pilgrim. NOTICE.

I hereby give notice to all the brethren and sisters that intend to go to the next Annual Meeting, which will be held in McCoupin Co. Ill., close to the St. Louis, Alton and Chicago R R., that the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. grants as favorable rates as we can ask. They grant half fare and give the privilege of getting on at any station, and any number from one up. The treatment is very kind.

At our last A. M., the train was behind time and the conductor telegraphed and had other trains wait, so that brethren could get home the same day. Now as our publication came out too late this year so that many had to pay higher fare than if they had taken the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., I hope that those who were appointed to make arrangements will do so at an early day, and have them published in time. Mr. Smith, the assistant auditor at Columbus Ohio, is a very prompt man, and I have learned from hands along the R. R, that he is a very accommodating man. What little business I have done with the company through Mr. Smith, has proven satisfactory in every respect. All that want to be accommodated, should be prompt. W. SADLER.

NOTICE.—Gideon Bollinger will fill the appointment in Trumble Co., the first of March 1874, instead of David Byers.

WORDS.

Words are only little things,
Which give life to every day;
Each its pain or pleasure flings
Passing from our lips away.

These are given for our use,
They our peace can mar or make;
Little words we oft abuse
When by them we fond hearts break

Works, like water on the ground,
Never can be gathered up,
But like the raindrops, fall around.
Filling evermore life's cup.

Words can wound us, and can pour
Deadly poison in the sting;
Words are potent to restore,
And the sweetest pleasures bring.

WHAT WE HAVE.

Last week our department for the boys and girls was unavoidably crowded out, but this week, we hope we have again something that will interest and instruct you. First we have "Knowledge, its use and abuse." All our young readers no doubt have an idea of the value of an education, but you may not know just how to use it rightly. This is very important. There are a great many things that we can obtain that are in themselves very valuable, yet if we do not know how to use them they may be an injury to us, and so it is with education, we may do a great deal of good with it, if we make the right use of it, and a great deal of harm by an improper use of it. Will not then our boys and girls, be interested in learning to know how to make a proper use of their knowledge? You are now no doubt, busily engaged in trying to procure knowledge. As I imagine some of these cold mornings, I can see thousands of boys and girls with books in their arms, wending their way to some school-house. And what for? You all answer to gain knowledge, and many of you are so eager in the pursuit of it, that you will go there through rain and storm. But have you ever thought of how to make use of it? This is just as important a consideration as how to obtain it. We hope then that while you are so busily engaged in the acquisition of knowledge, you will be just as eager to learn how to make a practical use of it in a way that will accomplish the most good. You will then all read our first paper with interest.

Next we have "Usefulness," and this is just what all good boys and girls want to be,—useful. You can not for a moment tolerate the idea of being worthless. But do you all make yourselves as useful as you can? Do you assist father, mother, brothers, sisters and schoolmates whenever you can? We have seen some boys, and girls too, make very ugly faces when their papa or mamma would ask them to help do some work. Now these boys and girls did not want to be worthless, but they were not quite willing to make themselves as useful as they should. You should be willing to assist everybody whenever you can, and by this means you will become the most useful, and this is what you should all desire to be.

Next we have "Unseen yet Loved," and in this is illustrated how we love some one whom we have never seen. We have never seen God, yet he gives us so many things, and is so kind to us every day, that we should surely love him. Our food, raiment, comfortable homes, and every thing that we enjoy is a gift from God. Oh how can we help but love him! We might point out many reasons why we should love God, but we must close our talk with you this time as our printers say they want what we have to say to put it in type.

YOUNG PILGRIM

KNOWLEDGE. ITS USE AND ABUSE.

"What an excellent thing is knowledge!" said a sharp-looking, bustling little man to one who was much older than himself. "Knowledge is an excellent thing," repeated he; "my boys know more at six and seven years of age than I did at twelve. They can read all sorts of books, and talk on all sorts of subjects. This world is a great deal wiser than it used to be. Everybody knows something of everything now. Do you not think, Sir, that knowledge is an excellent thing?"

"Why, sir," replied the old man looking gravely, "that depends entirely upon the use to which it is applied. It may be a blessing or a curse. Knowledge is only an increase of power, and power may be a bad as well as a good thing."

"That is what I cannot understand," said the bustling little man: "how can power be a bad thing?"

"I will tell you," meekly replied the old man, and thus went on: "When the power of a horse is under restraint, the animal is useful, bearing burdens, drawing loads, and carrying his master; but when that power is unrestrained, the horse breaks his bridle, dashes the carriage that he is drawing to pieces, or throws his rider."

"I see! I see!" said the little man.

"When the water of a large pond is properly conducted by trenches, it renders the fields around fertile; but when it bursts through its banks it sweeps everything before it, and destroys the produce of the field."

"I see! I see!" said the little man!"

"When a ship is steered aright, the sail that she hoists up enables her the sooner to get into port; but if steered wrong, the more sail she carries the further she will go out of her course."

"I see! I see!" said the little man, "I see clearly!"

"Well, then," continued the old man, "if you see these things so clearly, I hope you can see too that knowledge, to be a good thing, must be rightly applied. God's grace in the heart will render the knowledge of the head a blessing; but without this it may prove to us no better than a curse."

USEFULNESS.

What is usefulness? I imagine I hear some little one inquiring, as the bright little face suddenly grows thoughtful. I will endeavor to tell you. When we see any of our playmates in need of assistance, can we not lend a helping hand? Our schoolmates may be in trouble in their studies, can we not then offer all the assistance which lies in our power? And would not mamma's heart be lightened to know that the little busy feet that are so willing to run and play, are even more willing to run at mother's bidding? "But I am so little!" still pleads the dear one. I know you are, but although small, you can be useful in many ways.

Rest assured mamma knows better than you how much you can do, and she will not ask you to do anything which it is impossible for you to perform. Then never hesitate when she calls, but leave everything to take care of itself, until the little duties she imposes on you are performed. How much we might lighten her burdens by our little helps, when she is weary with her day's toil; but no one hears her complain. Oh, no! I am afraid we are too apt to think she never tires.

UNSEEN YET LOVED.

A kind mother had once been talking to her little girl about the duty of loving God. The child replied "Mother I have never seen God how can I love Him?" The mother made no reply then. A few days after, she received a package from a friend a great way off; and in the package was a beautiful picture-book for the little girl. The child took the book, and was entirely occupied in looking at the pictures; but soon she exclaimed, "O, Mother! how I do love the good lady that sent me this book!" "But you never saw her, my dear," said the mother. "No" answerd the child; "but I love her because she sent me this beautiful present." "My child" said the mother, "you told me the other day that you could not love God, because you had never seen Him. And yet you love this kind lady whom you have never seen, because she has given you a present. Now you have all around you the presnts which God has given you. Why cannot you love Him for His presents?"

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

THE NEWS versus PICTURES.—The New York Observer claims to publish the best family newspaper, and repudiates the practice of courting the patronage of readers by the offer of cheap chromos, costing 20 to 30 cents. It says, "We do not propose to go into any competition of this kind, and will ask subscriptions solely on the merits of the paper." While we commend the position the Observer has taken in the matter, we can also heartily endorse it as a most desirable periodical for any household. $3 a year can hardly be made to return as much good, spent in any other way. S. I. PRIME & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

LARS, A Pastoral of Norway. By Bayard Taylor. (James R. Osgood & Co., Boston.) This is a lovely rustic poem, relating the story of Norwegian peasant, who yielding to the custom of his country, fought a duel, then came to Pennsylvania, embraced the faith of the Quakers, and afterward returned to his own country to destroy the custom of duelling. It is a charming poem full of simplicity, dignity, trust, and religious faith. The Church and State says, "As a story it is intense and dramatic, abounding in strength of interest; as a lesson, it brings home to the heart truths of profoundest import, with a power that is irresistable. It is a distinctively Christian poem, illustrating in no unworthy manner the influence of simple love and faith."

WE have also from the same house, that wonderful book by H. W. Longfellow entitled CHRISTUS: A Mystery; comprising the three volumes, "The Divine Tragedy," "The Golden Legend," and "New England Tragedies" in one. We have a great desire to read these poems, and can assure our readers that they are intensely interesting, but unfortunately the publishers sent us the Diamond edition of the book, and the reading of small type would be suicidal to our eyes. To be had in editions varying in price from $1.00 to $3.50.

NOTHING could be more fitting as a holiday gift than a good and useful book. It is a feast that can be enjoyed every day of the year, and even for many years to come. Old and young share alike in its enjoyment and the benefits resulting therefrom. Many of the leading publishers, in order to meet the great demand for such books, have issued, or are issuing, handsomely executed editions of the most popular works, Poets, &c., finely illustrated. James R. Osgood & Co, of Boston, whose list of holiday books, though not as large as usual, yet abounds in beautiful and valuable works. We called attention to their Red Line Editions of the Poets, &c., a few weeks ago, as being specially suitable for gift-books. Their late work, "CHILD-LIFE IN PROSE," forms a companion to "CHILD-LIFE IN POETRY," published last year, both edited by the poet Whittier. Their books of travel by Warner; "Old Poet Days," by Higginson, "Chance Acquaintance," by W. D. Howells: "Whittier's Poems," "Longfellow's Poems," "Snow Bound," "Winter Poems," &c., all beautifully illustrated, form excellent and worthy gift books.

HURD & HOUGHTON, of the Riverside Press, have also just issued several attractive works, which we noticed before, and have nearly ready the "Grammar of Painting and Engraving," and Mrs. Clement's Hand-book of Painter's, Sculptor's, &c. We have from this house a book which was laid on the table among the Christmas presents, last year, entitled BOARDING SCHOOL DAYS, illustrated by Nast & Darly which was pronounced excellent by Gains, for whom it was intended, as well as by all who read it. The book is tastefully bound, characteristically illustrated, and printed in clear, large type so that the reading of it is not an injury to the eyes. And this is a great desideratum in buying a book—that the type be readable. Price $1.50.

POETRY.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

BY ROBERT HERRICK.

Chorus.

What sweeter music can we bring
Than a carol, for to sing
The birth of this our Heavenly King?
Awake the voice! awake the string!
Heart, ear, and eye, and everything
Awake! the while the active finger
Runs division with the singer.

I.

Dark and dull night, fly hence away,
And give the honor to this day,
That sees December turned to May.

II.

If we may ask the reason, say
The why, and wherefore all things here
Seem like the spring-time of the year?

III.

Why does the chilling winter's morn
Smile, like a field beset with corn?
Or smell, like a mead new shorn,
Thus, on the sudden?

IV.

Come and see
The cause, why things thus fragrant be:
'T is He is born, whose quickening birth
Gives life and lustre, public mirth,
To Heaven and the under Earth.

Chorus.

We see Him come, and know him ours,
Who with his sunshine and his showers
Turns all the patient ground to flowers.

I.

The darling of the world is come,
And fit it is we find a room
To welcome him.

II.

The nobler part
Of all the house here, is the heart.

Chorus.

Which we will give him, and bequeath
This holly and this ivy wreath,
To do him honor who's our King,
And Lord of all this revelling.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE THREE FEASTS AND THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year.—Ex. 23: 14.

The Jews had to observe a number of feasts besides these, some of which it would appear, were of their own instituting, such as the feast to commemorate the preservation of them from the general massacre projected by Haman. The feast of dedication, which was to commemorate the restoration of the temple, which had been polluted by Antiochus Epiphanes. The feast of branches by which they commemorated the taking of Jericho. The feast of collection on which they made contributions for the services of the temple and synagogue. The feast for the death of Nicanor. The feast for the discovery of the sacred fire, and the feast for carrying wood to the temple. These all appear to be of their own instituting as we find them in the book of Esther, first and second Maccabees, and in the war books of Josephus.

But the feast of the Sabbath which was a weekly feast; the feast of the Sabbathical year, which was a septennial or seventh year feast; the feast of trumpets which was an annual feast; the feast of the new moon which was a monthly feast, and the feast of expiation which was celebrated annually. All these were of divine institution, as we find them in the law given to Moses, and must be observed by divine command. At each of these an offering must be made, and no servile work dare be done on the days of the feast.

In addition to these, the Lord institutes and appoints the keeping of three feasts, to be kept in each year; in which all the males in Israel must take part, and none dare appear before God at their feasts empty. "Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year. Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread, and the feast of harvest, the first fruits of thy labors which thou hast sown in thy field; and the feast of ingathering which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labors out of the field. Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God." "Old men, sick men, male idiots and male children under thirteen years of age excepted; for so the Jewish doctors understand this command."—Clark.

The feasts here referred to, are as we have them elsewhere called, first the feast of the passover, instituted (Ex. 12,) and is here called the feast of unleavened bread, because, at this feast, they must eat unleavened bread seven days. The feast of the passover was to be celebrated in commemoration of the wonderful deliverance of the Israelites from the destoying angel which passed over their dwellings when he slew all the first born of the Egyptians, as well as for their deliverance from the house of bondage from under the tyranny of Pharaoh.

2 The feast of weeks called here the feast of harvest, the first fruits of thy labors, called by the Greeks Pentecost.

This feast was celebrated seven weeks after that of the passover, and commenced on the fiftieth day after, and was in commemoration of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, which took place fifty days after.

The feast of Tabernacles, called here the feast of ingathering.

This feast was celebrated about the middle of our month September, and was to commemorate the Israelites dwelling in tents for forty years during their stay in the wilderness, See Lev. 23.

"God, out of his great wisdom, says Calmet, appointed several festivals among the Jews, for many reasons: 1 To perpetuate the memory of those great events, and the wonders he has wrought for the people; for example, the Sabbath brought to remembrance the creation of the world, the Passover, the departure out of Egypt, the Pentecost, the giving of the law, the Feast of Tabernacles, the sojourning of their fathers in the wilderness, &c. 2. To keep them faithful to their religion by appropriate ceremonies, and the splendor of the divine service. 3. To procure their lawful pleasures and necessary rest. 4. To give them instructions, for in their religious assemblies the law of God was always read and explained. 5. To consolidate their social union by renewing the acquaintance of their tribes and families; for, on those occasions, they came together from different parts of the land, to the Holy City."—Clark.

This sounds well, and no doubt has truth in it, but whether we can ever fully understand how so expensive a service, which enjoined so much exemption from labor could be maintained, is doubtful, and well might Peter say, "Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear." Acts 5:10. The consumption of hundreds of thousands of the different grades of stock cattle, flocks and herds, with the immense amount of other productions in the use of offerings made by fire, or burnt up, is in itself a problem the Christian world can never solve. And associate with this, the exemption from labor, apparently one half of the time during six years in which they may sow their fields, prune their vineyards, and gather in the fruits thereof; however in part only, for "When ye reap the harvest of your land, there thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field where thou reapest, neither shalt thou do any gleaning of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them unto the poor, and to the stranger." The same was required of them in their fruit culture. "But in the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land, a Sabbath for the Lord: thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed, for it is a year of rest unto the land."—Lev. 25.

The whole of this great mystery may however be understood in this one short sentence, "I am the Lord your God."

God evidently designs the Christian world, with his Church in it, to know, that whatever the faithful observing of his law may cost, he will, in his own way and manner, provide all the necessary means to defray the cost. I have wondered if we were as liberal with his gifts in his services as we ought to be, whether parching droughts, disasterous floods, devouring fires, the ravages of fly and joint worm, rust, blast and mildew in wheat, with enormous doctor bills consequent on sickness &c., would not, to a great extent, be averted, and in the end have even more of the world's goods, though we used much for the Lord, than we so have with all our grasping and hoarding.

It is no uncommon thing for brethren, when called upon to aid in charitable and church wants, to excuse themselves on the ground of short crops, and heavy doctor bills. Let these inquire for a reason why these things are so with them. The reader will please pardon this necessary digression, and I will return to consider the three feasts the Lord enjoined upon his people to keep yearly.

As already observed, the feast of the passover, which according to our months fall in March and April, and is by us called Easter, was celebrated to keep in remembrance the wonderful deliverance from Egypt, and it was at this feast the Paschal lamb must be killed and eaten as directed in Ex. 12. At the preparation of this feast our Lord was crucified. Seven weeks after this, comes the feast of harvest or weeks; called by us Whitsuntide Pentecost, and falls in our months May or June. At this feast they must offer their first fruits of the harvest. This feast was celebrated fifty days after the passover, in commemoration of the giving the law on mount Sinai, which took place fifty days after the passover. It was at this feast that the Holy Ghost was shed forth on the assembled disciples in Jerusalem. And the feast of Tabernacles, called also the feast of Ingathering, was celebrated on the 15th day of their month Tisri, our September and was to commemorate the Israelites dwelling in tents in the wilderness forty years. On the first day of this feast they must build themselves booths. "And ye shall take you, on the first day, the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God, seven days." Lev. 23: 40, 43.

Now the question is, what occurred at this feast to connect, or associate it with the new, or Christian dispensation? We have already seen that it was at the time of the passover, our Easter, that our Lord was crucified; and at the feast of Weeks or Harvest, our Whitsuntide, the Holy Ghost was shed forth on the assembled disciples. But what occurred at this feast of Tabernacles? It was instituted by the same God and was to be kept and observed by the same people, and that too, by all Israel, with the same solemnity as any of the others were kept. It cannot be presumed that it was not intended to stand in connection with an event in the christian dispensation of as much importance as either of the others. I have a theory which fully satisfies my mind, though my proof is presumptive and not direct. I hold that at this feast our Lord was born. At this feast Israel must dwell in booths, and rejoice before the Lord God seven days; and the Savior was born, and laid in a manger, and at his birth, both men and angels rejoiced, before God, singing glory to God in the Highest, on earth, peace, good will toward man. And it was the 15th day of September the early Christians observed as Christ's birth day, till the Latin or Romish church who held herself supreme in power, and infallible in judgement, fixed it on the 25th day of December. Good reasons can be given why Christ was not born in December. Because there were in the same country, shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch by night. "It was a custom among the Jews" (says Clark) "to send out their sheep to the deserts, about the passover, and bring them home at the commencement of the first rain. During the time they were out the shepherds watched them night and day. As the passover occurred in the Spring and the first rain began early in the month, which answers to part of our October and November, we find that the sheep were kept out in the open country during the whole of the summer. And as these shepherds had not yet brought in their flocks, it is a presumptive argument that October had not yet commenced, and that consequently, our Lord was not born on the 25th of December, when no flocks were out in the fields, nor could he have been born later than September, as the flocks were still in the fields by night. On this very ground the nativity in December should be given up. The feeding of the flocks by night in the fields is a chronological fact which casts considerable light upon this disputed point."

My theory is, that at the feast of Tabernacles which commenced on the 15th of our September, at which all Israel must rejoice before God seven days, our Lord was born, at whose birth, men and angels rejoiced before God. And at the feast of the passover, which falls in our months March and April, at which the Paschal lamb must be killed, our Lord was crucified. And at the feast of Harvest or Weeks, which falls in our May and June, at which the first fruits must be offered; at this feast our Lord shed or poured his spirit upon the disciples, which was the first fruits of the Gospel.

D. P. SAYLER.

TIME FLIES. O HOW SWIFTLY!

When we reflect on the time when we entered the year 1873, it seems unto us only a short space, yet many important events mark that period. Changes and vicissitudes almost unnumbered characterizes the year we are now at the eve of closing. O, that these changes only had been for the better, no unpleasant feeling could mar our existence, no gloomy reflecting to cause compunctions of conscience. But weak as our efforts were in doing good, in comparison to what they should have been, causes us to regret that we gave way so much to the weakness and imperfections of the flesh. Naught but the grace and spirit of God can remedy this defect, and just here we find where we are in the fault. Our prayers were either neglected or cold and formal. Let us then have faith in a sin-pardoning God. O, let us come before him in the name of the Great High-Priest and advocate, Jesus Christ in humble submission and with a penitent heart, and acknowledge our sins, our short-comings and negligences, and with uprightness and fervency of mind, soul and spirit, ask him for pardon, strength and power from on high, and that "a double portion of His spirit may fall upon us in order that we may redeem our mis-spent time the coming year, and that grace sufficient may be imparted unto us to regain in that which we have lost in the working out of our soul's salvation.

Brethren and sisters, let us heed this resolve and solemnly reflect that time flies swiftly, and no one knows who will be the next one that will have to exchange time for eternity. Many who bid fair for a long life in the commencement of 1873 are gone the way of all flesh. Where are they now? Echo saith, Where? They have gone to their long homes to reap the reward of their labors according to that which they have done, whether good or evil. Grand-fathers, grand mothers, called from their children and grand-children, though full of years and perfectly satisfied with the ills of life, have caused an aching void in the family household, and forever silenced the sweet conversation passing between them. Fathers and mothers, through the icy hand of the grim monster, death, have been snatched from their dear offspring, leaving a vacancy which this world never can fill, spreading gloom and sorrow, loneliness and mourning around their fireside. Husbands, severed from their wives, wives from their husbands, thus snapping asunder the nearest tie of relationship that can exist on earth, being of one flesh and one bone. Oh! how many deep wounds it has caused to penetrate the dwelling deserted of the one so indispensible for the sweet association, the counsel, the sustenance, the consolation, the aid and support of the family household. Sons and daughters had to leave their parents, the brother his sister, the sister her brother, and so beyond visible association; the closest ties of consanguinity torn asunder, never more on earth to meet. God in his all wise providence thus deals with us as his rational creatures in order to profit thereby, and to bring us nearer to him as our benefactor, protector, and eternal preserver. Have we ever thought of these things? Did the special call of God, by the removal of our most loved associates, pierce our hearts to the forsaking of sin and following after holiness without which no man can see the Lord.

Sinner where are you at the close of this year? Are you still serving sin and satan, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life? Had you not promised God to serve him at the close of last year or at the beginning of this year when you saw that young lady, who a few days before stood in blooming health and gay attire, sinking down to the gloomy grave? Did not your heart faint when that young man, without a moments warning, was ushered into eternity with his brains reeling from intoxicating drink and curses on his lips? Had you not then promised to devote yourself to God, and enter into His service, else you might meet with the same dreadful fate? Where are you now? Are you in the service of the Lord, or still trifling with your God and rejecting the many solemn and special calls? When your sister, or brother or father, or mother laid in the throes of death, raising their hands to heaven and wrestled in fervent prayer to God in behalf of your conversion, did you see them? And do you know that your ministers, the holy watchmen of Zion, incessently pray to God in behalf of you? Can not, I ask in the name of God, the intercessions of your father, mother, brother, sister, on their dying bed with the united prayers of the Church with their ministers move you and make a lasting impression upon your undying soul, to forsake sin, turn to God with a heart felt repentance, and accept Christ's means of salvation? Young man, young woman, I appeal to you again. Where is now your delight by this time at the close of the year, your engagements? Is it in the service of God, or in the giddy ball room, the gambling hell, or the hell of hells where the inebriate linger and handle the intoxicating bowl around to the full measure of their iniquity? If so, I must say good-by to you. Go on in your mirth, indulge in your folly, "let your heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Though you may be an abandoned wretch, yet will I not cease to intercede for you, for perhaps God may bring you to repentance the coming year. Brethren and sisters, let us serve God more faithful the coming year than ever. Amen. LEONARD FURRY.

THERE ARE TWO SIDES TO THIS QUESTION.

The 49th number of the Christian Standard is now before me, and contains the following query and answer.

"It is well known that the trine immersionists (Tunkards) believe that faith, repentance, confession, and baptism, are essential to salvation from sin. They baptize for the remission of sins, believing baptism is essential to pardon. Now, then, in case a person has been thus baptized, and afterwards desires to unite with the Christian Church, can he be received upon his baptism, pleading that it was for the remission of sins? Is it therefore valid?"

Answer. "Our opinion is that it ought to be recognized as valid, not because it was administered for the remission of sins—for sprinkling might be administered for the same purpose—but because it is immersion into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

Mr. Errett, the editor of the above named paper is a member of what is generally known as the Campbellite Church, though called by themselves the Christian Church. He is a man of more than ordinary ability, and his answer to this query is likely the general sentiment of that body of people. Though the answer is correct, yet at the same time it is very inconsistent with his practice. Mr. Errett uses backward single immersion. This he believes to be scriptural baptism, and if correct, then of course forward trine immersion is not. The New Testament authorizes but one method, and that alone. Then Mr. Errett's answer certainly would be that forward trine immersion is not a scriptural baptism, but he has said that it is valid, now then I want to know where Mr. Errett gets his authority for calling a thing valid which he claims is not taught in the law of Christ. No baptism can be valid unless it is taught in the Testament, Mr. Errett has conceded that trine immersion is valid, hence it is taught in the New Testament. Either it is taught in the law or else Mr. Everett's answer is wrong, there is no middle ground about the matter. But this is the way the thing generally runs. All the leading denominations in christendom are willing to acknowledge that this "general practice of all antiquity" is valid, about this there don't seem to be any doubt. All the doubt in the whole matter is about backward single immersion. It is a well known fact that Mr. Errett's Church has acknowledged that trine immersion is valid, and then turn right round and say it is not taught in the Word. I have puzzled many by asking them for their authority for calling a thing valid that is not taught by Christ, now then let Mr. Errett answer this question.

The Baptists dare not say that forward trine immersion is not valid, for I can prove that used to be their general practice, according to their own books, and if the matter is denied I have the documents in my library to sustain the position beyond question. They aim to trace their Church to the apostles, and yet it is done upon the royal highway of trine immersion. The Methodists dare not repudiate the method, as that, at one time, was John Wesley's preference, and more than that, like the Campbellites, they receive trine immersion into their fellowship and have been known to thus baptize.

The Church of England dare not reject this method, as she at one time would consent to practice no other. Some of her first kings and queens were thus immersed, but she finally laid aside this for sprinkling and pouring. The Roman Catholic Church, with her ancient power and bloody renown, cannot question the validity of this primitive method, as it was her general practice till after the year A. D. 633. At this time the fourth council of Toledo authorized a change from trine to single immersion. It may be worthy of note that this was the first authority ever issued in favor of single immersion.

The Greek and Oriental Churches from the days of the apostles to the present time have continued the general use of trine immersion. With some of the unlearned, the question is, what was the apostolic method? But not so with these Oriental Churches. They were well versed in the Greek language, and all acknowledge that the commission teaches a three-fold immersion, not one of them whose productions have come under my notice say that it teaches single immersion. I presume that Mr. Errett is aware that his backward action in baptism is a human invention, and cannot be traced beyond its origin in the year A. D. 1522. If he can trace it beyond this period, he will now have a chance to do so. I would be pleased to have him try his skill on this point. The idea that the Lord would command a man to come into the church backwards is out of the question. Furthermore, his single immersion was invented by Eunomius. in the latter part of the fourth century, and never came into general use till after the 15th.

If Mr. Errett can find single immersion, as a practice, beyond the fourth century, he will do what others have failed to do so far. Of course it must be understood that his authors should have lived at the time that they testify of. When I prove that trine immersion was used in the 2d, 3d, and 4th centuries, I do so by referring to authors who lived and wrote in these centuries. The commission given by Christ, and recorded by (Matt. 28 : 19), teaches a three fold immersion; this is affirmed by all ancient Greek scholars who have written on the subject. To this method Paul alludes when he says, "One baptism." All persons admit that trine immersion fills all the grammatical import of the commission, about this there is no doubt, all the trouble is getting single immersion to do the work, we know this three-fold method is right, and is good, hence we will hold fast to it.

FINISH THY WORK.

The one great difference between God and man, is that He has left nothing incomplete, while man labors well for a time, but neglects to gather up and utilize the odds and ends, and thus much of his work goes to waste, or in other words, is unfinished.

When God at creations dawning, brought together and combined the elements of a new world, there was nothing imperfect; the stars that shine above us, the trees that wave answer back to Heaven, the flowers, the sweetest thought of the Creator, the grass that clothes the earth in beauty, the cattle on a thousand hills, the merry laughing sparkling water, the rainbow's perfect arch, born of the falling spray, the cloud that catches its golden tint from the sun's last setting ray, each and every one proclaim the work of the Creator finished and sublime. Since the dawn of Creation, nothing has been added, nothing detracted from the completeness of that stupendous perfect work from a perfect hand.

The Christian system! How grand in its sweet simplicity! None but an Infinite God, could have perfected and wrought out such a plan for the redemption of man. The years of sorrow, the night of agony, the death on the Cross ended in the words, "It is finished." The great work is done, the mighty Exampler has triumphed over Death and the Grave, and opened up a way of truth, of holiness. Henceforth, man must take up the burden and go forth, scattering precious seed, working while it is called to-day, lest the night cometh upon his half sown field, and the Lord blame that unworthy servant, who waited for another to do his work. Could we but gain the attention of the whole mass of mankind, and make them sensible of the time they are losing in the worlds great harvest, by loitering at an unfinished task, or by idly doing the Lords behest! Consider the fate of him who hid his Master's talent and take heed that a like fate do s not befall you. Each and every one of you have your appointed work in the world, and woe be unto you if you neglect it. It is not for me to tell my neighbor, thus and so, thou shalt do, for in appointing the work of others we but condemn ourselves, judging as we will be judged. Do then the work nearest to you whatever that may be, leave no stone unturned, watch always, work unceasingly, pray ever, and the Master will surely approve thy earnest endeavors. Leave not till the morrow the work your hand should do to-day, the morrow may never be yours, you may say Oh! that I had my life to live over again, how differently would the record be kept! Remember the soul readily takes impressions from outside circumstances, and unless each hour, yea each moment is full, Satan will find some mischief for the idle moment, and the beautiful pattern of a perfect work will be marred by a stray or sinful thought. "Ah this life to toil is given" and the tempter ever stands ready to ask a willing service for himself, and oft times, ere we are aware, the work we had determined for Jesus is perverted, and our feet have gone in the way of the ungodly. Whatever thy hand finds to do, do with thy might, putting thy hand resolutely to the plow, and working faithfully till the evning shades fall; then, and not until then, must the work be laid aside, and the weary footsteps turned homeward, seeking the promised rest. Then "Finish thy work; the time is short,

The sun is in the West;
The night is coming down, 'till then
Think not of rest.

Finish thy work; then wipe thy brow,
Ungird thee from thy toil;
Take breath, and from each weary limb
Shake off the soil.

Finish thy work; then go in peace,
Life's battle fought and won;
Hear from the throne the Master's voice,
"Well done, well done!"

THE DEFENSE OF DON GRASSI.

The following is the closing part of Don Grassi's, a late convert from Catholic priestism, defense before the Inquisition of Rome. A few years ago, to stand where he stood, and say what he said, would have been to forever bid fare vell to the land of the living and take an abode in some dungeon or prison cell, but things in ancient Rome, have changed and the dreaded Inquisition has lost its power as the following plainly shows:

"O you Inquisitors, Pontiffs, Cardinals and prelates; God speaks to you! To what have you brought the true church? She was so pure so beautiful, so glorious, you have betrayed, violated, despoiled, wounded and crucified by your doctrines, superstitions and immorality, and sealed her tomb by your blasphemous 'Dogma of infalibility.' Hear what God says to his suffering children. The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. Do you tremble at these words? Who but Satan instigated and inflicted the tortures of this place? O could these walls within which so many have been burned, speak—could this roof but echo back the cries of agony from your innocent victims, and the vaults beneath us reveal the corpses of those who have been buried alive, no other sentence of condemnation would be required.

But the breath of the Lord has forever extinguished the fires of the Inquisition, and swept away your power; therefore I stand before you to-day and declare these truths, while you dare not touch a hair in my head! Yes God has begun the work and soon this tribunal, these walls and instruments will be bruised under our feet, and scattered as ashes to the four winds, proclaiming to the world that the 'Most Holy Universal Roman Inquisition is dead. Dead because God has crushed it under the feet of His children.

O ye obstinate ones hear me! Hear one of your own brothers who has said mass, and confessed, and preached with you. I am not dead but living and announce the resurrection of that Church which you have tried to drown in blood Yes she is rising glorious as the morning light and ignorance, superstition, heresy and tyrany flee before her!

"'Farewell, church of my youth! Farewell companions of my ministry! Alas! alas it has been a ministry of destruction! O if my word has yet any weight with you, I beseech you to open your eyes to the light—to abandon that system of darkness in which you are groping, and accept the true light which Jesus offers you.

SUNDAY SCHOOL REPORT.

The Spring Run Sunday School of the German Baptist Church near McVeytown, Mifflin Co., Pa., opened its 6th session the first Lord's day in May, and closed Sabbath Nov., 23 with a nearly full attendance. Upwards of 125 pupils have attended during the present session.

The books used in our S. S, were the New Testament, by all who could read it, and the Union Spelling Book by the ones unable to do so. No Library books were used, although we have a S. S. Library, published by the American Baptist Society, Philada. Hymns, some such as are found in the Brethrens New Hymn Book, were printed on canvass and hung where the audience can see them and join in singing.

The Male pupils committed 2181 verses.
" Female, " " 6411.
" Total, " " 8592.

These were all Scripture except by those who could not read in the scriptures.

The School has done well under the principalship of of our deacon brother Reuben T. Myers, assisted by brethren Jno. S. Hanawalt and Solomon W. Bollinger. all of which were elected by ballot by the Church at a Council meeting in March previous

On the first day of S. S, the principal appointed sister Eva E. Kinsel Female Supt, and Bro. M. F. H. Kinsel Sect., and Tr. The above corps of officers' assisted by pupils who wished to help make a choice, then procured suitable teachers for the different classes, nearly all of which are members.

Two sisters were appointed to take a subscription to buy rewards and prizes for the last day of school, and $16,00 were paid, and about $19,00 expended for Bibles, Testaments and Scripture cards as prizes for verses committed, and to redeem the tickets.

Now we give the work into God's hands, and hope by his blessing that at least a little good may have been done, through the Holy Jesus.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

JAMES CREEK, PA., Dec. 18, 1873.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

Our agents will please take notice that wherever it is at all convenient, we would prefer to send the Almanacs directly to them, and they distribute them among their subscribers. By so doing all subscribers will be sure to get them. We will gladly furnish our agents with as many as they can use, or need for their subscribers, but want it understood that they are intended for subscribers only and that we have none for sale. They cost us money, therefore we cannot afford to give them to any but actual subscribers. In cases where it is not convenient for our agents to supply their subscribers with Almanacs, we will send directly to them when so ordered. In sending lists where part have Almanacs and part have not, it should be so marked on the list. Please remember this.

Eld. D. P. Saylor.—You appear to be grieved at the blunders in your article in the Pilgrim Almanac, but we suppose not more so than ourselves as we are exceedingly sorry that there are so many typographical and other errors in it, but we wish all to know that we are not accountable for them as we had it published away from home, and had not the opportunity of reading the proof, therefore had no control of the work, nor were we aware of the errors until the Almanac was published. We gave the publisher a scolding about it but that does not change the errors—it may help the publisher. To screen Bro. Saylor from such uncalled for blunders, and make his record intelligible, we will give his corrections in next number.

OUR CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

After this date our address will be changed from James Creek to Huntingdon, Pa. This is the last number we expect to publish at James Creek. By the time No. 1, for 1874 appears, we expect to be at our new office at Huntingdon, which is now about ready for us. Of our change in location we will say something in a future number. While we expect it to be of some advantage to us, we feel assured that it will be more to our patrons, as the place affords as good mail facilities as could be found in the United States outside of our large cities. Direct all letters, books, &c., to Box 172, Huntingdon, Pa.

MORE AGENTS WANTED.

We want a live, active agent in every Church district of the brotherhood. Who will volunteer? We will gladly furnish all those who may have a desire to labor for us, with an outfit. It is with our agents that our success mainly depends, therefore we hope that all will leave no effort unmade. If by oversight we have missed sending prospectus and Almanac to any who have been laboring for us, we hope they will inform us of it, and we will supply at once. Go to work at once, and send us all the names you possibly can, so that we can get our books in shape to commence the New Year. The money can be gathered and sent afterwards. Accept all such that you think will pay during the year. We try to be as liberal and as accommodating as possible, so that there can be no reasonable excuse for not subscribing. This kind of liberality would not do well among worldly people, but with our brethren and sisters, we should feel safe in trusting to their honesty.

THE PILGRIM ENLARGED.

We have already received our material for enlarging the Pilgrim for 1874, and our readers can look for a little the largest paper ever published by the brotherhood and that without enlarging the price. We hope to have No. 1 for 1874 ready so that it may reach our readers by the first of the year or soon after. All those who desire No. 1 as soon as issued, should send in their names at once. It promises to be a number of more than usual interest. "An address to our Patrons," a poem of thirty stanzas will lead, on the first page. This alone will be a rich treat, especially to such as admire poetry. Then will follow, "Thoughts on the close of the Old, and beginning of the New Year," by Eld. D. P. Sayler. "Pride and Prudence a Soliloquy." by Eld. J .S. Flory, "These Three," by Eld. C. C. Root, and many other articles that we have not now, before us, with the usual amount of Editorial, Correspondence, Church News, &c. Our enlarged form will give an additional space for reading so that our patrons can feel assured that they will get the worth of their money for 1874 if we are spared to carry out our present plans. The arrangements we have made, and are now making, will enable us to publish a paper of unusual interest and usefulness.

Our brethren have given us a number of valuable suggestions which will be incorporated with improvements that have been suggested to our own minds. If in the multiplicity of counsellors there is wisdom, the Pilgrim ought to be made better by such additional aid and talent.

Our object shall be the same as heretofore. The salvation of souls should be the great theme of thought and action. For this, have we launched our bark, and shall endeavor, weekly, to set forth such inducements as may tempt the careless and wayward sinner to take passage with us, so that by the time we reach the desired haven, many may have embarked with us. Not only shall we labor for the conversion of sinners, but also for the peace and good of our beloved Zion, and for the vindication of the "ancient landmarks" so plainly described in the New Testament Scriptures.

Our enlargement will be attended with considerable additional cost of paper, also of composition. This we cannot well afford unless our list is also enlarged. We therefore hope all our readers will be concerned in our behalf and make an effort to largely increase our list of subscribers. There was a call for a larger paper and we have responded, and it now remains for you dear reader, to show your appreciation by giving us such aid as may enable us to carry out our improvements without doing injustice to ourselves.

THE TIME OF THE END.

At the time of the end—the wise shall understand.—Daniel.

Among the wise things that the wise man said is, "There is a time for all things under the sun," a time to begin and a time to end. The time to begin the fourth volume of the Pilgrim is long since past and now "the time of the end has come" and it is said at that time, "the wise shall understand." Giving this a general application, and we have no truer saying. It is true, many wise men have a tolerable understanding of things at the beginning, but at the time of the end all mists of doubts and darkness are blown away and the past with all its hopes, and fears, are laid open before us in its stern realities and we can, thus understand things which, in the beginning were enshrouded in mysteries dark and deep.

Whether we are among the wise or not, is not in our province to say, but this we know, that during the year that is nearly past, we have learned to understand many things that we never understood before. From those things we ought, and hope to profit and we have no doubt but what many of you have been equally fortunate. If so, "the time of the end will be an epoch of general profit."

"The time of the end" is not important only, as closing the fourth volume of the Pilgrim, but it is big with importance to us all as individuals, and calls loudly upon us not only to act wisely but righteously, as there is a "time of the end," in which all shall understand, the ungodly and the sinner, as well as the righteous. The former then, shall only fully comprehend the loss they have sustained in squandering it in gratifying their sinful lust, while the righteous shall fully realize the truth of the saying, "it is no vain thing to serve the Lord."

Time is reckoned by divisions and epochs. A year is one of the most important divisions, as during this space of time, all nature seems to form a complete revolution. Three score and ten of these divisions are allowed as an average of human strength, but we have learned by experience, that thousands never reach this allotted time, and that during any year "the time of the end" may come with us, it therefore behooves us as wise men and women, to consider the number of our days so that the end comes not upon us unawares.

In looking over our obituary notices that were recorded in the present volume, we find that "the time of the end has come" to many, and it now remains for them to understand. If they have entered the kingdom by being born again, and have walked in all the ordinances of the Lord's house blameless, they shall now understand and realize those things which eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man. But those who have been unwilling to take God at his word shall realize the full force of what Christ meant when He said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." It becomes us, as true and humble servants, to obey God in all things though we cannot, now, fully comprehend the design, in every case, in the time of the end, the wise shall understand, and those only are wise who obey God, as the conclusion of the whole matter is summed up thus, "Fear God and keep His commands for this is the whole duty of man."

The "time of the end" is especially interesting with us, because with it ends, for the present, our obligations to our thousands of readers whom we have been visiting, weekly, during the year that is now closing. Our sojourning together was so pleasant and agreeable that we feel loathe to leave you or discontinue our visits to your homes, but the time of the end has come, and unless invited back again for 1874, this will be our last visit. We have endeavored with all our ability, to make our visits entertaining and instructive, and we feel persuaded from the many expressions of approval and encouragement, that we have not been altogether unsuccessful, that our labors for the Lord have not been in vain. Many have already renewed their invitations by sending in their names for 1874. Some of our lists received have been considerably enlarged by new names. This is quite encouraging, and we hope our agents may be equally successful, so that when the time of the end fully comes, we may have the pleasure of receiving, not only all our old patrons, but many new ones also.

OUR TRIP TO THE SNAKE SPRING CHURCH.

On Saturday morning we left our Office for the purpose of meeting an engagement we had made with Bro. Henry Harshberger to accompany him to the Clear Ridge Settlement, for the purpose of filling some appointments at that place. By making a little extra effort, we were enabled to reach the train just in time to hear our gentlemanly Conductor say, "all aboard," and off we went. Having the late number of the PILGRIM along, we were busily engaged in perusing its pages, forgetting all about high bridges and the danger of topling over, until disturbed by several talkative gentlemen who were holding a private and confidential conversation in such loud tones, that all within a reasonable distance, could not fail to hear it. We could not see the point, unless they feared that they could not otherwise command observation.

After a pleasant ride, we landed at Mt Dallas Station where, in a short time, we were met by brother Harshberger, who gave us a seat in his buggy, and we started for Clear Ridge. The weather was unusually pleasant and the roads quite good, so that we enjoyed the ride very much, and as we had never traveled in that direction, the sights were all new and interesting. This is especially so when we get into a mountainous country. Our road passed along on top of Clear Ridge, which is sufficiently elevated to afford a view of all the intervening hills between Tussy's and Terrace mountains, which are not a few. In looking over them it reminded us of the remarks of a sister from the West. She said if every other hill of Pennsylvania was turned up side down, she thought it would make a level country. There would be considerable truth in her remarks, providing the hills after being turned could undergo a little shaking together. By one o'clock we reached brother Isaac Ritchey's where we were expected, and a good dinner awaiting our arrival. Brother and sister Ritchey received us kindly and spared no efforts to make us comfortable. Though they reside among the hills, they have plenty to eat and know how to prepare it. After remaining here a short time, Bro. Harshberger informed us that he had made arrangements to take supper with a friend Weimer, some three or four miles farther, so we took leave of our brother and sister, and by sundown we reached our place of destination which was one mile beyond where we were to preach. On our arrival, we were kindly received, and the best they had was not spared to make us feel homelike. After partaking of their hospitality, we were taken to the place for preaching. The house was well filled with attentive listeners, to whom we tried to preach. We do not know how much good was accomplished, but we were somewhat consoled, on hearing several say the sermon was too short. When ministers do not have much to say, the better policy is to stop when they get done. Unfortunately, some do not do this, and the result is, that sermon was too long.

After preaching we again returned to friend Weimer's for the night. If any of our readers have ever learned to enjoy sitting around a blazing fire in the old fashioned chimney, they can have an idea how we spent part of the evning. Friend Weimer worships after the Lutheran mode, but says he is not partial to any form of worship that is anything like right. This we thought rather liberal, but as we were not the spokesman at the time, we allowed it to pass. The man is a good liberal hearted soul, but has not read the Scriptures sufficiently to know that he is responsible to God, and not Lutheranism, Weslyanism or any other ism. Their hospitality was praiseworthy, and we hope they may not lose their reward.

Sunday 10 a. m., there was an appointment in the Clearville Union Church, which we attended and filled. The congregation was not large but quiet and attentive. It may seem strange to some that we talk about congregations being quiet, as it is supposed that all congregations ought to be quiet but this is not always the case, especially when we get out among the hills, away from rail roads telegraphs and schools. While gone we were informed that during a Methodist revival, several young men were thought to take undue liberties during the services. The minister in charge, undertook to teach them better mora's by grasping one by the throat and thrusting him out of the house, but such proceedings met with opposition and would have resulted in a regular combat had they not been separated. The minister prosecuted the young man for resisting, and the father of the young man prosecuted the minister for striking his son. There will be a lawsuit in Bedford during next court. So much for modern religion.

After services, we went home with brother John Smith. Brother Smith formerly resided in the Clover Creek congregation, Blair Co., Pa., but has now set his stakes among the hills, where he owns a fine farm and has pleasant surroundings. Sister Smith cared for our bodily wants and sent us away with the consciousness that the laborer is worthy of his meat. From here, brother Harshberger took us to his home, where as usual, we met a welcome reception, and felt rejoiced to enter again the family circle in which we spent a number of pleasant seasons. Everything seemed natural except that sister Fannie was not there. She has cast her lot in another home which to her may be a happier one, if possible, than the one she has left. In the evening there was an appointment in the Meeting-house where we had a good attendance and attention. The congregation was largely of young persons, many of whom are risking their all by remaining outside of the kingdom. We hope the time may soon come when they too will cast their lot with the people of God and labor for His cause.

On our way to church, we called to see Eld. Andrew Snowberger. He has been ailing for some time and the greater part of his time, confined to his house. On Monday morning we were conveyed to the train and in two hours, arrived safely home. Though our trip was short yet it was pleasant, and we hope, profitable. Paul may plant, Apollas may water but God must give the increase.

CHRIST'S YOKE

"Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest to your souls."

In this language of the Savior, we have a very striking illustration of the truth he wished to teach by a metaphor. This was the way in which Christ presented the truth He taught so forcibly and intelligibly, and when we take into consideration this one, we may learn some very beautiful and useful lessons. Let us then turn our attention for awhile to the truths contained in it:

In the days of our Savior's sojourn on earth, the ox was employed to perform the labor that the horse now does, and instead of the harness that is now used to attach the horse to a plow or vehicle of any kind, the yoke was used. The yoke was put on the ox's neck, and this of course could be done only by his resignation or submission to his master. No man could put a yoke on the neck of an ox if he should have any disposition to avoid it. His strength is sufficient to successfully resist any demand that men may make of him, hence it requires a perfect resignation in order that he may be equipped for the performance of labor.

In this we have presented the idea of our resignation to the will of God. We are called to labor in His Vineyard, but in order that we be properly equipped for the labor, we must suffer His yoke to be put upon us. This requires an entire resignation to the will of God. We have the power to resist the yoke of Christ; He does not compel us to take it upon us, but this is the design of God in reference to us, and if we refuse to be subject to His will, we are under His displeasure. Christ while here on earth, taught this entire resignation by the things which He did. For example on one occasion when He drew nigh to Jerusalem, He sent two of His disciples, "saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them and bring them unto me. And if any man say ought unto you, say the Lord hath need of them." The disciples who were sent for the ass were no doubt entire strangers, and for them to unloose the ass and take him, would seem like unwarrented authority, but Jesus expected all who might interfere, to be satisfied, and submit to their demand by merely saying the "Lord hath need of them." In this act then, we have an example of what He expected when He made a demand, and in the metaphor under consideration designs to teach an entire resignation or submission to His will.

When the ox has submitted to the yoke being placed upon his neck, then it is that he is prepared to labor, and then too, does he expect to be directed and guided by his master. When he is told to go forward, or to the right or left, he is obedient. So it should be with us when we take the yoke of Christ upon us. We must expect to be guided by our Master: we must be willing to go anywhere He may tell us, even though we may not fully understand "whys" and "wherefores." Just as man's knowledge is superior to that of the ox, so is God's knowledge superior to ours. His ways are above our ways, and His thoughts above our thoughts, and therefore it becomes us to render implicit obedience, without inquiring what may be His design. We know by being obedient we will meet His approbation, and when we have the favor and friendship of our Master, then it is that we are happy; we know that we have a right, a title to the mansions above. "Blessed are they that do the commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life and enter in through the gates into the city." Let us then learn from the metaphor a lesson of obedience.

We have also in it the idea of self-denial. While the ox is doing the bidding of his master, there are many things surrounding him that have a tendency to lure him away from his work. For example it would be more agreeable to feast on the beautiful grass by which he is surrounded, or if laboring in the heat of the day it would be more pleasant under the shade of some tree. But the obedient ox must deny himself of what he might enjoy. So must the Christian. When he takes the yoke upon him and becomes obedient unto his Master, he must deny himself of the many things by which he is surrounded. Jesus said unto His disciples, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." There are many things that attract our attention when we try to perform our Christian duties. The world has many inducements, and if we do not deny ourselves, we are soon found reveling in the fields of sin and folly. How many there are who have taken the yoke upon them, that instead of following Jesus in the path of duty, and complying with His commands, follow their own carnal inclinations. In this it is to be feared thousands make the fatal error. They want to serve God and the world also, but saith Jesus, "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other." The demands of this world and those of Jesus are directly contrary to each other, and it is impossible for us to meet the demands of both. Therefore if we would be the disciples of Jesus, we must be indifferent to the demands of this world, however congenial they may be to our natures. We must deny ourselves of the transient enjoyments of this life, and not run into the excesses that must finally prove our ruin. The yoke of Christ will restrain us from these things and keep us in obedience to our Divine Master.

We have also in the yoke of Christ the idea of Christian effort. When the ox is yoked he expects to labor, it presents to him the idea of work. When he sees the yoke he no doubt thinks of pulling a wagon or ploughing, and so should the yoke of Christ associate to our minds the idea of labor. We cannot expect to be idle, as the Christian life is one of activity and untiring perseverence. It is one that requires the exertion of all our powers. "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." This is the first and great command and implies that our love for God must be so great that we will employ all our strength in His service.

In connection with this idea we have that of Christian experience and our relation to Christ It is only when we serve Jesus that we learn of the great truths that are essential to our salvation. Christ said on one occasion. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Some persons have an idea that they can not realize any benefit from the observing of the commandments, but this is a mistake as it is only by doing the will of God that we obtain a knowledge of the experimental part of Christianity. All who have taken the yoke of Christ upon them and are laboring for Jesus, know of the truthfulness of this idea; it affords pleasures, it makes us happy, hence we hear Jesus saying, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." But in order that we may perform the will of God acceptably we must have this assistance, saith Jesus, "Without me ye can do nothing." We must be in close relation to Him, and this idea we have in the yoke of Christ. It joins us to Him, and from him we must expect to receive our strength. Paul said on one occasion "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Let us then dear reader, endeavor to be yoked with Christ, for He has promised to be our strength in time of need. He says He is meek and lowly of heart, and oh how important that we should learn from him a les-on of meekness. Some of us are perhaps too haughty to take the yoke upon us. Remember God has promised to be with those only who are of a meek and humble spirit. God hateth a proud and haughty spirit. Let us come down meekly to the foot of the cross and take this yoke upon us, ever seeking knowledge from Him to guide our feet in the path of duty. and then finally we shall receive rest unto our souls. This is the final and glorious result. Oh! how weary we sometimes become. Our bodies, mind, and soul becomes weary, and like David, we wish for the wings of a dove to fly away and be at rest. But if we will take the yoke of Jesus upon us He will stand by us in all our trials, and even help us bear our burdens,and at last deliver us on the sunny banks of everlasting deliverance. May God help us all to bear the yoke and obtain this rest.

VISIT TO CUMBERLAND.

As it may be interesting to some of the readers of the PILGRIM, I will give a brief sketch of a recent visit to the Lower Cumberland Church, by brother G. W. Brambaugh of Clover Creek, and myself. Leaving my home on the 28th of Nov., and meeting Bro. G. W. B. on the train at our station, Pleasant Grove, we started for Mechanicsburg, where we arrived at about three o'clock, and was here met by our esteemed Bro. Eld. Moses Miller. We were soon conveyed to, and kindly entertained in his house until evening, when we were taken to the Mohler M. H., where we tried to preach to a small congregation of members principally. As the weather was unfavorable, we tried to excuse the people, as we hope the Lord will, and then took hold of our work as best we could with hopes for the better. After services we were taken to the house of brother Springer, which is ever open to the brethren, and whose hospitalities we shared with good grace. Next morning, (Sabbath), we were again taken to the same place, which by the way, is an old community of brethren. After service were taken to Bro. George Brindle's in company with other brethren and sisters, whose friendship and kind associations we will not soon forget. Part of the time was spent in the family of sister Eliza Hurst, whose husband is dead, and who was the former Elder of this congregation. In the evening were taken to Mechanicsburg, where services were held in the Union M. H.,—congregation respectably large and attentive. After service we were kindly escorted to the home of Bro. D. Neiswanger, and comfortably entertained for the night. Brother N. is doing a large mercantile business here, and brethren will find his house a pleasant stopping place. Services next day at the same place, at 10 o'clock, after which we were again taken to brother Moses Millers's, where we always feel at home. In the evening went again to the Mohler M. H. for divine service, after which we lodged for the night with Solomon Mohler, who seems in every respect like a Christian brother, except the name, which we hope he will soon get written upon the great white throne.

Next morning, in company with friend Mohler and wife, we went to Shepherdstown for service in the Union M. H.,—congregation small. After services dined with sister Bealman, mother of our co-laborer Adam Bealman. From here we were taken by brother David Neisly to his house, where we had previously received much kindness, and many tokens of true Christian love, now renewed by the kind reception and entertainment. While here, brother David kindly gave his time and service in conveying us from place to place, and to the meetings which were commenced in the Baker M. H. on Tuesday eve., and continued until Saturday evening. During this time we visited among the different families of the brethren. The Brindles, Bakers, Weberts, and brother John Plank, who is an active agent for the PILGRIM. Among the places of note was that of Boiling Springs, about three miles south of Churchtown, the place of our meetings. These Springs are quite a curiosity, and may yet become a place of notable resort. The waters boil up in great quantities along a ledge of limestone rocks, for a distance of several hundred yards. At several points it gushes out with such force that even at a distance, it resembles a large caldron of boiling water, covering a space of several acres and forming a stream large enough to drive a grist mill and furnace a few rods off, and then makes its way into the Yellow Breeches. Above and close by these springs, is situated a thriving little town called by the same name. In this place lives our kind and enterprising brother George Brindle, who is doing quite a lively mercantile business, and with whom we dined, in company with Eld. M. Miller, D. Neisly, Cyrus Brindle,and their wives. Sister Brindle, daughter of Eld. Jacob Reinhold of Lancaster city,did all in her power to make her guests happy and contented. We also visited an old blind brother, who seemed to be much pleased and cheered up. On Saturday our aged brother, George Brindle, took us to the house of his son, Cyrus Brindle, one of their ministers, who by the way is full of energy, and we hope spiritual life. Here we enjoyed our visit very much. Bro. A. Bealman was in our company. This point however, was made a scene of horror, on the following morning, that is appalling in the extreme. The wife of one of brother B.'s neighbors drowned herself in the creek near by, casting a gloom over the whole community, as such things always do.

On Sabbath Morning we changed our points of labor, Bro. G. W. B. having left me on Saturday morning in company with Eld. Miller for different appointments in the congregation, while I remained here until this morning, when I was taken to Cockley's M. H., where we tried to preach to an attentive congregation. From this place we had the pleasure to visit the home of brother Adam Bealman, where we also had an appointment at 2 o'clock in a schoolhouse near by, after which we were taken to Mechanicsburg where we had an evening meeting. This closed the term of our labor in this congregation. We were then taken to the house of a friend in town, whose name we have forgotten, but whose kindness we will not forget. We were well cared for and entertained for the night. Next morning started home where we arrived in the evening, meeting our family well and anxiously awaiting our return.

PUBLISHERS ITEMS.

POSTAL orders, after January 1st 1874, will cost only 9 cents instead of 15. Our agents will please note this, and send us money in orders when they can be had.

OUR "New Year's Address" for No. 1, 1874, will be a poetical treat. Do not fail to read it.

LOOKOUT for the enlarged PILGRIM for 1874. It will be the largest weekly paper ever published by the Brethren. Only $1.50 per year. If you desire to encourage a cheap and large paper send for the PILGRIM.

ELD. D. P. SAYLER'S paper on the closing of the Old, and beginning of the New Year, is complete in practical thoughts,and should be read by all. It will appear in No. 1 for 1874.

We are informed that Eld. J. R. Hanawalt met with a sad accident lately. His horse became frightened, ran off and he was thrown out of the buggy and badly hurt.

The Pilgrim Almanac for 1874 is of more than ordinary interest, gotten up in the best of style and should be in every home in the Brotherhood. It will be sent FREE to every subscriber for the PILGRIM for 1874.

AGENTS wanted. We would be pleased to employ several hundred more agents to solicit subscribers for the PILGRIM. We intend to make it just the paper the Church and the world needs, free from wrangling discussions and full of living Christianity. Every brother, sister or friend that thinks they could gather us a few names, should send for our Almanac and prospectus.

"PRIDE and Prudence," by Eld. J. S. Flory, will be read with interest and profit by all sober minded people. Such papers are especially needful in these days of rank worldlyism—read it—will be published in No. 1 for 1874.

SOME of our agents and patrons in sending money at this late date for 1873, seem to fear that we might feel grieved in waiting so long. Not at all. We are always glad to receive money, and will not complain as long as we get it inside of a year, i. e. from such as cannot well pay sooner.

THE Pilgrim Almanacs are being sent out by the hundreds. Some of our agents are ordering 30, 40, and 50 copies at a time. Send along your orders, we have a sufficient number to supply all, without money and without price, who read the PILGRIM for 1874.

Correspondence.

A Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news, Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

GREELY, Colorado, Nov. 26, '73.

I will continue such information as I think will best answer the many inquiries about this territory. It is often asked me, "What are the advantages of Colorado over other Western States or Territories, and what are its faults?" I answer, one advantage over many others is its healthfulnesss, on that head there is no question or discount. The climate is undoubtedly one of the most healthy in the Union. No fever and ague here, the winters are dry and pleasant with the exception of a "squally" day now and then, for a variety. The summers are delightful. Many persons come here from the East with shattered constitutions that receive surprising benefit. The snowy range of mountains, and the high altitude of the territory, causes the air to be pure and invigorating, and the nights cool and pleasant. But little snow or rain falls here in the valley in the winter. Another advantage is, for farm products there is, and will continue to be, a good home market, and good prices, owing to the fact but a small proportion of the land can be farmed, and the mines of the mountains will have thousands of consumers. Another is, stock need but little feed in winter, therefore the farmer can sell his grain, hay and stock, while in the East, the grain and hay, to a great extent, must be fed to the stock during the winter. Another advantage, stock for many years to come can have millions of acres to range over, as it is not likely it will be settled or fenced only along the valleys.

Now for the disadvantages or faults. One is the scarcity of rain, and necessity of irrigation, however some think that a blessing instead of a fault. Another, scarcity of fruit, but that, it is thought, will be overcome in time. Another, the scarcity of timber, and want of sparkling springs and limpid brooks. Timber, it is found, grows rapidly when set out on these bottom lands. Now who should venture to come here? Not he who has a good comfortable home in the East, and can do a good part by his family, such I would advise to stay and let well enough alone The timid "weak-kneed" or doless man or woman, had better stay among their friends. He who has failed for want of energy or tact in the East, will fail here. Men may get renewed strength of body here, —a new lease of life, but they can't get a new set of brains, and he that has inherited laziness there, will doubtless hold his own here. But persons of small means,—enough to come here and have two or three hundred dollars left, with ordinary energy, may do well. Young men with brave hearts, and a will to do and be somebody, may do well, for the chances are in their favor. Men of means coming here, have good opportunities of doing well, and of being useful in helping to develop the country And brave soldiers of the Cross, who will make good missionaries by their practical preaching, we need, to help build up a church, that here where the war-whoop of the savage has been heard for centuries, the praise of God may sound from hill to hill. Come brethren, come sisters, you who can, come and help make the "desert bloom as the rose."

"And the homes that arise around us,
Oh! these will grow more and more dear."

As christain associations endear us to each other, and we all work with an eye single to the building up of our Master's cause. Some few brethren are already in the Platte valley, others are making arrangements to come in the spring, others are halting between two opinions, not knowing whether to venture or not. He that delayeth will let good opportunities pass, but let "every one be persuaded in their own mind."

As the "Beaver Colony" we will say, last fall when that organization was effected, we were one among the first to select a claim in that particular locality of the Platte valley. No sooner was it known there was a town site located, and prospect of a settlement, than numbers in this county immediately went there and took claims so the land was soon nearly all entered in that immediate section. But just as good lands and prospects are to be had farther down, and also on the opposite side of the river from Beaver. There are many who do not know the nature of these colonies, so called. As the lands can not be purchased in a body of the government, it is not possible for a company of men to get control of them, consequently they are open to settlement to whoever comes first. There was an organization effected for the purpose of getting reduced rates of transportation on the R. Roads, and to build up a town. This has been accomplished so far as getting cheap transportation, and the prospects are fair for a town being built in that locality. Any one wishing to come to Colorado can get a certificate that will bring them at about half rates from certain points in the east here, and give them privilege to bring 150lbs. of baggage free to each passenger.

Touching this subject we quote from a late No. of the Greeley Tribune published here, as follows: "The Green City and Beaver colonies on the Platte, are the only parties we know of through which reduced transportation can be obtained. For new comers, the Platte valley, between Greeley and Julesburg, offers the best inducements to men of moderate means, as they will have a fine stock range." We have a limited supply of Beaver colony certificates. In a former letter I stated that a person selecting a claim must do so in person, such is the letter of the law, yet a claim may be selected by a party here for another and if some little improvement is done on it, nine times out of ten, it will be safe for three months. Many such claims are taken. One more question so often asked I will answer; that is, "Can I get work at good wages?" Where there are buildings going up, canals being dug, a railroad being built, farms improving &c., willing hands can generally get work at fair wages. Wages have been high here but since the "panic" times are dull here as elsewhere. I will conclude by making a few pointed quotations from a small circular printed here for the benefit of inquirers.

Don't come with a lot of household goods on which the freight will cost nearly as much as you can buy new furniture with here. Books, choice light furniture, carpets, clothing and bedding should be brought along.

Don't come expecting to see every house as if set in the Garden of Eden. Here as elsewhere homes are first established, then adorned.

Don't come expecting that laws governing supply and demand are different here from what they are in the East; "easy situations," "soft clerkships," "cushioned seats," "school platforms," "plush-covered pulpits," do not abound. But cheap land in abundance, and a home market is waiting for the harvestage. Colorado is a blessing or a curse, as those who come within her borders shape their conduct. The thrifty man prospers, the thriftless man becomes worse than a beggar.

Don't come expecting that it never rains, that the wind never blows, that the sun is never behind a cloud, that zero is never reached by the mercury.

Don't come expecting a man to meet you half way between here and the Missouri River, begging you to come here and work at a big salary. Women might possibly expect this and not be far out of the way, for they are wanted here as house helps, sewers, and as wives. Blessed is the father who, coming to Colorado, has a "quiver full" of grown-up daughters, especially if they are unmarried. "Thou hast all seasons for thine own," Oh, wedding belles, in Colorado.

Don't come expecting Paradise ready made; but come resolved to make your own Paradise, and all the material for it are ready for your hand.

We further quote: "A thumb-nail sketch in Colorado."

Our climate is healthful in an eminent degree.

Our soil is exceedingly rich and wonderfully productive.

The culture of grapes and most kinds of fruits is easy and profitable.

Our rivers and streams afford unlimited water power.

Our mines of gold and silver are known the world over.

Our deposits of iron, coal, lead, and copper, contain a supply of these useful minerals for many generations of men.

Our railways are extending in all directions.

Our churches and schools give excellent facilities for social, religious and intellectual culture.

Our mountains present the grandest scenery in the world.

Our mountains are covered with forests of pine, cedar, and other trees.

Our villages and cities are growing steadily and rapidly.

Stock growing is followed with a success equal to that of any country in the world.

Sheep raising is an easy and sure means of accumulating wealth.

Wheat, Oats, and vegetables are grown to profit.

A good market is ever at hand for the products of the farmer.

Thousands can testify to the relief afforded by our climate to those in search of health.

Pulmonary diseases, if taken in the earlier stages scarcely fail of permanent cure.

Asthma and bronchial affections are cured by residence in Colorado."

I will quote no more now, and will say if there is yet information wanting by those who mean "business" I am ready to respond, but don't forget when sending letters of inquiries that it costs time and money to write and pay postage. A word to the wise is sufficient.

LITERATURE.

A. B. Brumbaugh, Huntingdon, Pa. Literary Editor.

The well known publishing house of Scribner, Armstrong & Co., 654 Broadway, New York, have just issued a volume entitled:—"The Illustrated Library of Favorite Song," for which we predict a sale never before attained by any similar production. The fact of it being edited by Dr. J. G. Holland, author of "Kathrina," "Bitter-Sweet," &c., is of itself a sufficient guarantee of its sterling merit. As a volume of Poems, it is a store-house of sweets having no rival—and we believe no equal.

Its contents are of a higher order of Poetic Merit—richer, rarer, purer—more touching and tender than any collection ever before attempted. Every page bears the evidence of the most discriminating and patient labor, as well as loving care. They are songs for the home and heart, and can but minister to the purest and highest culture of both. In size it is a royal octavo of over 700 pages, printed on the finest tinted paper, and illustrated with 125 thoroughly dainty and delicate engravings from original designs made expressly for this volume by the most eminent artists, and it is said, could not be duplicated for less than twenty thousand dollars. They are indeed Poems in art, and embody the very spirit and sentiment of the text.

Beside the engravings there are 20 full-page fac similes of the original autograph copies of the most renowned Poems.

Among the number is Longfellow, Tennyson, Bryant, Whittier, Holland, Hood, Willis, and John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," a song known in all languages, and sung in all lands, and is, for its associations alone,—aside from its merit—worth the price of the work, and it seems by us to be by far the cheapest book for its immense cost ever before published in this country

It is sold only by canvassers and we advise that some one who can appreciate the spirit and beauty of poetry, in every community to write to the publishers, as above for an agency.

Arthur Bonnicastle.—This new book by Dr. J. G Holland belongs to a class of literature which is gaining in popularity each year. Like all of this favorite author's prose works, it has the merit of cleanness, elegance and strength. The story was first given to the public through Scribner's Monthly, that justly popular rival of all American Magazines, and is now issued in a handsome volume by Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.

Dr. Holland is an author who ventures to think for himself and interprets morlity and religion by a different rule from that of most other teachers. It is plainly to be seen that he has no faith in that system of piety which depends upon sudden and violent demonstrations of emotional excitement; but regards the proper religious state of mind in conversion, to be a condition sanctioned by reason and calm judgment. Though we do not fully commend the kind of christianity which he advocates, yet we commend him for the firm stand he has taken against what we consider popular errors in religion. His system seems beautiful. It is a comfortable system and embraces fine sentiments. It is partially free from dogmatic statements, but can be expressed in sweet hymns and eloquent prayers—what might be termed and eclectic christianity. The story though not highly artistic is one which will be read with interest, and the book command a large sale. Price $1.75.

We hereby tender our compliments to our friends "across the water" of "The Paper and Printing Trades Journal" published quarterly by Mess. Field and Tuer, London, England, at 1s. 6d. a year, and contains much valuable matter. The samples of Tinted, Ribbed Paper accompanying this No. are a real novelty.

The Harpers will receive subscriptions for the forthcoming Evangelical Alliance volume at $5 each up to the first of January 1874.

Gail Hamilton's new volume of social and domestic sketches is now being published by the Harper's; they have also in press "Joseph the Jew," and "Diamond cut Diamond," the last by T. A. Trollope.

Sunday Magazine, published in England by W. Isbister & Co., London, and in America by J. B. Lippincott & Co., is an illustrated monthly of recreation and instruction, and aiming especially at bringing out the benignant aspect of the Gospel, and applying it in every available form, to making the world better, brighter and happier. Among the contributors for the new volume of 1873-4, we notice such men as the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Lindsay Alexander, Dr. W. G. Blaikie, &c., The articles in the two numbers (Oct. and Nov.) received are of a high order Yearly $2.55, with Pilgrim, $3.85.
